King Charles the First.

MANY Writers have divided the Reign of a Prince from his Life, and so have given the Actions without the Mans; the Political Occurrences without the Genius, that gave a Rise and a Turn to them.

It shall be the present Design, to write the Life as well as the Reign of this unfortunate Prince, and give all the true Characters of his Person along with a Relation of all the Affairs of his Government: To which purpose, it will be proper to give some Account of his Birth, Childhood, Youth, and Education; to view him from his Cradle to his Crown.

Born Nov. 19. 1600. Charles, a younger Son of James VI. King of Scotland, and of Anne his Wife Daughter of the King of Denmark, was born at Dunfermling on November 19. 1600, so weak an Infant, that upon apprehension of his short Life, they hastned on his Baptism, without a more decent Delay and those suitable Ceremonies that would have otherwise attended his Admission into the Church: Born and Baptiz'd in somewhat of Surprize and Confusion; as it were beginning the World in a kind of Prefage how he was to end it.

Titles conferr'd on him, 1601. In the second Year of his Age, 1601, he was created Duke of Albany, Marquess of Ormond, Earl of Ross, and Baron of Ardmarnock, Titles much greater than the Revenues to support them: A second Son of the Royal Blood in Scotland must have been, as in less Noble Families, a sort of Dependent on the elder Brother.

His Succession foretold in 1603. In 1603 there was such an Augury made of his future Greatness, as deserves to be here related. When his Royal Father King James was preparing for his Remove to the Throne of England, a certain old Laird of the Highlands came to take his solemn Leave of the Court, and was for that purpose admitted into the Bed-chamber, where he found himself in the Presence of his Majesty, the Queen, and Royal Children. He address'd himself to the King with a long deal of sage Advice and affectionate Wishes. He then, overlooking Prince Henry, applied himself directly to Duke Charles, and kiss'd his Hand with so much Ardency and Devoutness, as if he meant to pay some extraordinary Honours to him. The King, to correct his supposed Mistake, seem'd to take him off, and to direct him toward his elder Son, who, as Heir of the Crown, had a Title to his first and greatest Respect and Observance. But the antient Laird would not be guided, nor diverted from his earnest Applications to the little Duke; and said, He was not mistaken; he knew to whom he address'd himself: This Child whom he now saw in the Nurse's Arms, should be greater than his elder Brother, and should convey his Father's Name and Titles to succeeding Generations. An Historian observes, that "This then was conceived to be Dotage; but the Event gave it the Credit of Prophecy, and confirmed that Opinion, that some long-experienc'd Souls in the World, before their dislodging, arrive to the height of Prophetick Spirits. It is commonly said, there be more of these Instances of Fore-sight or Second-sight, and most extraordinary Prefages, in Scotland than in any other Country. One Example of the like nature, in foretelling the Fortune of Infants, is credibly given in the Life of Archbishop Spotswood, born in Scotland in the Year 1565. "When he was no sooner brought into the World, but this remarkable Passage did accompany his Birth: For among the rest that were present (not ordinary Gossippers, but Women of good note) there was one among them, who in a sober tho' in a prophetick Fit, taking the Child in her Arms, called aloud to the rest in these or the like terms; You may all very well rejoyce at the Birth of this Child, for he will become Perinchief.

“ the Prop and Pillar of this Church, and the main and chief Instrument in the defending of it.

Committed to the Governance of the Lady Cary.

To return to our young Duke Charles; When the King had given Orders for his Journey toward England: He appointed the Queen to follow him about twenty Days after, and in the mean time left his Commands, that the Prince should remain at Strive-ling, the Princess Elizabeth with Alexander Earl of Linlithgow, and our Duke of Albany with the Lord Fyvie President of the Session. Soon after he was committed to the Care and Governance of the Lady Cary, as a Respect and Reward to her Husband Sir Robert Cary, who had been sent from the English Council with the first News of Queen Elizabeth's Death.

Brought into England, and made Knight of the Bath and Duke of York, in 1604.

In the next Year 1604, he fell into some Indisposition, and was hardly fit for change of Air till toward October; when, by easie Stages, he was brought to the English Court at Windsor: and there, to give him the more Princely Figure, he was created Knight of the Bath on January the 5th, and the Day after was invested with the Title of Duke of York, to naturalize him in English Honours.

Committed to the Tuition of Mr. Murray in 1606.

In 1606 it seem'd to be now time to take him from his Governess; and from the treating him as a Child, to put him into a Manly way of Education. He was now therefore committed to the Tuition of Mr. Thomas Murray, a Scot, a Man of Learning and Prudence, tho' a Favourer of Presbytery; which yet he could never instill into his Pupil, who paid him all just Respect, made him afterwards his Secretary, and bestow'd on him the Provostship of Eaton in 1621, where at 59 Years of Age he was buried in April 1623. and left behind him many valuable Papers, which after a long Darkness were lately brought to Light, and are now in the Hands of a most Reverend Prelate of this Church.

A forward Scholar.

Under this Tutor he was diligent and studious; and the more so, because some Imperfections of his Body dispos'd him to the better Improvements of his Mind: for he was a weakly Boy, with his Legs growing crooked, that made his Gate slow and ungraceful: this made him less inclin'd to Sports and Exercises of Activity, and so more at leisure for his Book and his Pen. A Writer of his Life tells us, “ His Proficiency in Letters was so eminent, that Prince Henry taking notice of it, to put a Jest upon him, one day put the Cap of Archbishop Abbot (who was then with the Prince, the Duke, and other of the Nobility, waiting in the Privy Chamber for the King's coming out) on his Brother's Head; adding, That if he continued a good Boy, and follow'd his Book, he would make him one day Archbishop of Canterbury. Which the Child took in such Disdain, that he threw the Cap upon the Ground, and trampled it under his Feet with so much Eagerness, that he could hardly be restrained. Among those People now, who delight to draw Predictions from every Humour, or little Frolick of a Child, some would make this Action to be a Prefage of the Ruin of Episcopacy under his Administration: Others would have it not ominous to the Order, but to the Person of the Archbishop, who fell under his Displeasure, and the Consequence of it, a long Suspension from his Office. But wiser Folks were content to take it only for a Sign of Bigness of Spirit, and a Humour that did not love Jest-ing or Levity. The same Writer, Dr. Perinchief, observes, “ That his Childhood was blemished with a supposed Obstinacy; for the Weakness of his Body inclining him to Retirements, and the Imperfections of his Speech rendring Discourse tedious and unpleasant, he was suspected to be somewhat perverse: But more Age and Strength fitting him for Manlike Exercises, and the publick Hopes inviting him from his Privacies, he delivered the World of such Fears.

some natural Impediment in his Speech, which made him hesitate and a little stammer, and made Conversation less agreeable to him. An Historian says, that “ though this vocal Impediment accompanied him till the fatal Stroke, yet was it to wife Men an Index of his Wisdom: therefore Obloquy never play'd the Fool so much, as in imputing Folly to him; since there was never, or very rarely, known, a Fool that stammered.

A new Prospect open'd to him upon the Death of Prince Henry, who had made himself Gracious and Popular, and therefore left his succeeding Brother under a less Advantage of the People's Esteem and Favour. He died on November 6. 1612. His Brother Charles was immediately honour'd with the Dukedom of Cornwal, and the Regalities of it; and attended his Funeral as chief Mourner December 7. On the 14th of February following, he performed the Office of Brideman to the Princess Elizabeth his Sister, who on that Day was married to Frederick V. Prince Elector Palatine; a Match which tho' unfortunate in the first Consequences of it, yet extremely happy in laying in a Foundation for a Protestant Line of Succession to the Crown of England.

Duke of Cornwall on the Death of his elder Brother.

In 1616, being now of a manly Age and Inclination, he was upon Novemb. 3. created Prince of Wales, Earl of Chester and Flint, the Revenues thereof being assign'd to maintain a Court for him as apparent Heir of the Crown. He had now worn off the Love of Retirement, and a sedentary Life, and had outgrown many of the first Infirmities of Constitution. So that he had now Strength and Genius to apply himself to Action, and (as Tradition and Writers agree) “ He grew so perfect in Vaulting, Riding the great Horse, Running at the Ring, Shooting in Cross-bows, Muskets, and sometimes in great Pieces of Ordnance, that if Principality had been to be the Reward of Excellency in those Arts, he would have had a Title to the Crown this way also; being thought the best Marksman, and most graceful Manager of the great Horse, in the three Kingdoms.

Prince of Wales in 1616.

The Prince chose rather to divert himself in these Martial Exercises, than to be at the Head of any Political Measures. He enjoy'd his Privacies in the very Court, and left the Ministry of State-Affairs entirely to his Father and his Favourite Council. Some thought he did this to avoid the Jealousies of the old King, who had conceiv'd some ill Resentments of the Popularity of Prince Henry, and would be the more kind and easie to Prince Charles, if he saw less reason to suspect his Ambition and forward Humour. Others would more enviously ascribe it to a Narrowness of Mind, and an Incapacity of Greatness. But those had most Charity and Truth in their Conjectures, who suppos'd it the Effect of Modesty and filial Duty that restrain'd him from being officious in meddling with those Matters, which were not yet come to be his immediate Concern.

Not yet a Medler in Politicks.

The Queen his Mother died on March 2. 1618. Upon this Loss, he is said to have discovered a great Evenness of Spirit, bewailing it only with a just measure of Grief, without any affected Sorrows: A true inward Concern, that Nature and Gratitude rais'd in him; for she was observ'd to be most tender and affectionate to this Son above all her other Children. Under these Impressions of a deep unfeigned Sorrow, he chose to be chief Mourner at her Funeral, when her Corps was carried from Denmark-House to the Chappel of Henry VII. at Windsor, and there interr'd with great and due Solemnity.

Chief Mourner at the Queen's Funeral in 1618.

The Death of the Queen was, not long after, followed with a sharp Sickness of the King. On which occasion, we are told that many of the King's Friends were apprehensive of his Death, and began to lament the Prospect of those Dangers that might ensue upon it: In particular, Dr. Andrews, then Bishop of Ely, as a Confessor to His Majesty, took an opportunity of expressing to him “ the sad Condition

The King put in mind of his better Education.

Made Knight of the Garter in 1611.

In 1611 he was made Knight of the Garter, being now advanc'd into a more hopeful Youth, and labouring under little Imperfection, except that of tion of the Church, if God should at that time determine his Royal Life; the Prince having been only conversant with Scotchmen, who made up the greatest part of his Family, and were ill-affected to the Government and Worship of the Church of England. Of this the King is said to have become so very sensible, that he made a solemn Vow, If God should please to restore his Health, he would so instruct the Prince in the Controversies of Religion, as should secure his Affections to the present Establishment. Which he did with so much Success, that when he was giving Instructions to the Chaplains that were to wait upon the Prince into Spain, he charg'd them to decline, as far as possible, all Disputations in the Points of Religion: "But, says he, if any emergent Disputes shall happen, my Son is able to moderate in them: At which the Divines could not contain their Smiles: The King taking notice of their seeming to question his Judgment of the Prince's Abilities, added, with some vehemence, CHARLES shall manage a Point in Controversie with the best-studied Divine of you all. And indeed, This was a Talent in him, that did afterward appear in a most eminent degree; though many believ'd, that the want of this Accomplishment would have been more happy; and that he would have been better able to Protect the Church, if he had not pleas'd himself with contending and Disputing for it.

In Feats of Chivalry 1620

In the twentieth Year of his Age, on March 24. 1620, which was the Anniversary of King James's coming to the Crown of England, he performed a Jousting at Whitehall, together with several of the Nobility; wherein he is said to have acquitted himself with a singular Air and Spirit of Bravery and Honour. Some believ'd, that the Reputation he thus gain'd in Martial Exploits, would drive him too much upon the Love of Arms, unless he should have foreign Campaigns sufficient to divert the Heroick Humour.

Goes into Spain in 1623.

In 1623 the Prince was sent into Spain to make his Addresses to the Infanta, and thereby to procure the Restitution of the Palatinate to his Brother-in-law, the Prince Elector. The History of this Affair has been at large delivered in the preceding Reign: And therefore it need here only be observed, that after an ineffectual negotiating Love and Interest in Spain, he arriv'd at Portsmouth on the 5th of October with his whole Retinue, and went next Day to the King at Royalton; and soon after making his Entrance into London, he was receiv'd by the People with all possible Demonstrations of Joy: and publick Thanks were given in all Churches throughout England and Scotland for his safe Return. The Subjects were the better pleas'd that he came home without his Errand; for, in general, they had no good Opinion of a Spanish Match. And the King was satisfi'd with the Disappointment, because he found the Spanish Councils averse to his main Design, which was Restoring the Palatinate; and therefore he soon sent Orders to dissolve the Treaty of Marriage, speaking it in publick, That he would never marry his Son with a Portion of his only Sister's Tears.

Attends upon the King in his last Agonies.

The King falling into an Ague and Fever, was very apprehensive of approaching Death, and desiring on Thursday, March 24, to have the Sacrament administred to him, he receiv'd it with great Devotion, professing to the Prince his Son, who stood by him, that He had received a singular Comfort thereby, and therefore wish'd that he and all his Friends would partake of that Comfort whenever they came to lie under a like prospect of Death. The King departed this Life on Sunday, March 27, 1625.

Succeeds his Father in 1625.

The Privy Council immediately met, and drew up the Form of a Proclamation to proclaim the new King; which was published at Theobalds (where the King died) that Evening, and the next Day at Westminster and London, with usual Ceremonies, and very hearty Acclamations. In the Evening of this Monday, March 28, the King came to the Palace of St. James: On the Day following, all the Privy Counsellors of the late King were sworn into his present Majesty's Council; by whose Advice, a Commission was granted to authorize the Great Seal, Privy Seal, and Signet, till new ones could be prepared: And other Commissions were issued out for continuing the Powers of the Judges, Justices of Peace, Sheriffs, and all other Civil Officers, whose Trust did by Law determine with the King. It is best to give the Orders of the Council as they were formally pass.

- I. Order'd, "That a Commission be granted to authorize the Great Seal, Privy Seal, and Signet, till new ones be prepared.
- II. "That Commissions be issued out with all convenient speed for the Authorizing of all Judges, Justices of the Peace, Sheriffs, and other the Officers of Civil Government.
- III. "That Proclamation be made to authenticate Proceedings of Justice, and Preservation of the Peace.
- IV. "That all Powers of the respective Embassies be continued, and Notice given to foreign States and Potentates; and the like Proclamations and Commissions be order'd in Scotland and Ireland, &c.
- V. "That a Parliament be summoned according to his Majesty's Pleasure; and the Solemnization of his late Majesty's Funeral, and his own Coronation, be likewise then represented.

The Council, when they rose, immediately attended the King at St. James's, where the Lord Keeper, in the Name of the rest, gave Thanks to His Majesty for putting a Confidence in them, who had before serv'd his Royal Father; and then presented the said Orders of Resolves for his Majesty's Approbation: Who did accordingly approve them, and commanded the Execution of 'em by several Proclamations. By another particular Proclamation of the same Date, the King signified his Affliction for his Father's Death; and that he, being his only Son and undoubted Heir, is invest'd and established in the Crown Imperial of this Realm, and all other his Majesty's Realms, Dominions, and Countries, with all the Royalties, Pre-eminences, Stiles, Names, Titles, and Dignities to the same belonging. And he declared, That as he for his part shall, by God's Grace, shew himself a most benign and gracious Sovereign Lord to all his good Subjects in all their lawful Suits and Causes; so he mistrusteth not, but that they on their parts, will shew themselves unto him their natural Liege Lord, most loving, faithful, and obedient Subjects.

The Council at the same time mov'd the King, that his Father's Funeral might be solemnized, and his own Nuptials in France confirm'd, before the Sitting of the Parliament: To both which the King agreed. Accordingly, on the 23d of April, the Body of King James was conducted by the Nobility and great Officers of State, from Theobalds to Denmark-houfe in the Strand, from whence it was carried with a very pompous Solemnity on May 17, to the Abbey-Church at Westminster; the Hearse was followed by the King himself as chief Mourner, supported by the Earls of Arundel and Pembroke, with his Train carried up by twelve Peers of the Realm. After an elegant Sermon, preach'd by John Lord Bishop of Lincoln, the Corps was interr'd in Henry VII's Chapel, built for the Dormitory of our English Princes.

Funeral of K. James.

The King thought himself in Honour oblig'd to be early in his Preparations for a War toward the Recovery of the Palatinate. To pursue this good Design (which might have been more happily serv'd for the Counsels of the Parliament) General Musters were made in several Counties, and twelve thousand Men were rais'd, of which, eight thousand were to rendezvouz at Plimouth: Coat and Conduct Forces rais'd for Recovery of the Palatinate.

1625. Money were ordered to be paid by the Country, and they to be reimbursed at the King's Exchequer. And because Complaint was made of these Forces being disorderly in their March, a Proclamation was first issued for their good and quiet Behaviour: and soon after a Commission was granted, to execute a strict Discipline by Martial Law. These Methods gave occasion to some Debates among the Judges, and to some Discontents among the Common People.

Conclusion of the Match with France.

The King's next and chiefest Care, was to conclude his own Match with Henrietta Maria a Daughter of France. The Articles of Marriage had been sign'd by K. James on the 11th of May, and by the French King on the 14th of August following; and in March the said Articles were signed at Paris by the English Embassadors, the Earls of Carlisle and Holland. So that after a needless Dispensation from Rome, nothing now remain'd but the Ceremony of Espousals; for which the King sent over his Procratorial Letters for the Duke of Chevreaux to act in his Name: and on May 11. the Solemnity was performed by Cardinal Richieu, upon a Theatre erected for that Purpose before the Altar in the Church of Nôtre Dame in Paris, the Lady being given by her two Brothers, the King, and Monsieur. The D. of Buckingham was sent over to conduct Her Majesty into England: He came to Paris May 24, from whence he attended the Queen on June 2. toward Amiens, and forward to Bulleign, where the Royal Navy lying ready for Her, she embark'd June 12. and was brought safe, though a little sick, to Dover: where the King met her in the Morning June 13, and taking Coach the same Day for Canterbury, the Marriage was that Night consummated. On June 16. their Majesties entred London, where great Preparations had been made to receive them; but most of the Shew and Appearance was omitted, because the Plague was now encreased in the City and Suburbs. The Queen settled with her Family in Denmark or Somerset House, which had been fitted up for her Reception, with a Chapel for Popish Service, according to the Articles of Marriage; and a Convent for Capuchin Friars.

Great Plague.

Some People reflecting on the latter end of King Charles's Reign, have look'd on it as a very inauspicious Omen, that it began thus with a raging Pestilence. As if this first Calamity did portend all the other publick Evils which followed after: But Causes and Events are known only to the wise God. The Reign of King James began with a like spreading Contagion, which was not then a Prognostick of succeeding Miseries; for Peace and Plenty were the peculiar Blessing of all his Reign. An Historian makes it further remarkable, "That these two Plagues, that of the Father, this of the Son, were Natives both of one Parish, White Chapel, yea under the same Roof, and issued forth on the same Day of the Month: Such Correspondence was there in their Entrance, &c. It is less to be admir'd that the Plague should often begin in that Part of the Suburbs where the Butchers have their Shambles so close and unclean: And it was more common for the Plague to reign in London, when the Streets and Lanes were so very narrow, and the Houses for the most part so very fordid, that Air and Sweetness were the only Strangers. Whereas since the Rebuilding of the City, the Streets are open, the Passages clear, the Windows large, the Cottages of the Poor are remov'd further into the Fields, and many other Obstructions of breathing are taken away: So as since the Fire, the Plague has never broke out in this populous City. God long avert the Judgment!

Conclusion of the Match
France.

Others have thought, that this Reign began with a greater Judgment in the King's Marriage with Popery and France: Two Evils with which the Interest of this Church and Nation could bear no Alliance. The young King indeed was in this excusable, that he did not merely follow his own Inclinations, but submitted to the Judgment of his Father and the Parliament, who had jointly concerted this Match, and had carried it so far, as not to leave room for an honourable Retreat. But however, considering the Malignity of Popish Religion, the Imperiousness of French Government, the Influence of a stately Queen upon an affectionate Husband, and the share she must have in the Education of her Children; it was even then easie to foresee, that this unequal Match might prove very fatal to our English Prince and People, and lay in a Vengeance to future Generations.

On June 18th, according to Summons, the Parliament began at Westminster; where the Lords being habited in their Robes, and the Commons attending his Majesty, seated in his Royal Throne, spoke thus: 13.

I Thank God, that the Business to be treated on at this time is of such a nature, that it needs no Eloquence to set it forth; for, I am neither able to do it, neither doth it stand with my Nature to spend much time in Words. It is no new Business, being already happily begun by my Father of blessed Memory who is with God, therefore it needeth no Narrative: I hope to God, you will go on to maintain it as freely as you advised my Father to it. It is true, he may seem to some to have been slack to begin so just and so glorious a Work; but it was his Wisdom that made him loth to begin a Work until he might find a Means to maintain it. But after that he saw, how much he was abused in the Confidence he had with other States, and was confirmed by your Advice to run the Course we are in, with your Engagement to maintain it; I need not press to prove how willingly he took your Advice: for, the Preparations that are made are better able to declare it, than I to speak it. The Assistance of those in Germany, the Fleet that is ready for Action, with the rest of the Preparations, which I have only followed my Father in, do sufficiently prove that he entred into this Action.

King's
Speech.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

I hope you do remember, that you were pleased to employ me to advise my Father to break off those two Treaties that were on foot: so that I cannot say, that I came hither a free unengaged Man. It's true, I came into this Business willingly and freely, like a young Man, and consequently rashly; but it was by your Interest, your Engagement: So that though it were done like a young Man, yet I cannot repent me of it; and I think none can blame me for it, knowing the Love and Fidelity you have borne to your King, having my self likewise some little Experience of your Affections. I pray you remember, that this being my first Action, and begun by your Advice and Intreaty, what a great Dishonour it were to you and me, if this Action so begun should fail for that Assistance you are able to give me. Yet knowing the Constancy of your Love both to me and this Business, I needed not to have said this, but only to shew what Care and Sense I have of your Honours and mine own. I must intreat you likewise to consider of the Times we are in, how that I must adventure your Lives (which I should be loth to do) should I continue you here long; and you must venture the Business, if you be slow in your Resolutions: Wherefore I hope you will take such grave Counsel, as you will expedite what you have in hand to do, which will do me and your selves an infinite deal of Honour; you in shewing your Love to me, and me that I may perfect that Work which my Father hath so happily begun.

Last of all, Because some malicious Men may, and, as I hear, have given out, that I am not so true a Keeper and Maintainer of the true Religion that I profess; I assure you, that I may with S. Paul say, that I have been trained up at Samuel's Feet; and although I shall be never so arrogant

1625. " as to assume unto my self the rest, I shall so far " shew the End of it, that all the World may see,
" that none hath been, nor ever shall be, more de-" sirus to maintain the Religion I profess, than I " shall be.

" Now because I am unfit for much speaking, I " mean to bring up the Fashion of my Predecessors,
" to have my Lord Keeper speak for me in most " things: therefore I have commanded him to speak
" something to you at this time; which is more for " Formality, than any great matter he hath to say " unto you.

Then the Lord Keeper declared,

Lord Keeper's
Speech.

" That the King's main Reason of calling the Par" liament, besides the beholding of his Subject's " Faces, was to mind them of the great Engage" ments for the Recovery of the Palatinate, imposed " on his Majesty by the late King his Father, and " by themselves who brake off the two Treaties with " Spain; also to let them understand, that the suc" ceeding Treaties and Alliances, the Armies sent " into the Low Countries, the Repairing of the Forts, " and the Fortifying of Ireland, do all meet in one " Centre, the Palatinate; and, that the Subsidies " granted the last Parliament are herein already " spent, whereof the Accompt is ready, together " with as much more of the King's own Revenue.

His Lordship farther recommended three Circumstances.

" First, the Time. All Europe being at this Day " at the Pool of Bethesda, the first stirring of the " Waters must be laid hold on; wherefore his Ma" jesty desires them to bestow this Meeting on him,
" or rather on their Actions, and the next shall be " theirs, as soon and as long as they please, for do-
" mesticke Business. Secondly, Supply. If Subsidies
" be thought too long and backward, his Majesty " desires to hear, and not to propound the way.
" Thirdly, the Issue of Action; which being the first,
" doth highly concern his Majesty's Honour and Re" putation, for which he relies upon their Loves " with the greatest Confidence that ever King had
" in his Subjects; witness his Royal Poem, Amor
" Civium Regis Munimentum: And he doubts not,
" but as soon as he shall be known in Europe to be " their King, so soon shall they be known to be a " Loving and Loyal Nation to him.

Opening of this Parliament did promise Joy and Satisfaction.

There were many Reasons to dispose the Hearts of the People to be fill'd with Content and Joy at this Opening of the Parliament. 1. The very Call of it so immediately after his Accession to the Throne, was grateful to the People of England, who always think themselves most safe under a Sitting Parliament. 2. His Speech to the Lords and Commons was more close and pertinent, as well as more tender and affectionate than the like Applications of his Royal Father, who had used himself to Harrangues, rather than to the natural Propriety of Thoughts and Words. 3. He wisely resolv'd the War into the Advice of the last Parliament, and made himself their Agent and Instrument only in persuading his Father to break off the Treaties.
4. He remov'd the Jealousies which had been unhappily rais'd of his Inclinations to Popery, upon account of his Treaty with Spain, and his March with France; Popular Jealousies, which indeed he could never perfectly remove, though he gave this solemn Assurance, and liv'd and died a Proof of it. 5. He ask'd for Supplies upon the right Bottom of letting the Subjects know, that the Money granted in last Parliament was already spent in the Uses assign'd for it; and that the Account of those Expences was ready to be laid before them. In a word, Here were All the wise and just Measures that a new Prince could take to render himself Acceptable to his People, and Considerable to all the World. The more Wonder and Pity, that this happy Beginning of a Reign should proceed unfortunately, and conclude most miserably.

June 21. the Commons presented Sir Tho. Crew Kt. Speaker and Serjeant at Law for their Speaker, and his Majesty approv'd the Choice; which was thought the more agreeable, because he had been Speaker in the last Parliament of King James, and was the better acquainted with Affairs now depending. The House began with various Debates: Some insisted, " That " the Grievances mentioned, but not redressed, in " last Parliament, should be now considered: Others
" call'd for an immediate Account of the last Subsi" dies granted for Recovery of the Palatinate: O" thers for putting the Laws in Execution against " Priests and Jesuits, and such Papists as resorted " to the Houses and Chapels of foreign Ambassa" dors: Others declaim'd against the Dangers of " Arminianism, and the spreading of those Tenets
" by some late Writers, especially Mr. Montague.
On the other hand, it was dutifully urg'd by the King's Friends in that House, " That they had rea" son to thank his Majesty for calling a Parliament
" upon his first coming to the Crown, as the surest " way to keep up a right Understanding between " him and his People: That since he began to reign,
" the Grievances were none, or so few and inconfi-" derable, that they were not yet worth a Com" plaint: That they could not but remember, how " his Majesty, when Prince, had been very instru" mental in soliciting the Cause of Parliament and " People with his Royal Father, and had yet done " nothing but in pursuance of the Measures taken " in that former Reign; that therefore it would be " the Wisdom of this House to sweeten all things
" between the King and his People, and to express " their Duty by an effectual Supply, and therewith
" to offer nothing but a humble Petition for the " Honour and Safety of Religion.

The Plague encreasing, the Commons mov'd the Lords to join in a Petition to the King for a publick Fast, whereunto their Lordships readily concurr'd; and the King as freely consenting, a Proclamation was issued forth for a Day of Fasting and Humiliation throughout the Kingdom; and the King commanded the Archbishop and six other Bishops to draw up a Form of Prayer to implore the Divine Mercy to stop the raging Pestilence, and to avert the Famine that seem'd to be now threatned by the extraordinary wet Weather; and to beg God's Blessing upon the Fleet now ready to put to Sea. This Fast was solemnly kept by both Houses of Parliament on Saturday Jul. 2. and throughout all England on Wednesday Jul. 20.

A publick

After some Disgust between the King and the Commons, in relation to Mr. Montague, they unanimously presented two Subsidies; which being con-firm'd by the Lords, were offer'd to his Majesty, with the usual Desire of his gracious Acceptance.
The Lord Conway, Secretary of State, signified to the Lords and Commons together, That his Majesty did kindly accept the Bill for two Subsidies, but, that the Necessities of our present Affairs were so urgent, as to require their farther Advice and Assistance; and so opened the Grounds and Reasons of the War, and the Expences requisite for a Support of it. Then the Lord Keeper deliver'd a short Message from the King to both Houses, That as to the Petition of the Lords and Commons touching Religion, his Majesty was pleas'd at first to give them a gracious Assurance, and had now sent them a fuller Answer, to give them Satisfaction in every Particular.

The Houses were preparing several Acts; as, Other " against Giving and Taking of Bribes for Places of " Judicature; To restrain the arbitrary Pressing of " Soldiers; To grant the Tonnage and Poundage
" for one Year only; and some other Bills in Agi" tation: But, by reason of the great Increase of the " Plague, the two Houses mov'd his Majesty for a " short Recess; and accordingly on Monday July 11. Adjoin'd
" they adjourn'd to Oxford, to reassemble there on the 1625. In the time of this Recess, there happen'd an Action at Sea that made the King suffer very much in the Affections of his People, and in the Esteem of foreign Protestants. King James, in his last Treaty with France, had promis'd the lending of some Ships to the French King upon reasonable Conditions, supposing them to be employ'd only against the King of Spain, or his Allies, in Italy. To perform this Engagement, Captain John Pennington was sent in the Vanguard, a principal Man of War, with seven Merchant Ships of great Burthen and Strength, to ride upon the Coasts of France for the Service of that King; who, instead of employing them against a common Enemy, had now resolv'd to make another use of them against his own Protestant Subjects, to block up the Harbour of Rochel, and so reduce the Town to his absolute Subjection. Captain Pennington was sensible of this ill Design, and therefore sent back a Memorial to the Duke of Buckingham, Lord High Admiral, to decline the Service, and to bring home the Ships in Safety and Honour; but he soon received Letters from the Duke, and a Warrant from Secretary Conway, in the King's Name, to command him to deliver up the Ships to the hands of such French-men as his Christian Majesty should appoint, but not to desert his own Charge over them. These Orders were deliver'd to him by the hands of the French Ambassadour, together with a Letter from the French King, requiring him to receive aboard a certain Number of French Soldiers, and his Admiral the Duke of Montmorance, and so to join against the Rochellers. Pennington very bravely refused; upon which a Dispute arising, the French Ambassadour's Secretary came two several times to the Captain's Ship, to Protest against him as a Rebel to his King and Country: But at the making of the last Protest, enforced with Challenges and Threats, the Soldiers and Mariners grew into such a Fury and Tumult, that they got up their Anchors and set Sail for England, saying, like true English Sea-men, that they would rather be hang'd at home, than be Slaves to the French, and fight against the Protestant Religion. When they came to anchor in the Downs, Captain Pennington sent an Express to the Duke of Buckingham, to inform him of what had happen'd; and to assure him, that All his Men would sooner be hang'd than return again into France. But the King, upon importunity of the Queen, sent an express and strict Order to Pennington, to put his former Instructions, without delay, in execution; to resign his Ship called the Vanguard, with all her Furniture, into the hands of the Marquis Doffat; and, to require the seven Merchant Ships to put themselves into the Service of the French King, under the utmost Penalty. Upon this Pennington sail'd back to Diep, and put the Vanguard into the absolute Power of the French King, and deliver'd up the other Ships for the same purpose; who were weighing Anchor, and making away, but upon a Shot from Pennington they came in again; only Sir Ferdinando Gorge stoutly brought off his Ship called the Neptune. The Companies in the rest unanimously declar'd against serving the French, and quitted their Ships all but one Man, and Pennington himself came away for England. This Expedition was fatal to the King's Interest, brought on a Jealousie of the new Queen, and rais'd a general Odium against the Duke of Buckingham.

On Monday Aug. 1. the Parliament reassembled at Oxford, and on Thursday Aug. 4. the Lords and Commons were commanded to attend his Majesty in the spacious Hall of Christ Church, where the King made this Speech to them.

My Lords, and you of the Commons,

WE all remember, that from your Desires and Advice my Father, now with God, brake off those two Treaties with Spain, that were then in hand. Well you then foresaw, that as well for regaining my dispossest'd Brother's Inheritance, as Home Defence, a War was likely to succeed: And that as your Counsels had led my Father into it, so your Assistance in a Parliamentary way to pursue it, should not be wanting. That Aid you gave him by Advice was for Succour of his Allies, the Guarding of Ireland; and the Home-part, Supply of Munition, preparing and setting forth of his Navy. A Council you thought of and appointed for the War, and Treasurers for issuing of the Monies: And to begin this Work of your Advice, you gave three Subsidies and as many Fifteens, which with speed were levied, and by Direction of that Council of War (in which the Preparation of this Navy was not the least) disburs'd.

It pleas'd God at the Entrance of this Preparation (by your Advice begun) to call my Father to his Mercy, whereby I enter'd as well to the Care of your Design as his Crown. I did not then as Princes do of Custom and Formality, reassemble you, but that by your farther Advice and Aid I might be able to proceed in that which by your Counsels my Father was engag'd in. Your Love to me, and Forwardness to further those Affairs, you express'd by a Grant of two Subsidies yet ungathered; although I must assure you by my self and others, upon Credit taken up, and aforehand disburs'd, and far short as yet to set forth that Navy now preparing; as I have lately the Estimate of those of Care, and who are still employ'd about it, whose Particular of all Expences about this Preparation shall be given you, when you please to take an Account of it.

His Majesty having ended his Speech, commanded his Secretaries, the Lord Conway and Sir John Cook, more particularly to declare the present State of Affairs; which they did, with reference to Germany, France, the Low Countries, Denmark, Sweden, and Italy: and then returning to our Condition at home; a Fleet ready to put to Sea, and an Army lying at Plymouth; and so pressing for proportionable Aid.

Then the Lord Treasurer added, "That the late King, when he died, was indebted to the City of London one hundred and twenty thousand Pounds, besides Interest; indebted for Denmark and the Palatinate one hundred and fifty thousand Pounds; indebted for his Wardrobe, forty thousand Pounds. These Debts lie upon his present Majesty, who is indebted to London seventy thousand Pounds, that he has laid out; for his Navy twenty thousand Pounds, and twenty thousand Pounds for Count Mansfield; for Mourning and Funeral Expences for his Father, forty two thousand Pounds; for Expences concerning the Queen, forty thousand Pounds; and that, besides all this, the Navy would require, for the intended Expedition, three hundred thousand Pounds."

These great Occasions of Supply made some Members of the House of Commons take Advantage of the King's Necessities, and improve the popular Discontents; which the King might have easily allay'd by soft Words, and Reformation of some few Abuses: But finding the King not much dispos'd to please them, they flew into higher Pretensions, complaining, "That the Treasury was misemploy'd; that evil Counsels guided the King's Designs; that all our Necessities were owing to a wrong Management; that they ought to Petition the King to take a more faithful Council; that it was not safe to grant more Money, till Grievances were redress'd; that it should be declared, against what Enemy the Fleet and Army were intended; that Court Offices were sold; that the King had not yet given a full Answer to their Petition concerning Religion; nor about the Imposition upon Wines; that all Miscarriages were in greatest measure owing to the Potency of the Duke of Buckingham, upon whom they reflected with great Severity, that he had broke the Match with Spain, to make that with France upon much harder terms; that

 nce between Lords and Commons.
 A Conference was held between the Lords and Commons upon the Subject of these Debates, and more especially upon the Establish'd Religion.
 When the Conference was over, both Houses were ordered to meet at Christ-Church, to receive an Answer to their Petition concerning Religion: To every Clause whereof his Majesty answered in a Parliamentary way, upon Aug. 7. And because the Foundation of all the ensuing Troubles was laid in these Apprehensions of the Growth of Popery; it will be proper to give the Petitions and Answers in their Order at large.

Petitione of Parliament, and his Majesty's Answer.

To the King's most Excellent Majesty.

Most Gracious Sovereign,

" IT being infallibly true, that Nothing can more " establish the Throne, and assure the Peace and " Prosperity of the People, than the Unity and " Sincerity of Religion; We your most humble and " loyal Subjects, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal,
 " and Commons of this present Parliament assem" bled, hold our selves bound, in Conscience " and Duty, to represent the same to your Sacred " Majesty, together with the dangerous Consequen" ces of the Increase of Popery in this Land, and " what we conceive to be the principal Causes
 " thereof, and what may be the Remedies.

" The Dangers appear in these Particulars:

- I. " In their desperate Ends, being both the Sub-
 " version of Church and State; and the Restlessness
 " of their Spirits to attain these Ends, the Doctrine " of their Teachers and Leaders persuading them,
 " that therein they do God good Service:
- II. " Their evident and strict Dependence upon " such Foreign Princes, as no way affect the Good " of your Majesty and this State.
- III. " The opening a way of Popularity to the " Ambition of any who shall adventure to make " himself Head of so great a Party:

The principal Causes of the Increase of Papists, are;

- I. " The want of the due Execution of Laws a" gainst Jesuits, Seminary Priests, and Popish Re" cufants; occasioned partly by the Connivency of " the State, partly by Defects in the Laws them" selves, and partly by the manifold Abuse of Of" ficers.
- II. " The interposing of Foreign Princes, by their " Ambassadors and Agents, in favour of them.
- III. " Their great Concourse to the City, and " frequent Conferences and Conventicles there.
- IV. " The open and usual Resort to the Houses " and Chapels of Foreign Ambassadors.
- V. " The Education of their Children in Semi" naries and Houses of their Religion in Foreign " Parts, which of late have been greatly multiplied
 " and enlarged for entertaining of the English.
- VI. " That in some Places of your Realm, your " People be not sufficiently instructed in the Know" ledge of true Religion.
- VII. " The licentious Printing and Dispersing of " Popish and Seditious Books.
- VIII. " The Employment of Men ill-affected in " Religion, in Places of Government, who do,
 " may, or shall countenance the Popish Party.

The Remedies against this outrageous and dangerous Disease, we conceive to be these ensuing.

- I. " That the Youth of this Realm be carefully " educated by able and religious Schoolmasters, and " they to be enjoined to Catechize, and instruct " their Scholars in the Grounds and Principles of " true Religion. And whereas, by many Complaints " from divers Parts of the Kingdom, it doth plainly appear, That sundry Popish Scholars, dissem-bling their Religion, have craftily crept in, and obtained the Places of Teaching in divers Counties, and thereby infected and perverted their Scholars, and so fitted them to be transported to the Popish Seminaries beyond the Seas; That therefore there be great care in Choice and Admitting of Schoolmasters, and that the Ordinaries make diligent Enquiries of their Demeanours, and proceed to the removing of such as shall be fault-ty, or justly suspected.

His Majesty's Answer.

This is well allowed of: And, for the better Performance of what is desired, Letters shall be written to the two Archbishops, and from them Letters to go to all the Ordinaries of their several Provinces to see this done; the several Ordinaries to give Account of their Doings herein to the Archbishops respectively, and they to give Account to his Majesty of their Proceedings herein.

II. " That the ancient Discipline of the Univer" sities be restored, being the famous Nurseries of " Literature and Virtue.

Ans. This is approved by his Majesty, and the Chancellour of each University shall be required to cause due execution of it.

III. " That special Care be taken to enlarge the " Word of God throughout all the Parts of your " Majesty's Dominions, as being the most power" ful Means for planting of true Religion, and " rooting out of the contrary. To which end, a" mong other things, to advise your Bishops, by " Fatherly Entreaty and tender Usage, to reduce " to the peaceable and orderly Service of the " Church such able Ministers as have been formerly " silenced, that there may be a profitable Use of " their Ministry in these needful and dangerous " Times; and, that Non-Residency, Pluralities, and " Commendams, may be moderated: Where we can" not forbear most humbly to thank your Majesty
 " for diminishing the Number of your own Chap" lains, not doubting of the like Princely Care for " the well-bestowing of the rest of your Benefices,
 " both to the Comfort of the People, and the En" couragement of the Universities, being full of " grave and able Ministers unfurnish'd of Livings.

Ans. This his Majesty likes well, so as it be applied to such Ministers as are peaceable, orderly, and conformable to the Church-Government: For Plu-ralities and Non-residencies they are now so moderated, that the Archbishops affirm, there be now no Dispensations for Pluralities granted; nor no Dan now is allowed above two Benefices, and those not above thirty Miles distant: And for avoiding Non-residence, the Canon in that case provided shall be duly put in execution. For Commendams, they shall be sparingly granted, only in such cases where the Exility and Smallness of the Bishoprick requireth. Also his Majesty will cause that the Benefices belonging to him shall be well bestowed. And, for the better propagating of Religion, his Majesty recommendeth to the Parliament, that Care may be taken, and Provision made, that every Parish shall allow a competent Maintenance for an able Minister; and, that the Dances of Parsonages Improprate would allow to the Vicars, Curates, and Ministers, in Villages and Places belonging to their Parsonage, sufficient Scipend and Allowance for Preaching Ministers.

IV. " That there may be strict Provision against " Transporting of English Children to the Semina" ries beyond the Seas, and for the recalling of them
 " who are already there placed; and for the Pu" nishment of such your Subjects as are Maintain-
 " ers of those Seminaries, or of the Scholars; con" sidering, that besides the seducing of your Peo" ple, great Sums of Money are yearly expended " upon them, to the impoverishing of this King" dom.

Ans^w. The Law in this case shall be put in execution: And farther, there shall be Letters written to the Lord Treasurer, and also to the Lord Admiral, that all the Ports of this Realm, and the Creeks and Members thereof, be strictly kept, and strict Searches made to this end: A Proclamation shall be to recall both the Children of Noblemen, and the Children of any other Men, and they to return by a Day: Also Maintainers of Seminaries, or Scholars there, shall be punished according to Law.

V. "That no Popish Recusant be permitted to come within the Court, unless your Majesty be pleased to call him upon special Occasion, agreeable to the Statute of 3 Jacobi. And whereas your Majesty, for preventing of apparent Mischiefs both to your Majesty and the State, hath in your Princely Wisdom taken Order, that none of your natural-born Subjects not professing the true Religion as by Law established, be admitted into the Service of your Royal Consort the Queen; we give your Majesty most humble Thanks, and desire that your Order herein may be observed.

Ans^w. If his Majesty shall find or be inform'd of any Concourse of Recusants to the Court, the Law shall be strictly followed: And his Majesty is pleased that by Proclamation the British and the Irish Subjects shall be put in the same case. And as his Majesty hath provided in his Treaty with France, so his Purpose is to keep it, that none of his Subjects shall be admitted into his Service, or into the Service of his Royal Consort the Queen, that are Popish Recusants.

VI. "That all the Laws now standing in force against Jesuits, Seminary Priests and others, having taken Orders by Authority derived from the See of Rome, be put in due execution. And to the Intent they may not pretend to be surprized, that a speedy and certain Day be prefixed by your Majesty's Proclamation for their Departure out of this Realm and all other your Dominions, and not to return upon the severest Penalties of the Law now in force against them; And that all your Majesty's Subjects may be thereby admonished not to receive, comfort, entertain, or conceal any of them, upon the Penalties which may be lawfully inflicted. And that all such Papists, Jesuits, and Recusants, who are and shall be imprisoned for Recusancy or any other cause, may be so strictly restrained, as that none shall have Conference with them, thereby to avoid the Contagion of their corrupt Religion. And that no Man who shall be suspected of Popery be suffered to be a Keeper of any of your Majesty's Prisons.

Ans^w. The Law in this case shall be put in execution, and a Proclamation shall be to the effect desired: And such Restraint shall be made as is desired: And no Man that is justly suspected of Popery shall be suffered to be Keeper of any of his Majesty's Prisons.

VII. "That your Majesty be pleased to take such Order as to your Princely Wisdom shall be expedient, that no natural-born Subject, or strange Bishops, nor any other by Authority from the See of Rome, confer any Ecclesiastical Orders to exercise any Ecclesiastical Function whatsoever toward or upon your Majesty's natural Subjects within your Dominions.

Ans^w. This is fit to be ordered according as is provided; and it shall be so published by Proclamation.

VIII. "That your Majesty's Learned Council may receive Order and Commandment to consider of all former Grants of Recusants Lands, that such of them may be avoided as are made to the Recusants Use or Interest, out of which the Recusant receiveth any Benefit, which are either void or voidable by the Law.

Ans^w. The King will give Order to his learned Council to consider of the Grants, and will do according as is desired.

IX. "That your Majesty will be likewise pleased strictly to command all your Judges and Ministers of Justice, Ecclesiastical and Temporal, to see the Laws of this Realm against Popish Recusants to be duly executed: And namely, That the Censure of Excommunication be declared and certified against them, and that they be not absolved but upon publick Satisfaction, by yielding to Conformity.

Ans^w. His Majesty leaves the Laws to their course, and will order in the point of Excommunication as is desired.

X. "That your Majesty will be pleased to remove from Places of Authority and Government all such Persons as are either Popish Recusants, or according to Direction of former Acts of State to be justly suspected.

Ans^w. This his Majesty thinks fit, and will give Order for it.

XI. "That present Order be taken for disarming all Popish Recusants legally convicted or justly suspected according to the Laws in that behalf, and the Orders taken by his late Majesty's Privy Council upon reason of State.

Ans^w. The Laws and Acts in this case shall be followed, and put in due execution.

XII. "That your Majesty be also pleased, in respect of the great Resort of Recusants to and about London, to command forthwith, upon pain of your Indignation and severe Execution of the Laws, that they retire themselves to their several Countries, there to remain confined within five miles of their Places.

Ans^w. For this the Laws in force shall be forthwith executed.

XIII. "And whereas your Majesty hath strictly commanded and taken Order, that none of the natural-born Subjects repair to the hearing of Masses or other superstitious Service at the Chapels or Houses of foreign Ambassadors, or in any other places whatsoever; We give your Majesty most humble Thanks, and desire that your Order and Commandment therein may be continued and observed, and that the Offenders herein may be punished according to the Laws.

Ans^w. The King gives Assent thereto, and will see that observed which herein hath been commanded by him.

XIV. "That all such Insolencies as any that are Popishly affected have lately committed, or shall hereafter commit to the Dishonour of our Religion, or to the Wrong of the true Professors thereof, be exemplarily punished.

Ans^w. This shall be done as is desired.

XV. "That the Statute of 1 Eliz. for the payment of Twelve-pence every Sunday by such as shall be absent from Divine Service in the Church, without a lawful Excuse, may be put in due execution, the rather for that the Penalty by Law is given to the Poor, and therefore not to be dispensed withal.

Ans^w. It is fit that this Statute be executed, and the Penalties shall not be dispensed withal.

XVI. "Lastly, That your Majesty would be pleased to extend your Princely Care also over the Kingdom of Ireland, that the like Courses may be there 1625. " there taken for the restoring and establishing of true Religion there.

Ans. His Majesty's Cares are and shall be extended over the Kingdom of Ireland, and he will do all that a Religious King should do for the restoring and establishing true Religion there.

" And thus (most gracious Sovereign) according to our Duty and Zeal to God and Religion, to your Majesty and your Safety, to the Church and Commonwealth, and their Peace and Prosperity, we have made a faithful Declaration of the present Estate, the Causes and Remedies of this increasing Disease of Popery; humbly offering the same to your Princely Care and Wisdom. The Answer of your Majesty's Father, our late Sovereign of famous Memory, upon the like Petition, did give us great comfort of Reformation; but your Majesty's most gracious Promises made in that kind, do give us Confidence and Assurance of the continual Performance thereof. In which Comfort and Confidence reposing our selves, we most humbly pray for your Majesty's long continuance in all Princely Felicity.

It is plain, that as nothing could more become the Wisdom and Honour of the Parliament, than to make such a Petition; so nothing could better assert the Zeal and Affection of the King, than to give such an Answer. The Petition shews, that the Jealousies of Popery were then very high; and the Answer assures them, that the King will effectually suppress those Fears and Jealousies. But indeed Political Jealousies are like the Conjugal, when they are once raised, it is hard to extinguish 'em. Promises of Fidelity are not believ'd; Reconciling Favours are suspected; and the strictest Guard upon Innocence will be thought Guilty. There is no reason to doubt, but that his Majesty was sincere in these Royal Assurances he gave his People: And for a more full Conviction, at the time of Reading the Petition and Answer it was farther intimated to the Commons, " That as his Majesty took well their minding him of the Care of Religion, so he would have done and granted the same things if they had not petitioned for them. That he did not place this Answer to their Petition as a Wheel to draw on other Affairs and Designs, but he leaves them to move in their own Spheres; and what he hath done in this Particular comes from these two Fountains, Conscience and Duty to his Father, who in his last Speech recommended unto him the Person, but not the Religion, of his Queen.

Next to the Dangers of Popery, the greatest Grievance of the Commons was, to see the Duke of Buckingham in the excessive Favours of the King, the prime Minister, the highest Officer, and in effect the sole Mover of the Court. The Favourites of every Prince were alway odious to the English People, and were frequently set upon by English Parliaments. Not only Self-love, Envy, Ambition, Disgust, Revenge, and such like Passions, do naturally create an Aversion to any one Subject who seems to engross and appropriate to himself the common Father of the People; but the laudable Affections that prompt to Equity and Impartiality, Tenderness to our Prince, and Love to our Country, all conspire to make every indifferent Person an Enemy to the one powerful Fellow-member, that commands the Head, and usurps over the whole Body. This Repentment had been very loud in the present Session; Speeches and Replies had been very severe: And therefore the Duke thought it proper to make some Apology and Defence for himself. He took an Opportunity of doing this when Both Houses were thus together to receive his Majesty's Answer as before related. " He began with acquainting the Lords and Commons, that by the King's Command he was to give an Account of the Fleet, and the Preparations thereof. He said, that the first and the last time he had the Happiness to speak in that Auditory, it was of the Spanish Treaty, and then he was so happy as to be honoured and applauded by both Houses of Parliament; and he made no question but speaking now with the same Heart, he should be no less acceptable to them. He requested the House of Commons to believe, that if any Member had, in Discharge of his Conscience, or in his Zeal for Reformation, spoke any thing which might seem to reflect upon some particular Persons; He should be the last Man that would apply this to himself, because he was confidently assured of two things; first, that they would be just not to fall upon him without cause; and secondly, that he himself should do nothing unfitable to the Character of a faithful Englishman. Then he proceeded to sum up the Objections rais'd against him, and to give particular Answers to them. The Objections were by way of Quære; 1. By what Counsel those Designs and Actions of War were carried on and enterprised? Ans. By the Counsel of the Parliament, appointed according to the Act of both Houses, March 23. 1623. &c. 2. Why did not his Majesty declare the Enemy presently upon granting those three Subsidies? Ans. His Majesty considered the state of Christendom at that Season, and found it full of Danger to declare the Enemy, for three Reasons, &c. 3. Whether a considerable Sum of Money be yet required? Ans. Forty thousand Pounds is yet necessary, &c. 4. Why was not this want of Money foreseen, but now only thought upon unexpectedly and dangerously, considering the Sickness? Ans. It was foreseen before, but interrupted by unfortunate Accidents, &c. 5. Who gave Counsel to his Majesty so suddenly, when the Sickness was so dangerously spread, to convene this Parliament? Ans. His Majesty commanded him to say, that it was the Business it self that gave this Counsel, and the Necessity of it, &c. 6. Is not the time of the Year too far spent for the Navy to go forth? Ans. The King answer'd this formerly; Better half the Navy perish, than the going thereof should be stayed. 7. Whether those eight Ships lent to the French King, which were employed against the Rochellers, were not paid with the Subsidy Money? Ans. Those eight Ships were employed at the Charge of the French King, &c. 8. Whether the Duke, having been our Servant to break the Match with Spain, made not a worse Match with France, and upon harsher terms? Ans. I hope the contrary will appear by the Answer to your Petition. 9. Did not the Duke serve us in breaking the two Treaties with Spain, out of spleen and malice to Conde Olivares? Ans. There was no reason to hate Olivares, who was the Means to make him happy in obliging this Nation with Papers received from his Hands, &c. 10. Why should the Duke speak of immense Charges which the Kingdom is not able to bear; as, to assist the King of Denmark with thirty thousand Pounds per Month, Count Mansfield with twenty thousand Pounds a Month, the Low Countries with eight thousand Pounds a Month, and two thousand six hundred Pounds a Month for Ireland? Ans. Make the King Chief of the War by a Diversion, and he will give a greater Advantage to all his Allies, than by any Monthly Allowance, &c. 11. But where is the Enemy? Ans. Make the Fleet ready to go out, and the King bids You name the Enemy your selves, &c.

After the Commons were returned from the Upper House on this Tuesday August 9. a Report was made of his Majesty's Answer, and of the Duke's Defence: Upon which the Members differ'd. Some were for present Supply in Gratitude to his Majesty's gracious Answer; and urg'd, that this Supply was not for the King's own particular Wants, but for the Honour and Defence of the Kingdom; and, that it might prove dangerous not to comply with the King in such a modest and just Desire. Others were of a contrary Mind, and said, It was rather their Duty to present to the King, how he might live glorious at

Message from the King to the H. of Commons. Accordingly, on Wednesday Aug. 10. while the Commons were going to reassume the Debate, they receiv'd a Message from the King, wherein his Majesty took notice, "that he perceived the House intended to enter into consideration of divers Heads concerning the King and the Commonwealth; that he was pleas'd with their good Intentions, but desired them to consider his Affairs, which requir'd a speedy Dispatch, and indeed a quick Supply. He offer'd the Parliament should meet again in Winter, at what time they please, upon his Royal Word, and then sit till they had perfected all things for the common Good: and, in conclusion, desired them to consider, that this was the first Request he had ever made to them.

The Influence of this Message upon the H. of Commons. Upon this Message some Members earnestly pressed the giving of two Subsidies, and two Fifteens, in regard to his Majesty's Honour, and the Necessity of Publick Affairs. But others replied, That Necessity was a dangerous Counsellor, and might be a continual Argument of Supplies in all Parliaments: that those Ministers who had put the King and Kingdom into such Necessity, ought to answer for it: that there was as much Necessity for Redress of Grievances as for Grant of more Subsidies, &c. The House at last agreed upon a Declaration, drawn up in this Form:

They draw up a Declaration. "WE the Knights, Citizens, and Burgessees, of the Commons House of Parliament, being the Representative Body of the whole Commons of this Realm, abundantly comforted in his Majesty's late gracious Answer touching Religion, and his Message for the care of our Health; do solemnly protest and vow, before God and the World, with one Heart and Voice, That we are all resolv'd, and do hereby declare, that we will ever continue most Loyal and Obedient Subjects to our most gracious Sovereign Lord K. Charles; and that we will be ready, in convenient time, and in a Parliamentary way, freely and dutifully to do our utmost Endeavours to discover and reform the Abuses and Grievances of the Realm and State, and in like sort to afford all necessary Supply to his most excellent Majesty upon his present and all other his just Occasions and Designs; most humbly beseeching our said dear and dread Sovereign, in his Princely Wisdom and Goodness, to rest assured of the true and hearty Affections of his poor Commons, and to esteem the same to be (as we conceive it is indeed) the greatest worldly Reputation and Security that a just King can have; and to account all such as Slanderers of the Peoples Affections, and Enemies to the Commonwealth, that shall dare to say the contrary.

The King offended at it. This Declaration was sent to the King by such of the Privy Council as were Members of the House: and if his Majesty would have seem'd pleas'd with it, and would have commanded Buckingham to make his Peace with the Commons, and would have promis'd a Redress of Civil Grievances as graciously as he had answer'd the Complaints about Religion, and have so comply'd with the Genius of the Nation; he might then have made himself safe at home, and very considerable abroad. But it so happen'd, that he thought the Duke a necessary Instrument by no means to be laid aside; and apprehended, that the Grievances of a six Month's Reign ought not to be objected to him; and, that nothing else ought to interrupt an immediate Supply. Upon these Thoughts, on Friday Aug. 12. the King sent a Commission directed to several Lords for the Dissolution of the 1625. Parliament. Whereupon the Usher of the Black Rod was sent to call up the Commons to the Lord's House: But they being resolv'd into a Grand Committee, and knowing the Design of the Message, refus'd to admit the Messenger, or to let the Speaker take the Chair, till Mr. Glanvil, Chairman of the Committee, had made a Report in a kind of Protestation. Then the House went up, and having heard his Majesty's Commission read, it was accordingly executed, and the Parliament dissolved.

This abrupt Dissolution, tho' founded upon some weighty Reasons, was a great Unhappiness to King and Kingdom: It left a deep Impression of Discontent upon the Minds of the People, and created a Diffidence and Jealousie between the King and all succeeding Parliaments.

At this Parliament, begun and holden by Prorogation at Westminster the 13th Day of June, Anno Regis Caroli primo, 1625. these Acts were pass'd.

I. "An Act for the Punishing of divers Abuses committed on the Lord's-day, commonly called Sunday.

II. "An Act to enable the King to make Leafes of Lands, Parcel of the Dutchy of Cornwal.

III. "An Act for the Ease of obtaining Licenses of Alienation, and in the pleading of Alienations with License, or of Pardons of Alienation without License, in the Court of Exchequer or elsewhere.

IV. "An Act to restrain Tippling in Inns and Ale-houses.

V. "An Act for the Subsidy of the Clergy.

VI. "An Act for two Subsidies of the Temporality.

VII. "An Act that this Session of Parliament shall not determine by his Majesty's Assent to this and some other Acts.

VIII. "An Act to confirm an Agreement between the King and the Copyholders of Macclesfield in the County of Chester.

IX. "An Act for the Settlement of an Agreement of the Tenants of Cheltenham and Abby alias Charleton, between the King and Sir Charles Grival, Knight.

The Parliament being dissolved, the King pursued his Designs of War, and order'd the Fleet to be speedily put to Sea. He made a League with the United Provinces against the Emperour and King of Spain, for restoring the Liberties of Germany. The States, by their Ambassadors, desir'd to enter into this League: upon which the Duke of Buckingham and the Earl of Holland were sent to the Hague to conclude the same, and to comfort the King's distressed Sister with the Hopes of Restitution.

To gratifie the Desires of the late Parliament, and to keep his Royal Word, the King wisely issued out his Proclamation to command the Return, within a time limited, of all English Youth bred up in foreign Schools and Seminaries: That no Bishop, Priest, or other Person in Orders by Authority of the See of Rome, should presume to confer Ecclesiastical Orders, or exercise his Function or Jurisdiction towards any of his natural Subjects: and, That all Statutes in force against Jesuits, &c. be put in due execution.

But want of Money to carry on the War, must drive the King upon some Measures of Supply that were extraordinary, and therefore thought illegal. That of borrowing from the Subjects by their own Consent was first tried, as the most inoffensive: To which purpose, the King directed his Letters to the Lords Lieutenants in the several Counties, in manner following.

Right Trusty and Well-beloved,

"IT hath been so usual a thing for Kings and Princes of this Realm to make use of their Subjects's good Affections, by borrowing some such competent Sums of Money of Persons able to lend,

The King's Letters for a Loan.

1625. " as might supply those present Occasions for publick Service which cannot attend that length of time wherein it can be raised by Contribution by the generality of our Subjects. As we have not only present occasion to make the like Trial, by borrowing from some private Gentlemen and others; but also of your Sincerity and Endeavours in furtherance of the Service; that is to say, in taking some course either out of your own Knowledge and Experience, or by any other Means and Instruments which you like best, to make collection of as many Persons Names within the County wherein you are Lieutenant, as may be of Ability to furnish us with several Sums at this time; and therefore to return in a Book, both the Names of the Persons, their Dwellings, and what Sums you think they may spare; that we may thereupon direct our Privy Seals unto them, according to the Form of this enclosed. And for your further Instruction in this case, on whose Trust we do so much repose, we wish you to advise herein with your Deputy-Lieutenants, as those from whom we have special Cause to promise our selves all good Offices of Duty and Affection. To which we must add thus much farther, That we do not at this time intend to deal with any Noblemen, neither are you to deal with any of the Clergy, because we have reserved that Direction to the Metropolitans of the several Provinces; to proceed only with some special Persons, that are known to be Men of Wealth and Ability, and not merely subsisting upon those Livings which in most Places are far inferiour to that Maintenance we could wish them. By which course and consideration of ours, tho' you may perceive how much we desire to procure this Loan without inconveniency to any, which is only intended for the Service of the Publick; yet must we assure you, that we had no greater cause at any time than now to make use of your Integrity and Industry in respect of your Election of the Lenders, and of your constant Demonstration both of Diligence and Affection to the Service. Having now delivered unto you as much as for the present can be expected from us, we will refer you for any farther Direction unto our Privy Council, as hereafter occasion shall require: To whom our Pleasure is, you do return your Certificates in Manner and Form as is aforesaid, at the most within twenty Days after the Receipt of these our Letters. Given, &c.

Letters of the Comptroller under the Privy Seal.

Accordingly, in pursuance of this Method, the Comptroller of the King's Household, by Order of the Council, issued forth Letters in the King's name, under the Privy Seal, to the several Persons return'd by the Lord Lieutenants, with a Preamble of Grounds and Reasons, and then concluding, " The Sum which we require of you by these Presents is which we do promise in the Name of Us, our Heirs and Successors, to repay to you, or your Assigns, within eighteen Months after the Payment thereof unto the Collector. The Person we have appointed to collect it is to whose Hands we do require you to send it within twelve Days after you have received this Privy Seal; which, together with the Collector's Acquittance, shall be sufficient Warrant unto the Officers of our Receipt for the Repayment hereof at the time limited. Given at, &c.

The Collectors of this Loan were appointed to pay into the Exchequer the Sums received, and to return the Names of such as discovered a Disposition to delay or excuse the Payment of the Sums required of them.

An ill Project.

This Project did not so much answer the King's Occasions, as it treasur'd up the Peoples Murmurs and Complaints: for, the King's borrowing what the Parliament deny'd to give, was to arraign the Judgment of the Commons; and for Subjects to have their Abilities valued by the Lieutenants, was a way of Taxing without Precedent; and to have the particular Sum demanded, took away all appearance of a voluntary Loan; and to have the Names return'd of those who should refuse or delay, as well as of those who should freely lend, was to register the King's Subjects in different Columns of Enemies and Friends: Besides, the Lenders could hardly expect to be repaid without a Parliamentary Fund; and yet a following Parliament might be so far from thinking it a just Debt, that they would rather refuse the Discharge, for fear it should encourage the like Practice in other Intervals of Parliament.

To help allay these popular Discontents, the Privy Council issued out Warrants for the Disarming of Popish Recufants; and directed express Letters to the principal Lords of that Communion, requiring them to render their Arms and Furniture thereunto belonging, together with all their Habiliments of War, to be removed into Places convenient, and to remain there during the King's Pleasure. Instructions were likewise sent to the Lord Lieutenants, to examine into the Truth and Reason of a prevailing Report, That there was a great and unaccustomed Resort to the Houses of Popists, that there were frequent Assemblies, solemn Entertainments, and a special Inter-course of Letters between them; and to enquire and search if there were any Preparation of Men or Arms, or Practice of Arms, or Endeavours of Alteration among Persons discontented with the present Government.

The Fleet was now ready, and ten brave Regiments were designed for this Expedition. The Duke, Lord Admiral, declin'd to go in Person; which rais'd a greater Prejudice against him, that he should be so forward in his Counsels for the War, and yet recede from an actual Service in it. To supply his place, Sir Edward Cecil was created Lord Viscount Wimbleton, and had the Command of the whole Fleet, the Earl of Essex being Vice Admiral under him. This Sir Edward Cecil was a third Son of Thomas Earl of Exeter, train'd up a Soldier in the Netherlands upon continual Service for thirty five Years, being first Colonel of Foot, and at the Battle of Newport Commander of the English Horse, General of the Forces sent by King James against the Spaniards and Imperialists. So that he came with the Reputation of a Land Soldier, not of a Seaman; and seem'd not so fit for the Voyage, as for the Descent upon Spain. His being a Stranger to the Navy was the worse resented, because in the Choice of Officers for this Service, Sir Robert Mansel, a true old Sea Commander, was neglected; which much disgusted the common Seamen, who naturally love a Fellow-Sailor.

Warrants from Privy Council against the Papists.

The Fleet ready to sail.

Lord Wimbleton General at Sea and Land.

In the beginning of October (too late a Season) the Fleet, consisting of eighty Ships, the Ann Royal, a Ship of twelve hundred Tun, being Admiral, put forth from Plymouth for the Coasts of Spain; and after four days Sail met with a furious Storm, which so dispers'd the Ships, that fifty of 'em were missing for seven Days: but they join'd again upon the Coasts of Spain, where they found a Prize put into their hands, the Spanish Shipping in the Bay of Cadiz, weak and easie to be taken; but in Negligence and ill Conduct, they suffer'd 'em to escape. To regain some Honour, the Forces landed, and Sir John Borroughs took a small Fort; but the Soldiers finding good store of the rich Wines, took a liberty in them, and had expos'd themselves to the Enemy, if they had not been commanded Aboard again: when the General putting to Sea, intended to wait for the Plate-Fleet, which was daily expected from the West-Indies: But the ill Condition of his Men, by reason of a general Contagion, oblig'd him to return home with Dishonour in November following.

The Expedition at Sea unfortunate.

Return of the Fleet.

This unfortunate Expedition encreas'd the Jealousies and hard Apprehensions of the People. Some little Enquiries were made into the Miscarriage. The General and other Officers were examin'd before the 1625. Council, where they threw the blame upon one another, and only prov'd it to be among them a very ill manag'd Design. When the Forces were landed at Flymouth in December, a Proclamation issued forth, to command that no Soldiers of the Fleet should depart from their Colours, or be discharged of their Service, till the King should signify his Pleasure: So the Companies were dispersed into several Parts of the Kingdom. Orders were likewise sent for the better exercising of the Train'd-Bands, and for assigning old Officers, experienc'd in the Low-Country Wars, to take their Posts in the several Counties, there to muster and discipline the Militia, and make them ready for the publick Service. But the People did not like these Appearances of War without the countenance of a Parliament.

And therefore the King wisely determin'd to call a Parliament to meet in February following: And to prepare for their more amicable Meeting, his Majesty enjoind the Archbishops and Bishops to proceed against Popish Recusants by Excommunication, and other Censures of the Church; and to use all lawful means of bringing them to publick Justice. Especially he recommended to their vigilant Care, the unmasking and repressing of those who were not profess'd Papists, yet disaffected to the true Religion, and kept close their evil Inclinations, and so by secret Means and Sights did encourage and advance the Growth of Popery. This Command was seconded by a Proclamation, requiring that all convicted Papists should, according to the Laws of this Realm, remain confined to their Dwelling-places, or within five Miles thereof, unless upon special License first obtained in necessary Cases.

This Method was prudent and popular; but some other Courses were taken very disagreeable. The Duke of Buckingham was allow'd to throw his Marks of Displeasure upon those Members who had oppos'd him in the last Parliament: of which, one of the chief was the Lord Bishop of Lincoln, Lord Keeper, whom the Duke had openly reprov'd at Christ-church in Oxford, for siding against him; the Bishop stoutly answered, That he was indeed engaged with William Earl of Pembroke, and other worthy Patriots, to labour the Redress of the Peoples Grievances, and in so good a Cause he was resolv'd to stand upon his own Legs. If that be your Resolution (said the Duke) look you stand fast: and so they parted, never to be reconcil'd; for shortly after the Bishop was sequestred from the Council-Table, from the Seal, and from the Presence of the King, tho' he retained the Name of Lord Keeper, till now upon October the 30th, the Seal was given to Sir Thomas Coventry at Hampton-Court, who was that Day sworn of the Privy Council, with the Stile and Dignity of Lord Keeper of the Great Seal of England. Other Tokens of Prejudice were shewn against some of the leading Members in the last House of Commons, who were now made Sheriffs, that they might be incapable of being elected within their several Counties: Among these Gentlemen were Sir Edward Coke, who had been Lord Chief Justice of the King's Bench, and therefore resent'd it as the greater Indignity to have this Office put upon him. To avoid it, if possible, he drew up Exceptions against the Oath of a Sheriff, and sent them to the Attorney-General, who by Order of Council did attend the Judges, and received their Opinion, that of the four Articles objected by Sir Edward Coke, they found no reasonable Cause to make any Alteration, only in one of the said Articles, viz. You shall do all your Pain and Diligence to destroy and make to cease all manner of Heresies and Errors, commonly called Lollaries, within your Bailiwick from time to time, to all your power, and be helping to all Ordinaries and Commissioners of the Holy Church, and favour and maintain them as oftentimes as you shall be required: which part of the Oath, as obsolete and irreligious, they did agree should be left out of the Oath to be administr'd to Sir Edward Coke, and all other Sheriffs for the future. And an Order of Council was accordingly made to that effect: which reform'd the Oath, but did not excuse the Persons. Another Practice displeasing to the Country, was the King's directing his Precepts to all Sheriffs, commanding them to make Proclamation, That all such as had Forty Pounds a Year, or more, of Lands or Revenues, in their own hands or the hands of Feoffees, and are not yet Knights, do at their Perils prepare to present themselves in his Majesty's Presence by the 31st of January, to receive the Order of Knighthood. This indeed was old Law and Custom; but, to reinforce it now, when the Value of Estates was so much disproportion'd to the Quality of Knights, was thought at best to be but a legal Oppression. The fairest Pretence for it was to do Honour to the King's Coronation.

For the King had declar'd his Intentions to be solemnly crown'd upon Candlemas-day; and required all Persons, who by reason of their Offices and Tenures were bound to perform any Duties at that Solemnity, to pay their Attendance, and perform their respective Service: and gave Orders to the Earl Marshal, and Lord Chamberlain, to prepare for the Rites and Ceremonies of creating several Knights of the Bath.

By this time the Plague abating, the King ordain'd a General Thanksgiving to be celebrated on Sunday the 29th of January in the Cities of London and Westminster and Places adjacent, and on February the 19th in all other Places of the Kingdom: For which purpose, by the King's Command, a Form of Prayer and Thanksgiving was drawn up by the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishops of London, Durham, Roche-ster, and St. Davids. The Number of those that died this Year within and without the Walls of the City of London, and in the Liberties and nine out-parishes, from the 16th of December 1624, to the 15th of December 1625, was in total, Fifty four thousand two hundred sixty and five; whereof there died of the Plague, Thirty five thousand four hundred and seventeen.

To prepare for the Coronation, several Bishops (among whom Bishop Laud) were appointed to meet at White-hall upon Wednesday, Jan. the 4th, to consult and draw up a Form of the Service and Ceremonies to be then us'd. And because the Bishop of Lincoln, as Dean of Westminster, was to have a chief Part in those Ceremonies, the King, offended with him, order'd that he should not appear, but his Place should be supply'd by Bishop Laud. A double Grief to Bishop Williams, to be himself kept absent, and to have his Office executed by one for whom he had the least Affection.

On Thursday, Feb. 2. the King began his Procession from Westminster-hall, and entred the Abbey-Church a little before Ten in the Morning, attended by the Aldermen of London, eighty Knights of the Bath in their Robes, the King's Serjeants at Law, Solicitor and Attorney Generals, the Judges, Barons, Bishops, Viscounts, and Earls, in their Parliament Robes, going before the King two and two uncover'd. After them follow'd the Officers of State, being eight Earls and one Marquis, according to their respective Places, bearing the Swords, the Globe, the Sceptre, the Crown, the Lord Mayor of London carrying the short Sceptre, two Bishops carrying one the Golden Cup, the other the Communion Plate. Next before his Majesty went the Earl of Arundel as Earl Marshal of England, and the Duke of Buckingham as Lord High Constable for that Day. The King, habited in white Sattin, went under a rich Canopy, supported by the Barons of the Cinque-Ports, the King having on each hand a Bishop, and his Train of Purple-Velvet carried up by the Master of the Robes, and the Master of the Wardrobe. At the entring into the Church, Bishop Laud delivered into the King's hands the Staff of King Edward the Confessor, with which the King walked on Oath.

Archbishop. Sir, Will you grant and keep, and by your Oath confirm to the People of England, the Laws and Customs to them granted by the Kings of England your lawful and religious Predecessors, and namely the Laws, Customs, and Franchises, granted to the Clergy by the glorious King St. Edward your Predecessor, according to the Laws of God, the true Profession of the Gospel establish'd in this Kingdom, agreeable to the Prerogative of the Kings thereof, and the ancient Customs of the Realm?

King. I grant and promise to keep them.

Archb. Sir, Will you keep Peace and godly Agreement (according to your Power) both to God, the Holy Church, the Clergy, and the People?

King. I will keep it.

Archb. Sir, Will you, to your Power, cause Law, Justice, and Discretion, to Mercy and Truth, to be executed to your Judgment?

King. I will.

Archb. Sir, Will you grant to hold and keep the Laws and rightful Customs which the Commonalty of this your Kingdom have? And will you defend and uphold them to the Honour of God, so much as in you lieth?

King. I grant and promise so to do.

One of the Bishops. Our Lord and King, We beseech you to pardon, and to grant and to preserve unto us, and to the Churches committed to your Charge, all Canonical Privileges, and do Law and Justice: and that you would protect and defend us, as every good King to his Kingdoms ought to be Protector and Defender of the Bishops and the Churches under their Government.

King. With a willing and devout Heart I promise and grant my Pardon, and that I will preserve and maintain to you, and the Churches committed to your Charge, all Canonical Privileges, and due Law and Justice; and that I will be your Protector and Defender to my Power, by the assistance of God, as every god King in his Kingdom in Right ought to protect and defend the Bishops and Churches under their Government.

Then the King arose, and was led to the Communion-Table, where he took a solemn Oath in sight of all the People, to observe all the Premises; and laying his hand upon the Bible, said,

The things which I have here promised I shall perform and keep. So help me God, and the Contents of this Book.

After the Oath, the King was placed in the Chair of Coronation, and was anointed by the Archbishop, and invested with the Robes of King Edward the Confessor, and had the Crown of King Edward put on his Head, and his Sword girt about him. He offer'd this Sword, with two others, and some Pieces of Gold and Silver at the Communion Table. He was afterwards conducted by the Nobility to the Throne; where this Exhortation was read to his Majesty.

Stand and hold fast from henceforth the Place to which you have been Heir by the Succession of your Forefathers, being now deliver'd to you by the Authority of Almighty God, and by the hands of us and all the Bishops and Servants of God. And as you see the Clergy to come nearer to the Altar than others; so remember, that in all Places convenient you give them greater Honour, that the Mediator of God and Man may establish you in the Kingly Throne to be a Mediator betwixt the Clergy and the Laity, and that you may reign for ever with Jesus Christ the King of Kings and Lord of Lords.

It is a Justice to the World to give these Particulars of the Coronation, because some Offence and Exceptions were afterward made to part of them; and they were severely charg'd upon Bishop Land as his arbitrary Innovations.

The Opening of the Parliament drew near: but before their Meeting, there appear'd some personal Grudges in the Duke of Buckingham that struck at the Honour and Freedom of both Houses. Some Members of the late House of Commons, the Duke's Opponents, were made incapable of serving their Counties by having the Sheriffalties obtruded on them; as, Sir Edm. Coke made Sheriff of the County of Bucks, Sir Rob. Philips of Somerset, and Sir Tho. Wentworth of Yorkshire. The like Hardship was now used toward some Members of the Upper House, as the Earl of Bristol and the Bishop of Lincoln, both under the Duke's Displeasure. The Earl of Bristol had fell out with the Duke in the Court of Spain, upon Principles of Integrity and Open-dealing; for this little Dissention the Duke represented him to King James under such a Character of being disaffected to the King's Interest, that the Earl, upon his Return to England, was first disgracefully stop't at Calais; and when he came to Dover, the Duke used all possible Instigations that he might be immediately committed to the Tower: when the Marquis of Hamilton and the Earl of Hertford oppos'd this arbitrary Design; The Duke however prevail'd, that a Letter should be wrote to him by the Lord Conway, not to come to Court, nor to the King's Presence, till he had answer'd to some Queries which his Majesty should appoint the Council to put to him. After the Death of King James, the Duke had Power to prosecute the same Resentments; and not only kept him at a distance from Court, but had him remov'd from all his Offices and Employments: not could he be suffer'd to come to an Account for the Monies expended in the King's Service, nor permitted to come to the Parliament which was dissolv'd at Oxford. Upon issuing out the Writs for this new Parliament, the Earl's Call was willfully omitted. Sensible of this Injury to his Right of Peerage, he petition'd the King to have the usual Writ of Summons, as a Privilege never denied to any Peer of the Realm, to assist in the great Council of the Nation: He only received Answer by the Lord Conway, That the King was no ways satisfied, and therefore he must propound to him, Whether he would rather sit still and enjoy the Benefit of the late King's Pardon in Parliament, or to waive it, and put himself upon Tryal for his Negotiation in Spain; and that to one of these he must trust to, and give a direct Answer. The Earl did directly answer, That he had been already question'd upon twenty Articles by a Commission of the Lords, and had given, as he presum'd, full Satisfaction: That he did not wave the Pardon granted by King James in Parliament; nor would he wave any Privilege of being duly call'd to the present Session. But still receiving no Writ, when the Parliament sat, he petition'd the House of Lords, shewing, "That he being a Peer of the Realm, had not receiv'd a Summons to Parliament; and desires their Lordships to mediate with his Majesty, that he may enjoy the Liberty of a Subject, and the Privilege of his Peerage, &c. This Matter being refer'd to a Committee of Privileges, the Earl of Hertford reported, That it was necessary their Lordships should beseech his Majesty, that a Writ of Summons may be sent to the Earl of Bristol, as also to such other Lords whose Writs are stopp'd, except such as are made incapable to sit in Parliament by Judgment of Parliament, or other legal Judgment. Upon this a Writ was directed to him; but the Lord Keeper sent a Letter with it, commanding him, in

Bishop of Lincoln not summon'd to Parliament.

The like Affront was given to the Lord Bishop of Lincoln, late Lord Keeper; who falling under the imperious Duke's Displeasure, had not only the Seal taken from him, but was denied to do his Homage to the King with the rest of the spiritual Lords at the Coronation, or to do his Office as Dean of Wells minister in assisting at that Solemnity; and had now no Parliamentary Summons sent to him. This Omision he represented to the King in a respectful Letter, as the withdrawing of a Favour which had not been denied to any Prisoners or condemned Peers in his Father's Reign; beseeching that he might have leave to make his Proxy, if his personal Attendance must not be permitted. When upon a Motion in Parliament he did receive his Writ, he had likewise a particular Charge from the Keeper not to appear in Person, and had some difficulty to get his Proxy left with the Bishop of Winchester.

These Restraints upon the Members of both Houses must be acknowledg'd to have been the passionate Efforts of the Duke of Buckingham, which founded ill, and were enough to prejudice the Parliament before their Meeting.

Opening of the Second Parliament.

On Monday the 6th of February this second Parliament began. If his Majesty had chose the later gracious Custom of speaking himself to the two Houses, it might have left the better Impressions of Duty and Affection. But the King being placed in his Royal Throne, the Lords in their Robes, and the Commons below the Bar, it pleas'd his Majesty to refer them wholly to the Lord Keeper; who spoke thus:

My Lords, and you the Knights, Citizens, and Burghesses of the House of Commons, Speech of the Lord Keeper.

YOU are here assembled by his Majesty's Writs and Royal Authority to hold a new Parliament, the general, ancient, and powerful Council of this renowned Kingdom; whereof if we consider aright, and think of that incomparable Distance between the supreme Height and Majesty of a mighty Monarch, and the submissive Awe and Lowliness of a Loyal Subject, we cannot but receive exceeding comfort and contentment in the Frame and Constitution of this highest Court, wherein not only the Prelates, Nobles, and Grandees, but the Commons of all degrees have their part, and wherein that high Majesty doth descend to admit, or rather to invite the humblest of his Subjects to Conference and Council with him of the great, weighty, and difficult Affairs of the King and Kingdom: a Benefit and Favour whereof we cannot be too sensible and thankful; for sure I am, that all good Hearts would be both sensible and sorrowful, if we did want it. And therefore it behoveth all, with united Hearts and Minds, free from Distraction and Diversion, to fix their Thoughts upon Counsels and Consultations worthy of such an Assembly, remembering, that in it is presented the Majesty and Greatness, the Authority and Power, the Wisdom and Knowledge of this great and famous Nation. And it behoveth us to magnifie and to bless God, that hath put the Power of Assembling Parliaments in the hands of him, the Virtue of whose Person doth strive with the Greatness of his Princely Lineage and Descent, whether he should be accounted major or melior, a greater King, or a better Man; and of whom you have had so much Trial and Experience, that he doth as affectionately love, as he doth exactly know and understand the true Use of Parliaments; witness his daily and unwearied Access to this House before his Access to the Crown; his gracious Readiness to all Conferences of Importance; his frequent and effectual Intercession to his blessed Father of never-dying Memory for the Good of the Kingdom, with so happy Success, that both this and future Generations shall feel it, and have cause to rejoyce at the Success of his Majesty's Intercession. And when the Royal Diadem descended upon himself, presently, in the midst of his Tears and Sighs for the Departure of his most dear and Royal Father, in the very first Consultation with his Privy Council, was resolv'd to meet his People in Parliament: And no sooner did the heavy hand of that destroying Angel forbear those deadly Strokes which for some time did make this Place inaccessible, but his Majesty presently resolv'd to recall it, and hath now brought you together, and in a happy time, I trust, to treat and consult with uniform Desires and united Affections, of those things that concern the general Good.

And now being thus assembled, his Majesty hath commanded me to let you know, that his Love and Affection to the Publick mov'd him to call this Parliament; and looking into the Danger and spreading of that late Mortality, and weighing the multitude of his Majesty's pressing Occasions and urging Affairs of State, both at home and abroad, much importing the Safety and State of this Kingdom; the same Affection that mov'd him to call it, doth forbid him to prolong the Sitting of this Parliament. And therefore his Majesty resolv'd to confine this Meeting to a short time, hath confin'd me to a short Errand; and that is, that as a thing most agreeable to the Kingly Office, to the Example of the best Times, and to the Frame of modern Affairs, his Majesty hath called you together to consult and to advise of provident and good Laws, profitable for the Publick, and fitting for the present Times and Actions: for upon such depends the Assurance of Religion and of Justice, which are the surest Pillars and Buttresses of all good Government in a Kingdom: For his Majesty doth consider, that the Royal Throne on which God out of his Mercy to us hath set him, is the Fountain of all Justice; and that good Laws are the Streams and Quills by which the Benefit and Use of this Fountain is dispersed to his People. And it is his Majesty's Care and Study, that his People may see with Comfort and Joy of Heart, that this Fountain is not dry, but they and their Posterity may rest assured and confident in his time to receive as ample Benefit from this Fountain by his Majesty's Mercy and Justice, as ever Subjects did in the time of the most eminent Princes amongst his noble Progenitors; wherein as his Majesty shews himself most sensible of the Good of the Publick, so were it an Injury to this great and honourable Assembly, if it should be but doubted that they shall not be as sensible of any thing that may add to his Majesty's Honour: which cannot but receive a high degree of Love and Affection, if his Majesty succeeding so many Religious, Wise, and Renowned Princes, should begin his Reign with some Additions unto those good Laws which their happy and glorious Times have afforded. And this his Majesty hath caus'd me to desire at this time especially above others: for his Majesty having at his Royal Coronation lately solemnized the sacred Rites of that blessed Marriage between his People and him, and therein by a most holy Oath vow'd the Protection of the Laws, and Maintenance of Peace both to Church and People; no time can be so fit for his Majesty to advise and consult at large with his People as this present time, wherein so lately 1625. " his Majesty hath vowed Protection to his People, and they have protested their Allegiance and Service to him.

 " This is the Sum of that Charge which I have received from his Majesty to deliver unto you, wherein you see his Majesty's Intent to the Publick: And therefore his Desire is, that according to that Conveniency of Time which his Affairs may afford, you will apply your selves to dispatch the Business of this Parliament.

The Speech not grateful.

This Speech was the less acceptable because the King was himself silent, which some suspicious Tempers did not fail to represent as an Indication that the King was out of Humour with his People. Besides, the Matter of this Speech, and the Dressing of it, had a peculiar Air of Greatness, which would have somewhat better become the King than his Minister.

Sir Hen- age Finch Speaker.

On Wednesday Februar. 8. the Commons presented Sir Henage Finch, Kt. Serjeant at Law and Recorder of London, for their Speaker; who having made the accustomed Excuses, and receiv'd his Majesty's Command to serve, he made a very flourishing Speech, with some extraordinary Flights and Figures, that were a peculiar Infirmitie of that Age, and more especially of that Person. He concludes more sedately thus: " But I may weary your Majesty, and lose my self, and forget for whom I am a Speaker.

His Speech to the King.

" Custom gives me the Privilege, as an humble Suitor on the Behalf of the House, to present their few Petitions unto your Majesty. The first, That for the better attending this publick and important Service, our selves and our necessary Attendants may, with your Majesty's tender Allowance, be free both in our Persons and Goods from Arrests and Troubles, according to our ancient Privileges. 2. The next, That since for the preparing and drawing on to Conclusion such Propositions as shall be handled in the House, Debate and Dispute will be necessary, and by variety of Opinions Truth is oftentimes best discerned; your Majesty will likewise, according to our ancient Usage and Privilege, vouchsafe us Liberty and Freedom of Speech, from which I assure my self Duty and Loyalty to your Majesty will never be severed. 3. That when Occasions of moment shall require, your Majesty, upon our humble Suit, and at such times as may best sort with your Occasions, will vouchsafe us Access to your Royal Person. 4. That the Proceedings of the House may receive a favourable Interpretation at your gracious Hands, and be free from Misconstructions.

Good Beginning in the House of Commons.

The Commons began with very dutiful Respects, in thanking the King for his late gracious Answer to their late Petition for Religion. Then a Bill was brought in, to administer an Oath for redring a true Account of all General and Publick Taxes, Rates, and Collections. Another against scandalous Ministers. A Committee for Grievances, and another for secret Affairs, to sit every Friday and Wednesday during Parliament. They complain'd of the Miscarriage of the Fleet to Cadiz, of evil Counsellors about the King; of the Misemployment of the Publick Revenue; and other Political Disorders. A Committee was likewise named for Religion, to restrain the growth of Popery.

The Kings Message for Supply.

The Commons expect Redress of Grievances.

While these Matters were debating, Mr. Secretary Cook delivered a Message from the King to the Commons, declaring his Majesty's Occasions for Supply: And the Necessity and Expedition of this Supply were farther urg'd by William Earl of Pembroke in a Conference which the Lords desired with the Commons. But the Commons, before they would enter into Consideration of Money Bills, called for a Report from the Committee of Grievances, and found these Resolutions agreed upon.

1. Resolved, That the Diminution of the Kingdom in Strength and Honour is a general Evil which we suffer under. As 2. The increase and countenancing of Papists. 3. The not guarding of the narrow Seas. 4. Plurality of Offices in one hand. 5. Sales of Honour and Places of Judicature. 6. Delivery up of Ships to the French. 7. Misemployment of three Subsidies and three Fifteens, &c. And they order'd, that the Duke of Buckingham, who was more particularly concern'd in the occasion of these Grievances, should have notice given, that the House intend suddenly to resume the Debate of these Matters. In the Speeches upon this Subject, Mr. Clement Cook let fall this warm Expression, It is better to die by a Foreign Enemy, than to be destroy'd at home.

1625. Resolutions of the Committee of Grievances.

The Lords seem'd more complying with the King's Desires, and appointed a Committee to consider of the common Safety and Defence; who reported their Opinion, that one Fleet should be presently set to Sea to prevent the Invasion of our Coasts, and to annoy the King of Spain; that another be set out to defend our Channel, and secure our Ships from Pirates; and, that due Consideration should be had of maintaining the Armies under the King of Denmark and Count Mansfield. The Lords desired a Conference with the Commons upon this Subject-matter: But the Commons nor relishing a Supply without Redress of Grievances, return'd Answer, That they did desire to have a good Correspondency with their Lordships, and would be ever careful of the Safety and Defence of the Kingdom, and maintain their own Privileges; and, that for this Reason they would immediately proceed against the Duke.

The Lords more inclin'd to immediate Supply.

But the Commons resolve to have the publick Grievances first considered.

Upon notice of this Ferment in the House of Commons, the King wrote this Letter to the Speaker, to be communicated to the House.

King's Letter to the Speaker.

Truly and Well-beloved,

HAVING assembled the Parliament early in the beginning of the Year, for the more timely Help and Advice of our People in our great and important Affairs; and having of late not only by Message but also of our self put our House of Commons in mind of our pressing Occasions, and of the present Estate of Christendom, wherein they have equal Interest with us, as well in respect of their own former Engagements, as of the common Cause; we shall not need to tell them with what Care and Patience we have, in the midst of our Necessities, attended their Resolutions: But because their unreasonable Slowness may produce at home as ill Effects as a Denial, and hazard the whole Estate of things abroad; we have thought fit, by you the Speaker, to let them know, that without more loss of time we look for a full and perfect Answer of what they will give for our Supply, according to our Expectation and their Promises. Wherein as we press for nothing beyond the present state and condition of our Subjects, so we accept no less than is proportionable to the Greatness and Goodness of the Cause: Neither do we press them to a present Resolution in this, with a purpose to precipitate their Counsels, much less to enter upon their Privileges; but to shew that it is unfit to depend any longer upon Uncertainties, whereby the whole weight of the Affairs of Christendom may break in upon us on the sudden, to our Dishonour and the Shame of this Nation. And for the Business at home, we command you to promise them in our Name, that after they have satisfied us in this our reasonable Demand, we shall not only continue them together at this time so long as this Season will permit, but call them shortly again to perfect those necessary Businesses which shall be now left undone: And now we shall willingly apply fit and seasonable Remedies to such just Grievances which they shall present unto us in a dutiful and mannerly way, without throwing an ill Odour upon our present Government, or upon the Government of our late blessed Father: And if there be yet who desire to find fault,

1625. " we shall think him the wisest Reprehender of things past, who, without reflecting backward, can give us Counsel how to settle the present Estate of things, and to provide for the future Safety and Honour of the Kingdom.

The Letter not acceptable.

This Letter pleas'd the less, because it was an express Demand of Supply, which had been sooner given upon a Desire of it; and because it insisted upon that Supply before the Redress of Grievances, which usually preceded or at least attended upon all former Aids.

A Message to the same effect.

The King's Occasions were so importunate, that, besides the Letter, he sent a Message to the House by Sir Richard Weston, to solicit their more speedy Assistance for these Reasons:

1. That his Majesty's Fleet being return'd, and the Victuals spent, the Men must of necessity be discharged, and their Wages paid, or else an assured Mutiny will follow, which may be many ways dangerous at this time.

2. That his Majesty hath made ready about forty Ships to be set forth on a second Voyage to hinder the Enemy, which want only Victuals and some Men, which without present supply of Money cannot be set forth and kept together.

3. That the Army which is appointed in every Coast must be presently disbanded, if they be not presently supplied with Victuals and Cloaths.

4. That if the Companies of Ireland lately sent thither be not provided for, instead of defending that Country, they will prove the Authors of Rebellion.

5. That the Season of providing healthful Victuals will be past if this Month be neglected.

" And therefore his Majesty commanded me to tell you, That he desired to know, without farther delaying of time, what Supply you will give him for these his present Occasions, that he may accordingly frame his Course and Counsel.

The Commons returned this Answer.

Answer of the Commons to the K.'s Message.

Most Gracious Sovereign,

" YOUR Majesty's Dutiful and Loyal Subjects, the Commons now assembled in Parliament, in all Humility present unto your Royal Wisdom this their Loyal Answer to the Message which your Majesty was pleas'd, by the Chancellor of your Exchequer to send unto them; desiring to know, without any further deferring of Time, what Supply they would give to your Majesty for your present and extraordinary Occasions; that you might accordingly frame your Courses and Counsels. First of all, they most humbly beseech your Majesty to know, and rest assured, that no King was ever dearer to his People than your Majesty; no People more zealous to maintain and advance the Honour and Greatness of their King than they; which, as upon all occasions, they shall be ready to express, so especially in the support of that Cause wherein your Majesty and your Allies are now justly engaged. And because they cannot doubt but your Majesty, in your great Wisdom, even out of Justice, and according to the Example of your most famous Predecessors, will be pleas'd graciously to accept the faithful and necessary Information and Advice of your Parliament; which can have no end but the Service of your Majesty and Safety of your Realm, in discovering the Causes and proposing the Remedies of these great Evils, which have occasioned your Majesty's Wants, and your Peoples Grief.

" They therefore in confidence and full assurance of Redress therein, do with one consent propose (though in former time such course hath been unused) that they really intend to assist and supply your Majesty in such a way, and in so ample a measure, as may make you safe at home and feared abroad. For the dispatch whereof they will use such Diligence as your " Majesty's pressing and present Occasions shall require. 1625.

This Answer seem'd to be very respectful and sincere, and if his Majesty could have taken it in that obliging Sense, and have made a soft and easie return of Confidence in them, the Sellions might have been happy, and the Aid sufficient. But his Majesty was pleas'd to be impatient of Delays; and either mov'd by his own Disposition to be resolute, or prevail'd upon by the Duke of Buckingham to skreen him from all danger, he thought fit to send this Reply in a Letter to the Speaker.

Mr. Speaker,

" THE Answer of the Commons delivered by you, I like well of, and do take it for a full and satisfactory Answer, and I thank them for it; and I hope you will with all expedition take a course for performance thereof, the which will turn to your own good as well as mine. But for your Clause therein of presenting of Grievances, I take that but for a Parenthesis in your Speech, and not a Condition: And yet for answer to that part I will tell you; I will be as willing to hear your Grievances as my Predecessors have been, so that you will apply yourselves to redress Grievances, and not to enquire after Grievances. I must let you know, that I will not allow any of my Servants to be questioned amongst you; much less such as are of eminent Place and near unto me. The old Question was, What shall be done to the Man whom the King will Honour? But now it hath been the labour of some, to seek what may be done against him whom the King thinks fit to Honour. I see you specially aim at the Duke of Buckingham; I wonder what hath so alter'd your Affections towards him: I do well remember, that in the last Parliament in my Father's time, when he was an Instrument to break the Treaties, all of you (and yet I cannot say all, for I know some of you are changed; but yet the House of Commons is always the same) did so much Honour and Respect him, that all the Honour conferr'd on him was too little; and what he hath done since to alter or change your Minds I wot not: but can assure you, he hath not medled or done any thing concerning the Publick or Commonwealth, but by special Directions and Appointment, and as my Servant; and is so far from gaining or improving his Estate thereby, that I verily think he hath rather impaired the same. I would you would hasten for my Supply, or else it will be worse for your selves: for if any Ill happen, I think I shall be the last shall feel it.

If his Majesty had gone no further in this Reply than the first Paragraph of it, Things and Men had been easily reconciled. But to inhibit their Enquiry into Grievances, and declare a Protection to that Minister who was thought the Cause of 'em, and to urge a Supply with a sort of Menace of their suffering by the denial of it; this was soon improved into higher Jealousies and Fears: And that part of the House which under a freedom of venting their displeasure would have been the sooner satisfied, began now to gain a greater Reputation to their Complaints, and to gather strength upon the Royal Opposition. For indeed all popular Discontents have somewhat of the Nature of Torrents; give them a little room to run and they quickly draw off themselves: but if you offer presently to obstruct the Course, they swell and spread the more.

The majority of the House fell now directly on the Duke, as the chief Cause of all publick Mis-carriages. And Dr. Turner, a Physician, propos'd these Queries to the House as grounded upon Common Fame.

This Reply had no good effect.

1625. 1. Whether the Duke being Admiral be not the cause of the loss of the King's Royalty in the Narrow Seas?

2. Whether the unreasonable, exorbitant and immense Gifts of Money and Land bestowed on the Duke and his Kindred, be not the cause of impairing the King's Revenues, and impoverishing of the Crown?

3. Whether the multiplicity of Offices, conferred upon the Duke and others depending upon him (whereof they were not capable) be not the cause of the Evil Government of this Kingdom?

4. Whether Recusants in general, by a kind of connivency, be not born out and increased by reason of the Duke's Mother and Father-in-Law being known Papists?

5. Whether the sale of Honours, Offices and Places of Judicature, and Ecclesiastical Livings and Promotions (a scandal and hurt to the Kingdom) be not through the Duke?

6. Whether the Dukes staying at home, being Admiral and General in the Fleet of the Sea and Land Army, were not the cause of the bad success and overthrow of that Action? And whether he did give good direction for that Design?

All these are famed to be so.

Hereupon two Questions were debated in the House.

1. Whether the six Heads delivered by Dr. Turner, to be the cause of the Evils that were grounded upon common Fame, be to be debated in Parliament?

2. Whether an Accusation upon common Fame, by a Member of this House, be a Parliamentary way?

Some Members distinguished between Common Fame and Rumour; this latter they said was rather the Munnurs of private People, but the former was a Vox Populi, or general Voice of the Nation, which must be admitted as a Ground of Enquiry; which Common Fame tho' it was no Argument for a definitive Sentence, yet was it a proper Reason for previous Inquisition. So the House came to this Resolution:

That Common Fame is a good Ground of Proceeding for this House, either by Enquiry or presenting the Complaint (if the House finds cause) to the King or Lords.

The next Day the Commons were reassuming the Debate, when Sir Richard Weston delivered to the House this second Message from his Majesty.

His Majesty hath taken notice of a seditious Speech utter'd in the House by Mr. Clement Cook; the Words are said to be to this effect: That it were better to die by an Enemy than to suffer at home: Yet his Majesty in wisdom hath forbore to take any course therein, or to send to the House about it, not doubting but the House would in due time correct such an Insolence. But his Majesty hath found that his Patience hath wrought to an ill effect, and hath embolden'd one since to do a strange Act, in a strange way and unusual; that is, Dr. Turner, who on Saturday last, without any Ground of knowledge in himself, or Proof tender'd to the House, made an Enquiry of sundry Articles against the Duke of Buckingham as he pretended, but indeed against the Honour and Government of the King and his late Father. This, his Majesty saith, is such an Example that he can by no means suffer, tho' it were to make enquiry of the meanest of his Servants, much less against one so near unto himself; and doth wonder at the foolish Impudency of any Man, that can think he should be drawn out of any End to offer such a Sacrifice, much unworthy the Greatness of a King and Master of such a Servant. And therefore his Majesty can no longer use his wonted Patience, but desireth the Justice of the House against the Delinquents; not doubting but such course will be taken, that he shall not be constrained to use his Regal Authority to right himself against these two Persons.

Two Questions on the Queries of Dr. Turner.

Resolution of the House of Commons.

A second Message from the King.

Upon delivery of this Message, Dr. Turner stood up and explain'd himself, and justified his late Proposals to the House. The Debate upon it being put off to another Day, Dr. Turner being then indispos'd, wrote a Letter to the Speaker in his further Vindication. This Resentment of the King did but encrease the Ferment against the Duke: So, as on the Monday following, Sir William Walter represented to the House, that he thought the cause of all Grievances was that which happen'd in the Court of King Lewis XI. of France; i. e. All the King's Council rode upon one Horse: And therefore the Parliament ought to advise his Majesty as Jehthro did Moses, to take Assistants rightly qualified, &c. Sir John Elliot made another bold and sharp Speech upon the Subject of ill-Management and Grievances. But to qualifie these Heats with all respect to the King, and with a deference to the necessity of publick Affairs, the Commons on March 27. voted three Subsidies and three Fifteens, and an Act thereupon to be brought in as soon as Grievances were presented to his Majesty and answered by him. And then they proceeded to receive Informations against the Duke; and ordered he should have notice of it.

This so affected the King who had resolved to defend the Duke, that on March 23. he sent a Message to the House of Commons, that they should attend his Majesty to Morrow at Nine-a-Clock in the Morning in the Hall of his Palace at White hall, and that in the mean time all Proceedings in the House and Committee should cease. Accordingly on March 29. the Lords and Commons attending, the King made this Speech to them.

My Lords and Gentlemen,
I Have call'd you hither to Day, I mean both Houses of Parliament, but it is for several and distinct Reasons: My Lords, you of the Upper House, to give You thanks for the Care of the state of the Kingdom now; and not only for the Care of your own Proceedings, but for inciting your fellow House of the Commons to take that into their Consideration. Therefore, my Lords, I must not only give you thanks, but I must also avow, that if this Parliament do not redound to the good of this Kingdom (which I pray God it may) it is not Your Faults. And you, Gentlemen of the House of Commons, I am sorry that I may not justly give the same thanks to You; but that I must tell you, that I am come here to shew you your Errors, and as I may call it unparliamentary Proceedings in this Parliament. But I do not despair, because you shall see your Faults so clearly by the Lord Keeper, that you may so amend your Proceedings that this Parliament shall end comfortably and happily, though at the beginning it hath had some Rubs.

Then the Lord Keeper, by the King's Command, spake to this effect:

That they were here assembled, by his Majesty's Commandment, to receive a Declaration of his Royal Pleasure; intended only to the House of Commons, tho' delivered in the presence of both Houses. That no King was ever more loving to his People, or better affectioned to the right use of Parliaments. That when his Majesty hath received Satisfaction of his reasonable Demands, he will hear and answer their just Grievances. That never King was more jealous of his Honour, nor more sensible of the Neglect and Contempt of his Royal Rights. That there be some particular Proceedings wherein his Majesty is aggrieved. 1. That a seditious Speech had been utter'd by Mr. Cook; for which the House had not duly censur'd him. 2. That Dr. Turner had advised the House to enquire upon sundry Articles against the Duke of Buckingham

1626. Dr. Turner explains and justifies himself.

House of Commons vote three Subsidies and two Fifteens.

King's Speech to both Houses.

1626. " without Knowledge or Proof: And yet the House " had been so far from correcting his Insolency,
 " that Committees walked in the same steps, and " proceeded in a like unparliamentary Inquisition.
 " That as to the Duke, his Majesty knew the sin" cerity of his Proceedings, and must believe that " their aim at him is directly to wound the Honour " and Judgment of himself and his Father. That " as to the Supply voted for him, it was delatory
 " and scanty; for the Measure of it, so far from " making him safe at Home and feared Abroad, as " contrariwise to expose him both to Danger and " Disesteem: and for the Manner of granting it,
 " it was in it self very Dishonourable and full of " Distrust. That therefore his Majesty commands
 " them to go together, and by Saturday next re" turn their final Answer. That his Majesty
 " doubteth not, but after his gracious Admoniti" on, they will in due time observe and follow
 " the better sort of Members; which if they shall " do, his Majesty is most ready to forget what" soever is past.

Then his Majesty thus further expressed himself.

The King
 resumes
 his Speech

" I must withall put you in mind a little of times " past. You must remember, that in the time of " my blessed Father, you did with your Counsel " and Perswasion perswade both my Father and " Me to break off the Treaties: I confess I " was your Instrument for two Reasons; one was " the fitness of Time; the other, because I was fe-" conded by so great and worthy a Body as the " whole Body of Parliament. Then there was no " Body in so great Favour with you as this Man " whom you seem now to touch, but indeed my " Father's Government and mine. Now that you " have all things according to your Wishes, and " that I am so far engaged that you think there is " no retreat; now you begin to set the Dice and " make your own Game. But I pray you be not " deceived: it is not a Parliamentary way, nor is it " a way to deal with a King. Mr. Cook told you,
 " It was better to be eaten up by a Foreign Enemy than
 " to be destroyed at Home. Indeed I think it is more " Honour for a King to be invaded, and almost de" stroyed by a Foreign Enemy, than to be despi" sed by his own Subjects.

" Remember that Parliaments are altogether in my " Power for their Calling, Sitting and Dissolution;
 " therefore as I find the Fruits of them good or e" vil, they are to continue, or not to be. And re" member that if in this time, instead of mending
 " your Errors, by delay you persist in your Errors,
 " you make them greater and irreconcilable: where" as, on the other side, if you do go on cheerfully " to mend them, and look to the distressed Estate of " Christendom, and the Affairs of the Kingdom, as " it lieth now by this great Engagement, you will " do your selves Honour; you shall encourage me " to go on with Parliaments, and I hope all Chri" stendom shall feel the good of it.

A severe way of speaking to an English Parliament.

It must be acknowledged this was a Severity of speaking; that from whatever Spirit of Honour it might proceed, and how agreeable soever it was to the later Notions of Majesty, yet it had not been the usual Language of an English Prince to an English Parliament. King Henry VIII. who had most of the Arbitrary Monarch in him, took the Members apart when he had a mind to fright them; and spoke always with an artificial Temper to a whole House, or the whole Body together. The present King might possibly have carried his Point by a like Art of soft speaking; but to throw by all Insinuation and Court Address, and receive the Commons in so blunt a manner, as they thought it to be Upbraiding and Menacing; This relished ill with most of them, and alienated them from his Majesty's Person and Interest more and more.

For when they returned to their House and fell upon debating of the Speeches delivered by the King and the Lord Keeper, they resolved themselves into a grand Committee, and order'd the Doors to be lock'd, and no Member to go forth; and all other Proceedings to cease till the House should come to a Resolution in this Matter.

 That did not relish well.

The King being informed of the great Exceptions taken at his late Speech, and the explanatory Charge given by the Lord Keeper, commanded the Duke to give Satisfaction at a Conference of both Houses in the Painted Chamber, held for that purpose, on March 29.

He laboured to excuse the King's prescribing a short Day for their granting a Supply; and assured them his Majesty would give a longer time if the Business did require their further Consideration.
 He let them understand, that the King's insisting upon a larger Aid than they had yet voted, was owing to the great Necessity of his Affairs, and the benefit of being enabled to carry the War to the Enemies Door. That his Majesty did not mean to interrupt their Proceeding upon Grievances; but only hop'd that they would not so much seek Faults as the Means to redress them.

The Duke
 was to excuse the King's
 Speech.

But as this Apology was made by an unacceptable Man, so perhaps the very making of it did but obstruct the King's Business; because it confess'd the doing somewhat that wanted an Apology.

 made the Disgust greater.

At the same time the Duke made an Address to both Houses in his own behalf; and gave them an Account of his Negotiation in the Low Countries, and of the Management of the Fleet; and concluded with intreating their charitable Opinion of him and his Actions. Then the Lord Conway stood up and en-deavour'd to vindicate the Duke from the several Jeal-ousies rais'd against him; and laid before them an Account of the Sums of Money disburs'd for the War.
 But all this could not divert the Commons from proceeding in their Enquiries into publick Grievances, and from preparing a humble Remonstrance to the King in this Form.

 addresses himself to both Houses.

Most Gracious Sovereign,

" Whereas your Majesty hath been pleas'd of " late, at sundry times and by several means,
 " to impart unto us your Royal Pleasure touching
 " some Passages and Proceedings in this present Par" liament: We do first, with unspeakable Joy and " Comfort, acknowledge your Majesty's Grace and " Favour, in that it hath pleas'd you to cause it to " be deliver'd unto us by the Lord Keeper of your " Great Seal in your own Royal Presence, and be" fore both Houses of Parliament, That never King
 " was more loving to his People, nor better affected to the " right use of Parliaments; withall professing your " most gracious Resolution, To Hear and Redress our
 " just Grievances. And with like comfort we acknow" ledge your Majesty's Goodness, shining at the very " entrance of your glorious Reign, in commanding
 " the Execution of the Laws established to preserve
 " the true Religion of Almighty God; in whose " Service consisteth the Happiness of all Kings and " Kingdoms.

Remonstrance of the Commons.

" Yet let it not displease your Majesty, that we " also express some sense of just Grief intermix'd
 " with that great Joy, to see the careful Proceed" ings of our sincere Intentions so misreported, as " to have wrought Effects unexpected, and we hope " undeserv'd.

" First, Touching the Charge against us in the " matter concerning Mr. Cook, we all sincerely pro" test, that neither the Words mentioned in your " Majesty's Message, nor any other of seditious ef" fect were spoken by him, as hath been resolv'd " by the House without one negative Voice. How-" soever, in a Speech occasionally utter'd, he let " fall some few Words which might admit an " ill Construction; whereat the House being dis-" pleas'd at the delivery of them, as was express'd
 " by

“ by a general and instant check, he forthwith so explained himself and his Intention, that for the present we did forbear to take them into Consideration, which since we have done; and the effect thereof had before this appeared, if by important Businesses of your Majesty's Service we had not been interrupted.

“ The like interruption did also befall us in the Case of Dr. Turner; wherein the Question being formerly stated, was ordered to be taken that very Day on which we received your Majesty's command to attend you.

“ But for our own Proceedings, we humbly beseech your Majesty to be truly informed, that before that Overture from Dr. Turner (out of our great and necessary care for your Honour and Welfare of your Realm) we had taken into serious Consideration the Evils which now afflict your People, and the Causes of them, that we might apply our selves unto the fittest Remedies: In the pursuit whereof, our Committees (whatsoever they might have done) have in no particular proceeded otherwise, than either upon ground of Knowledge in themselves, or Proof by examination of Witnesses or other Evidence. In which course of Service for the Publick Good, as we have not swerved from the Parliamentary ways of our Predecessors, so we conceive that the discovery and reforming of Errors is so far from laying an Aspersion upon the present Time and Government, that it is rather a great Honour and Happiness to both: yielding Matter to great Princes wherein to exercise and illustrate their noblest Virtues.

“ And altho' the grievous Complaints of the Merchants from all Parts, together with the common Service of the Subjects well affected to those who profess our Religion, gave us occasion to debate some Businesses that were partly Foreign, and had relation to Affairs of State; yet we beseech your Majesty to rest assured, it was exceeding far from our Intention either to traduce your Counsellors or disadvantage your Negotiations.

“ And though some Examples of great and potent Ministers of Princes, heretofore question'd in Parliament have been alledg'd, yet was it without paralleling your Majesty's Government or Councils to any Times at all, much less to Times of exception.

“ Touching the Letter of your Majesty's Secretary, it was first alledg'd by your Advocate for his own Justification, and after, by direction of the Committee, produced to make good his Allegation.

“ And for the search at the Signet Office, the Copy of a Letter being divulged, as in your Majesty's name, with pregnant cause of Suspicion, both in the Body and Direction thereof, to be supposititious; the Committee out of desire to be cleared therein, did by their Order send some of themselves to the Signet Office, to search whether there were any Records of Letters of that Nature, without Warrant to the Officer for any, much less for a general Search.

“ But touching Publick Records, we have not forbidden as often as our Businesses have required to make search into them; wherein we have done nothing unwarranted by the Laws of your Realm, and the constant usage of Parliaments. And if for the ease of their Labours, any of our Committees have desired the help of the Officers, Repertories, or Breviats of Direction, we conceive it is no more than any Subject in his own Affairs might have obtained for ordinary Fees.

“ Now concerning your Majesty's Servants, and namely the Duke of Buckingham, we humbly beseech your Majesty, to be informed by us your faithful Commons, who can have no private End but your Majesty's Service and the Good of our Country; that it hath been the ancient, constant, and undoubted Right and Usage of Parliaments, to question and complain of all Persons of what Degree soever found grievous to the Commonwealth, in abusing the Power and Trust committed to them by their Sovereign. A course approved not only by the Example in your Father's Days of famous Memory, but by frequent Precedents in the best and most glorious Reigns of your noble Progenitors, appearing both in Records and Histories; without which Liberty in Parliament, no private Man, no Servant to a King, perhaps no Counsellor, without exposing himself to the hazard of great Enmity and Prejudice, can be a means to call great Officers into question for their Misdemeanours; but the Commonwealth might languish under their Pressures without Redress. And whatsoever we shall do accordingly in this Parliament, we doubt not but it shall redound to the Honour of the Crown and Welfare of your Subjects.

“ Lastly, We most humbly beseech your Majesty graciously to conceive, that though it hath been the long custom of Parliaments to handle the matter of Supply with the last of their Businesses; yet at this time, out of extraordinary Respect to your Person and Care of your Affairs, we have taken the same into more speedy Consideration, and most happily on the very Day of your Majesty's Inauguration, with great Alacrity and unanimous Consent: After a short Debate we grew to the Resolution for a present Supply, well known to your Majesty.

“ With like Humility we beseech your Majesty not to give ear to the officious Reports of private Persons for their own Ends, which hath occasioned so much loss of Time, nor to judge our Proceedings whilst they are in Agitation; but to be pleased to expect the Issue and Conclusion of our Labours, which we are confident will manifest and justify to your Majesty the Sincerity and Loyalty of our Hearts; who shall ever place in a high degree of Happiness the performing of that Duty and Service, which may most tend to your Majesty's Honour and the Good of your Kingdom.

Upon delivery of this Remonstrance, a fair and affable Return from his Majesty might have been well accepted, and had possibly restor'd a good understanding. But the King either conscious of his own Integrity and the Fidelity of the Duke, or being resolutely bent upon a War, and perfectly averse to all Measures that might seem to retard it, only told them; that he could give no present Answer; but desired the House to Adjourn for a Week, as the Lords had done: and they Adjourn'd accordingly.

As to the House of Lords, though his Majesty in his Speech of March 29. had distinguish'd them from the Commons by his particular Thanks and Approbation: yet some occasions of Offence did soon offer, that rais'd some unhappy Jealousies among them. They thought it was some Intrenchment on the Liberties of Peerage, that Writs were not issued to some of their Fellow-Peers; and when by importunity issued, were yet attended with express Orders that they should not appear in Person.

Another Grievance to them was, that some of the Scotch and Irish Nobility pretended to claim a Precedency of the English Lords; which they resented as an Indignity and Affront to their Quality and Honour;

1626. nour; and presented a Petition to the King in the Names of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, representing, that whereas the Peers and Nobility of England had heretofore in Civility yielded, as to Strangers, Precedency to such Nobles of Scotland and Ireland as, being in Titles above them, had resorted hither: Now divers of the Natural-born Subjects of those Kingdoms resident here do, by reason of some late created Dignities in those Kingdoms of Scotland and Ireland, claim Precedency of the Peers of this Realm, which tended to the Disservice of his Majesty, and to the great Disparagement of the English Nobility; which they shew by several Reasons; and they humbly beseech his Majesty that the Prejudice and Disparagement of the Peers and Nobility of this Kingdom be redressed. To which Petition his Majesty gave a favourable Answer; that he would take Order therein. Another offence was taken at the infringing of their Liberties, by the King's committing in time of Parliament the E. of Arundel to the Tower, without expressing the Cause of his Commitment. It was conceiv'd to be about the Marriage of the Lord Maltravers, the Earl's eldest Son, to the Sister of the young Duke of Lenox. The Earl of Arundel having been committed in March last, the Lords were immediately sensible of their Honours and Privileges being concerned in this matter; and were entering into Debates upon it, when the Lord Keeper signified to the House, that he was commanded to deliver this Message from his Majesty unto their Lordships, viz. That the Earl of Arundel was restrained for a Misdemeanour that was personal to his Majesty, and lay in the proper Knowledge of his Majesty, and had no Relation to Matters of Parliament. But the Lords appointing Committees to search for Precedents, did upon their Report come to this unanimous Resolution: That the Privilege of this House is, that no Lord of Parliament, the Parliament sitting, or within the usual times of Privileges of Parliament, is to be Imprisoned or Restrained without Sentence or Decree of the House, unless it be for Treason or Felony, or refusing to give Surety of the Peace. Upon which, they ordered a Remonstrance or Petition of the Peers, concerning the Claim of their Privileges from Arrests and Imprisonments during the Parliament; which the whole House presented to his Majesty on April 19. and next Day the Lord President delivered this Answer from the King; That their Lordships having spent some time about this Business, and it being of some consequence, his Majesty should be thought rash, if he should give a sudden Answer thereto, and therefore will advise of it, and give them a full Answer in convenient time. This Answer being for several Days deferred, on the 2d of May their Lordships order'd, that the Lord Keeper should move his Majesty for a speedy and gracious Answer to their Petition. On the 4th of May, his Lordship reported this farther Answer from the King. It is a Cause wherein he hath had a great deal of Care, and is willing to give their Lordships Satisfaction, and hath it in his Consideration how to do it; and hath been interrupted by other Business, wherein Mr. Attorney hath had occasion of much Conference with him (as their Lordships are acquainted) but will with all Conveniency give their Lordships Satisfaction, and return them an Answer. On the 9th of May, the Lords suspecting the Delay to be a Denial of Justice, drew up this other Petition to the King.

May it please your Majesty,

Another Petition of the Lords. WHereas the whole Body of the Peers, now assembled in Parliament, did on the 19th Day of April exhibit to your Majesty an humble Remonstrance and Petition, concerning the Privilege of Peers in Parliament, and in particular touching the Earl of Arundel; whereupon we received a gracious Answer, That in convenient time we should receive a fuller Answer, which we have long and dutifully attended: And now at this time so great a Business being in handling in the House, we are pressed by that Business to be humble Suiters to your Majesty for a gracious and present Answer.

On May 11. the Lord President reported this Answer from his Majesty: That he did little look for such a Message from the House; that himself had been of the House, and did never know such a Message from the one House unto the other. Therefore when he received a Message fit to come from them to their Sovereign, they shall receive an Answer. When the Lords desired to know at what part of the Petition his Majesty took Exception, the Lord President further reported to them; The Exception the King taketh is at the Peremptoriness of the Term, to have a present Answer. And the King wonders at your Impatience, since he hath promised an Answer in convenient time. It is very plain that King Charles had little of the King-craft which was professed by his Father: and therefore he made most of his Answers in Parliament so blunt and rough, that a direct denial of Requests had been often more Gracious than his way of promising Satisfaction to them. Their Lordships still pursued their Petitions, till about the beginning of June the Earl of Arundel was at last restored to his Liberty; and coming to the House rendered his humble Thanks unto his Majesty for this gracious Favour to him, and gave their Lordships also most hearty Thanks for their frequent Intercessions to the King for him: protesting Loyalty and all faithful Service to his Majesty.

But that which most occasioned, and continually improved the Discontents in the House of Lords, was the Contest between the D. of Buckingham and the Earl of Bristol. They had begun their Emulation in the Court of Spain, where the Duke had been most officious to please the Prince, and the Earl had thought himself more serviceable to the Honour of the Nation. The Earl at his return, upon the Suggestions of the Duke, was debarred access to his Majesty, was examined by a Committee of Lords at the King's appointment, was kept under Restraint, and was denied his Writ to Parliament; and when upon Intercession of the Lords he had the usual Summons, yet he received with it an Order not to make his Personal Appearance: Upon which he sent a Petition to the House, setting forth the Wrong done to him; and desiring to be heard in the House, that he might there clear himself, and prefer his Accusation against the Duke of Buckingham. This so highly offended the King, that he sent this Message by the Lord Keeper to the House of Lords.

“ unto this House by the Earl of Bristol, so void of “ Duty and Respects to his Majesty, that he hath “ great Cause to punish him. He hath also heard “ with what Duty and Respectfulness to his Majesty “ your Lordships have proceeded therein, which, “ his Majesty conceiveth to have been upon the “ Knowledge you have, that he hath been restrained “ for matters of State; and his Majesty doth there“ fore give your Lordships Thanks for the same, and “ is resolved to put the Cause upon the Honour and “ Justice of your Lordships and this House. And “ therefore his Majesty commands me to signify to “ your Lordships his Royal Pleasure, that the Earl “ of Bristol be sent for as a Delinquent, to answer “ in this House his Offences committed in his Nego“ tiations before his Majesty's being in Spain, and “ his Offences since his Majesty's coming from Spain, “ and his scandalizing the Duke of Buckingham im“ mediately, and his Majesty by Reflection: With “ whose Privy, and by whose Directions the Duke “ did guide his Actions, and without which he did “ nothing. All which his Majesty will cause to be “ charged against him before your Lordships in this “ House.

Upon this Message the Lords made an Order, that the Earl of Bristol should be brought to the Bar of their House on Monday May 1. When he stood there the Lord Keeper acquainted him, “ That the Attorney General, in his Majesty's Name, was there ready to Charge him with High-Treason, and other Offences and Misdemeanours of a very high Nature. The Articles against him were then exhibited 1626. The King offended with the Lords.

The Earl at last set at Liberty.

The greatest disturbance in the House of Lords was the Quarrel between the Duke of Buckingham and E. of Bristol.

1626. hibited by Sir Robert Heath Attorney General, upon the several Heads of 1. Offences done and committed by the Earl of Bristol before his Majesty's going into Spain, when he was Prince. 2. Offences done and committed by the said Earl during the time of the Princes being in Spain. 3. Offences done and committed by the said Earl after the Princes coming from Spain.

The Earl's Answer. The Earl answer'd; " That he had already lodg'd a Petition in the House, April 19. to be heard in his Accufation of the Duke of Buckingham; and therefore desired that their Lordships would in order first receive his Charge against the said Duke and the Lord Conway, and not suffer his Testimony to be invalidated by an Impeachment till his Charge was first heard. So he tender'd to the House his Articles against the Duke; which the Clerk received, and he withdrew. And his Petition exhibited the 19th of April was read over; and the Lords Resolv'd upon the Question: That the said Earl's Charge against the Duke of Buckingham and the Lord Conway should be presently read.

The Earl being shortly after called in again to the Bar of the Lords House, made a long and elegant Speech, defending his own Innocence and Honour, and charging the Duke with very many ill Counsels and arbitrary Actions. After which, upon a Promise to answer the Attorney General's Charge as soon as might be, he was remitted to Mr. Maxwell the Gentleman Usher, in whose House and Custody he remained.

Articles against the Duke of Bucks. Then were read the Articles of the Earl of Bristol against the Duke of Buckingham, dated May 1. 1626. to this effect:

- I. " That the Duke of Bucks did secretly combine with Count Gondamor to carry the Prince into Spain, to be instructed in the Roman Religion; and thereby to subvert the true Religion here Established.
- II. " That Mr. Porter was first sent into Spain upon this Design; and at his Return impos'd upon the King and Prince to obtain what the Duke had before plotted.
- III. " That the Duke at his arrival in Spain shew'd himself popishly affected, by absenting from the Protestant Service constantly us'd in the Earl of Bristol's House, and even by kneeling and adoring the Sacrament of the Mass; which gave the Spaniards such hopes of the Prince's Conversion, that they propos'd harder Conditions for Religion than what had been before agreed to.
- IV. " That the Duke had many times, in presence of the Earl, mov'd the Prince to write a Letter to the Pope, which the Earl vigorously oppos'd, and hinder'd the writing during his stay in that Court; but after he the Earl was come away, the Duke did extort such a Letter to the Pope.
- V. " That the Pope being inform'd of the Duke's Inclination in point of Religion, sent the Duke a Bull in Parchment, to perswade and encourage him to pervert the Prince.
- VI. " That the Duke had so behaved himself in Spain as to be odious to that King and Court; and therefore he broke off the Match upon his own Indignation, not out of Service to this Nation.
- VII. " That so intending to cross the Marriage, he made use of indirect means, and conceal'd many things from his late Majesty to advance his own Ends.
- VIII. " That for the same purpose he had abus'd both Houses of Parliament by a false Relation of those Affairs.
- IX. " That he gave great Scandal by his personal Behaviour in the Court of Spain; and left there a blemish upon the English Nation.
- X. " That he had been in great part the Cause of the Ruin of the Prince Palatine.
- XI. " That in his Reports to the two Houses he had wronged him the Earl in point of his Honour and of his Liberty.

XII. " That he the Earl had revealed these Mis-carriages of the Duke to the late King, who had promised to hear him at large four Days before his Sickness; upon which the King was much pressed and vexed by the Duke, and shortly after died.

The Articles of the said Earl against the Lord Conway, delivered and read at the same time were 11 in number; to the purpose of proving the said Lord Conway to be the Duke's Servant and Creature, and a Promoter and Abetter of all Mis-carriages committed by the Duke.

After reading the said Articles, the Lords order'd, that the King's Charge against the Earl of Bristol should be first heard, and then the Charge of the said Earl against the Duke; yet so that the Earl's Testimony against the Duke should not be prevented, prejudiced or impeach'd. On the Day following, the Lord Keeper delivered to the House a Message from the King to this effect, " That the Articles exhibited against the Duke of Buckingham are such, as the King of his own knowledge can testify the Duke's sincere Carriage in them; that they had been clos'd in the Earl's own Breast for two Years contrary to his Duty, and were now vented by way of Recrimination; and that therefore they should put a difference between his Majesty's Charge against one that appeareth as a Delinquent, and the Recrimination of the Earl of Bristol against his Majesty's Witness.

The King interposes in the Duke's behalf.

The majority of the Lords were more inclin'd to espouse the Earl's Cause, upon a better Opinion of his Character and Person than they had of the Duke's; and being more apt to pity his Misfortunes, that he had incurred the King's displeasure only by opposing the Duke's Ambition. Upon appearance of this Inclination in the House, there was an endeavour to remove the Earl's Cause out of their Lordships Cognisance, and to proceed against him by way of Indictment in the King's Bench. But this attempt did but gain the Earl more Friends in the Upper House, in being sensible that taking the Cause out of their House would infringe their Liberties, and leave an imputation upon their Honour and Justice; and therefore they stopt the Revocation of it.

The Lords House more inclin'd to the Earl than to the Duke

About a Fortnight after the delivering in those Articles by the Attorney General, the Earl gave in his Answer, and introduc'd it with an eloquent Speech: wherein he first asserted his constant and strict adherence to the Protestant Religion; and then insinuated upon his Honour and Integrity in his Negotiations in Spain: And then exhibited his full answer to the several Articles prefer'd against him; and then concluded with another Speech, wherein he hop'd their Lordships would not only find him far from blame, but a faithful Servant to his late and present Majesty; and that therefore their Lordships would take such Course as they in their Wisdom should think fit, not only for upholding the Honour and Reputation of a Peer of this Realm, but likewise for becoming humble and earnest Suitors to his Majesty, that he may be restor'd to his Majesty's most gracious Favour; which above all worldly things he most desireth.

The Earl's Answer and Vindication of himself.

But the Proceeding of the Lords in this Cause was now interrupted by an Impeachment of the Duke prepared in the House of Commons; which upon May 8. was delivered at a Conference of both Houses, and held them two Days. It was manag'd by eight Members and sixteen more Assistants; the managers were Sir Dudley Diggs, Mr. Herbert, Mr. Selden, Mr. Glamvil, Mr. Pym, Mr. Sherland, Mr. Wandesford, and Sir John Elliot.

Impeachment against the Duke by the Commons.

Sir Dudley Diggs began with thanking their Lordships for condescending to this Conference: He then represented the publick Grievances and Complaints of the People; and then came to this Application. The Commons therefore wondering at the Evils which they suffered, debating of the Causes of them, found they were

A Conference between the two Houses.

1626. many, like many Lines to one Circumference, of decay of Trade and strength, of Honour and Reputation in this Kingdom; which as in one Centre, met in one great Man the Cause of all, whom I am here to name, the Duke of Buckingham. Then pausing awhile, he read the Preamble to the Charge, and then spoke in general to the Grounds and Reasons of it; comparing the English Monarchy to the World, the Commons to the Earth and Sea, the King to the Sun, the Lords to the Stars and Planets, and the Duke of Buckingham to a prodigious Comet. And finally inferring, that all the Grievances complain'd of by the Commons were to be imputed to the Duke only, and to his Procurement.

The Substance of the Articles and of the Duke's Answer afterwards given in to them.

The Articles of Impeachment and the Duke's Answer.

I. Article. "That he the said Duke, being young and unexperienc'd, had with exorbitant Ambition, and for his own Advantage procur'd and engross'd into his own hands several great Offices.

The Duke's Answer. "As to the Places he holds three only are worthy the name of Offices, viz. the Admiralty, the Wardenship of the Cinque Ports, and Mastership of the Horse; for which he acknowledgeth the Bounty and Goodness of his most gracious Master, who prevented his desires in asking for them. And that there be many Precedents both in ancient and modern Times, that one Man eminent in the Esteem of his Sovereign hath at one time held as great and as many Offices.

II. Art. "That he the said Duke, in the 16th of the late King, did give to the Earl of Arundel for the Office of Admiral three thousand Pounds; and did procure from the late King an Annuity of one thousand Pounds per Annum, to be paid to the said Earl for his surrendry, to obtain to himself a Grant of the said Office during Life.

The Duke's Answer. "That he obtained a Grant of the Office of Admiralty freely, and without any Contract or Bargain with the late Lord Admiral, who surrendry'd it willingly without any Promise, and received a Pension at the King's own Free-will and Pleasure. And he affirms, that his Majesty's Navy is in better State by much, than ever it was in any precedent Time whatsoever.

III. Art. "That in the 22d of the late King, he gave to Edward Lord Zouch, Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports, for surrendry of the said Office one thousand Pounds, and procur'd him an Annuity of five hundred Pounds yearly.

The Duke's Answer. "That the Lord Zouch being grown in Years, and unfit to execute so great a Trust, and willing to resign it, and treating with other Noblemen upon some Recompence for it, he did indeed agree to give him one thousand Pounds in Money, and five hundred Pounds yearly for his said surrendry, the King being privy to it, and his own Intentions therein being just and honourable.

IV. Art. "That he the said Duke, by reason of his said Offices, ought to have faithfully guarded the Seas; whereas, ever since the Dissolution of the two Treaties 21 Jacobi, he had neglected the performance of his said Office and Duty, and broken the Trust committed to him.

The Duke's Answer. "Whatever Losses have happen'd to the King's Subjects during that time, are not owing to his want of Care and Diligence. For that he had encreas'd the ordinary Guard allowed for the Narrow Seas; and such further Provision is now made as will give good Satisfaction.

V. Art. "That a Ship called the St. Peter of Newhaven, laden with Goods of the Subjects of France, in time of Peace with that Kingdom, was taken at Sea by direction of the said Duke, and brought to Plymouth as a Prize, where divers Goods, to the Value of twenty thousand Pounds were taken out for the benefit of the said Duke, and the Ship with the residue of her Goods sent into the River of Thames and there detained. Upon which there was an Arrest at Newhaven of two English Merchant Ships, to the great disturbance of Trade, and prejudice of the Merchants.

The Duke's Answer. He sets forth the Fact, and hopes it will sufficiently appear, that he hath not done any thing herein which was not justifiable and grounded upon deliberate and well advised Counsels and Warrants.

VI. Art. "That the said Duke abusing the Lords of the Parliament in the 21st of King James, with pretence of serving the State, did oppress the East India Merchants, and extorted from them ten thousand Pounds to release their Ships which he had stop't from their intended Voyage.

The Duke's Answer. "He reciteth the matter of Fact, and proves the Composition made by the Company with his late Majesty by legal Proceedings, and advice of Counsel; and refers himself to the Judicial Acts which prove the contrary to what is alledg'd against him.

VII. Art. "That about the end of July last, he the said Duke as Admiral, did by indirect and subtle Means and Practises, procure one of the principal Ships of his Majesty's Navy Royal, call'd the Vanguard, and six other Merchant Ships to be put into the hands of the French King.

The Duke's Answer. "That this Article was so mix'd with Actions of great Princes, that he dar'd not in his Duty publish every Passage thereof: but he could affirm, that those Ships were lent to the French King at first without his privy; and when he knew it, he did that which belong'd to an Admiral of England and a true English-man.

VIII. Art. "That the said Duke, knowing the said Ships were intended to be employ'd against those of the Reformed Religion in the Town of Rochel, did procure the said Ships to be delivered, that they might be so us'd and employ'd, as they accordingly were against the Town of Rochel.

The Duke's Answer. "That he was so far from praesiding, or consenting that the said Ships should be so employ'd, that he believed the Pretence of the French King, that he would use those Ships against Genoa; and when it was discover'd that they would be employ'd against those of the Religion, he did by all fit and honourable Means endeavour to divert that course.

IX. Art. "That whereas Titles of Honour were wont to be conferr'd as the Rewards only of Virtue and Industry: he the said Duke had perverted that Ancient and most Honourable Way, and had enforced some that were Rich to purchase Honour: As the Lord R — Baron of T —, to the prejudice of the Gentry and dishonour of the Nobility.

The Duke's Answer. "He utterly denies compelling the Lord R — to buy his Title of Honour; who was before willing to have given a much greater Sum, but could not then obtain it; and he did now obtain it by Sollicitation of his own Agents.

X. Art.

1626. X. Art. " That whereas no Places of Judicature ought to be procured for any Reward, Bribe or Gift, he the said Duke in the 18th of King James, did procure of the said King the Office of High-Treasurer of England, to the Lord Viscount M..... now Earl of M..... for the Reward of twenty thousand Pounds: And in the 16th of the said King, did procure the Office of the Master of the Wards for Sir L. C. afterward Earl of M..... for the Reward of six thousand Pounds.

The Duke's Answer. " That he received not, or had a Penny of either of those Sums to his own Use: nor did he know of the procurement of them.

XI. Art. That he had procured divers Titles of Honour to his Mother, Brothers, Kindred and Allies, of small Estates, to the prejudice of the Nobility and the damage of the Crown.

The Duke's Answer. " That as to procuring some few Honours for those who were so near and dear unto him, the Law of Nature and the King's Royal favour may plead for his excuse.

XII. Art. " That he had obtained a Grant from the Crown of divers Manors, parcel of the Dutchy of Lancaster, and of other Lands and Rents belonging to the Crown; and had likewise receiv'd exceeding great Sums of Money for his own use without Accompt, to the great diminution of the Revenues of the Crown, according to Schedules annex'd.

The Duke's Answer. " That he doth acknowledge the bountiful Hand of his late Majesty; but as to the immense Sums and Values which are suggested to have been given to him, there be great mistakes in the Schedules, to which he will give particular Answer in another Schedule.

XIII. Art. " That whereas nothing ought to be administr'd to the Royal Persons of Kings in their Sickness, without Consent and Direction of some of their known Physicians: the said Duke without any sufficient Warrant, did unduly cause and procure certain Plaisters, and a certain Drink or Potion to be given to his late Majesty; after which divers ill Symptoms did appear upon his said Majesty, who did attribute the Cause of his growing worse to the said Plaister and Drink.

The Duke's Answer. " That he was by infinite bonds of Duty and Thankfulness obliged to be tender of the Life and Health of his late Sovereign Master. That he did neither apply nor procure the Plaister or Posset-drink in the Charge term'd a Potion to his late Majesty, nor was present when the same was first taken or applied. But that his Majesty being sick of an Ague, enquir'd how he the Duke had lately recovered from the like Distemper: and he told his Majesty that the Earl of Warwick's Physician had cured him with a Plaister and Posset-drink. The King desired to have the like Medicines sent for; but the Duke delayed it, till the King commanded them to be fetch'd by an express Messenger, and first took them in his the Duke's absence. When the King grew worse, he the Duke heard a rumour as if his Physick had done the King hurt; and that he the Duke had administr'd it without Advice. The Duke acquainting the King herewith, his Majesty with much Discontent answer'd thus: They are worse than Devils that say it. He humbly prays their Lordships not only to consider the Truth of this Matter, but also to commiserate the sad thought which this Article hath revived in him.

The several Articles having been enlarged and aggravated by the respective Members chosen out for Management, Sir John Elliot concluded the Impeachment in a bitter Speech; ending thus:

" I conclude by presenting to your Lordships the particular Centure of the Bishop of Ely, reported in the 2d of Rich.I. and to give you a short view of his Faults. He was first of all noted to be Luxurious. Secondly, He married his own Kindred to Persons of highest Rank and Places. Thirdly, No Man's Business was done without his help. Fourthly, He would not suffer the Kings Council to advise in matters of State. Fifthly, He grew to such a height of Pride, that no Man was thought worthy to speak unto him. And Lastly, His Castles and Forts of Trust he did obscuris & ignotis hominibus tradere. His Doom was this, Per totam Insulam publice proclamatur, pereat qui perdere civitatem festinat, opprimatur ne omnes opprimat.

The Duke concluded his Answer with referring all to the Judgment of their Lordships; acknowledging how easie it was for him in his younger Years, and unexperienc'd, to fall into thousands of Errors; but hoping he had been preserv'd from running into any heinous and high Misdemeanours and Crimes. In whatsoever he had unwittingly offended, he claimed the Benefit of his late and present Majesty's Pardon; and hopeth, and will daily pray, that for the future he shall by God's Grace so watch over his Actions both Publick and Private, that he shall not give any just Offence to any.

The Duke having put in this Answer, earnestly moved the Lords to send to the Commons to expedite the Reply; and the Commons did as earnestly desire a Copy of his Answer.

But the King did seem resolv'd that this Process should never end in a formal Trial. The faithful Master was more than equal to the wild Prince: The more popular Odium the Duke lay under, he became the nearer Object of Royal Favour. If his Majesty could have a little inclin'd an Ear to the Voice of the People, and could have excluded this Favourite from his Councils and his Presence, while the Cry was loud against him, he might in all appearance have better protected his Servant, and better defended his own Royal Honour. But he was impatient of all Proceedings against the Duke; and therefore to execute some displeasure on the principal Actors, he commanded Sir Dudley Diggs who open'd the Impeachment, and Sir John Elliot who concluded the last Article, to be both committed to the Tower. And on May 11. the King came to the House of Lords and expressed his Resentments in this manner:

My Lords,

" THE cause and only cause of my coming to you this Day is, to express the sense I have of all your Honours: for he that toucheth any of you toucheth me in a very great measure. I have thought fit to take Order for the punishing some insolent Speeches lately spoken. I have been too remiss heretofore in punishing such Speeches as concern my self: Not that I was greedy of their Monies, but that Buckingham through his importunity would not suffer me to take notice of them, lest he might be thought to have set me on, and that he might come the forwarder to his Trial. And to approve his Innocency, as touching the matters against him, I my self can be a Witness to clear him in every one of them.

" I speak not this to take any thing out of your hands, but to shew the Reason why I have not hitherto punished those insolent Speeches against my self. And now I hope you will be as tender of my Honour, when time shall serve, as I have been sensible of yours.

The same Day a Message was brought from the Commons to their Lordships by Sir Nathaniel Rich, to make Declaration, " That they hold it a thing of dangerous consequence, both for the present and future times, that a Man of so great Eminence, Power, and Authority, being Impeached and Accused Conclusion of the Duke's Answer.

The King resolv'd to prevent a Trial.

Imprisons the two Members of the House of Commons.

Makes a Speech full of Resentment to the Lords.

The Motion of the Commons to commit the Duke.

1626. "cused of such high Crimes and Offences, should yet enjoy his Liberty, &c. Wherefore they recommend it as their unanimous Desire, that their Lordships would be pleased forthwith to commit the Person of the said Duke to safe Custody. Upon which the Duke made a Speech, to desire his Trial might be hastned, that he might no longer suffer than needs must. "And now (says he) that my Accuser hath not been content only to make my Process, but to prescribe to your Lordships the manner of your Judgment, and to judge me before I am heard, I shall not give way to any of their unjust Demands, &c.

The Duke angry.

The Commons more incensed

But the quick Resentments of the King, and the seeming Defiance of the Duke, did but irritate the Commons to a more importunate Prosecution. They resolved therefore to proceed in no other Business, till they had Satisfaction in this Cause. They turned the House into a grand Committee, and fell upon considering Ways and Means how to secure their Rights and Liberties. In which Committee Sir Dudley Carleton made a very reconciling Speech, and mov'd the House not to intrench upon his Majesty's Prerogatives, lest it should bring him out of Love with Parliaments: He urg'd the Necessity of a good Correspondence to be kept up between the King and his People: He laid some blame upon Sir Dudley Diggs and Sir John Elliot, and inferr'd that they spoke beyond their Commission; And this (says he) drew his Majesty, with other insolent Invectives, to use his Regal Authority in committing them to the Tower.

Case of Sir Dudley Diggs.

The Words imputed to Sir Dudley Diggs were, That he did forbear to speak farther of that (meaning the Pleaister apply'd to his late Majesty) in regard of the King's Honour. Upon which a Protestation was drawn up and thus taken by every Member.

I Protest before Almighty God and this House of Parliament, that I never gave Consent that Sir Dudley Diggs should speak these Words that he is now charged withall, or any Words to that effect. And I have not affirmed to any that he did speak such Words, or any to that effect.

Within few days after Sir Dudley was released from the Tower, and coming into the House made there a Protestation, that the Expression charg'd upon him was far from his Words, and never came into his Thoughts. He thank'd the House for their Respects unto him, and said, he had received from his Majesty a gracious Testimony of his Satisfaction. But still the Duke could not digest the Affront; he affirmed to the House of Peers, that some Words were spoken at the late Conference by Sir Dudley Diggs which so far did trench upon the King's Honour, that they are interpreted Treasonable. After long Debate, thirty six Lords made a voluntary Protestation, upon their Honours, That the said Sir Dudley Diggs did not speak any thing at the said Conference which did or might trench on the King's Honour; and if he had they would presently have reprehended him for it.

Case of Sir John Elliot.

Not long after, Sir John Elliot was also released, and coming into the House discharged himself of the offensive Passages in his late Charge against the Duke, and obtained a Vote of the House, that He had not exceeded the Commission given him in the late Conference.

So as Things were not yet carried so high, but that a little mutual Compliance might have still made a happy Session. But his Majesty had so much Affection for the Duke, and so much Occasion for immediate Supply, that he could not bear the Thoughts of a Trial that might be provoking and long depending: And therefore the Day after the Duke had put in his Answer, the King wrote this Letter to the Speaker, dated June 9.

Trusty and Well-beloved, We greet you well.

King's Letter to the Speaker.

"OUR House of Commons cannot forget how often and how earnestly we have called upon them for the speeding of that Aid which they 1626. "intended us for our great and weighty Affairs, concerning the Safety and Honour of Us and our Kingdoms. And now the time being so far spent that unless it be presently concluded, it can neither bring us Money nor Credit by the time which themselves have prefixed, which is the last of this Month, and being farther deferred would be of little Use, we being daily advertised from all Parts of the great Preparations of the Enemy ready to assail us; We hold it necessary by these our Letters to give them our last and final Admonition, and to let them know, that we shall account all farther Delays and Excuses to be express Denials. And therefore we will and require you to signify unto them, that we do expect that they do forthwith bring in their Bill of Subsidy to be passed without Delay or Condition, so as it may fully pass the House by the end of the next Week at the farthest: Which if they do not, it will force us to take other Resolutions. But let them know, if they finish this according to our Desire, that we are resolved to let them sit together for the Dispatch of their other Affairs so long as the Season will permit, and after their Recess to bring them together again the next Winter. And if by their Denial or Delay any thing of ill consequence shall fall out, either at home or abroad, we call God and Man to witness, that we have done our Part to prevent it, by calling our People together to advise with us, by opening the Weight of our Occasions unto them, and by requiring their timely Help and Assistance in these Actions wherein we stand engaged by their own Counsels. And we will and command you, that this Letter be publickly read in the House.

These were thought too hard Words by the Commons, who had their Money yet in their hands, and were resolv'd to have a Redress of some Grievances as an Equivalent for it: And therefore their only Answer at present was an earnest Petition to the King concerning the Dangers arising from the Increase and Impunity of Popish Recusants; giving a Catalogue of many in Commission and Trust who were either profess'd Papists themselves, or had Popish Wives and Children: and then desiring that the aforesaid Parties, and all others so ill affected, be put out of such Commissions and Places of Authority wherein they now are in his Majesty's Realm of England, contrary to the Acts and Law of State in that behalf.

Then a Committee was appointed to prepare an Answer to his Majesty's late Letter; and the Substance of it was delivered by the Speaker in a Speech before the King, wherein he presented the Answer of the House fairly wrote in Parchment, saying, "This Parchment contains two things, the one by way of Declaration, to give your Majesty an Account and humble Satisfaction of their clear and sincere Endeavours and Intentions in your Majesty's Service: and the other an humble Petition to your Majesty for the Removal of that great Person the Duke of Buckingham from Access to your Royal Presence.

His Majesty not giving a favourable Answer, the Commons proceeded to draw up a Remonstrance; which they had no sooner finish'd, but they had Intimation that the Parliament would be that Day Dissolv'd: upon which, they ordered every Member of the House to have a Copy of the said Remonstrance; which was to this effect:

"WE your loyal and faithful Subjects the Commons — retarded in the Prosecution of Publick Affairs — think it our Duties to declare those Interruptions and Preventions — In the first Parliament, the Commons then assembled — presenting two Subsidies — were refused by means of the Duke of Buckingham to enlarge that Supply, which conceiving not to be

The King hearing that this Remonstrance was under a Preparation in the House, resolved to part with the Parliament rather than with the Duke, and was giving Orders for a Dissolution; when the House of Peers, in great Respect to his Majesty's Interest and Honour, presented this Address to him for continuing the Sessions.

May it please your excellent Majesty,

" WE faithful and loyal Subjects, the " Peers of this Kingdom, having received
 " this Morning a Messige from your Majesty, inti" mating an Intention to dissolve this Parliament;
 " remembering that we are your Majesty's heredita" ry Great Council of the Kingdom, do conceive " that we cannot deserve your Majesty's gracious " Opinion expressed in this Messige unto us, nor

 " our Country, if after Expression of our great and " universal Sorrow, we did not humbly offer our

 " gers at home and abroad, signified to us by your " Majesty's Command may be prevented, and your " Majesty made happy in the Duty and Love of " your People, which we hold the greatest Safety " and Treasury of a King: for the effecting where-
 " of, our humble and faithful Endeavour shall ne" ver be wanting.

After this, the Lords sent several of their Mem- bers to intreat his Majesty to give Audience to the whole House of Peers: But the King returned Answer, That his Resolution was to bear no Motion to that purpose, but he would dissolve the Parliament; and immediately caused a Commission to pass under the Great Seal to that purpose: Which Commission being read in the Upper House, in Presence of the Commons, the said Parliament was dissolved on the 15th of June

To take off, if possible, the Discontents and Mur- murs of the People on this occasion, his Majesty published A Declaration of the Causes of Dissolving the two last Parliaments — Given at Whitehall the 30th day of June in the second Year of our Reign. Wherein his Majesty asserts, " That the Calling,

Adjourning, Proroguing, and Dissolving of Parliaments, do peculiarly belong unto himself by an undoubted Prerogative inseparably united to his Imperial Crown; of which, as of his other Regal Actions, he is not bound to give an Account to any but to God only. That coming to the Crown, he found himself engaged in a War with a potent Enemy, invited and encouraged therein by the humble Advice of both the Houses of Parliament in the Life of his Father. That after his Death summoning a new Parliament at Westminster, and by reason of the Plague adjourning it to Oxford, and desiring a farther Supply, he found them so slow, and so full of Delays and Divisions, and the Contagion so much encreasing, his Majesty dissolved that Parliament. That after this, by Advice of his Privy Council and his Council of War, he continued his Preparations and former Resolutions, tho' it pleased God not to give the Success which was desired. That he summoned a new Parliament to meet on Febr. 6. at the first Meeting whereof he did forbear to press them with any thing which might have the least Appearance of his own Interest. That the Commons, on March 27. Voted three Subsidies and three Fifteens, and on Apr. 26. upon second Cogitations, added a fourth Subsidy. His Majesty, with much patience, expected the Performance of what the Commons had thus promised; but they, being abused by the violent and ill-advised Passions of a few Members of the House for private and personal Ends ill-befecring Publick Persons trusted by their Country, not only neglected, but wilfully refused to hearken to all the gentle Admonitions which his Majesty could give them; and neither did nor would intena any thing but the Prosecution of one of the Peers of this Realm — Whereupon his Majesty wrote a Letter to the Speaker, dated June 9. 1626. Notwithstanding which Letter, read in the House, being a clear and gracious Manifest of his Majesty's Resolutions, they never so much as admitted one Reading to the Bill of Subsidies; but instead thereof, they prepared and voted a Remonstrance, containing as well many dishonourable Aspersions upon his Majesty, as dilatory Excuses for their not proceeding with the Subsidies. Wherefore his Majesty, upon mature Advisement, discerning that all farther Patience would prove fruitless, on the 15th instant he dissolved this unhappy Parliament: Since which he hath put on this Resolution, that he will go on cheerfully and constantly in Defence of the Faith and true Religion, and (notwithstanding so many Difficulties and Discouragements) will take his Sceptre and Sword into his Hand, and not expose the Persons of the People committed to his Charge to the insatiable Desires of the King of Spain, who hath long thirsted after an universal Monarchy; nor their Consciences to the Yoke of the Pope of Rome: And, that at home he will take that care to redress the just Grievances of his good Subjects as shall be every way fit for a good King.

This was seconded by a Royal Proclamation taking notice of a Remonstrance drawn up by a late Committee of the Commons, intended to have been presented to his Majesty, " Wherein were many things contained to the Dishonour of the King and his Royal Father. Of which several Copies have been scattered; and therefore, for suppressing of this insufferable Wrong, his Majesty commands all Persons who have any Copies or Notes of the said Remonstrance, forthwith to burn the same, that the Memory thereof may be utterly abolished.

On the same Day the Parliament was dissolv'd, the Earl of Bristol was again committed to the Tower, and the Earl of Arundel again confined to his own House: which, with many other steps of Distinction, did unhappily improve the general Discontent of the Lords and Commons.

A Sham Information against the Duke of Buckingham in the Star-Chamber.

Soon after an Information was preferred by the King's special Command in the Star Chamber, against the Duke of Buckingham for high Offences and Misdemeanours, and in particular for the Plaister applied to King James, according to the last Article preferred against him by the Commons. The Duke put in his Answer, and divers Witnesses were examined. But it came to no judicial Hearing, and was therefore suspected to be an Evasion of Justice rather than a Prosecution of it.

Privy Council declare for Tonnage and Poundage, tho' not yet given by Parliament.

To take off the Complaint in Parliament of the illegality of receiving Tonnage and Poundage without a special Act of the Legislature, the Privy Council now declared, that the said Revenue hath been constantly continued for many Ages, and is a principal and most necessary part of the Revenue of the Crown; and in the two last Parliaments had been thought upon, but could not be settled by their Authority by reason of the Dissolutions, tho' it was sufficiently intended to have been confirmed by Parliament, as it hath been from time to time by many Descents and Ages. Whereupon they Order'd, that all such Duties and Merchandizes shall be levied and paid; and an Instrument for that purpose was passed under the Great Seal. For the King having deprived himself of the prospect of all Parliamentary Aids, and yet resolving to prosecute the War, it was necessary to project all possible Ways and Means of raising Money; which put the King and his Ministry upon some Inventions which indeed nothing but a Necessity could excuse, and the People would not excuse that Necessity.

Projects of getting Money.

By Forfeitures of Recusants.

One Method was to improve the Forfeitures arising to the Crown by the execution of the Laws against Priests, Jesuits and Popish Recusants; wherein there had been great Abuses by some inferior Officers, who had oppressed such Recusants without advantage to the King. And therefore the King grants a Commission to the Arch-Bishop of York, Sir John Swayne and others, To Treat and make Composition with the said Recusants for all Forfeitures in not going to Church, under such Conditions and Immunities as they shall see meet and convenient, according to such Instructions as his Majesty hath or shall give for that purpose: his Majesty rather desiring their Conversion than Destruction. This was justly suspected as a Toleration of Popery in those who could purchase it; and as a Power dispensing with the common course of the Penal Laws.

By granting Crown Lands.

A Proclamation was likewise published declaring the King's Resolution to make his Revenue certain, by granting his Crown Lands, as well holden by Copy as otherwise, to be from henceforth holden in Fee-Farm. This too was disliked as a Project of impoverishing the stated Revenue of the Crown, by raising present Fines.

By requiring Loans and Contributions.

The King's Letters were sent to the Nobility and Gentry, that according to the Precedents of former Times, upon extraordinary Occasions, they would grant him their private Assistance by way of Contribution, or of Loan, expecting from them such a large and cheerful Testimony of their Loyalty as may be acceptable to himself, and exemplary to his People. But this was resented as a way of asking by Authority, and an Extortion rather than a Desire.

By Ship Money.

Then a peculiar Charge was laid upon the several Ports and Maritime Counties, to furnish and set out Ships for the present Service, in such and such proportionable Numbers; Twenty for the City of London, &c. The County and Ports of Dorset presented a Plea of Excuse to the Council Table; and alledg'd that this was an Imposition without Precedent. The Lord Mayor and Commonalty of London made a like Petition; and pleaded for an abatement at least of the number of Ships requir'd of them. But the Council gave a general Answer, That Petitions and Pleadings against a necessary Command did but obstruct the publick Service, and were therefore by no means to be admitted. This burthen was such a terror to the Sea-Forts, that many of the Inhabitants remov'd higher into the Country to avoid the vexation of it. Their withdrawing increas'd the burthen of those who staid behind: And therefore an Order was issued out, that lest the deserting of the Coasts, Ports and Sea-Towns, should expose those Places to become a Prey, and invite the Enemy to an Invasion, the Inhabitants who had withdrawn themselves to inland Places were required to return with their Families and Retinues, and there to abide during the times of Hostility and Danger.

For the King found himself more and more engaged in Foreign Quarrels. The King of Denmark had taken up Arms against the Emperor, in an Alliance with the Princes of the Lower Saxony, and therein claim'd the Assistance of the Crown of England for the Restitution of the Elector Palatine. Hereupon the King sent a Fleet to be join'd with the Danish Ships to secure the River Elbe, and so prevent the Transporting of Commodities for the Service of the Spaniards. And besides this Aid by Sea, the King sent over Six thousand Land Men, under the Command of Sir Charles Morgan, to augment the Army of the King of Denmark, who fought the Imperialists under the Command of Count Tilly on Aug. 27. near Luttern; where the King and his Confederates being forc'd to an unequal Battle were entirely defeated.

And besides these open Breaches with Spain and the Empire, the King was now further embarrass'd in a new Rupture with France. The first occasion of it was the King of France's employing our English Ships against his Protestant Subjects at Rochel, when by Treaty they were lent only to assist the French upon the Coasts of Italy: This was resented as a breach of Faith in the French King; and made the English People so extremely jealous of our own Court, that nothing less could be done than to demand a Restitution of our Ships, and a Reason why they had been so employ'd against the Rochellers. The King of France justified the putting them upon that Service by the necessity of his Affairs; and excused the present restitution of them on a pretence, that his Subjects, by whom they were now mann'd, would not yet deliver them. Our Ships having been thus dishonourably employ'd, and more injuriously detain'd; the Duke of Bucks, as Lord Admiral, did by express Commission make a Reprisal on the French, by seizing the St. Peter of Newhaven and other French Merchants. This provok'd the King of France not only to deny the giving up our Seven Ships lent to him, but lay to an Arrest upon our Merchants Goods in his Dominions, to the value of Three hundred thousand Pounds. These Feuds were thought to be industriously improv'd by an Emulation between the two prime Ministers of each Nation, Cardinal Richieu and the Duke of Buckingham; this latter having been design'd Ambassador to France for composing of the Differences, was by the other's Envy deny'd Acceptance by the French King. Upon which the Duke is said to have sworn in a Rage, That since he was forbidden to enter in a peaceable manner into France, he would force his Passage with an Army. But however upon Reasons of State the two Kings were reconciled; and some Satisfaction being made to the French Merchants, the French King restored the English Ships, and released the Imbargo on their Goods at the beginning of May 1626. which seem'd to make up perfect Peace and Union. But Distastes and Jealousies were still remaining; and both Courts were dispos'd to break upon a small occasion.

Especially in a new Rupture with France.

This made the King and Duke the more jealous of the Queen's Family, as sending Intelligence, and spreading Reports, and doing other ill Offices between the two Nations. It had been agreed by the Articles of Marriage, that the Queen should chuse her own Servants of her own Country and Religion; and should in particular have a certain number of Priests for her Household Chaplains, together with a Bishop, who should exercise all Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction

These Men being courted by the English Papists, and zealously supported by the Queen's Favour, had opportunities to shew a very zealous Partiality for their own Country and the Romish Communion; growing forward and insolent, and putting the Queen upon such courses as created Distrust and Unkindness between the King and Her.

The King resolves to send away the Queen's French Servants.

His Majesty represented this uneasiness to his Brother of France, imputing it to the crafty and evil Counsels of the Queen's Domesticks, contrary to her own Inclinations; and so declared he could no longer bear with those that were the known causes and fomenters of this Disturbance. He could give many Instances of their rude Behaviour, but he thought one might suffice, that without his knowledge they had made his Royal Consort walk to Tybourn to pay her Devotions there. In short, that they had so much abused his Patience, and affronted his Person, that he was resolved no longer to endure it. Before any Answer was return'd from France, on July 1. toward Evening, the King, attended by the Duke of Buckingham, the Earls of Holland and Carlisle, and other principal Officers, came to Somerſet House, and having commanded the appearance of all the Queen's Servants, the King spoke his Mind to them in this manner.

Gentlemen and Ladies,

Makes a Speech to them.

" I Am driven to that extremity, as I am personally come to acquaint you, that I very earnestly desire your return into France. True it is, the Deportment of some amongst you hath been very offensive to me; but others again have so dallied with my Patience, and so highly affronted Me, as I cannot, I will not any longer endure it.

The Queen enraged.

The Bishop of Mende and Madam St. George, who had given the greatest Offence, began to make their Apologies: but the King turn'd from them, saying only, I name none, but I tell you my Resolution. As soon as the Queen heard it, she fell into a high Passion, and upbraided his Majesty with the utmost Disaffection to her. He tried all the most kind and tender ways to pacify her; and when he had used all gentle Perswasions, he roundly bid her be satisfied, for it must be so. This Action indeed did seem to be some Indignity put upon the Queen; and it was a greater hardship upon her Servants, who had most of them sold their Effects in France to purchase a dependence on the English Court, and were now worse than Banish'd home. But as there was a Provocation for it, so there was in one respect a happy Consequence in it: For after this Set of Creatures were disinist, the Queen grew much more Endearing to his Majesty, and he most Firm and Fond in his Affections to her.

The Lord Carleton sent to the French Court.

The King sent over the Lord Carleton to the French Court to give advice of this Action, and prevent all hard constructions of it. But the French King immediately declared his ill Resentments of it, and denied Audience to the Lord Carleton, and complained of an exprest violation of the Articles of Marriage; and for an immediate Act of Hostility seiz'd upon One hundred and twenty English Ships that were then in his Ports and Rivers.

Declarati- of War against France.

Upon this the King of England published a Declaration of War against France, exprelling the Grounds of it to be, 1. That the Council of France had obstructed the landing of Count Mansfeild's Army contrary to promise; with whom the French should have joined for relief of the Palatinate. 2. That the King of France contrary to the Articles with his Protestant Subjects, had block'd up their Towns, Garisons and Forts. 3. That the King of France had committed an Example of great Injustice in full Peace, by seiz- ing 120 English Ships, with all their Merchandise and Artillery.

A Fleet sent to the

The King prepares a Fleet of Thirty Men of War, and sent them at the beginning of October under the 1626. Command of the Earl of Denbigh to relieve the Ro- chellers; who being then besieged and greatly distressed, had sued to the King of England for his Protection and Defence. But this Fleet going out too late, suffered so much by adverse Winds and Storms, that they were not able to reach the French Coasts, but were driven back into our own Harbours, and left the Rebellers not only to deplore their own Misery, but perhaps to suspect our Integrity.

While the King found himself under these various Difficulties, he commanded his Council to advise by what means and ways he might be furnished with Monies suitable to these great Occasions. After consulting many Days, they came to this Resolution: That the urgency of Affairs not admitting the way of Parliament, the most speedy, equal and convenient Means would be by a General Loan from the Subject, according as every Man was assessed in the Rolls of the last Subsidy.

Upon this Result the King published a Declaration, to inform his People that the urgency of his occasions would not give leave to the calling of a Parliament; but assuring them this way should not be made a Precedent, and promising in the Word of a Prince, First, To Repay all such Sums of Money as should be lent without Fee or Charge. Secondly, That not one Penny so borrowed should be expended otherwise than on the Publick Service.

The King chose his Commissioners for receiving of this Loan, and gave them these private Instructions.

1. " To set themselves a good Example in freely subscribing to the best of their own Ability.
 2. " To require a Loan from others according to the Rates in the last Book of Subsidy: a Man of 100*l.* in Goods to lend 100 Marks, and he of 100*l.* in Lands to lend a full 100*l.*
 3. " To use all possible endeavours to cause every Man to lend cheerfully, upon consideration of Honour, Interest and common Safety.
 4. " To appoint the Payment within fourteen Days, or at least one half within that time, and the remainder before the 20th of December.
 5. " That they treat apart with every one; and if any any refuse, they shall examine them upon Oath, and charge them upon Allegiance not to disclose whatever their Answer is.
 6. " That they begin with such Persons as are likely to set the best Examples.
 7. " That they certifie to the Privy Council in Writing, the Names, Qualities and Dwelling-places of all Refractory Persons.
 8. " That upon lending the Sums requir'd, his Majesty will remit their Grant upon the late Benevolence, and accept what was paid on that account as a part of the present Loan.
 9. " That they admit of no Suit to be made, or Reasons to be given for the abating of any Sum.
- Lastly,* " The Commissioners are required upon their Faith and Allegiance, not to impart their Instructions to any others.

Divers Lords of the Council were appointed to repair into their several Countries for advancement of this Loan: But no Art or Interest could bring off a Free People from murmuring at it, as an arbitrary and illegal Imposition. This Reluctancy of private Persons made the Government more severe in execution of the Project; and this severity of the Government made People more and more averſe to it. Those who suffered for their Opposition grew Popular; and displeasing of the Court was now thought a demonstration of Conscience and Honour. So as the steps taken to prosecute this Design made the Design it self much the more odious.

Sir Randolph Crew shewing himself dissatisfied, was remov'd from his Place of Lord Chief Justice, and Sir Nicholas Hide was put in his room, a Creature of the Duke's, and he who had drawn up his Answer to the late Impeachment in Parliament.

1626. The Bishop of Lincoln spoke publicly against the Loan; for which, a Complaint was sent up to the Lords of the Council, and upon this Occasion an Information of other pretended Matters was preferred against him in the Star-Chamber.

The Benchers of Lincolns-Inn demurring upon it as not in due Form of Law, received a Letter of Reproof from the Lords of the Council, with a Command to return the Names of the Refractory.

The Gentry in several Counties refusing to Subscribe, were bound over by Recognizance to appear at the Council Table; and there refusing to comply, were many of them committed to Prison.

The Common sort who deny'd the Rates requir'd of them, were by Warrant of the Council, directed to the Commissioners of the Navy, impress'd to serve in the Ships ready to go out in his Majesty's Service. And others of them in and about London were made to appear before the Lieutenant of the Tower, by him to be enrolled among the Land Forces; with a Reason declar'd, that they who refus'd to assist with their Purfes should serve in their Persons for the common Defence.

And that which added to the Popular Disgust was, That the Papists were all forward and liberal upon this occasion; and the Protestant Subjects who were more sparing of their Liberty and Property, were all hunted into the Reproach of being Puritans. And it was imputed to the Court as an Observation of theirs, that in this Test of Allegiance the Papists were exceeding Orthodox, and the Puritans were the only Recufants.

Another great Unhappiness was this; The Bishops at the King's Request were most of them zealous to promote this Supply of the Publick Necessities; and earnestly press'd their Clergy to contribute their best Assistance in it. Hence some were more officious than became their Function in such a secular Affair: And others were so indiscreet as to make it a Doctrine of their Pulpits to urge the Duty of Answering whatever the King demanded. In particular, Dr. Sibthorp, Vicar of Brackley, preach'd upon this Subject at Northampton on Feb. 22. 1626. at the Lent Altizes; and having his Sermon licensed by the Bishop of London, he publish'd it under the Title of Apostolick Obedience, with a Dedication to the King. The whole Scope of it was to advance the Loan, and to justify the King's imposing publick Taxes without Consent of Parliament; and to prove that the People, in point of Conscience, were bound to submit to the Regal Will and Pleasure. For which he was afterward called in question, and censured by the Parliament: But yet he gain'd his Ends at Court, being made Chaplain in Ordinary to his Majesty, Prebendary of Peterborough, and Rector of Burton Latimers in Northamptonshire; from which he was ejected in the Civil Wars, and enjoy'd them again at the Restoration, dying in April 1662. One who speaks most favourably of the Royal Party, says, He was a Person of little Learning, and of few Parts, only made it his Endeavours, by his Forwardness and Flatteries, to gain Preferment.

Dr. Roger Manwaring promoted the same Cause in two Sermons preach'd before the King and Court at Whitehall, wherein he advanc'd these new Doctrines: "That the King is not bound to observe the Laws of the Realm concerning the Subject's Rights and Liberties, but that his Royal Will and Command in imposing Loans and Taxes, without common Consent in Parliament, doth oblige the Subject's Conscience upon pain of eternal Damnation. That those therefore who refused to pay this Loan, offended against the Law of God and the King's supreme Authority, and became guilty of Impiety, Disloyalty, and Rebellion, &c. For which he was Censured by the next Parliament, but soon after by the Court prefer'd to the Rectory of Stamford Rivers in Essex, to hold with his Vicarage of S. Giles in the Fields, London: and Dean of Worcester in 1633. and Bishop of St. Davids in 1635. dying at Caermar- then in Privacy and Poverty on July 1. 1653. These last Sermons were first preach'd at Oatlands before the King in July 1627. and publish'd under the Title of Religion and Allegiance: but bearing immediate Relation to the Loan, they were fit to be mention'd under this Year 1626.

Having thus pass'd through the two first Years of this unfortunate Reign, and deliver'd the full Series of Civil Affairs; it will be proper to take a Review of the State of Religion and the Church, as very much affecting the Peace and Policy of this Reign.

Two Days after the Parliament began, a Convocation was opened at St. Paul's on Monday June 20. 1625. Dr. John Bowles was chosen Prolocutor, who had been made Dean of Salisbury in July 1620. and was preferred to the See of Rocheſter in 1630. No Ecclesiastical Business was done, nor any Motion made toward it in the Upper or Lower House. During their Session, on June 24. the King commanded the Archbishop of Canterbury, with six other Bishops (not in a Synodical Capacity) to draw up a Form of Prayer for the Publick Fast. On June 25. all the Bishops who were then in Town were introduced in a Body, to wait upon the Queen, and to kiss her Hand. On July 7. Mr. Richard Mountague, Canon of Windsor, and Fellow of Eaton, Rector of Stamford Rivers, and Chaplain in Ordinary to his Majesty, was brought to the Bar of the House of Commons, to answer for his Book entitul'd An Appeal to Cæſar, which was there charged upon him, to be contrived and published to put a Jealousie between the King and his well affected Subjects, and to contain many things contrary to the Articles of Religion establish'd by Parliament; and that the whole Frame thereof was an encouragement to Popery.

This Cause had began in the 21st. of King James, when this Learned Man had publish'd a former Book entitul'd, A new Gag for an old Goose, in answer to a Popish Book, call'd A Gag for the new Gosſel. When upon a Suggestion that he had receded from some Doctrines of the Reformed Churches, and had too much softned some of the Roman Tenets; he was then question'd in Parliament, and the Cause being of dubious Points of Belief, was referr'd to the Archbishop of Canterbury; who expressed his dislike of the Book, and gave the Author a solemn Admonition. Some other Bishops, who were called of the Arminian Party, had a different Notion of Mr. Mountague's Opinions, and encouraged him to re-assert them, and defend them in another Treatise to be dedicated to the King; and as an Appeal to his Royal Judgment and Authority, to be entitl'd Appello Cæsarem. The Archbishop disallowed the Book, and endeavoured to suppress it: But the other Bishops attested their Approbation of it, and hastned the Edition. The House now appointed a Committee to examine the Errors of it, and gave the Archbishop Thanks for his former Admonition to the Author; whose Books they voted to be contrary to the establish'd Articles, to tend to the King's Dishonour, and to the Disturbance of Church and State: For which they assign'd him a time of Answer, and took Bond for his Appearance under the Penalty of Two thousand Pounds.

But on Saturday, July 9. the King himself interpos'd, and signified to the Commons, that What had been spoken in their House, and determin'd against Mr. Mountague, was displeasing to him. He hop'd one of his Chaplains might have as much protection as the Servant of an ordinary Burgeſs. This was look'd upon as an arbitrary Obstruction of Justice, and would but have incens'd the House to have proceeded more severely, if on their next Day of sitting, Monday, July 11. the Parliament had not been prorogued to Oxford, where they met again on Monday, Aug. 1.

Here at Oxford there was a very small appearance of Convocation. Dr. Bowles, the Prolocutor, absent'd himself for fear of the Infection, Dr. Thomas Goad officiating in his Place; their Meeting was kept in the Chapel of Merton College. The only Motion 1625. remember'd in History, is that of the Learned Dr. James, who propos'd that all the Manuscript Works of the Fathers, in the Libraries of each University, and elsewhere in England, might be perus'd; and that such places in them as had been corrupted in Popish Editions, might be faithfully printed according to the most ancient Copies: A very laudable Design; but the Motion dropt without considering of it. The Encouragement he desired for it was possibly the same which he recommends in one of his own Letters. "If every Church-man that hath 100 l. per Annum and upward, will lay down but a Shilling for every Hundred toward these publick Works, I will undertake the Reprinting of the Fathers, and setting forth five or six Volumes of Orthodox Writers, comparing of Books printed with printed and written, collating of Popish Translations with the Greek, and generally whatsoever shall concern Books, or the Purity of them, I will take upon Me to be Magister Sancti Palatii in England.

Convocation did nothing but give their Money.

The Convocation having neither desired nor received any Royal License to treat of Ecclesiastical Matters, kept only to that Civil Purpose, for which they were chiefly called, together with the Parliament, of assisting the King with a reasonable Aid, and accordingly made a Grant of three Subsidies, which was confirmed by Act of Parliament, as had been the Custom ever since the Act of Submission; since which time the Taxes of the Clergy were pass'd into Secular Laws, when before that Act they were enjoin'd and levy'd by Synodical Constitutions, under the Penalty of Spiritual Censures.

Mr. Mountague applies to the King.

Mr. Mountague seeing himself under the displeasure and prosecution of the House of Commons, made no Application to either House of Convocation (who without the King's Direction did not apprehend that the Cause fell regularly under their Cognifance) but wrote a humble Letter to his Majesty, dated July 29. 1625. wherein he first plainly laid open the State of his Case, and then Petition'd that by his Majesty's Authority and Wisdom, he might be protected from those who had no Power over his Person, as being his Majesty's Servant in Ordinary; nor over his Book as being wrote by the Command of his Royal Father, and authoriz'd by his present Majesty himself; and then concluded with this Declaration, "That if he could not really and throughly answer whatsoever was, or could be imputed to him in any of his Books, he would no farther desire any Favour or Protection, but would be willingly left to the Power of his Enemies,

The Bishops intercede for him in a Letter to the Duke.

The Bishops of Rocheſter, Oxford and St. David's, who had a kind Opinion of Mountague and his Writings, and seem'd very sensible of the Danger to the Church, in allowing Points of Divinity to be examined and judg'd by the Commons in Parliament, us'd all possible Endeavours to stop this Method of Proceeding; and knowing the Duke of Buckingham to have the greatest Influence upon the King, they begg'd his Intercession in this Letter, dated August 2.

May it please your Grace,

WE are bold to be Suitors to you in the Behalf of the Church of England, and a poor Member of it, Mr. Mountague, at this time not a little distressed. We are not Strangers to his Person, but it is the Cause which we are bound to be tender of. The Cause we conceive (under correction of better Judgment) concerns the Church of England nearly. For that Church when it was Reformed from the Superstitious Opinions broach'd or maintain'd by the Church of Rome, refus'd the apparent and dangerous Errors, and would not be too busie with every particular School-Point.

Now, may it please your Grace, the Opinions which at this time trouble many Men in the late Book of Mr. Mountague, are some of them such as are expressly the Resolved Doctrine of the Church of England, and those he is bound to maintain.

1625. Some of them are such as are fit only for Schools, and to be left at more liberty, for Learned Men to abound in their own Sense, so they keep themselves peaceable and distract not the Church. And therefore to make any Man subscriber to School Opinions, may justly seem hard in the Church of Christ, and was one great Fault of the Council of Trent. And to fright them from those Opinions in which they have (as they are bound) subscribed to the Church, as it is worse in it self, so may it be the Mother of greater Danger.

May it please your Grace further to consider, that when the Clergy submitted themselves in the time of Henry VIII. the Submission was so made, that if any Difference Doctrinal, or other, fell in the Church, the King and the Bishops were to be Judges of it in the National Synod or Convocation; the King first giving leave under his broad Seal to handle the Points in Difference. But the Church never submitted to any other Judge, neither indeed can she though she would.

And we humbly desire your Grace to consider, and then to move his most Gracious Majesty (if you shall think fit) what dangerous Consequences may follow upon it. For, First, If any other Judge be allowed in matter of Doctrine, we shall depart from the Ordinance of Christ, and the continual Course and Practice of the Church. Secondly, If the Church be once brought down beneath her self, we cannot but fear what may be the next Stroke at it. Thirdly, It will some way touch the Honour of his Majesty's dear Father, and our most dread Sovereign of glorious and ever blessed Memory, King James, who saw and approv'd all the Opinions of this Book. And he in his rare Wisdom and Judgment, would never have allowed them, if they had cross'd with Truth and the Church of England. Fourthly, We must be bold to say, that we cannot conceive what use there can be of Civil Government in the Commonwealth, or of Preaching, or external Ministry in the Church, if such fatal Opinions as some which are opposite and contrary to these delivered by Mr. Mountague are, shall be publickly taught and maintained. Fifthly, We are certain that all or most of the contrary Opinions were treated of at Lambeth, and ready to be published; but then Queen Elizabeth of famous Memory, upon notice given how little they agreed with the Practice of Piety and Obedience to all Government, caused them to be suppressed; and so they have continued ever since, till of late some of them have received Countenance at the Synod of Dort. Now this was a Synod of that Nation, and can be of no Authority in any other National Church till it be received there by publick Authority. And our hope is, that the Church of England will be well advis'd, and more than once over, before she admit a Foreign Synod, especially of such a Church as condemneth her Discipline and manner of Government; to say no more.

And further, We are bold to commend to your Grace's Wisdom this one Particular. His Majesty (as we have been inform'd) hath already taken this Business into his own Care, and most worthily referred it in a right Course to Church consideration. And we well hoped, that without further trouble to the State, or breach of Unity in the Church, it might so have been well and orderly compos'd, as we still pray it may.

These things considered, we have little to say for Mr. Mountague's Person; only thus much we know, he is a very good Scholar, and a right honest Man: A Man every way able to do God, his Majesty, and the Church of England great Service. We fear he may receive Discouragement; and (which is far worse) we have some cause to doubt this may breed a great Backwardness in able Men to write in the Defence of the Church of England, against either home or foreign Adversaries, 1626. "ries, if they shall see him sink in Fortune's Reputation, or Health, upon occasion of his Book.

 "And this we most humbly submit to your Grace's Judgment, and Care of the Church's Peace and Welfare. So commending your Grace to the Protection of Almighty God,

We shall ever rest at your Grace's Service,

Apr. 2. 1625. Jo. Roffen. Jo. Oxon. Guil. Menera.

The Duke espoused the Cause.

The Duke's espousing this Cause, and the King's reproving the House of Commons for meddling in it, did but more exasperate the adverse Party, who were now Enemies to Mountague not as an Arminian, but as an Instrument (in their Thoughts) of Arbitrary Power. And it was indeed the State Interest that gave the great Distinction to these School Opinions. Those Divines who adher'd to the more rigid Opinions of St. Austin, Calvin, and the Synod of Dort, they were at this time of the Country Party, in favour with the People, and with the prevailing side in Parliament; so they establish'd to themselves the Reputation of being found and orthodox Protestants: while the other Divines who went back to the Foundations of Religion, and to the Import of the Scriptures, and to the Sense of the Primitive Fathers, in rejecting the hard Decrees of Reprobation, and in reconciling the Will of Man with the Grace of God; they were eminently of the Court-Party, and Favourites of the King and the Duke: and under a Prejudice upon this Civil more than a Religious Account, they were charg'd with Papery and Arminianism, only to make them the more odious to the Common People. Even the Arminians in Holland suffer'd more as a State Faction than as a Religious Sect; they were found Adversaries to the Rights and Liberties of the People; and it was under that Character they were made Hereticks, rather than for their abstracted Notions in Divinity. And it was the same now in England; the Doctrinal Controversie would have created no great Difference, if there had not been a Political Division in it.

Many Answers to Mr. Mountague's Book.

It was this very Reason that now inflam'd the Commons against Mr. Mountague; and they would have shewn their Indignation at his having such an Interest at Court, if this Parliament had not been so very abruptly dissolv'd. And this again encreas'd the Prejudice against what they now call'd the Arminian Party; and the Cry against them was so popular, that many Divines were encouraged to confute the Principles of Mr. Mountague's Book, and to represent them as false and pernicious. In this Design Dr. Sutcliff, Mr. Burton, Mr. Rowse, Mr. Yates, Mr. Wotton, and even a Bishop of the Church, Dr. Cusleton, engaged themselves. Their Writings serv'd to heighten the Jealousies of the wiser, and to confirm the Prejudices of the weaker Men. This was soon improv'd into such a universal Dislike of the dreadful Name of Arminianism, that even the King and the Duke began to think it not safe and honourable to support a Cause that was generally run down by the Voice of the People: And therefore at the opening of the second Parliament, summon'd to meet Feb. 1625, the Duke seem'd inclinable to drop his Concern for Mountague, the better to reconcile himself to some of the leading Members: And for the same reason his Majesty was dispos'd to leave Mr. Mountague to the free Prosecution design'd against him, and not to interpose in his favour; that he might not thereby interrupt his more important Affairs. Bishop Laud, who was a zealous Friend to the Person and Opinions of Mr. Mountague, was sensible of this Intention of the Court to desert him: It was on such a Prospect that he made this Entry in his Diary, Jan. 29. Sunday. I understand what D. B. had collected concerning the Cause, Book, and Opinions of Richard Mountague, and what R. C. had determined with himself therein. Methinks I see a Cloud arising and threatening the Church of England: God of his Mercy dissipate it.

The King and Duke were inclin'd to desert Mr. Mountague

As soon as the Parliament began Feb. 6. the Commons had an immediate Eye upon Mountague, and resolv'd to call him to Account. This rais'd the Curiosity of many Peers to understand what the Tenets were, and how they differ'd from the Calvinistical Opinions which were commonly called the Doctrine of the Church, and were then the generally received Sense of the Articles of it. To this end, a Conference was procur'd by the Earl of Warwick to be held in the Duke of Buckingham's House in Presence of his Grace and many others of the Nobility, upon Saturday Feb. 11. between Dr. Buckeridge Bishop of Rochester and Dr. White Dean of Carlisle on the side call'd Arminian, and Dr. Morton Bishop of Litchfield, and Dr. Preston Preacher of Lincolns-Imm, on the other side. This Conference was again renew'd in the same Place upon Friday Feb. 17. where in Mr. Mountague himself appear'd in the room of Bishop Buckeridge. The Success of these Conferences was differently reported, according to the different Affection of the Hearers. The Parliament in the mean time began with returning Thanks to the King for his gracious Answer to their late Petition for Religion. And when the House of Commons fell upon the Subject of Grievances, thinking their Liberty and Property to depend much on the establish'd Faith and Worship, they appointed a Committee to consider of the State of Religion and the Growth of Popery. To this Committee the House refer'd the Examination of Mr. Mountague's Appeal to Cesar; who on Apr. 18. making their Report by Mr. Pym to the House, these Articles were drawn up against him.

THAT he the said Richard Mountague, in or about the 21st Year of the Reign of our late Sovereign King James of famous Memory, hath caused to be printed, and in his Name to be published, one Book called An Answer to the late Gagg of Protestants; and in or about Ann. 22. of the same King, he caused to be printed and published one other Book entitled A Treatise of the Invocation of Saints; and likewise in the first Year of his Majesty's Reign that now is, he procur'd to be printed, and in his Name to be published, another Book entitled An Appeal to Cesar: In every of which Books he hath maintained and confirm'd some Doctrine contrary or repugnant to the Articles agreed by the Archbishop and Bishops of both Provinces and the whole Clergy holden in the Convocation at London 1562. for avoiding diversity of Opinions, and for establishing Consent touching true Religion: All which appears in the places hereafter mentioned, and in divers other places and passages of the same Books: And by his so doing, hath broken the Laws and Statutes of this Realm in that case provided, and very much disturbed both the Peace of Church and Commonwealth.

Articles of the Commons against Mr. Mountague

I. "Whereas in the 35th Article of the aforementioned it is declared, That the second Book of Homilies doth contain a godly and wholesome Doctrine, in the 16th Homily of which Book it is determined, That the Church of Rome as it is at present, and hath been for the space of 900 Years and odd, is so far wide from the nature of a true Church, that Nothing can be more; He the said Richard Mountague, in several places of his said Book called the Answer to the Gagg, and in his other Book called the Appeal, doth advisedly maintain and affirm, that the Church of Rome is and ever was a true Church since it was a Church.
 II. "Whereas in the same Homily it is likewise declared, that the Church of Rome is not built upon the Foundation of the Prophets and Apostles; and in the 28th Article of the said Articles, that Transubstantiation overthroweth the nature of a Sacrament; and 1626. " and in the 25th Article, that Five other reputed Sacraments of the Church of Rome are not to be accounted Sacraments: yet, contrary and repugnant hereunto, He the said Richard Mountague doth maintain and affirm in his Book aforesaid, called The Answer to the Gagg, that the Church of Rome hath ever remained firm upon the same Foundation of Sacraments and Doctrine instituted by God.

III. " In the 19th Article it is farther determined, that the Church of Rome hath erred not only in their Living and Matters of Ceremouy, but also in Matters of Faith; he the said Richard Mountague speaking of those Points which belong to Faith and good Manners, Hope and Charity, doth in the said Book called the Gagg, affirm and maintain, that None of these are controverted in their Points, meaning the Protestants and Papists. And notwithstanding that in the 31st Article it is resolved, that the Sacrifice of Masses in which, as it is commonly said, the Priest did offer Christ for the Quick and the Dead to have remission of Pain and Guilt too, is a blasphemous Fable and dangerous Deceit; this being one of the Points controverted between the Church of England and the Church of Rome, the said Richard Mountague, in his Book called the Gagg, doth affirm and maintain, that the controverted Points are of a lesser and inferior nature, of which a Man may be ignorant without any danger of his Soul at all; A Man may resolve to oppose this or that without peril of perishing for ever.

IV. " Whereas in the 2d Homily entitled Against the peril of Idolatry, contained in the aforesaid Book of Homilies, approved by the 35th Article aforesaid, it is declared, that Images teach no good Lesson neither of God nor Godliness, but all Error and Wickedness; he the said Richard Mountague, in the Book Gagg aforesaid doth affirm and maintain, that Images may be used for the Instruction of the ignorant, and Excitation of Devotion.

V. " That in the same Homily it is plainly expressed, that the attributing the Defence of certain Countries to Saints is a spoiling God of his Honour, and that such Saints are but Dii tutelares of the Gentile Idolaters; the said Richard Mountague hath notwithstanding, in his said Book entitled A Treatise concerning the Invocation of Saints, affirmed and maintained, That Saints have not only a Memory, but a more peculiar Charge of their Friends, and that it may be admitted that some Saints have a peculiar Patronage, Custody, Protection and Power, as Angels also have, over certain Persons and Countries by special Deputation, and that it is no Impiety so to believe.

VI. " Whereas in the 17th of the said Articles it is resolved, that God hath certainly decreed by his Counsel, secret to us, to deliver from Curse and Damnation those whom he hath chosen in Christ out of Mankind, and to bring them by Christ to everlasting Salvation; wherefore they which be endued with so excellent a Benefit of God, be called according to God's purpose working in due season, they through Grace obey the Calling, they be justified freely, walk religiously in good Works, and at length, by God's mercy, attain to everlasting Felicity: He the said Richard Mountague, in the said Book called The Appeal, doth maintain and affirm, that Men justified may fall away, and depart from the state which once they had; they may arise again and become new Men possibly, but not certainly nor necessarily: and the better to countenance this his Opinion, he hath in the same Book wilfully added, falsified, and changed divers Words of the 16th of the Articles before mentioned, and divers other Words both in the Book of Homilies and in the Book of Common Prayer, and so miscited and changed the said places. He doth alledge in the said Book called The Appeal, endeavouring thereby to lay a most wicked and malicious Scandal upon the Church of England, as if she did herein differ from the Reformed Churches of England, and from the 1626. " Reformed Churches beyond the Seas; and did consent to those pernicious Errors which are commonly called Aminianism, and which the late famous Queen Elizabeth and King James of happy Memory did so piously and diligently labour to suppress.

VII. " That the said Richard Mountague, contrary to his Duty and Allegiance, hath endeavoured to raise great Factions and Divisions in this Commonwealth, by casting the odious and scandalous Name of Puritans upon such his Majesty's loving Subjects as conform themselves to the Doctrine and Ceremouy of the Ch. of England, under that Name laying upon them divers false and malicious Imputations, so to bring them into Jealousie and Displeasure with his most excellent Majesty, and into Reproach and Ignominy with the rest of the People, to the great danger of Sedition and Disturbance in the State, if it be not timely prevented.

VIII. " That the Scope and End of the said Richard Mountague, in the Books before mentioned, is to give Encouragement to Popery, and to withdraw his Majesty's Subjects from the true Religion established to the Roman Superstition, and consequently to be reconcil'd to the See of Rome: all which he laboureth by subtle and cunning ways, whereby God's true Religion hath been much scandalized, those Mischiefs introduced which the Wisdom of many Laws hath endeavoured to prevent, the Devices and Practices of his Majesty's Enemies have been furthered and advanced to the great Peril and Hazard of our Sovereign Lord the King, and of all his Dominions and loving Subjects.

IX. " That the said Richard Mountague hath inserted into the said Book called The Appeal, divers Passages dishonourable to the late King his Majesty's Father of famous Memory, full of Bitterness, Railing, and injurious Speeches to other Persons, disgraceful and contemptible to many worthy Divines both of this Kingdom and of other Reformed Churches beyond the Seas, impious and profane in scoffing at Preaching, Meditating, and Conferring Pulpits, Lectures, Bible, and all Shew of Religion: All which do aggravate his former Offences, having proceeded from malicious and envenomed Heat against the Peace of the Church, and the Sincerity of the Reformed Religion publicly professed and by Law established in this Kingdom.

" All which Offences being to the Dishonour of God, and of most mischievous Effect and Consequence against the Good of this Church and Commonwealth of England, and of other his Majesty's Realms and Dominions; the Commons assembled in Parliament do hereby pray, that the said Richard Mountague may be punished according to his Demerits, in such exemplary manner, as may deter others from attempting so presumptuously to disturb the Peace of Church and State, and the Book aforesaid may be suppressed and burnt.

It does not appear whether these Articles were presented to the King or preferred in any Judicial manner, or whether Mr. Mountague gave in any Answer, or made any other publick Vindication. It is most probable that the Commons were so immers'd in the Impeachment of the Duke of Buckingham, that they had not leisure to prosecute this inferior Cause before their Dissolution: Nor did the King take any notice of this Complaint, or suffer it to be debated in Convocation. He thought it a Dispute fitter to be silenc'd than to be determin'd; and therefore by Advice of his Bishops, he issued out a Proclamation on June 14. declaring, " not only to his own People, but to all the World, his utter dislike of all those who to shew the subtilty of their Wits, or to please their own Humours, or vent their own Passions, do, or shall adventure to stir, or move any new Opinions, not only contrary but differing from the sound and orthodoxal Grounds of

The Consequence does not appear.

The King issues a Proclamation against Innovating in the Doctrine or Discipline of the Church.

1626. " the true Religion, sincerely professed in the Church " of England; and also assuring his Subjects of his " full and constant Resolution, that neither in mat" ter of Doctrine, nor Discipline of the Church, nor " in the Government of the State, we will admit of " the least Innovation: but by Gods assistance will " so guide the Scepter of these his Kingdoms and " Dominions (by the Divine Providence put into his " hand) as shall be for the Comfort and Assurance " of his Sober, Religious and well affected Sub" jects, and for the suppressing and severe punish" ing of such as out of any sinister Respects or Dis" affection to his Person or Government, shall dare,
 " either in Church or State, to distract or disquiet
 " the Peace thereof. He thereupon Commands all " his Subjects (the Clergy most especially, both in " England and Ireland) that from thenceforth they " should carry themselves so wisely, warily and " conscientiously, that neither by Writing, Preaching, " Printing, Conferences, or otherwise, they raise " any Doubts, or Publish or Maintain any new In" ventions or Opinions concerning Religion, than " such as clearly grounded and warranted by the " Doctrine and Discipline of the Church of England, " heretofore publish'd and happily establish'd by " Authority. Straitly charging all Archbishops and " Bishops in their several Dioceses, as also Countel" lors of State, Judges and Ministers of Justice, " speedily to reclaim and repress all such Spirits as " shall adventure hereafter to break this Rule of So" briety, and due Obedience to his Majesty's Laws,
 " and this Religious Duty to the Church of God, or " in the least degree attempt to violate this Bond of " Peace: Adding this further Intimation of his Roy" al Pleasure, that whoever from henceforth shall " take the boldness, wilfully to neglect this his Ma" jesty's Gracious Admonition; and either for the " satisfying of their unquiet and restless Spirits, or " for expressing of their rash and undutiful Inso" lencies, shall wilfully break that Circle of Order, " which without apparent danger both to Church
 " and State may not be broken, his Majesty will " proceed against them with that severity, as upon " due consideration had of their Offences and Con" tempts, they and every one of them shall de" serve, &c.

This Proclamation did but encrease the fears of Popery and Armi-nianism.

But this wise Proclamation was known to be meant not so much to restrain Mountague, as to discourage and suppress the Answers that were made to him; and therefore did but serve to improve the Jealousies of Arminianism and growing Popery: which Jealousies however unreasonable, did so much obstruct the King's Interest, that it had been more happy if he would not have seem'd a Party in any scholastick Questions.

Another occasion that much encreas'd the fears of Popery was a Sermon before the King, on March 26. the fifth Sunday in Lent, Preached by Dr. Good- man Bishop of Gloucester; who asserted the Real Pre- sence of Christ in the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, in such a positive and literal Explication, that his Doctrine seem'd to differ little but in Word from the gross Absurdity of Transubstantiation. This liberty of treading upon the Borders of Popery, taken before the King himself, was an Offence to the greatest part of the Auditory, and quickly rais'd such a noise in Court and Country, that his Majesty found himself oblig'd to suffer some Cognizance to be taken of it: And accordingly on Wednesd. following March 29.
 there was great Debates in Convocation upon the Subject of this Sermon; but having no License for that purpose, they let fall the Matter without any Resolutions in it. And his Majesty thought it a more effectual Method to refer the Consideration of the Sermon to the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Bishops of Wimbor, Dunham and St. David's; who at the King's Command met together on Wednesday Apr.
 12. and after some Consult agreed to give this Answer to the King, That some things in that Sermon were spoken less cautiously, but nothing falsely. That nothing 1626. was innovated by him in the Doctrine of the Church of England. But to avoid Offence, it might be very proper that the Bishop should preach the Sermon again at some time to be chosen by himself, and should then shew how or wherein he was misunderstood by his Auditors; which by Order of the King the Bishop did accordingly perform. But this was by no means a Satisfaction to the World, because it looked like a reciting and at best but a softning of the Error, which ought to have been plainly renounc'd: there being Reason enough to suspect that Preacher of leaning toward Popery, who to the single Scandal of his Order was afterward a declared Professor of it.

A Convocation had been summon'd to meet a Day after the Parliament, upon Feb. 7. 1628. but no matters of Religion were debated in it, excepting the forementioned Subject of Bishop Goodman's Sermon; of which Archbishop Laud has enter'd it in his Diary, March 29. In the Convocation held that Day, there was much debating concerning the Sermon which Gabriel Goodman, Bishop of Gloucester, had preached before the King on the Sunday preceding, being the Fifth Sunday of Lent. This debating seems to have been only in the Upper House of Convocation, of which the Party offending was a Member, as well as the Writer who took this Note of it. And their Lordships seem to have enter'd on this Debate by Direction from the King, who immediately after took away the Cause from all dependence in Convocation, and referred it to a Committee of Bishops appointed by his own Royal Authority; who reported their Judgment to the King as before related.

It is more to be admitted, that the Controversie about Arminianism and the Advances toward Popery, should not be once mentioned in Convocation, when it had so much divided the Church, and disturb'd the whole Kingdom, and was now brought into the House of Commons, where the Articles exhibited against Mountague must to the greatest degree affect the Church and Clergy. The Reason of this passive Silence in Convocation is thus accounted for by a Writer who best knew the Secret History of those Times. " But nothing (says he) was of such con-" cernment to a Convocation as the Cause of Mount-
 " ague, vexed and molested by the Commons in both " the Parliaments, for supposed Popery and Armini- " anism, matters merely Doctrinal. And possibly it " may be admir'd, that they should do nothing in a " Matter of their own Peculiar, having his Majesty " to their Friend: For it appears in the Letter of the " three Bishops before mention'd to the Duke of " Buckingham, That his Majesty had taken that Busi- " ness into his own Care, and had most worthily refer'd
 " it in a right Course to Church Consideration. And " it appears also by the Breviate, p. 8. that on Sun- " day, April 22. of this present Year, His Majesty
 " had commanded all the Bishops to come before him, and " reprehended such as came (being fourteen in Num- " ber) for being silent in Causes which concerned the " Church, and had not made known to him what might " be profitable or unprofitable for it, the Cause whereof
 " he was so ready to promote. But then we are to call " to Mind, that Laud not long since had been sent " by the Duke of Buckingham to consult with An- " drews, and learn of him what he thought fitting " to be done in the Cause of the Church, and more " especially in the Five Articles so hotly agitated " between the Remonstrants and Contra-Remonstrants
 " in the Belgick Provinces. And it appears by the " Event, that Andrews did not hold it fit for any " thing to be done in that Particular, as the Case
 " then stood; the Truth in those Opinions not be" ing so generally entertained amongst the Clergy, " nor the Archbishop, and the greater part of the " Prelates, so inclinable to them, as to venture
 " the determining of those Points to a Convoca-
 " tion.

There is little more of moment relating to Church Affairs. Bishop Laud and those other Prelates and Divines who lay under the Odium of Arminianism

1626. Popishly affected, because they were of a larger Understanding, and a more publick Spirit than many others of their Order, were unhappily engag'd in the Interest of the Duke of Buckingham, and very forward in those Measures which the King unfortunately took: And their being thus made a Court Faction, brought a popular Distrust and Hatred of them. And a further occasion now offer'd to render them the more suspected as Instruments of a somewhat arbitrary Power. His Majesty's Necessities, that arose from his not complying with two several Parliaments, had driven him upon the way of Loan. This Project much discontented and disturbed the People: the King thought it would be a Means to reconcile them, if the Bishops and Clergy should recommend the Cause in their several parts of the Country. In order to this, Bishop Land, Translated from St. David's to Bath and Wells, on June 20. 1626. did now upon the 14th of September following receive a Command from his Majesty by the Duke of Buckingham, to reduce into form some Instructions partly Political partly Ecclesiastical, to shew the urgency of the King's Affairs, and his occasions of Supply to assist the King of Denmark, to be published in all Parishes within the Realm. The Duke deliver'd the certain Heads to him, and desired him to put them into formal Instructions by the Saturday following; on which Day, Sept. 16. the Bishop carry'd them to the Duke who approv'd them, and thence to the King who was as well pleas'd with them, and the next Day they were read before the Lords of the Privy Council, who gave a like Approbation of them: Upon which, on Sept. 21. the King sent them as Letters of Precept to the two Archbishops to be communicated to their Suffragans, in this Form:

The Misfortune of the Bps. who were called Arminian.

Diary of Archbishop Land, Sept. 14. &c.

Instructions to the Clergy in the matter of a Loan.

Most Reverend Father in God, Right Trusty and Right well Beloved Counsellor, we greet you well,

WE have observ'd that the Church and the State are so nearly united and knit together, that tho' they may seem two Bodies, yet indeed in some relation they may be accounted but as one, inasmuch as they are both made up of the same Men, which are differenced only in relation to Spiritual or Civil Ends. This nearness makes the Church call in the Help of the State, to succour and support her, whensoever she is press'd beyond her Strength: And the same nearness makes the State call in for the Service of the Church; both to teach that Duty which her Members know not, and to exhort them to and encourage them in that Duty which they know.

It is not long since we order'd the State to serve the Church, and by a timely Proclamation settled the Peace of it: And now the State looks for the like Assistance from the Church, that she and all her Ministers may serve God and us, by Preaching Peace and Unity at Home, that it may be the better able to resist Foreign Force uniting and multiplying against it. And to the end that they to whom we have committed the government of the Church under us, may be the better able to dispose of the present occasions, we have, with the Advice of our Council, thought fit to send unto you these Instructions following, to be sent by you to the Bishops of your Province, and such others whom it may concern, and by them and all their Officers directed to all the Ministers throughout the several Dioceses; that according to these punctually they may instruct and exhort the People to serve God and Us, and labour by their Prayers to divert the Dangers which hang over us.

The Danger in which we are at this time is great: It is increased by the late Blow given our good Uncle the King of Denmark, who is the chief Person in those Parts that oppos'd the spreading Forces of Spain. If he cannot subsist there is little or nothing left to hinder the House of Austria from being Lord and Master of Germany: and that is a large and mighty Territory, and such as should it be gotten, would make an open way for Spain to do what they pleased in all the West part of Christendom. For besides the great Strength which Germany once possessed, would bring to them which are too strong already, you are to consider, First, How it enables them by Land, in that it will join all or the most part of the Spaniard's now distracted Territories, and be a means for him safely and speedily to draw down Forces against any other Kingdom that shall stand in his way. Nor can it be thought the Low Countries can hold out longer against him, if he once become Lord of the Upper Parts. And, Secondly, You are to weigh how it will advantage him by Sea, and make him strong against us in our particular Dominion of the Seas; which is of easie Apprehension to all Men: And besides, if he once get Germany, he will be able, though he had no Gold from India, to supply the necessity of those Wars, and to hinder all Trade and Traffick of the greatest Staple Commodities of this Kingdom, Cloth and Wool, and so make them of little or no Value.

You are to know therefore, that to prevent this is the present Cate of the King and State; and there is no probable way left but by sending Forces and other Supplies to the said King of Denmark our dear Uncle, to enable him to keep the Field, that our Enemies be not Masters of all on the sudden. You are further to take notice, how both we and the whole State stand bound in Honour and Conscience to supply the present Necessity of the King of Denmark: For this Quarrel is more nearly ours, the recovery of the ancient Inheritance of our dear Sister and her Children. The King of Denmark stands not so near in Blood unto her as we do: yet for her and our sakes that brave and valiant King hath adventur'd into the Field; and in that Engagement hath not only hazarded his Person, but as things go now, it may turn to some danger to his own Kingdom and Posterity, should he not receive Aid and Succour from us without delay: which should it happen (as God forbid) will be one of the greatest Dishonours that ever this Kingdom was stained withall. Nor is Danger and Dishonour all the Mischief that is like to follow this Disaster: For if it be not presently relieved, the Cause of Religion is not only likely to suffer by it in some one part (as it hath already in a fearful manner in the Palatinate) but in all places where it hath gotten any footing: So that if we Supply not presently our Allies and Confederates in this Case, it is like to prove the Extirpation of true Religion, and the Replanting of Romish Superstition in all the neighbouring Parts of Christendom. And the Coldness of this State shall suffer in all Places as the Betrayer of that Religion elsewhere, which it professeth and honoureth at home, which will be an Imputation never to be washed off: And God forbid this State should suffer under it.

Neither may you forget rightly to inform the People committed to your charge, that this War which now grows full of Danger, was not enter'd upon rashly and without Advice, but you are to acquaint them that all former Treaties by a peaceable way were in the latter end of our dear Father of ever blessed Memory dissolved as fruitless and unfit to be longer held on Foot; and this by the Counsel of both Houses of Parliament then Sitting: So those two great and honourable Bodies of Peers and People represented in Parliament, led on this Counsel and Course to a War with Spain: To effect this they desired our Aid and Assistance, and used us to work our said dear Father to entertain this Course. This, upon their Perswasions and Promises of all Assistance and Supply, we readily undertook and effected, and cannot now be left in that Business but with the Sin and Shame of all Men: Sim, because Aid and Supply for the 1626. " Defence of the Kingdom, and the like Affairs of State; especially such as are advised and assumed by Parliamentary Council, are due to the King from his People, by all Law both of God and Men: And Shame if they forsake the King while he pursues their own Counsel just and honourable; and which could not under God but have been as successful, if it had been followed and supplied in time, as we desired and laboured for.

" One thing there is which proves a great hindrance of this State, and not continu'd among the People without great Offence against God, Detriment both to Church and State, and our great Disservice in this and all other Business. It is Breach of Unity which is grown too great and common amongst all sorts of Men. The danger of this goes far; for in all States it hath made way for Enemies to enter. We have by all means endeavour'd Union, and require of you to Preach it, and Charity the Mother of it, frequently in the Ears of the People. We know their Loyal Hearts, and therefore wonder the more what should cause distracted Affections. If you call upon them (which is your Duty) we doubt not, but that God will bless them with that Love to himself, to his Church, and their own Preservation, which alone will be able to bind up the Scatterings of divided Affections into Strength. To this end you are to lay before them what Miseries home Divisions have brought upon this and many other Kingdoms; and to Exhort all Men to embrace it in time. The Danger it self, besides all other Christian and Prudent Motives, is of force enough (where it is duly considered) to make Men join in all Amity against a common Enemy, a great and growing Enemy; and to do it in time, before any secret and cunning working of his may use one part in a Division to weaken the other.

" And in the last place (but first and last and all times to be insisted on) you are to call upon God your selves, and to incite the People to join with you in humble and hearty Prayers unto God, that he would be pleased now, after long Affliction of his dear People and Children, to look in Mercy both upon them and us; and in particular for the Safety of the King of Denmark and that Army which is left him; that God would Bless and Prosper him against his and our Enemies. Thus you are to strengthen the Hearts and Hopes of our Loyal Subjects and People in and upon God: And whereas the greatest Confidence Men have in God ariseth not only from his Promises, but from their Experience likewise of his Goodness, you must not fail often to recall to the Memory of the People with Thankfulness, the late great Experience we have had of his Goodness towards us: For there great and usual Judgments, which he darts upon Disobedient and Unthankful People, are Pestilence, Famine and the Sword. The Pestilence did never rage more in this Kingdom than of late; and God was graciously pleased in Mercy to hear the Prayers which were made unto him; and the ceasing of the Judgment was little less than a Miracle. The Famine threatened us this present Year; and it must have followed had God rained down his Anger a little longer upon the Fruits of the Earth: But upon our Prayers he staid that Judgment, and sent us a blessed Season, and a most plentiful Harvest. The Sword is the thing which we are now to look to; and you must call the People to their Prayers again against that Enemy, that God would be pleased to send the like deliverance from this Judgment also; that in the same Mercy he will vouchsafe to strengthen the Hands of his People; that he will sharpen their Sword, but dull and turn the Edge of that which is in our Enemies Hands; that so while some fight others may pray for the Blessing. And you are to be careful, that you fail not to direct and hearten our 1626. " loving People in this and all other necessary Services, both of God, his Church and Us: that we may have the comfort of our Peoples Service; the State safety; the Church Religion, and the People the enjoying of all such Blessings as follow these. And we end with doubling this Care upon you, and all under you in their several Places.

Given at our Palace at Westminster, in the Second Year of our Reign, Sept. 21. 1626.

These Instructions were sent to the Archbishops of Canterbury and York, willing and requiring each of them to see the said Instructions published and dispersed in the several Dioceses of their respective Province; who accordingly sent their Orders to every one of their Suffragans to see them made known to the worthy Preachers and Ministers in their Dioceses, and so far as their Lordships might in their own Persons to put these things in execution, and to call upon the Clergy under them, in their Preachings and private Conferences to stir up all sorts of People to express their Zeal to God, their Duty to the King, and their Love both to their Country and to one another; that all Good and Christian-like Course might be taken for the Preservation of true Religion, both in this Land and throughout all Christendom.

These Instructions though Modest and Pious, had not the desired Effect of quieting the Minds of the People, who generally look'd upon them as a Stratagem of State to promote the raising of Money without a Parliament: The least Attempts of that kind will be always odious to the English People.

However, this piece of Service recommended Bishop Laud more and more to the Favour of the King and Duke: And upon the Death of Dr. Lancelot Andrews, Bishop of Winchester and Dean of his Majesty's Chapel Royal, on Sept. 22. Laud, now Bishop of Bath and Wells, was admitted to the Deanery of the Chapel on October 6. in which Office he prevailed with his Royal Master to break one very ill Custom that had obtained at Court, since the first entrance of King James. The Custom was, that at what part soever of the Publick Prayers the King came into his Closet (which looked into the Chapel) the Divine Service then depending was presently cut off, and an Anthem sung, to make immediate way for the Sermon. This had an appearance of Profaneness, or Contempt of the Liturgy: And therefore this new Dean did very honourably represent the Scandal of it to the King; who piously comply'd with a Redress of it. Bishop Laud enters the Matter thus in his own Diary: November 14. or thereabout, taking occasion from the abrupt both Beginning and Ending of Publick Prayer on the 5th of November, I desired his Majesty King Charles, that he would please to be present at Prayers as well as Sermon every Sunday; and that at whatsoever part of the Prayers he came, the Priest then officiating might proceed to the End of the Prayers. The most Religious King not only assented to this Request, but also gave me Thanks. This had not before been done from the beginning of King James his Reign to this Day: Now Thanks be to God it obtaineth.

The fears of Popery in England were unhappily augmented by the confidence of the Papists in Ireland, who were now driving a Bargain for a Toleration, and offered the Terms of maintaining for the King's Service Five hundred Horse and Five thousand Foot. To consider of this Proposal a great Assembly of the whole Nation, both Papists and Protestants, was called by the then Lord Deputy Falkland to the Hall of the Castle of Dublin. The Irish Bishops upon Invitation of the Lord Primate Usher met first at his House; and he and they unanimously drew up and subscribed a Protestation against the Tolerating Popery in this Form:

The Judgment of divers of the Archbishops and Bishops of Ireland, concerning Toleration of Religion.

Archbishops and Bishops in Ireland protest against any Toleration of Popery.

“ THE Religion of the Papiſts is Superſtitious and Idolatrous; their Faith and Doctrine Erroneous and Heretical; their Church in reſpect of both Apoſtatical. To give them therefore a Toleration, or to conſent that they may freely exerciſe their Religion, and profeſs their Faith and Doctrine is a grievous Sin, and that in two reſpects.

1. “ It is to make our ſelves acceſſary not only to their Superſtitious, Idolatries and Hereſies, and in a Word to all the Abominations of Popery, but alſo (which is a Conſequent of the former) to the Perdition of the Seduced People which perith in the Deluge of the Catholick Apoſtacy.

2. “ To grant them Toleration in reſpect of any Money to be given, or Contribution to be made by them, is to ſet Religion to Sale, and with it the Souls of the People, whom Chriſt our Saviour hath redeemed with his moſt precious Blood. And as it is a great Sin, ſo alſo a Matter of moſt dangerous Conſequence: the Conſideration whereof we commend to the Wiſe and Judicious; beſeeching the God of Truth to make them who are in Authority Zealous of God’s Glory, and of the Advancement of true Religion: Zealous, Reſolute, and Courageous againſt all Popery, Superſtition and Idolatry. Amen.

This bold and reaſonable Declaration, drawn up toward the end of 1626. was publiſhed at Chriſt Church, before the Lord Deputy and Council, by one of the Subſcribers Dr. George Downham Biſhop of Derry, in the midſt of his Sermon; wherein he ſpoke much againſt Subordinating Religion to Secular Deſigns, and Mens Proſtituting their Conſcience to worldly Reſpects, and ſetting their Souls to Sale for the Gain of earthly Matters, &c. On the next Sunday the Lord Primate preach’d before the ſame Auditory: The Text was 1 John 5. 15. Love not the World, &c. wherein he made a like Application againſt ſelling Toleration to the Papiſts: Rebuking thoſe Who for worldly Ends, like Judas, would ſell their very Saviour for pieces of Silver. This Conſcience and Courage of the Biſhops did prevent the open Purchaſe of a Toleration of Popery, and put the Government upon finding out another way to maintain Forces for the Defence of that Kingdom.

1627. 3 Car. I. And now to proſecute the Series of Civil Affairs in the Third of Charles I. 1627. The King engaged in an unreaſonable War with France, made his Subjects more indifferent in it, by leaving the whole Management to his Favourite the Duke of Buckingham; who obtained a large Commiſſion to be Admiral of the Fleet, and Commander General of all the Land Forces; and to Conduſt and Employ them according to ſuch private Inſtructions as he ſhould receive from his Maſteſty; and to advance to the Order of Knighthood ſuch Perſons employ’d in the Fleet and Army, as he in his Diſcretion ſhould think fit.

Who goes with the Fleet. To relieve Rochel. With theſe full Powers the Duke ſet Sail from Portſmouth on June 27. with a Fleet conſiſting of One hundred Sail of Ships, of which Ten only were the Kings Men of War, and 6 or 7000 Land Soldiers. Toward the latter end of July he appeared before the Town of Rochel, and ſent a Meſſage to them to join with him in Relief of the oppreſſed Proteſtants in France. But the Rochellers who were ſo importunate for the coming of the Engliſh, were now afraid of their Appearance, and ſhut their Gates againſt them. Upon this Surprize the Duke ſent Sir William Beecher on Shoar, accompanied by the Duke of Sobiesz and commiſſioned with a Letter of Credence from his Maſteſty of Great Britain. With ſome difficulty they were admitted into the Town, and the Magiſtrates for their more ſolemn Reception called an Aſſembly, in which Sir William Beecher ſpoke to this Effect: “ That the Duke of Buckingham was come with a great Fleet and Army to their Aſſiſtance, which his Royal Maſteſty had ſent out of a fellow-feeling of their Sufferings, to require from the King of France a performance of the late Articles of Peace, made by the King of England’s Mediation on behalf of the Proteſtants in France. Declaring, that if they ſhould now reſuſe to accept the deliverance offered to them, he muſt proteſt before God and Man, in the Name of the King his Maſteſty, that his ſaid Maſteſty was fully cleared of his Engagements upon Honour and Conſcience for their Relief.

This Declaration was ſeconded by the earneſt Solicitations of their Friend and Country-man the Duke of Sobiesz: But the Magiſtrates and chief Inhabitants were poſſeſſed with ſuch a fear of the King of France his Army then upon a March againſt them; and were many of them ſo governed by a Court-Party in the Town, that they dar’d give no better Anſwer than this of Suſpence and Forbearance: “ That they did render all humble and hearty Thanks to his Maſteſty of Great Britain for the Care he had of them; and to the Duke for his Forwardneſs and Readineſs to do his beſt Service for their Good. But they were bound by Oath of Union to do nothing without the common Conſent of the reſt of their Proteſtant Brethren in France. And therefore they muſt pray the King of Great Britain to excuſe them, in deſerring the Conjunction of their Forces till they had ſent to the reſt of the Proteſtant Towns, who were of the Union with them. And in the mean time their Prayers and Wiſhes ſhould be for the happy Progreſs of ſuch Actions as the Fleet and Army ſhould undertake.

Before the Duke of Sobiesz went from the Engliſh Fleet into the Town, the Duke of Buckingham communicated his Deſign to him, to land his Army in the Iſle of Oleran near to Rochel; which Sobiesz well approved as feaſible and proper: the French Forces in that Iſland being few, and the Forts weakly manned and victualled: Diſſuading him from any Thoughts of landing upon the Iſle of Rhee; becauſe it was farther diſtant from Rochel, and furniſhed with a conſiderable Force of Horſe and Foot, with a Citadel well fortified, and other advantages of repelling Invaders and defending it ſelf.

But the Admiral not ſtaying for the return of Sobiesz from Rochel, alters his Reſolution, and directs his Courſe to the Iſle of Rhee; and upon July 30. makes near the Shoar. The next Day he ordered a Squadron of Twelve Ships to lay before the Mouth of Port-Brelen, falling down with the reſt of the Fleet to the Fort de la Prec, againſt which they played with their Canon, ſtill making their Approaches nearer to the Land. Tornas, Governour of the Iſle, being ſufficiently Alarm’d, marched out from the Citadel of St. Martin with all the Strength he could draw together to prevent the Engliſh from landing: But under the Cover of their own Canon, the braveſt of the Engliſh Officers, Sir John Burroughs, Sir Alexander Bret, Sir Charles Rich (with the French Proteſtant Montſieur St. Blanchard) went firſt a Shore, ſoon followed and ſupported by Twelve hundred Men. The Enemy being a thouſand Horſe and Foot beſides Voluntiers; immediately advanc’d up to the Engliſh and began a very warm Encounter, wherein were ſlain Sir William Heyden and ſome hundreds of the Engliſh, with Montſieur Blanchard a Proteſtant Agent from the Duke of Rohan. On the French ſide the Governour’s Brother, the Baron of Chantal, and ſome few others. By degrees the Engliſh forced their way, made the Enemy retreat, and gained room for The Governour retir'd with his wounded Men to the Citadel of St. Martins, and if the English had immediately pursued, to all appearance they had been easily Masters of that Place, and of the whole Isle. The Fort la Pree near the Landing-place, and meanly provided of Men and Victuals, was also slighted or neglected, when the easie taking of it would have best prevented the landing of French Recruits, and was most proper to secure a Retreat for the English. But five Days being oddly spent before the English Army moved, gave Toiras opportunity to replenish and fortifie his Citadel of St. Martins, and to send away to Court for Supplies. 'Tis certain the Court were in a great Astonishment upon this English Invasion; the King fell Sick, as if by Impression of the ill News, and sent his Resolution to give the Protestants honourable Terms, if they would not join with the English: inviting the Head of the Party, the Duke of Rhoan, with great offers of Money and Honour, to secure him from falling in with this great Juncture of Deliverance to his oppress'd Brethren.

Which comes to late.

After an ill-tim'd Delay the Duke of Buckingham debark'd all his Land Forces, and sent back Sobiez and Sir William Beecher to Rochel to sollicite for some Recruits; who by their Interest soon return'd with five hundred Foot. Upon this the Duke in two Days published a Manifesto, declaring, "His Royal Master's Care and Zeal for the Reformed Churches of France, to restore them to their ancient Liberty and Splendor: though indeed his laudable Designs for their Good had been well nigh perverted to their Ruin, by a breach of Promise in the French King; who had employ'd those English Ships against Rochel, which were lent him upon a solemn Assurance of being otherwise employ'd, &c.

Upon Approach of the Duke the French quitted the Town of St. Martins, and retir'd into the Citadel, which the Duke presently block'd up; and raising Entrenchments and Batteries, he fir'd upon the Fort for two Months together, when he might have starv'd it in less time, if he had remember'd to stop up a Well within his Trenches, from which the Enemy had their secret Draught of Water, during the whole time of the Siege.

Before this place the English endured much fatigue and loss; and more especially suffered in the Death of that excellent Soldier Sir John Burroughs, who was slain on Sept. 20. with a Musquet shot from the Citadel, while he was viewing of the English Works: His Body was brought over and honourably Interr'd at Westminster.

This Expedition proving so tedious and ineffectual, rais'd many Discontents in England. Some murmur'd that the Admiral had broke his Word with Duk Sobiez, and landed in a wrong Place: Others said his landing was rather a Feint than a real hearty Attempt; for he did not march quick enough after landing, nor did he take the Fort la Pree: Nor was he now in earnest besieging St. Martins; for many Presents and Complements had continually pass'd between him and the Governour. And in short, the generality of the People of England disliked a War not supported by a Parliament; and spok'd freely for a new Parliament to be called, and for some Ministers to be question'd in it.

The King under these Perplexities resolv'd to send a Squadron with Recruits of Men, Ammunition and Provision to the Army at Rbee, and commands the Prefs of certain Companies of Marines, to Rendezvous at Plimouth, and thence to be imbark'd for the said Service: Appointing them at first to be under the Command of Charles Lord Viscount Wilnot, but soon after Commissioning the Earl of Holland to take them into his Charge, Transport and Conduct them to the Isle of Rbee, and there deliver them to the Duke of Buckingham.

Some Recruits, being about Sixteen hundred English and Irish, arriv'd at Rbee about the end of September; before which time the French had got into the Harbour, and reliev'd the Citadel with Provisions in sight of our Navy and Army. The Governour Toiras affrighted at the fresh Recruits of the English, was in great Trouble how to send Intelligence to the French Court. At last one Sandgrein ventur'd out, and escaping the Guards got safe to the King: And for fear of his Mis-carriage Toiras prevail'd with three of his Garrison to swim ashore to the main Continent: One of the three got safe to Land and deliver'd the Message.

The King of France at this alarm draws down his Army towards Rochel, forming as it were a Blockade as if he design'd the taking of that Town: When the more immediate Intention was by that means to land Forces upon the Island of Rbee, and to put in Provisions into the besieged Citadel of St. Martins. And this Design was effected, several little Vessels getting in with a Supply sufficient to support the Garrison, and to encourage them to a longer Defence.

The Rochellers at this Juncture put forth a Manifesto and declared for England; and the Duke of Rhoan gave Commissions to raise Forces to assist the English, in preservation of the Edict of Peace lately granted and since violated by the King of France. On the other hand, the King makes publick Declaration, that he will on his part observe the said Edict of Peace; and proclaims the Dukes of Rhoan and Sobiez to be Traitors, and offers Reward for the killing of them. The Reformed were very Unfortunate (if not unjust) in these Measures: If they had heartily received the English at their first Arrival, or had continued to reject the joining with them, they might have either way averted their impending Ruin.

But by this time the French had got a great Supply of Shipping from the Spain for their Assistance, which with their own made up above a hundred Sail, superiour to the English Navy, with which however they declined Engaging, and propos'd nothing more than to get suitable Provisions into the Citadel, and tire out the Besiegers. To carry on the same Design, Toiras seem'd to enter into a Treaty of Surrender upon honourable Terms: and prevail'd with the Duke for safe Conduct to a Messenger sent to the King of France for leave to come off with Honour. The Duke consents, on condition that an English Gentleman should go along with the Messenger of Toiras, and be suffered to pass through France into England: And so they went together to the French Court; but there in open breach of Faith the English Gentleman was secur'd, while the Agent of Toiras did his Business effectually.

Toiras carried on the sham-Treaty, and spun out the Time so long, that he gain'd his Point of receiving a considerable Relief of Men, Victuals and Ammunition: And then broke off the Treaty in Derision, ordering his Men upon the Walls to advance their Pikes with Mutton and Fowl upon the Heads of them, to reproach the English with their newly obtained Plenty. And they were further animated with News of the French landing more Forces near the Meadow-Castle (a place also fatally neglected by the English) against whom the Duke sent out a strong Detachment, leaving his Trenches unguarded; upon which Advantage the Enemy fall'd out of the Citadel, and got possession of the deserted Trenches; so as when the English after some reasonable Success had forc'd the new Recruits to take refuge under the Canon of the Citadel, and were returning to their own Camp, they were oblig'd to dispute the recovery of their Trenches, and lost many Lives before they could regain them.

Under these Discouragements, about the middle of October, the Duke held a Council of War, and thought of a Resolution to decamp and reibark for England. He communicated to Sobiez his Reasons, that the Sea-son was declining, his Army diminish'd, his Provisions consum'd, and his Officers advising him to Retire.

But Sobiez earnestly dissuaded the Duke, told him the Relief brought to the Besieged was not considerable; the Earl of Holland's Fleet was coming with Supplies; the Retreat would draw after it the loss of Rochel, and bring an irreparable Dishonour to the King of England, in making so great an Enterprize to so little purpose.

Yet continues the Siege. Upon this the Duke continued the Siege, and soon after resolv'd to Storm the Citadel and Works: Accordingly on Novem. 6. a general Assault was made; but after the loss of many Men, the Fort was found to be Inaccessible.

The Duke returns in glorious. This Repulse, with the News of more Forces of the French continually pour'd into the Island, inclin'd the Duke to raise the Siege and return home. So upon Novem. 8. early in the Morning, the Drums beat, and the Army prepared for a March. Upon their first Motions of Retreat, the Enemy appear'd equal in Foot, and far stronger in Horse, ready to fall upon the English Rear. The Duke several times drew up the Army in their March, and made a stand to offer Battle: But the wary French declin'd an open Fight, having projected a greater Advantage upon less hazard. For when the English in their Retreating had enter'd a narrow Causeway, having on each Hand Salt-Pits and deep Ditches (wherein the English had neglected to raise a Fort at the entry, and another at the end of it near the Bridge, which if done might have secured their Retreat) the French upon this Advantage fell with great Fury upon the English Horse, who press'd their Foot into great disorder, and made the Crowd so tumultuous upon the Bridge that many of the English were drowned in the River, besides many that fell into the Salt-Pits, and many falling by the Sword: Yet the English who had pass'd the Bridge with their true Native Courage rallied again, and drew up to fight their pursuing Enemy, who being afraid of any equal Terms barely repass'd the Bridge, which the English guarded with a select Party all Day, and burnt it down at Night; and without further Attack from the French were put on board the next Day. The English lost about 50 Officers, near 2000 common Soldiers, Prisoners of Note 35, and 44 Colours hung up as Trophies in the Church of Noſtre Dame in Paris. The King of France in a bravery dismiss the Prisoners, as a kind Token to his Sister the Queen of England: And when the Lord Montjoy offered a round Sum for his Ransom, the King told him, his Redemption should be only two couple of English Hounds. If my Lord look'd on this as a Generosity of the King, 'tis certain others took it as a slight upon his Lordship, who had gained more Dishonour in the Retreat than any other Commander; for having his Troops in the Rear charged by the French, he turn'd and broke in upon the English Foot, and made so much Confusion, that Sir Charles Rich is reported to have cry'd out, Kill him! Kill him! though he be my Brother.

Retreat dangerous

Loss of the English.

Apologies of the Duke.

When the Duke had thus shipp'd his Army on November 9. he sent in a civil Promise to the Rochellers, that he would come again to their Relief; and presently after set Sail for England, and met the Earl of Holland as he was setting out from Plimouth, who excused his Delay upon these Pretences; that when he was first ready to go on Board at Plimouth, the Ships with Provision were not come out of Chatham; and when the Provisions were come, time was spent before he could get them to a Rendezvous; and when all things were fix'd for Sailing the Winds proved contrary. The Duke of Buckingham himself had the greater need of Apologies, going out a hated Favourite, and returning an unfortunate General. All he had to plead was, his acting by Advice of a Council of War, and his want of timely Supplies. The King received him with full Grace and Affection, and only told him, He was glad not to find the Loss so great as Sir Sackvil Crow had represented in a Letter to him. But the King's Indulgence made the popular Repentments greater: Tongues and Pens were sharpen'd upon this inglorious Expedition; and the Pulpit it self could not be restrain'd from some Reflections on it: Dr. Moor Prebendary of Winchester, a Man of Wit, took occasion to cite in his Sermon the saying of Augustus, Quintili Vare redde Legiones, which perish'd (says he) by the Historian's Account, propter injuriam & temeritatem Ducis, dwelling on the Word Ducis with such a particular Emphasis, as made most of the Auditors understand the Allusion.

1627. Reflections on him.

The King of France resolv'd now upon a formidable Siege of Rochel, and according to the Advice of Montluc, in the Year 1573. he determined to reduce the Town by Famine. In order to which, he drew an entire Circumvallation toward the Continent, with three Forts and many Redoubts, precluding all hopes of Relief by Land; and by Sea the great Minister Cardinal Riccheu (who had the utmost Zeal for extirpating the Protestants) projected the making of a Mole or vast Barricado cross the Channel, about fourteen hundred Yards in length, leaving a small Space in the middle for the flux and reflux of the Sea, and cutting off all other manner of Conveyance.

Under this sad Prospect the Rochellers sent over the Duke of Sobiez and other Deputies to lay before the King and Council their Petition and Remonstrance, to this effect: "They first thank his Majesty for the great Assistance and Comfort they had receiv'd by the Fleet sent in July last. Then they take notice of Application made to the King of Denmark to propon'd a Peace between the Crowns of England and France: and if such a Treaty do proceed, they humbly pray that his Majesty would insist upon the Capitulation made between the French King and the Reformed Churches, which they on their part had kept inviolable, till they saw the Conditions on the other side entirely broke. They represent that they are now to be shut up by Land and Sea, and must fall into inevitable Ruin without speedy Succour: They therefore beseech his Majesty with all possible Diligence to send them Supplies, and once more to protect them with his Royal Navy, to prevent the blocking up their Harbour, They lastly entreat his Majesty and the Lords of the Council, to have so much pity on their indigent Condition, as to permit a general Collection to be made for them through England and Ireland. Concluding with their Resolutions to hold out a Siege, depending on a reasonable Relief from England, being assured thereof by the Duke of Buckingham at his departure, that he would once more come in Person to their Assistance.

The Rochellers send to the King of Engl.

But alas! the Answer could be only good Words: For indeed the Rochellers were not reduc'd to much greater Necessities by their Prince, than our King was by his People and his exigent Affairs: Universal Discontents and repeated Complaints of Grievance. Many Gentlemen stood committed for refusing to comply with the Demands of Loan, and being brought before the Council had been re-demanded to several Prisons. Sir John Elliot, a Prisoner in the Gate-house, had his Petition for Discharge rejected. Sir Peter Hayman upon refusing Compliance to the Loan, was commanded by the Council to go upon his Majesty's Service in the Palatinate, and did accordingly go. Many of the like Sufferers upon return of a Hibernian Corpus were denied Bail. Archbishop Abbot in much Favour with the People and the moderate Clergy, was confin'd to a remote Country House, and soon after Sequestred from his Office and Jurisdiction, given by Commission to those Bishops whom he reputed his Enemies. Bishop Williams another Popular Prelate suffer'd many Hardships from the Court. The Citizens murmur'd against a visible Decay of Trade, and against an arbitrary Impost upon some Commodities. The Merchants were discourag'd from building more Ships, when so many had been press'd for the King's Service and not paid. The Mariners came in Multitudes to the Court at White-hall clamouring

The King able to assist him.

Great Discontents in City and Country.

1627. for their Pay in great Disorder and Confusion. And the Land Forces were kept in Pay without their former Wages.

Advice of Sir Robert Cotton. In this unhappy state of Affairs, Sir Robert Cotton the judicious Antiquary, was called before the King and Council to deliver his Opinion in point of History and Law, upon the present Juncture of Affairs; which he did to this effect: "That the House of Austria, from the time of Charles V. had been grasping at a universal Monarchy, which had been all along the Honour and Interest of England to oppose: And those English Princes who had most opposed it, had always the Affections and Hearts of their People. That this was the Business of the present Reign, and the Desire of the English Nation. That to carry on this Design the King must have Money; and no way to get Money with Speed, Assurance, and Satisfaction, but by Grant of Parliament. No way to dispose a Parliament to suitable Grants but by removing all Jealousies, especially those relating to Religion and Liberties. And nothing more plausible than for the Duke of Buckingham to be the first Adviser of calling such a Parliament.

Resolution to call a Parliament. Upon these and such-like Considerations represented to the King, a Resolution was taken at the Council Table on January 29. for a Parliament to meet on the 17th of March following. And to prepare the way, Warrants were sent to all Parts to release the Imprison'd Gentry for the Matter of Loan; according to a precedent Order of Council, by which there were set at Liberty 19 Knights, 13 Esquires, and 4 Gentlemen, who had remained under Confinement in several Counties: 3 Knights, 1 Esquire, and 4 Londoners all Prisoners in the Fleet. 2 Knights, 1 Esq; and 3 Londoners in the Gate-House: Some in the Marshalsea; others in the New-Prison, and several in the Custody of Messengers. One Effect of their Liberty was this, that as fast as the Writs came down to the Counties and Boroughs, those Gentlemen who had thus suffer'd were most in the Peoples Eye to be elected Members, as the fittest to assert their Countries Liberties and Rights. The like gracious Orders were issued from the Council to the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of London, to use great moderation in demanding the Loan from those Citizens who deferred a Compliance with it. And among other Arts of softning, Archbishop Abbot, Bishop Williams, and the Lord Bristol, who had lain under peculiar Hardships, had by express Direction their Writs sent to them to sit in the House of Peers this ensuing Parliament.

Some unhappy steps. These ways of Wisdom and Justice could not fail of their natural Effects of Peace and Obedience in the People: But at the same time some unhappy Measures were taken, that serv'd only to renew the late Jealousies and Fears. For on the Day after the Parliament Writs were test'd, the King granted a Privy Seal, on January 30. to Philip Barlemach, a Dutch Merchant, to receive Thirty thousand Pounds from the Treasury, to be returned into the Low Countries to Sir William Balfour and John Dalbier, for the raising of a thousand German Horse, with Arms for Horse and Foot, to be sent into England by February 28. which though perhaps a necessary Preparation for his Majesty's Foreign Engagements; yet People suspected it the design of a Standing Army: And the more so, because the King near the same time granted a Commission to twenty three Lords and others, to raise Money by Impositions in the nature of Excise. And the Levying of Ship-Money upon the several Counties was then under Debate in the Council; as if Methods were already concerted to live without Parliaments, if the approaching Parliament should rise without giving Money.

Parliament meet. The Parliament being assembled on Monday the seventeenth of March, the King began with this

My Lords and Gentlemen,

1627. King's Speech. These Times are for Action: Wherefore for Examples sake, I mean not to spend much Time in Words; expecting accordingly that your (as I hope) good Resolutions will be speedy, not spending Time unnecessarily, or (that I may better say) dangerously. For tedious Consultations at this Conjunction of Time are as hurtful as ill Resolutions.

"I am sure you now expect from me, both to know the Cause of your Meeting and what to Resolve on: Yet, I think, there is none here but knows, that common Danger is the Cause of this Parliament; and that Supply at this time is the chief End of it: So that I need but point to you what to do. I will use but few Perswasions: For if to maintain your own Advices, and as now the Case stands for the following thereof, the true Religion, Laws and Liberties of this State, and the just Defence of our true Friends and Allies be not sufficient, then no Eloquence of Men or Angels will prevail.

"Only let me remember you, that my Duty most of all, and every one of yours according to his Degree, is to seek the Maintenance of this Church and Common-wealth: And certainly there never was a Time, in which this Duty was more necessarily requir'd than now.

"I therefore judging a Parliament to be the Ancient, Speediest and Best Way, in this Time of common Danger, to give such Supply as to secure our selves, and to save our Friends from imminent Ruin have called you together: Every Man now must do according to his Conscience. Wherefore if you (as God forbid) should not do your Duties, in contributing what the State at this time needs, I must in discharge of my Conscience use those other means which God hath put into my Hands, to save that which the Follies of particular Men may otherwise hazard to lose.

"Take not this as a Threatning, for I scorn to threaten any but my Equals, but an Admonition from him, that both out of Nature and Duty hath most Care of your Preservations and Prosperities. And though I thus speak, I hope that your Demeanours at this Time will be such, as shall not only make me approve your former Counsels, but lay on me such Obligations, as shall tie me by way of Thankfulness to meet often with you. For be assur'd, that nothing can be more pleasing to me than to keep a good Correspondence with you.

"I will only add one thing more, and then leave my Lord Keeper to make a short Paraphrase upon the Text I have deliver'd you; which is, To remember a thing, to the end we may forget it.

"You may imagine, that I came here with a doubt of Success of what I desire, remembering the Distractions of the last Meeting. But I assure you, that I shall very easily and gladly forget and forgive what is past, so that you will at this present Time leave the former ways of Distractions, and follow the Counsel lately given you, To maintain the Unity of the Spirit in the Bond of Peace.

Remarks on this Speech. This Speech was thought to have a greater Air of Majesty and Sincerity than of Prudence and Affliction. A Parliament call'd for Supply gives more for Asking than for Demanding. When the King referred himself to their contributing what the State needed, he might have omitted the mention of any other Means put into his Hands. And whatever he himself could save, he might forbear to prejudge the losing by the Follies of particular Men. It is pity any Expressions should have wanted an Apology; not to take them as a Threatning, and the Reason given is somewhat too big: I scorn to threaten any but my Equals.

The

But he reſolved thoſe Courſes into the Law of Neceſſity; and declar'd, that to offer Grievances before a Supply would ſeem a Condition with his Majesty, a wiſe King jealous of his Honour.

No Supply without Redreſs of Grievances. Monday, Mar. 24. Monday, March 31. The Petition of both Houses to his Majesty against Popish Recusants was introduc'd by the Lord-Keeper in a short Speech, and then read by him. After Reading, his Majesty spoke thus.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

sion.

“ I Do very well approve the Method of your Proceedings in this Parliament; A Jove Principium, hoping that the rest of your Consultations will succeed the happier. And I like the Preamble of the Lord-Keeper; otherwise I should have a little suspected, that you had thought me not so careful of Religion as I have, and ever shall be, wherein I am as forward as you can desire. And for the Petition, I answer, first in general, that I like it well, and will use these as well as other Means for the maintenance and propagation of that Religion wherein I have lived, and do resolve to die. But for the Particulars, you shall receive a more full Answer hereafter.

“ And now I will only add this, that as we pray to God to help us, so we must help our selves: For we can have no assurance of his Assistance, if we do lie in Bed and only Pray without using other Means. And therefore I must remember you, that if we do not make Provision speedily, we shall not be able to put one Ship to Sea this Year, Verbum sapienti sat est.

After this the Clerk read the first Article of the said Petition, and the Lord-Keeper read his Majesty's Answer unto the same: And so through the whole Eight Articles. To all which his Majesty gave direct and full Satisfaction, concluding That the Mildness that had been used towards those of the Popish Religion, was upon hope that Foreign Princes thereby might be induced to use Moderation towards their Subjects of the Reformed Religion: but not finding that good Effect which was expected, his Majesty resolveth, unless he shall very speedily see better Fruits, to add a further degree of Severity, to that which in this Petition is desired.

Wednesday, April 2. The Propositions sent from the King to the Commons, March 26. were for some time debated, and Speeches on that occasion by Sir Francis Seymour, Sir Nathaniel Rich, Sir John Elliot, Sir Edward Cook, Sir Thomas Wentworth, Sir Henry Martin, who spoke most with some Reflection on the late Managements of War, and seem'd averse to any new Foreign Expeditions. Then the House proceeded to Grievances, and took into Consideration two other Heads of the Liberty of the Subject in his Person, viz. Confinement and Designation to Foreign Employment; and came to this Resolution.

Thursday, April 3. Mr. Secretary Cook brought this Message to the House of Commons from the King.

Message from the King.

“ HIS Majesty having understood that some Rumours were spread abroad of a sharp Message yesterday delivered by me; and of some Malicious Words that the Duke should speak Yesterday at the Council Board, he commanded me to tell you of the Malice of those false Reports; for that nothing fell from the Duke, or that Board, but what was for the Good of this Assembly. He would have you observe the Malice of those Spirits that thus put in these Jealousies. Had the “ Duke so spoken he should have contradicted himself: For all of Us of the Council can tell, he was the first Mover and Perswader of this Assembly of Parliament to the King: Esteem of the King according to his Actions, and not these Tales. His Majesty takes notice of our purpose, that on Friday we will Resolve upon Supply, which his Majesty graciously accepts of; and that our free Gift, without any condition, should testify to the World that we will be as far from encroaching upon his Prerogative, as he will be to encroach upon our Liberties: And this shall well appear when we present our Grievances to him, and then he shall know that we have no Intention to violate our Liberties; only let us not present them with an Asperity of Words. He counts it his greatest Glory to be a King of Freemen not of Villains. He thought to have deliver'd this Message himself; but that he feared it would take us too much time.

After some Debates on this Message, the House agreed to acknowledge that his Majesty had put a threefold Obligation on them: 1. In giving them Satisfaction. 2. In giving them Assurance (which is a great Law) that he will protect and receive them. 3. In giving them Advice as may besit the Gravity of that Assembly and his own Honour: So they concluded To carry themselves as their Progenitors had before done, who never were mark'd for stepping too far on the King's Prerogative. And then return'd their humble Thanks to his Majesty.

the House.

Friday, April 4. Mr. Secretary Cook deliver'd another Gracious Message from the King to assure them of the Enjoyment of their Rights and Liberties. And after some Debate the House came to this unanimous Resolve, That five Subsidies be given to his Majesty: And Mr. Secretary Cook was appointed to acquaint his Majesty with this Resolution.

Five Subsidies granted.

Monday, April 7. Mr. Secretary Cook reported to the House, “ The King accepted of the Subsidies, and was pleas'd to ask by how many Voices they were granted? I said, but by one; his Majesty ask'd how many were against him? I said, none; for they were voted by one Voice, and one general Consent. His Majesty was much affected therewith, and called the Lords in Council, and there I gave them account what had pass'd. Besides, it gave his Majesty no small content, that although five Subsidies be inferior to his Wants, yet it is the greatest Gift that ever was given in Parliament. And now he sees by this he shall have the Affections of his People, which will be greater to him than all Value. He said, he liked Parliaments at the first, but since (he knew not how) he was grown to a distast of them; but was now where he was before: He loves them, and shall rejoice to meet with his People often.

Well accepted by
the King.

Mr. Secretary further acquainted the House with a Speech of the Duke of Buckingham's, at the Council Table, upon report of the five Subsidies; which was very sweet and popular had it come from any other Person. Sir John Elliot expressed his Dislike, that the Duke's Name should be intermingled with the King's; Contrary to the Custom of our Fathers, and to the Honour of our Times.

Several Members were now appointed to manage a Conference with the Lords, upon the Resolutions of this House relating to the Liberties and Properties of the Subject. Sir Dudley Diggs opened the Conference by way of Introduction. Sir Edward Littleton, of the Inner-Temple, spoke at large upon the Subject of Personal Liberty. Mr. Seldon insisted upon the Precedents in that Matter: And Sir Edward Cook maintained the Argument as to the Rational part of the Law.

Tuesday and Wednesday were spent in the Debate about Billering of Soldiers upon the Subject against Law.

Thursday,

1628. Thursday, April 10. Mr. Secretary Cook deliver'd this Message from the King, "That his Majesty desireth this House not to make any Recesse these Easter Holidays, that the World may take notice how earnest his Majesty and We are for the Publick Affairs in Christendom, which by such a Recesse would receive Interruption.

This Message was displeasing to some Members; Sir Robert Philips said, that in 12 and 18 Jac. upon the like Intimation, the House Resolv'd, it was in their Power to Adjourn or Sit. Sir Edward Cook declared, The King makes a Prorogation, but this House Adjourns it self. The Matter was referred to a Committee, to consider the Power of the House to Adjourn it self; to the end, that it being now yielded unto in Obedience to his Majesty, it might not turn to Prejudice in time to come.

Hereupon a Message was sent to the King, That the House would give all expedition to his Majesty's Service, notwithstanding their purpose of Recesse. His Majesty return'd Answer, That the Motion had proceeded from himself, in regard of his Engagement in the Affairs of Christendom; wished them all Alacrity in their Proceedings, and that there might be no Recesse at all.

Friday, April 11. Secretary Cook mov'd to expedite the Vote of Subsidies, and turn it into an Act; Sir Dudley Diggs seconded the Motion: But Sir Thomas Wentworth propos'd a middle way, which pass'd into a Resolution of the House, That Grievances and Supply go hand and hand.

Saturday, April 12. Mr. Secretary Cook deliver'd another Message from the King to hasten the Supply; wherein this Passage more especially gave Offence, I must with some Grief tell you, that notice is taken as if this House pressed not upon the Abuses of Power only, but upon Power it self; this toucheth the King and Us who are supported by that Power.

He was bid to explain what he meant by the Word Power. He answer'd, I cannot descend to Particulars, or go from that his Majesty gave me warrant or power to deliver.

About two Days after, Mr. Secretary Cook did again quicken the Business of Supply. After some Debates it was Order'd, "That a special Committee of eight Persons shall presently withdraw themselves, and consult together upon some Heads, and upon the Substance of a fair Representation to his Majesty, which the Speaker shall deliver in his Speech to his Majesty on Monday next, and at the same time to deliver the Petition against Billeting of Soldiers.

Easter Monday, April 21. The Commons being admitted to the King's Presence, the Speaker endeavour'd to satisfie his Majesty in the manner of their Proceedings. "For this purpose (says he) they humbly beseech your Majesty to take into your Royal Consideration, that although by ancient Right of Parliament, the constant Custom hath been to take into their Considerations the common Grievances of the Kingdom, before they enter upon the matter of Supply: Yet to make a full Expression of that Zeal and Affection which they bear to your Royal Majesty, they have in this Assembly, contrary to the ordinary Proceedings of Parliament, given your Majesty's Supply Precedency, before the common Grievance of the Subject, how pressing soever; joining with it only those fundamental and vital Liberties of the Kingdom, which give Subsistence and Ability to your Subjects.

Toward the end of his Speech he introduc'd the Petition of the Commons concerning the Billeting of Soldiers.

To the Speech and Petition his Majesty made Reply, "That they should go on speedily with their Businesses without any more Apologies. And as to what concern'd their Petition, he would make Answer in convenient time.

From this Day to Friday, April 25. the House in a grand Committee spent most of their time in Debate about Martial Law; and in holding two Conferences with the Lords, concerning some Resolves in order to a Petition of Right, transmitted from the Lower House to the Upper.

Friday, April 25. In another Conference of the Lords and Commons, the Arch-bishop of Canterbury made a smooth and softning Speech, to introduce some new Propositions from the Upper House, of the same Nature with the Commons Petition of Right, only more respectful and submissive to the King, they were communicated to the Lower House, who were not satisfi'd with them.

Monday, April 28. The King came to the House of Lords, and the Commons being called up, the Lord-Keeper made a Speech to urge a dispatch of the Supply without longer Debate upon the Liberty of the Subject. "His Majesty (says he) has commanded me to let you know, that he holdeth the Statute of Magna Charta, and the other six Statutes infisted upon for the Subjects Liberty to be all in Force; and assures you that he will maintain all his Subjects in the just freedom of their Persons, and safety of their Estates. And that he will govern according to the Laws and Statutes of this Realm. And that ye shall find as much Security in his Majesty's Royal Word and Promise as in the strength of any Law ye can make; so that hereafter ye shall never have cause to complain.

So as the only Question between the King and Parliament was this; Whether his Majesty's Royal Word and Promise, delivered by the Speaker in the King's Name and Presence was a sufficient Security for Redress of Grievances, and future maintenance of Rights and Liberties? or, Whether this verbal Promise ought not rather to be put into a written Law, as a more solemn Assurance to the People; The first was thought most conducing to the King's Honour. The second more agreeable to the Constitution of Parliaments. Mr. Secretary Cook made a Speech for reliance on the King's Word. Sir Benjamin Rudyard mov'd, that the Effect of the King's Promise might be put into a Bill: And it was accordingly order'd, That a Committee of Lawyers do draw up a Bill containing the Substance of Magna Charta, and the other Statutes that do concern the Liberty of the Subject.

Thursday, May 1. While the Bill was preparing, Mr. Secretary Cook deliver'd a Message from his Majesty, "to know whether the House will rest on his Royal Word or no, as declar'd to them by the Lord-Keeper: If they do, he again assures them it shall be Royally perform'd. There was great Silence for some time in the House; and after some Debate it was plain, that no positive Answer could be given to such a Message. Open Denial had seem'd a rude Affront: and express Assent had been (in the apprehension of most) a giving up the Cause of English Parliaments.

Friday, May 2. The House resolv'd themselves into a grand Committee to debate of this Matter. Some few argued for resting on his Majesty's Promise; but the far greater Majority agreed that the Legal Security must be by solemn Act. And Sir Edward Cook propos'd, that to pay all possible deference to his Majesty's Honour, the Bill should not come from the House but from the King. Amidst these Debates another Message was deliver'd from his Majesty, "that Publick Affairs would not endure long Debate or Delay: so as this Session of Parliament must continue no longer than Tuesdays sevennight. But upon Dispatch and good Correspondence, there should be another Session at Michaelmas next, for the perfecting of such things as could not be now done.

Saturday, May 3. After long Debate the Commons agreed upon an Answer to all preceding Messages, to be presented to the King by the Mouth of their Speaker; who humbly beg'd his Majesty's leave to lay bold of his Gracious Offer, which gave them assurance, that if they thought fit to secure themselves in their

1628. Rights and Liberties by way of Bill, he would be graciously pleas'd to give way to it. His Majesty's Answer was delivered by the Lord Keeper, that He expected an Answer by their Actions, and not Delay by Discourses — that they ought to have Confidence in his Royal Word; yet to shew the Sincerity of his Intentions, he is content that a Bill be drawn for a Confirmation of Magna Charta and the other six Statutes insisted upon for the Subjects Liberties, so as it be without Additions, Paraphrases, or Explanations.

Tuesday May 6. Mr. Secretary Cook again press'd the House to rely upon the King's Word. This Importunity was now the more displeasing, because it seem'd to retract the late Intimation of his Majesty's good pleasure for a Bill.

Thursday May 8. the Bill for Petition of Right was finish'd, and a Clause about Martial Law added to it: And at a Conference it was delivered to the Lords for their Concurrence.

Monday May 12. their Lordships desir'd another Conference with the Commons; wherein, the Lord Keeper declar'd the Result of their Debates in the Upper House upon the Petition of Right, that they had propounded some small Matters to be altered, to make it more sweet, and procure it a passable way to his Majesty: and then communicated a Letter from the King directed to the right-trusty and right-well-beloved the Lords Spiritual and Temporal of the Higher House of Parliament. — In which his Majesty renews his Promise of Governing by Law, and puts them in mind that the Session must draw to an end. This Letter was the same day communicated to the House of Commons, who were much dissatisfied, as thinking the Design of it was only to defeat their Petition of Right.

Saturday May 17. the Lords had another Conference with the Commons, wherein the Lord Keeper propos'd this additional Clause to be put in the Conclusion of the said Petition; We present this our humble Petition to your Majesty, with the Care not only of preserving our own Liberties, but with due Regard to leave entire that sovereign Power wherewith your Majesty is trusted for the Protection, Safety, and Happiness of the People.

This Clause was oppos'd in several Speeches by Mr. Alford, Mr. Pimm, Mr. Hackwell, Sir Edward Cook, Sir Tho. Wentworth, Mr. Noy, and Mr. Selden, who said, that Sovereign Power was no Parliamentary Word, and there could be no such thing distinct from the Power of the Law, or a legal Prerogative. To admit of such an additional Salvo for a Regal Power, would be to leave the Subject in worse Condition than before, &c.

After this, several Conferences were held; wherein the Lords offer'd Reasons for their Amendment, and the Commons for not consenting to it. On this latter side, Mr. Glanvil made a remarkable Speech as to the Law-part, and Sir Henry Martin as to the Rational-part of not admitting the Acknowledgment of Sovereign Power in the Person of the King.

Monday May 26. the Lords at another Conference agreed with the Commons in the Petition of Right, with these small Amendments: Means instead of Pretext; not warrantable by the Laws and Statutes of the Realm, to be put instead of Unlawful. To which Amendments the Commons readily agreed, and the Bill was engrossed and read a third time, and order'd to be presented to the King. The Bill of Subsidy read the second time, and committed.

Wednesday May 28. a Conference between Lords and Commons about the Manner of Delivering the Petition of Right. Agreed, that no Addition or Preface be us'd to the King, but that the Petition be presented to his Majesty by Command of the Lords and Commons; and his Majesty be desired, that to the Content of his People, he would be pleas'd to give his gracious Answer in full Parliament.

Monday June 2. the King in Parliament spake thus.

Gentlemen,

1628. I Am come hither to perform my Duty: I think no Man can think it long, since I have not taken so many Days in answering the Petition, as ye spent Weeks in framing it. And I am come hither to shew you, that as well in formal things as in essential, I desire to give you as much Content as in me lies.

Then the Lord Keeper, after commending the King's Favour to them, desired 'em to hear their own Petition read, and his Majesty's gracious Answer.

The whole Tenour of this Petition of Right was in these four Particulars supported by reference to former Acts of Parliament; and by expressing the late Grievances suffered contrary to the said Acts.

They do therefore humbly pray your most excellent Majesty,

I. "That no Man hereafter be compelled to make or yield any Gift, Loan, Benevolence, Tax, or such like Charge, without common Consent by Act of Parliament: And, That none be called to make Answer, or take Oath, or to give Attendance, or be confined, or otherwise molested or disquieted concerning the same, or for Refusal thereof.

II. "That no Free-man, in any manner, be imprisoned or detained without due Process of Law.

III. "That your Majesty will be pleas'd to remove the Soldiers and Mariners, now billeted upon divers Inhabitants against their Wills; and, that your People may not be so burthened in time to come.

IV. "That all Commissions for proceeding by Martial Law may be revoked and annulled; and, that hereafter no Commissions of like nature may issue forth to any Person or Persons whatsoever, to be executed as aforesaid, lest by colour of them any of your Majesty's Subjects be destroyed or put to Death, contrary to the Laws and Franchise of the Land.

The King's Answer was delivered in these Words: King's Answer, The King willeth that Right be done according to the Laws and Customs of the Realm; and, that the Statutes be put in due Execution that his Subjects may have no cause to complain of any Wrong or Oppressions contrary to their just Rights and Liberties: To the Preservation whereof, he holds himself in Conscience as well obliged as of his Prerogative.

If this could have been thought a free and full Answer, it had been a most happy Union of King and Parliament. But the fatal Jealousies were, that the King, in his prefatory Speech, betrayed an unwilling Compliance extorted from him; and, that the final Answer it self was somewhat dubious and reserv'd.

Therefore on the next Day, Tuesday June 3. the King's Answer being read in the House of Commons, occasion'd many Speeches of Complaint, and a Resolution of the House, That an humble Remonstrance be presented to his Majesty, touching the dangers and means of Safety of King and Kingdom.

Thursday June 5. this Message was brought from his Majesty by the Speaker.

"His Majesty wisheth you to remember the Message he last sent you, by which he set a Day for the end of this Session (Wednesday June 11.) and he commands me to let you know, that he will certainly hold that Day prefixed without Alteration: and because that cannot be if the House entertain more business of length, he requires you that ye enter not into, or proceed with, any new business, which may spend greater time, or which may lay any Scandal or Aspersions upon the State-Government or Ministers thereof.

This Message serv'd but to improve the Fears and Jealousies of the Commons; and they were put into a new and greater Ferment, when Sir John Elliot coming to that part of the Message which im-

Let us sit in silence. We are miserable: we know not what to do.* And there was a profound Silence in the House for a while; till Sir Nathaniel Rich said, We must now speak, or for ever hold our Peace, &c. Some objected, that the Speech lately spoken by Sir John Elliot had given Offence (as they feared) to his Majesty. Upon which the House voted, That every Member of the House is free from any undutiful Speech from the beginning of the Parliament to this day. And ordered, That the House be turned into a Committee, to consider what is fit to be done for the Safety of the Kingdom, and that no Man go out upon pain of being sent to the Tower. But the Speaker obtained Leave to go forth. And then the House was resolv'd into a Committee, Mr. Whitby in the Chair. Mr. Wandesford moved, that they should not fear to make a Remonstrance of their Rights: And Sir Edward Cook spoke out, Let us palliate no longer; if we do, God will not prosper us. I think the Duke of Buckingham is the Cause of all our Miseries; and till the King be informed thereof, we shall never go out with Honour, or sit with Honour here. That man is the Grievance of Grievances, &c. The House agreed upon several Heads for a Remonstrance; and while it was moving to be put to the Question, Whether the Duke of Buckingham should not be declared the chief and principal Cause of all those Evils? the Speaker (who after he had Leave to go forth, went privately to the King) brought this Message, That his Majesty commands for the present they adjourn the House till to morrow morning, and that all Committees cease in the mean time. And the House was accordingly adjourn'd. The Lord Keeper carried the like Command to the Upper House, where it was likewise obey'd.

Friday June 6. the Speaker brought a more kind Message from the King, to declare his Majesty's Intentions not to bar them from what hath been their Right, but only to avoid all Scandals on his Council and Actions past. After some Debate, the Commons sent a Message to the Lords, that they would join in a humble Request to the King, that a clear and satisfactory Answer be given by his Majesty, in full Parliament, to the Petition of Right. To which the Lords agreed.

Saturday June 7. the King came to the House; and the Commons being sent for, the Lord Keeper presented the Request of both Houses, and said,

May it please your most excellent Majesty,
THE Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons in Parliament assembled, taking into Consideration, that the good Intelligence between your Majesty and your People doth much depend upon your Majesty's Answer unto their Petition of Right formerly presented, with unanimous Consent do now become most humble Suitors unto your Majesty, that you would be pleased to give a clear and satisfactory Answer thereunto in full Parliament.

The King graciously replied,
 "The Answer I have already given you, was made with so good Deliberation, and approved by the Judgments of so many wise Men, that I could not have imagined but it should have given you full satisfaction. But to avoid all ambiguous Interpretations, and to shew you there is no Doubtfulness in my Meaning, I am willing to pleasure you as well in Words as in Substance. Read your Petition, and you shall have an Answer that I am sure will please you.

The Petition was read, and Answer given, Soit droit fait come il est desire.

The King proceeded, "This I am sure is full, yet no more than I granted you in my first Answer; for the Meaning of that was, to confirm your Liberties: knowing, according to your own Protestation, that ye neither mean nor can hurt my Prerogative. And I assure you, my Maxim is, That the Peoples Liberties strengthen the King's Prerogative, and the King's Prerogative is to defend the People's Liberties. You see how ready I have shewed my self to satisfy your Demands; so that I have done my part: Wherefore if this Parliament have not a happy Conclusion, the Sin is yours; I am free from it.

Whereupon the Commons return'd to their House in great Joy, and resolv'd so to proceed, as to express their Thankfulness to his Majesty. They order'd, that the Grand Committees for Religion, Trade, Grievances, and Courts of Justice, should sit no longer, and the House should proceed only in consideration of Grievances of most moment. Bells ringing and Bonfires were through the whole City, and all true Hearts had a share in the publick Joy.

If the Commons at this Juncture could have withdrawn their intended Remonstrance, or the King could have look'd upon it as no Diminution of his Honour; then the Accommodation had been perfect and lasting.

But the Commons thought their Rights and Liberties not sufficiently asserted, without complaining of the several Instances wherein they apprehended a manifest breach and Violation of them. So they proceeded to draw up the Particulars of greatest moment; and in conclusion,

Friday June 13. it was resolv'd upon the Question, That the excessive Power of the Duke of Buckingham is the Cause of the Evils and Dangers to the King and Kingdom. And ordered, That this be added to the Remonstrance.

Tuesday June 17. the Remonstrance was presented to the King in the Banqueting-house by the Speaker, attended by the whole House. The Substance of it was in these six Branches:

I. "The Danger of Innovation and Alteration in Religion. This occasioned, 1. By the great Esteem and Favours many Professors of the Romish Religion receive at Court. 2. Their publick Resort to Mass at Denmark-house, contrary to his Majesty's Answer to the Parliament's Petition at Oxford. 3. Letters and Warrants to stop Proceedings against them. Lastly, The daily Growth of the Arminian Faction.

II. "The Danger of Innovation and Alteration in Government, occasioned by the Billeting of Soldiers, by the Commission for procuring one thousand German Horse and Riders, as for the Defence of the Kingdom; and by a standing Commission granted to the Duke to be General at Land in times of Peace.

III. "Disasters in the late Publick Designs; as, the Expedition to the Isle of Rhee, and that lately to Rebel, wherein the English have purchased their Dishonour with the Waste of a Million of Treasure.

IV. "The Want of Ammunition, occasioned by the late selling away of thirty six Last of Powder.

V. "The Decay of Trade by the Loss of three hundred Ships taken by the Dunkirkers and Pirates within these three last Years.

VI. "The not guarding the narrow Seas, whereby his Majesty hath almost lost the Regality. "Of all which Evils and Dangers, the principal Cause is the Duke of Buckingham's excessive Power, and Abuse of that Power. And therefore they humbly submit it to his Majesty's Wisdom, Whether it can be safe for himself, or his Kingdom, that so great Power both by Sea and Land, as rests in him, should be trusted in the Hands of any one Subject whatsoever.

The Speaker enjoins Silence.

Substance of it.

1628. The King having heard out the Remonstrance with some Indignation, told the Commons, That he little expected such a Remonstrance, after he had passed the Petition of Right: However, as for their Grievances, he would consider of them as they should deserve.

It is said, that soon after the King order'd a formal Answer to be drawn up in Writing to the said Remonstrance, denying or excusing the several Charges in it: And in the mean time he sent a Message by Sir Humphry May, that he meant to end the Session on the 26th of June. And that he might seem ready to redress every just Grievance, he order'd the Lord-Keeper to report in the Upper-House that his Majesty had cancell'd the Commission of Excise, and the Warrant for putting the Seal thereto. And a Message was sent to the Commons to shew them the said cancell'd Commission and Warrant.

The Commons fell to preparing a Bill for Tonnage and Poundage to the King. In debating there upon it was Order'd, that a Committee be appointed to draw a Remonstrance to his Majesty of the Peoples Rights, and of the undue taking of Tonnage and Poundage, and Impositions without Act of Parliament, and to shew Reasons why the House cannot in so short a time prepare that Bill.

In the said Remonstrance they declare these two things. 1. "That there ought not any Imposition to be laid upon the Goods of Merchants exported or imported, without common consent by Act of Parliament, which is the Right and Inheritance of your Subjects; founded not only upon the most Ancient and Original Constitution of this Kingdom, but often confirm'd and declar'd in divers Statute Laws. 2. That the receiving of Tonnage and Poundage, and other Impositions not granted by Parliament, is a breach of the Fundamental Liberties of this Kingdom, and contrary to your Majesty's Royal Answer to our late Petition of Right. And therefore they humbly beseech his Majesty to forbear any further receiving of the same, and not to take it in ill part from those of his loving Subjects, who should refuse to make payment of any such Charges without Warrant of Law demanded.

When the King heard of this second Remonstrance, he was resolv'd to prevent the delivery of it. And therefore on Thursday, June 26. While the Remonstrance being engross'd was a reading in the House, the King sent for the Speaker and the whole House, and shew'd his Resentments in the following Speech.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

It may seem strange that I came so suddenly to end this Session, before I give my Assent to the Bills. I will tell you the Cause, tho' I must avow, that I owe the account of my Actions to God alone.

It is known to every one, that a while ago the House of Commons gave me a Remonstrance, how acceptable every Man may judge; and for the Merit of it, I will not call that in Question; for I am sure no wise Man can justify it.

Now since I am truly inform'd, that a second Remonstrance is preparing for me, to take away the Profit of my Tonnage and Poundage, one of the chiefest Maintenances of my Crown, by alleging, I have given away my Right thereto by my Answer to your Petition. This is so prejudicial to me, that I am forc'd to end this Session some few Hours before I meant, being not willing to receive any more Remonstrances; to which I must give a harsh Answer.

And since I see that even the House of Commons begins already to make false Constructions of what I granted in your Petition, lest it be worse interpreted in the Country, I will now make a Declaration concerning the true Intent thereof.

1628. "The Profession of both Houses in the time of hammering this Petition was no ways to trench upon my Prerogative; saying, they had neither Intention or Power to hurt it. Therefore it must needs be conceiv'd, that I have granted no new, but only confirm'd the ancient Liberties of my Subjects: Yet to shew the clearness of my Intentions, that I neither Repent nor mean to Recede from any thing I have promised you, I do here declare my self, that those things which have been done (whereby many have had some Cause to expect the Liberties of the Subjects to be trench'd upon, which indeed was the first and true Ground of the Petition) shall not hereafter be drawn in to Example for your Prejudice: And from time to time, in the Word of a King, ye shall not have the like cause to complain.

"But as for Tonnage and Poundage, it is a thing I cannot want; and was never intended by you to Ask, nor meant by me I am sure to Grant.

"To Conclude; I command you all that are here to take notice of what I have spoken at this time to be the true Intent and Meaning of what I granted you in your Petition: But especially you my Lords the Judges; for to you only, under me, belongs the Interpretation of Laws: For none of the Houses of Parliament, either joint or separate (what new Doctrine soever may be rais'd) have any Power either to make or declare a Law without my Consent.

The King had come to the House so unexpectedly A surprize that the Lords were not in their Robes, and the Commons had given no Order for the Speaker to deliver the Bill of Subsidies, which had not been yet return'd (as usually) from the Upper-House. However, the Bill was deliver'd to the Speaker, standing at the Bar of the Lords; who in a short Speech declar'd it to be the greatest Gift that ever was given to any Prince in so short a time. And then the Bill was pass'd with these that follow: 1. An Act for the reformation of Abuses committed on the Lord's Day, called Sunday. 2. The Petition exhibited to his Majesty concerning divers Rights and Privileges of the Subject. 3. An Act for suppressing of all unlicensed Ale-houses. 4. An Act to restrain the sending over any to be Popishly bred beyond the Seas. 5. An Act for five entire Subsidies granted by the Clergy. 6. An Act for the Continuance and Repeal of divers Statutes; with several Private Acts. As to the Bill prepar'd for Explanation of the Statute 3 Jac. about Leases of Recusants Lands, the King said, "That in this short Time he had not sufficient leisure to consider thereof; but though the Title were fair, he found many Errors therein; and if at the next Meeting they would amend those Errors it should pass.

After which, the Lord-Keeper express'd it to be his Majesty's Pleasure, that this Session now end, and that the Parliament be prorogued till the twentieth of October next.

Thus broke up that Parliament, wherein were some of the greatest mutual Obligations between King and People, and yet unhappily no Satisfaction on either side. The King had yielded to the largest Petition of Rights and Liberties, and yet left the People Jealous. The People had granted a Supply beyond Example, and yet left the King uneasy: In short, the generality went home in Discontent. Some at the being interrupted in a Bill of Tonnage and Poundage, which upon foundation of the Subject's Right, should have settled and advanc'd the King's Revenue. Some at the King's Omission of Thanks for the Bill of Subsidy, and taking not the least notice of it. Others at the Speech of Prorogation, somewhat severe and upbraiding: And many at the Prorogation it self, when they desir'd rather a Recess by joint Adjournment, that depending Matters might be kept in the same Condition to another Meeting.

Parliament prorogued to Oct. 20.

General Discontents.

General Discontents.

1628. Having thus without interruption related the Affairs of Parliament, we must now return to other matters of State that interven'd.

A Fleet sent to Rochel.

The Rochellers, block'd up by the King of France, had some dependence on the Word of the Duke of Buckingham, who had promised to come again to their Relief, and had some expectation from the King and Council to whom they had made a very earnest Application. To this purpose a Fleet of about 50 Ships was early fitted out, under the Command of the Earl of Denbigh; who for want of Mariners, or for the Service of a Descent, took in two thousand two hundred able Land-Men; and setting sail from Plimouth on April 17. came to Anchor at Charlebois in the Road of Rochel on May 1. He found twenty Sail of the King of France's Ships riding before the Harbour; and being much superiour in Number and Strength, he sent Advice into the Town, that he would sink the French Ships as soon as the Wind came West, and made a higher Flood. About May 8. the Wind and Tide serv'd accordingly, and the Rochellers expected and sollicit'd for that season of Deliverance. But the Earl, without attempting the opportunity, weigh'd Anchor and sail'd away, suffering four of the French Ships to pursue as it were the English Fleet, that arriv'd at Plymouth on May 26. This other inglorious Expedition was a greater discouragement to the poor Rochellers; and increas'd the Fears and Jealousies of a Popish Interest at home. Many concluded the whole Design was but a Feint, and meant rather by the Court Party to reduce Rochel than relieve it. Some clamour'd against the Earl of Denbigh, and said nothing better could be expected from his Conduct, who was Brother-in-law to the Duke of Buckingham. Others charg'd it as a Plot in one Clark a Bed-Chamber Man, who had been a chief Commissioner in both the Expeditions, and being a reputed Papist, was suppos'd to be employ'd for an Instrument of Miscarriage.

This Expedition inglorious.

Complaints of it.

One La Bruin a French Man, Captain in the English Fleet, gave in Depositions before the Mayor of Plimouth on May 16. which argu'd Treachery or apparent Cowardice in the management of this late Expedition. This Account was certified by the Mayor of Plymouth to the Burgesses of that Town in Parliament; by whom it was communicated to the Council Table, from whence a Letter was directed to the Duke of Buckingham, as Lord High Admiral, dated the 30th of May 1628. To signify his Majesty's pleasure, that the Earl of Denbigh should return back to relieve the Town of Rochel with the Fleet under his charge, with other Ships prepared at Portsmouth and Plimouth. But for all this Order of Council, no such return was made, nor any enquiry into the obstruction of it.

Sir Charles Morgan surrenders Stoadt.

In the same Month of May the English Garrison of Stoadt, about twenty Miles from Hamborough on the other side the Elbe, was surrender'd to the Imperialists upon honourable Terms, by the Commander Sir Charles Morgan, who had defended the Place with the utmost Bravery and Resolution.

Dr. Lamb kill'd by the Mobb.

June 13. Dr. Lamb, a Creature of the Duke's, was set upon in the Streets of London by the Rabble, and so roughly beat, that he died of his Bruises next Morning in the Compter. Some of the Mobb in their Fury were heard to say, that were his Master the Duke there, they would give him as much.

A Terror to the Duke.

This made the Duke more apprehensive of the popular Rage against him; and turn'd that into an Omen which had possibly been otherwise an Accident, viz. on the same Day that Lamb was so assaulted, the Duke's Picture fell down in the High Commission Chamber at Lambeth; though if Lamb had bore no relation to the Duke, he was of himself enough provoking to the Multitude. For he had got the common Reputation of a Conjuror, and had been publickly arraign'd for practising Sorcery and heliish Arts upon the Body of the Lord Windsor. He was further infamous for Vice and Lewdness, having been indicted and try'd for a Rape at the King's Bench Bar, where he insisted upon his Innocence in such an impudent manner, that his very Language implied the Fact, though he was found not Guilty. This riotous Murther was the unhappy cause of a wider Breach between the Court and City: For on Monday after, the Lord Mayor and Aldermen were sent for to appear at the Council Table and were there examined, and threatn'd that they should lose their Charter if they did not discover and deliver up the principal Agents in the late Up-roar; and had in conclusion a Fine of 6000 l. impos'd upon them.

July 15. The Earl of Marlborough was remov'd from the Treasury, as a Man too cautious in advancing the King's Revenue, and Sir Richard Weston Chancellor of the Exchequer, was made Lord Treasurer, as a Minister acute and active, and fit for the Necessities of raising Money; Chief Baron Walter for the like reason displac'd. Sir Tho. Wentworth, a Leader of the Country Party in the House of Commons, was near the same time honour'd with a Barony, and brought over to the Court. Bishop Laud was translated to the See of London, Mr. Mountague and Dr. Mumwing were pardon'd and preferred; these and some other of the like Promotions gave more and more disgust to the People, and confirm'd them in the Prejudice that the Court was only a governing Party.

Sir Rich: Weston made Lt. Treasurer.

Other Changes.

A third Fleet was in the mean time preparing for the Relief of Rochel, that by a close Siege was now reduc'd to the last Extremities. The Duke of Buckingham chose to command in Person, and to that end came to Portsmouth, where on August 23. having been at Breakfast with Soubiez and the General Officers, John Felton (late Lieutenant in a Regiment of Foot under Sir John Ramsay) plac'd himself in an Entry through which the Duke was to pass, who walking along with Sir Thomas Frier, and inclining his Ear to him in the posture of Attention, Felton with a back blow stabb'd him on the left-side into the very Heart, leaving the Knife in his Body; which the Duke pulled out with his own Hand, and then fell down, crying only, The Villain hath kill'd me. Felton slipt away, and might have gone off undiscover'd, but that either his Conscience or his Insolence betray'd him. For while the general Rumour was, that the Murderer must be a French Man, and some began to suspect Sebiez as a Party in it, Felton stept out and said, I am the Man who did the Deed; let no Man suffer that is Innocent. Upon which he was apprehended, and sent Prisoner to London. When examin'd before the Privy-Council, he was so obstinately silent, that he was threatned with the Rack; but the Question being put to the Judges, they declar'd it to be no legal way. He made no other Confession than what he had (before the commission of the Fact) writ in a Paper stich'd in the lining of his Hat; wherein he declar'd the only Motive "to be the late Remonstrance of the Commons against the Duke; and that he could not sacrifice his Life in a nobler Cause, than by delivering his Country from so great an Enemy. Yet others believ'd it was rather from a private and personal Revenge; because he had been twice repuls'd upon his application for a Captain's Commission, and had long waited for his Arrears of Pay.

A third Fleet preparing for Rochel. To be commanded by the Duke.

Who is stabb'd by Felton.

An Impudent Villain.

His Motive.

The King within four Miles of Portsmouth was on his Knees in Devotion when the News was brought him, and did not rise up, nor betray the least interruption, till his Prayers were over: And then with great evenness of Mind, he only commanded that the Murderer should be secur'd; and immediately gave order that the Fleet should hasten out. But to shew his Affection to the Duke's Memory, he gave command for a magnificent Funeral, till the thrifty Treasurer diverted the Project by telling his Majesty, Such Pomp would but prove but an Hous show; and it would be more for his Glory to erect him a stately Monument that might be done for half the cost. Upon which his Body was privately interr'd on September 27.

King bears it with great presence of Mind.

1628. ber 25. And when the King afterwards talk'd of a costly Monument, the Treasurer is said to have used this other Evasion: Sir, I am loth to tell your Majesty what the World will say both here and abroad, if you should raise a Monument for the Duke before you erect one for your Father.

Character of the Duke.

Thus fell the Duke in the Age of perfection, thirty six; a Gentleman born and built for a Courtier; of an Air and Port great and sweet, with all the Nature and all the Art of Address: Of Parts sufficient to cover the want of Learning; and of a Seriousness that serv'd much to disguise his neglect of Religion.

The Fleet fail'd.

The Fleet, under the Command of the Earl of Lindsey, sail'd from Portsmouth Sept. 8. but very defective in their Stores of Victuals and Tackle, as Information was after given to the King and Council. When they came before Rochel, they found no French Navy to oppose them, only the immense Barricado cross the Entry of the Port was now compleatly finish'd: Many brave Attempts were made to break through, but all in vain. So that the Rochellers in distress and despair implor'd the King's Mercy, and surrender'd October 18. And the English Fleet looking on, were now at liberty to return.

Rochel surrender'd.

After the Loss of this Town, the French Protestants in all other Parts were so severely treated, that they could not but resolve upon some last Efforts of Self-preservation; and sent again to the King of England to implore Assistance, with this patheticall Expression, that what they now wrote was with their Tears and with their Blood. But there was a Peace depending, and soon after concluded between the two Crowns; and the French Protestants were glad to submit to any Terms that gave them their freedom in Religion.

Last effort of the Fr. Protestants.

The Parliament by last Prorogation appointed to meet on October 20. was by Proclamation issued October 1. further prorogu'd to the 20th of January following.

Parliament further prorogued.

The Merchants and Traders were in great disturbances about the payment of Tonnage and Poundage: Upon the late Declaration of the Commons, and a concurrent Opinion of the Lawyers, many had declined, and even refused to pay the Impositions. For this contempt they were summon'd before the Council Table, and committed to the Fleet and Mazaltes, and not set at Liberty without entering into Bond for Payment. Mr. Chambers, committed on this account, brought his Habeas Corpus October 22. and was bail'd by Order of the Court. The Lords of the Council were much dissatisfied at it, and sent for the Judges to the Lord-Keeper's House, where they justified their Proceeding, and prov'd the Bailing of the Prisoner to be according to Law and Justice. Mr. Jassal, for a like refusal, had an Information prefer'd against him in the Exchequer in Michaemas Term; to which he pleaded Magna Charta, and the Statute De Tallagio non concedendo, and that the Imposition was illegal, because without assent of Parliament. The Attorney-General demurr'd, and Mr. Vassal join'd in the Demur; the Barons in Exchequer denied to hear Vassal's Council, and said it was a Case already adjudg'd, and a Right of which the King was in Possession; and Imprison'd Vassal as standing in contempt of the Court. About the same time Mr. Chambers had other Goods and Merchandise seiz'd for not paying Custom; and upon the detaining of them he sued out a Writ of Replevin. But the Barons of the Exchequer order'd an Injunction to the Sheriffs, not to execute the Writ; and sent a Precept to the Officers of the Custom, to detain double Value of the Sums by them demand'd for Duties to his Majesty, and to restore the residue. The like Proceedings were taken against Mr. John Rolls, a Parliament Man, and some other Merchants, to the unhappy Discouragement of Trade, and the general Grievance of the City of London.

Disputes upon Tonnage and Poundage.

And yet, to soften the Minds of the Subject before the Meeting of Parliament, some Popular things were wisely done. As to the Horse Levied in Germany, which People suspected was for a standing Force in England, the Privy Council wrote to Dalmeier to dispose them into the Service of the King of Sweden and the Duke of Savoy, his Majesty's Allies. Archbishop Abbot, the more Popular for being in Disgrace at Court, was sent for to White-hall, and from his Barge received by the Archbishop of York and Earl of Dorset, and by them solemnly introduced to the King, who gave him his Hand with a particular Countenance of Favour, and bid him not fail the Council-Table twice a Week. Mountague's Appello Casarem was call'd in by Proclamation; and other pleasing Orders given against Poperie and Arminianism, the two Terrors of the Common People.

1628. The King did some Popular things.

Tuesday Jan. 20. the Parliament met; and the first Debate of the Commons was on the Petition of Right which had been Printed with some Additions and Comments, and the Copies first Printed without such Additions had been by Order of the King suppress'd. They sent for Norton the King's Printer, who own'd the thing done by special Warrant.

Fall upon Grievances.

The Commons fell next upon Violation of the Subjects Liberty and Property since the End of last Session, by the Levies of Tonnage and Poundage. This Matter was referred to a Committee; but while the Debate was warm upon it, the King sent a Message to the House, and willed them to desist from farther Debate of those matters concerning Tonnage and Poundage till the next day in the Afternoon, at which time he would speak with them in the Banqueting House at White-hall.

The King sends a Message.

Here the King spoke thus:

My Lords and Gentlemen,

THE Care I have to remove all Obstacles that may hinder the good Correspondency between Me and this Parliament, is the Cause I have called you together at this time; the particular Occasion being a Complaint made in the Lower House. And for you, my Lords, I am glad to take this and all other Occasions, whereby you may clearly understand both my Words and Actions: For as you are nearest in Degree, so you are the fittest Witnesses unto Kings.

The Complaint I speak of is for staying Mens Goods that deny'd Tonnage and Poundage. This may have an easie and short Conclusion, if my Words and Actions be rightly understood. For by passing the Bill as my Ancestors have had it, my by-past Actions will be included, and my future Proceedings authorized; which certainly would not have been stuck at, if Men had not imagin'd that I had taken these Duties as appertaining to my Hereditary Prerogative; in which they are much deceiv'd. For it ever was, and still is my meaning, by the Gift of my People to enjoy it: and my Intention in my Speech at the ending of the last Session concerning this Point, was not to challenge Tonnage and Poundage as of Right, but de Bene esse, shewing you the Necessity not the Right by which I was to take it, until you had granted it to me; assuring my self according to your general Professions, you wanted Time not Will to give it to me.

Wherefore now, having opportunity, I expect that without loss of Time you make good your Professions, and so by passing of a Bill put an end to all the Questions arising from this Subject; especially since I have clear'd the only Scruple that can trouble you in this Business.

To Conclude, Let us not be jealous of one anothers Actions: For if I had been easilly mov'd at every Occasion, the Order you made on Wednesday last might have made me startle; there being some show to suspect, that you had given your selves the liberty to be the Inquisitors after Complaints (the Words of your Order being some-

" Actions, I find you only here Complainers, not " seeking Complaints: For I am certain you neither " pretend nor desire the Liberty to be Inquisitors of " Men's Actions, before particular Complaint be " made.

" 'This I have spoken, to shew you how slow I " am to believe harshly of your Proceedings; like-

" Confidence one towards another, it may end in a " perfect good Understanding between us; which

The Speech
wife and tender.

It is certain, this Speech was as Prudent and Tender as faithful Subjects could possibly desire from their lawful King. But it is in Jealousies between Prince and People, as in those between a married Pair; where if one side has given grounds of Suspicion to the other, it is hard for the strictest Caution and Conduct, to remove the unhappy Doubts and Fears.

King.

Monday, January 26. Mr. Secretary Cook brought a Message from the King, That the Bill for Tonnage and Poundage might be speedily taken into Consideration, and that no time might be lost. But now a Popular Fancy rose, that the Bill must not be impos'd upon them; but must proceed naturally from the Motions of their own House; that for that Reason it was most proper to suspend the Bill for some time, while they proceeded upon other Grievances; and in the first place upon those relating to Religion.

Grievance
gion.

Tuesday January 27. A Report was made to the House, from the Committee for Religion, that a Remonstrance upon that Subject, drawn up in last Session, had been commanded away by the King; and for want of it the Committee could not now proceed. Hereupon Mr. Secretary Cook brought a Message from his Majesty: That understanding the Remonstrance concerning Religion was called for, he was pleas'd (to take away all Question) to deliver it back to them; hoping, nevertheless, that they will proceed with the Bill for Tonnage and Poundage, and give precedency to that Business. But this Message being refer'd to a Committee, they resolv'd, " That the Consideration of Religion should take place before the Bill for Tonnage and Poundage.

Another
from the King.

Wednesday January 28. Secretary Cook brought another Message from the King, That if the House would first dispatch the Bill of Tonnage and Poundage, they should not be thereby interrupted in Matters of Religion, provided they did not intrench upon that which did not belong to them. Sir Thomas Edwards pres'd a Compliance with this Message, and urg'd them to consider how dangerous it was to alienate his Majesty's Heart from Parliaments. But after a Reply by Mr. Corriton, the House Resolv'd to send an Answer to the King, That these Messages are inconvenient, and breed Debates and loss of Time; and did farther Resolve, That Tonnage and Poundage, arising naturally from this House, they would in fit time take such a course therein, as they hoped would be to his Majesty's satisfaction and Honour: And for the present, they would proceed in matters of Religion.

The Commons Answer.

Upon this Sir John Elliot spoke freely against the King's late Declaration prefix'd to the 39 Articles, and against that part especially, where it is said, that if there be any difference in Opinion, concerning the reasonable Interpretation of the said Articles, the Bishops and Clergy in Convocation have Power to settle those Disputes. By which Power, he said, Popery and Arminianism might be introduc'd. After some Debate upon such a Power of determining the sense of the 39 Articles, the Commons entred into a Protestation; which shall be given in the following Accounts of Religion.

Sir John Elliot's
Speech.

Friday January 30. Both Houses presented an Address to the King, to appoint a Day of Fasting and Prayer, in consideration of the Miseries of the Reformed Churches abroad, &c. The King answer'd in some disgust, that Fighting would do them more good than Fasting; that the custom of Fasting every Session was but lately begun, and he was not fully satisfied with the necessity of it at this time: However, he would now grant their Request, with this note, that it should not be brought into precedent for frequent Fasts, except on great Occasions.

Soon after the House of Commons presented a Declaration to the King, in answer to his Messages, for expediting the Bill of Tonnage and Poundage; to Represent that they could not proceed therein without giving a Precedency to Religion, which they apprehended to be in great danger from Popery and Arminianism. The King answer'd, that the Bill of Tonnage and Poundage was first regularly offer'd, and he must be still instant with them, that they proceed in it with diligence; and as for the cause of delaying Religion, there is none of them should have a greater Care of it than himself.

Declaration of the

Wednesday February 4. The House of Commons debated of the King's Declaration to prohibit Disputes about Religion; concluding, that the main End thereof was to suppress the Puritan Party, and give liberty to the contrary Side; and they conceiv'd that Bishop Laud and Bishop Mountague had advis'd the King to that Declaration.

Declarati-
on.

Tuesday February 10. Amidst the Debates upon Religion, the Ware-House of Mr. Rells, Merchant and sitting Member, was lock'd up by a Pursuivant, and he himself call'd forth and serv'd with a Sub-pena. This much inflam'd the House, though Sir Humphry May, a Privy-Counsellor declar'd, that it did not proceed from King or Council; and the Attorney-General wrote to Mr. Rells to excuse the thing as a Mistake.

Thursday February 12. The House was in a Committee upon Tonnage and Poundage, and admitted the Complaints of several Merchants, that their Goods were seiz'd, and Informations in the Star-Chamber prefer'd against them. Upon which the House Order'd, that a Message should be sent to the Barons of the Exchequer, to make void their Injunctions and Orders about the stopping of Merchants Goods.

Soon after, the Lord Treasurer and Barons return'd an Answer, " that in their said Orders and Injunctions they did not determine, nor any way touch upon the Right of Tonnage and Poundage. This Answer was ill resent'd by the House, as a justification of the Proceedings in the Exchequer; into which they resolve farther to enquire.

The Barons Answer.

The Pardons granted to Mr. Mountague, Dr. Mowbray, Dr. Sibthorp, and Mr. Cofens, gave a new Offence to the House, who refer'd the Matter to a Committee, and they Reported some indirect Dealings, as well as dangerous Designs in it.

The Bookfellers and Printers in London, by Petition to the House, complain'd of the Restraint of Books written against Popery and Arminianism, and the contrary allow'd by the only means of the Bishop of London.

An Information in Star-Chamber preferred against Mr. Chambers for refusing to pay Tonnage while his Petition of Relief was lodg'd in Parliament, rais'd another Ferment in the House; who on that occasion committed to the Tower Sir William Alton Sheriff of London.

Friday Feb. 13. the House debated of the Increase of Popery, and made Enquiry concerning the ten Priests arraign'd at the King's-Bench; of which one only was condemn'd, and he repriv'd, and the other nine releas'd. Mr. Secretary Cook and the Attorney General being examin'd upon this matter, resolv'd the Proceeding into Warrants granted by the King's Mercy.

1628. Thursday Feb. 19. several Officers of the Custom were examin'd, and charg'd with Breach of Privilege in seizing the Goods of Mr. Rolls, a Parliament-man. But while the House was debating of Reparation and Punishment, the King sent a Message on Feb. 22. that what the Customers did was by his own direct Order and Command at the Council-Board. Upon which a Committee resolv'd, that Mr. Rolls ought to have had Privilege of Person and Goods: but the Command of the King is so great, that they leave it to the House. Upon this followed many warm Speeches, and long Debates, and at last the Question ordered to be put, Whether the seizing of Mr. Rolls's Goods was not a breach of Privilege? The Speaker refused to put the Question, and said, He was otherwise commanded by the King. Upon which the House, in some heat, Adjourn'd to Wednesday next: At which time, both Houses were Adjourn'd by his Majesty's Command to Monday March 2.

On that Day the Commons being met, urged the Speaker to put the former Question, who said, I have a Command from the King to Adjourn till Mar. 10. and put no Question: And so offering to leave the Chair, he was held down in it by some Members till the ensuing Proteftations were publish'd.

I. "Whosoever shall bring in Innovation of Religion, or by Favour or Countenance seek to extend or introduce Popery or Arminianism, or other Opinion disagreeing from the Truth, and Orthodox Church, shall be reputed a capital Enemy to this Kingdom and Commonwealth.

II. "Whosoever shall counsel or advise the taking and levying of the Subsidies of Tonnage and Poundage, not being granted by Parliament, or shall be an Actor or Instrument therein, shall be likewise reputed an Innovator in the Government, and a capital Enemy to the Kingdom and Commonwealth.

III. "If any Merchant or Person whatsoever shall voluntarily yield or pay the said Subsidies of Tonnage and Poundage, not being granted by Parliament, he shall likewise be reputed a Betrayer of the Liberties of England, and an Enemy to the same.

The King being inform'd of this Disorder, sent for the Serjeant of the House; but the Door was lock'd upon him, and he could not attend his Majesty. Then the King sent the Gentleman Usher from the Lord's House; but he was refused Admittance till the said Votes were read: and then, in great confusion, the House was Adjourn'd to the 10th of March.

March 2. several leading Members were by Warrant summon'd to appear before the Council on the next Day: when Mr. Holles, Sir John Elliot, Mr. Corvinton, and Mr. Valentine appearing, and refusing to answer out of Parliament for what was said and done in Parliament, were committed close Prisoners to the Tower; and a Proclamation for apprehending Mr. Long and Mr. Stroud.

Tuesday March 10. His Majesty in the Throne with Crown and Robes, the Lords in their Robes, the Commons not sent for, tho' several appearing below the Bar; the King spoke thus:

My Lords,

"I Never came here upon so unpleasant an Occasion, it being the Dissolution of a Parliament. Therefore Men may have some cause to wonder why I should not rather chuse to do this by Commission, it being a general Maxim of Kings, to leave harsh Commands to their Ministers, themselves only executing pleasing things. Yet considering that Justice as well consists in Reward and Praise of Virtue, as Punishing of Vice; I thought it necessary to come here to day, and to declare to you and all the World, that it was merely the undutiful and seditious Carriage in the Lower House, that hath made the Dissolution of this Parliament. And you, my Lords, are so far from 1628. "being any Causes of it, that I take as much comfort in your dutiful Demeanour, as I am justly distast'd with their Proceedings. Yet to avoid their Mistakings, let me tell you, that it is so far from me to adjudge all the House alike guilty, that I know there are many there as dutiful Subjects as any in the World; it being but some few Vipers among them that did cast this Mist of Undutifulness over most of their Eyes: Yet to say Truth, there was a good Number there that could not be infected with this Contagion; inasmuch that some did express their Duties in speaking, which was the general Fault of the House the last Day.

"To conclude, As those Vipers must look for their Reward of Punishment, so You, my Lords, may justly expect from me that Favour and Protection that a good King oweth to his loving and faithful Nobility.

"And now, my Lord Keeper, do what I have commanded you.

Then the Lord Keeper pronounc'd the Parliament Dissolv'd: and there had been a Proclamation for the Dissolution of it, dated March 2.

The Discontents of the People were rais'd and artificially improv'd upon this Occasion; and many Libels were thrown about the City, and especially one against Bishop Laud, to this effect. "Laud look to thy self; be assured thy Life is sought. As thou art the Fountain of Wickedness, Repent of thy monstrous Sins before thou be taken out of the World: and assure thy self, neither God nor the World can endure such a vile Counsellor or Whisperer to live.

Upon the many Murmurs and Tendencies to Sedition, the King thought it proper to quiet the Minds of his loving Subjects by a Declaration of the Causes which mov'd him to dissolve the last Parliament; beginning thus: "Howsoever Princes are not bound to give Account of their Actions but to God alone, yet for the Satisfaction of the Minds and Affections of our loving Subjects, we have thought good to set down thus much by way of Declaration, that we may appear to the World in the Truth and Sincerity of our Actions, and not in those Colours in which we know some turbulent and ill-affected Spirits (to mask and disguise their wicked Intentions, dangerous to the State) would represent us to the publick View.

And so giving an Account of their whole Proceedings, with full Reflections on them, it ended thus:

"And now having laid down the Truth and Clearness of our Proceedings, all wise and discreet Men may easily judge of those Rumours and jealous Fears that are maliciously and wickedly bruited abroad; and may discern, by Examination of their own Hearts, whether, in respect of the free Passage of the Gospel, indifferent and equal Administration of Justice, Freedom from Oppression, and the great Peace and Quietness which every Man enjoyeth under his own Vine and Fig-tree, the Happiness of this Nation can be parallell'd by any of our Neighbour Countries; and if not, then to acknowledge their own Blessedness, and for the same be thankful to God the Author of all Goodness.

The King now resolv'd to proceed in the Star-Chamber against the Members committed to the Tower. For this purpose the Judges, by Command, met at Serjeants-Inn, where the Attorney-General propos'd some Questions, to which their Lordships gave in these Opinions.

I. "All Parliament Men, by Privilege of House, ought to have freedom of Speech, concerning matters debated in Parliament, by a Parliamentary Course.

II. "That a Subject receiving probable Information of any Treason, ought to make it known to the King, or his Commissioners, when thereunto required;

III. " That a Parliament Man committing an Offence against the King or Council, not in a Parliamentary way, may be punish'd for it after the Parliament is ended; though regularly, he cannot be compell'd out of Parliament to answer things done in Parliament in a Parliamentary Course.

IV. " That if Parliament Men raise false Rumours and Slanders against the Lords of the Council and Judges, it is punishable out of Parliament, as an Offence exorbitant committed in Parliament, beyond the Office and besides the Duty of a Parliament Man.

Upon the strength of these Opinions, the King confirm'd his Resolution of bringing the imprison'd Members to Submission or Penalties, for their late Behaviour in the House.

Proceedings against the late Members of Parliament.

This Easter Term Mr. Stroud and Mr. Long, two of the confin'd Members brought a Habeas Corpus, directed to the Marshal of the Houshold to be return'd to the King's-Bench. A special Return was made, that they were committed by Warrant of Council, and detained by another Warrant under his Majesty's Hand. The Sufficiency of this Return was argu'd largely, and Judgment given against the Prisoners.

May 7. An Information had been exhibited in the Star-Chamber, against the several Members then in Custody, Sir John Elliot, Denzil Holles, Benjamin Valentine, Walter Long, William Corriton, William Strode, John Selden, Sir Miles Hobert, and Sir Peter Hayman, for their undutiful Speeches and Actions in the late Parliament. In Trinity Term they severally brought a Habeas Corpus, and after Pleading a Return was made, that their cause of Commitment was Special, and they ought not to be Bail'd. Nor were the Prisoners brought to the Bar, as by Rule and Custom of the Court; but those of them who had been committed to other Prisons, were now by express command remov'd to the Tower. In Michaelmas Term the Judges came to a Resolution, that the Prisoners should be Bail'd, giving Sureties for their good Behaviour. And this Motion of Discharge proceeded from the King himself, who had conferr'd with the Judges, and had declared his Content the Prisoners should be Bail'd, notwithstanding their obstinacy, that they would not so much as present a Petition to him to express, That they were sorry he was offended with them. But the Prisoners began now to value themselves upon their Suffering, and had so much Countenance from several of their late fellow Members, that they would not now accept of a Deliverance, but unanimously refused to find Sureties for their Behaviour; nay, Mr. Holles was so industrious to be continu'd in custody, that when one offer'd his own Bail, he would not yield to the course of the Court, to be himself Bound with him. And even Mr. Long, who had actually found Sureties in the Chief Justices Chamber, declar'd in Court that his Sureties should no longer continue. Such a Merit did they now place in Confinement as to labour against their own Liberty; and by such glorying in Perfection to raise a Popularity to themselves, and cast an Odium on the King.

Upon this intractable Humour the King pursued another Method, and letting fall the Process in the Star-Chamber, he resolv'd to proceed against them by Common Law in the King's-Bench; where in this Michaelmas Term an Information was exhibited by the Attorney-General, to which the Defendants put in a Plea to the Jurisdiction of the Court, and the Court did not over-rule the Plea, but gave a Day to join in Demurr that Term; when after learned Arguments on both sides, the Judges agreed, That the Court, as this Case is, shall have Jurisdiction, although these Offences were committed in Parliament, and that the imprisoned Members ought to Answer. But the Defendants refused to put in any other Plea; upon which, on the last Day of the Term, Judgment was given against them upon a Nihil dicit, in this manner:

I. " That every of the Defendants shall be imprisoned during the King's Pleasure; Sir John Elliot to be imprisoned in the Tower of London, and the other Defendants in other Prisons.

II. " That none of them shall be deliver'd out of Prison, until he give Security in this Court for his good Behaviour, and have made Submission and Acknowledgment of his Offence.

III. " Sir John Elliot, as the greatest Offender and Ringleader, shall pay a Fine to the King of 2000*l.* Mr. Holles 1000 Marks, and Mr. Valentine 500*l.*

They refused to submit to any thing but the necessity of a long Imprisonment, where some of them died in Custody, and others treasur'd up a Reputation of Confessors for the Privilege of Parliament, and in 1640. had an ample Reward of Thanks and Money.

Roche being Surrender'd by the Protestants, and the French King being immediately after engag'd to prosecute a War in Italy against the Spaniards: This was a proper Juncture to mediate a Peace between England and France, of which the Articles were agreed upon at Susa in Italy, within the Month of April, and published in both Kingdoms on the 10th of May. A Peace very acceptable to the King and Court upon the just Principles of Policy; and more so to the Queen, upon the accounts of Nature and Religion. But though Wise and Honourable enough in the Terms and Articles, it was suspected and traduc'd by many Popular Heads, as if it did not provide for the Protestants abroad, and would much encourage the Papists here at home.

Ireland had been long without a Parliament, and many Grievances began to discontent the People; the Lord Deputy, Viscount Falkland, consented to the Desires of the Nobility and Gentry, that Commissioners should be chose out of each Province, to go over into England, and present their Grievances to the King himself, and pray a Redress of them. These Commissioners came to the Court in September, and gave in Writing their humble Petition; offering to remit to his Highness one hundred and fifty thousand Pounds, borrowed of the Country for pay of the Army, and to grant three Subsidies to be paid in the next three Years, humbly requesting Ease and Relief to some Burthens and Grievances. To every one of these Complaints of Grievance (being fifty five in number) the King return'd a particular Answer, either giving present Satisfaction, or promising a Method of sudden Remedy: And to the last Request for a new Parliament in that Kingdom, the King declar'd his Pleasure for a speedy Summons, upon which the Deputy and Privy-Council issued Writs for a Parliament to meet in November: A course too hasty and irregular. For by Poyning's Act 20 Hen. 7. a Certificate must be first sent over into England, from the Deputy and Council, under the Great Seal of Ireland, and then his Majesty's License must be sent back under the Great Seal of England. This Defect and Omission was censur'd by an Order of the Council-Board, and by them referred to the Judges; who gave their Opinion, that the Summons was illegal and void.

May 13. The Queen before her Time was deliver'd of a Son, and the Romish Priests were such Frogs in the Bed-Chamber, that they would have immediately baptiz'd the Child in their way, if the King had not step'd in and expressly assign'd that Office to his Chaplain Dr. Webb, who baptiz'd him by the Name of Charles: He died about an Hour after, and was interr'd at Westminster by the Bishop of London.

Upon the Jealousie of the Spaniards, and the Honour of the English Court, this Negotiation went slowly on, till Reuben was recalled, and Don Carlos de Colomos was sent hither as Ambassador in January following, who brought it to a conclusion in in the following Year.

The King softens some of the late Members.

To soften the Murrurs of the late Members now imprisoned, the King tried another way of gaining over some other of the most Popular Commons, by Royal Favours and Preferments. Sir Thomas Wentworth and Sir John Soveik were made Privy-Counsellors, Sir Dudley Diggs Master of the Rolls, Mr. Noy the King's Attorney-General, and Mr. Littleton Solicitor. This Policy, however Generous and Wise, was called the buying off Men, and among the Improvers of Sedition, it help'd to aggravate the craft of the Court, and the mercenary Spirit of these Persons, who yet were most of them Men of the greatest Industry, Fidelity and Ability in the King's Service.

Having thus related all Civil Affairs of Importance to the end of 1629, by a Method before prescribed, we shall now look back upon the State of Religion where we left it at the end of 1626.

State of Religion. 1627.

The Lenity of Abp. Abbot.

And here it must be acknowledg'd to have been the Sense of many Church-men, that the Lenity and Coldness of Archbishop Abbot had a very unhappy Influence upon the Peace and Honour of the Church of England. His immediate Predecessor, Dr. Bancroft, had Experience to understand the Constitution of the Church, and had Courage to assert the Discipline of it: and had he been succeeded by Bishop Andrews, or Bishop Overal, or some other active Instrument of Decency and Order; this Church had perhaps stood the Glory of the Reformation and the Envy of Rome. But by the bold Importunity of the Earl of Dunbar, the prime Scotch Favourite, Dr. Abbot was prefer'd first to the See of Coventry and Litchfield, then soon to London, and so to Canterbury. A private Master of a College in Oxford, heavy and morose, and little else to make him seem wise and grave. His Character is thus drawn by a great Master of that Art. "He had been Head or Master of

"one of the poorest Colleges in Oxford, and had Learning sufficient for that Province. He was a Man of very morose Manners, and a very four Aspect, which in that time was called Gravity: Made Bishop before he had been Parson, Vicar, or Curate of any Parish Church in England, or Dean or Prebend of any Cathedral Church: and was in truth totally ignorant of the true Constitution of the Church of England and the state and interest of the Clergy; as sufficiently appeared through the whole course of his Life. He considered Christian Religion no otherwise than as it abhorred and reviled Popery, and valued those Men most who did that the most furiously. For the strict Observation of the Discipline of the Church, or the Conformity to the Articles or Canons establish'd, he made little Enquiry, and took less Care; and having himself made a very little progress in ancient and solid Study of Divinity, he adhered only to the Doctrine of Calvin, and for his sake did not think so ill of the Discipline as he ought to have done.

For these Infirmities, this Prelate never made a just Figure in the Church, and had but very little Interest in the Court. But these very Disadvantages turn'd to his greater Credit in the County, and in the late Parliaments: And one thing now happen'd, that serv'd much to raise his Reputation.

Cafe of Dr. Sibthorp.

Dr. Sibthorp Vicar of Buckley, Son-in-law to Sir John Lamb, a Man of ordinary Parts and sordid Ambition, had preach'd a Sermon at the Lent-Affizes in Northampton 1626, on Rom. 13. 7. wherein his profest Design was, to prove the King's Right of imposing Loans and Contributions on the Subject.

This gave such Offence to many of the Auditors, that the Noise of it reach'd the Court, and the Preacher was to be countenanc'd upon the meer Fame of Loyalty. Upon this Conceit, he transcribes his Sermon, and presents it to the Duke of Buckingham, who carried the Copy to the King, and recommended the Publishing of it. The Bishop of London wisely declined the Licencing, or purposely threw the Temptation upon the Archbishop, to whom the Copy was brought by Mr. Murrey Gentleman of the Bed-chamber, requiring his Approbation and Licence in the King's Name. The Archbishop made Exceptions to several Passages in the Sermon, and desir'd the Messenger to acquaint his Majesty with the Reasons why he must decline to give his Imprimatur. After some days, Mr. Murrey return'd, and told the Archbishop, the King would insist upon it. But the Archbishop still wav'd the matter, till another Message was brought him by the same hand, that if he did not dispatch it, the King would take some other course with him. Upon this the Archbishop put his Objections into Writing, and sent them to the King, by whom they were communicated to the Duke, and by him to Laud Bishop of Bath and Wells, and the Bishops of Durham, Rocheſter, and Oxford; in whose Names an Answer to the Archbishop's Exceptions was drawn up, and sent by Mr. Murrey to Lambeth: but no Argument or Authority could prevail with his Grace to license the Sermon; which was soon after licens'd by the Bishop of London. The Duke of Buckingham resent'd this Denial as a Contempt of himself and the King, and resolv'd upon some Mark of Displeasure. On Tuesday July 5. the Lord Conway was sent to Croyden, to inform the Archbishop, that it was his Majesty's Pleasure he should withdraw himself to Canterbury, and should not from henceforth meddle with the High Commission. The Archbishop offer'd Reasons why Canterbury would be an inconvenient Place of Residence for him, and desired he might rather retire to his House of Foard five Miles beyond; to which the King readily assented, and allow'd convenient time to prepare for his Removal. The Report of this Hardship upon the Archbishop, brought him more Visitors to take their Leave of him; to those degrees of Popularity, that this more provok'd the Court against him. When in submission he was got to Foard, he wrote there a large Narrative of his own Case; which indeed makes his Judgment and Actions in this Particular to be very laudable.

Abp. Abbot honestly refuses to license the Sermon.

See this Narrative of Abp. Abbot, in Rushworth's Collect. Vol. 1. p. 438.

The Archbishop, in Disgrace and a sort of Banishment, made no Submission to the King, but gave new Occasions to the Court to be more and more offended with him. Upon which he was sequestered from his Jurisdiction, and a Commission was sign'd Octob. 9. to the Bishops of London, Durham, Rocheſter, Oxford, Bath and Wells, to do, execute, and perform all Acts, Matters and Things, any way touching or concerning the Power, Jurisdiction, or Authority of the Archbishop of Canterbury, in Causes or Matters Ecclesiastical.

Severe Proceedings against the Abp.

After the Resolution to call the Parliament (which met March 17. 1629) the Dangers of Popery made a very popular Noise; and there were some unhappy Reasons to promote it: especially, that a Society of Recusants was taken in Clerkenwell, most of them Jesuits, and the House where they were taken was designed to be a College of that Order. Among their Papers was found the Copy of a Letter written to their Rector at brussels, upon the Subject of the ensuing Parliament; wherein they thus express themselves — "We hope as much in this Parliament, as ever we feared any in Qu. Elizabeth's days. — We have made great use of this Anarchical Election, and have prejudicated and anticipated the great one, that none but the King's Enemies and His are chosen of this Parliament. — Now we have planted that sovereign Drug Arminianism, which we hope will purge the Protestants from their Heresie. — I cannot chuse but laugh Dangers of Popery.

1627. " to see how some of our own Coat have accoutred themselves: You would scarce know them if you saw them: And tis admirable how in Speech and Gesture they act the Puritans. — I am at this time transported with Joy, to see how happily all Instruments and Means, as well great as less, cooperate unto our Purposes.

Policy of the Papists to divide the Protestants. The Sense of this Letter was only to shew, that the Hopes of the Papists was in the Division of the Protestants, and their Interest was to promote that Division. And the Discovery of the Letter did but unhappily serve to promote the Argument of it: for it encreas'd the Fears and Jealousies between Church-man and Puritan, and between Court and Country.

Proceedings in Parliament upon Matters of Religion. One of the first things in the House of Commons was to settle a Committee for Religion on Thursday Mar. 20. and to address the King for a solemn Fast. The Commons had soon after a Conference with the Lords upon a Petition against Recusants, wherein Mr. Secretary Cook thus express'd himself. — " And a little to awake the Zeal and Care of our learned and grave Fathers, it is fit that they take notice of that Hierarchy which is already established in competition with their Lordships; for they have a Bishop consecrated by the Pope: This Bishop hath his subalternate Officers of all kinds, as Vicars-General, Arch-Deacons, Rural Deans, Apparitors, and such like: Neither are these Nominal or Titular Officers alone; but they all execute their Jurisdictions, and make their ordinary Visitations through the Kingdom, keep Courts, and determine Ecclesiastical Causes: And which is an Argument of more consequence, they keep ordinary Intelligence by their Agents in Rome, and hold correspondence with the Nuncio's and Cardinals both at Bruxels and in France. Neither are the Seculars alone grown to this height, but the Regulars are more active and dangerous — Even at this time they intend to hold a concurrent Assembly with this Parliament.

Petition of the Parliament, Upon this View of Popish Insolence, a Petition was agreed upon by both Houses, and presented to his Majesty on Monday March 31.

To give a Specimen of the first Article, and his Majesty's Answer to it.

Art. 1. " We most humbly and ardently beg at the hands of your most Sacred Majesty, that your Majesty will be pleased to give continual Life and Motion to all those Laws that stand in force against Jesuits, Seminary Priests, and all that have taken Orders by Authority of the See of Rome, by exacting a more due and serious Execution of the same. Amongst which Number, those that have highly abused your Majesty's Clemency by returning into the Kingdom after their Banishment, contrary to your Highness express Proclamation, we humbly desire may be left to the Severity of your Laws, without admitting of any Mediation or Intercession for them. And that such of your Majesty's unsound and ill-affected Subjects as do receive, harbour, or conceal any of their viperous Generation, may without delay suffer such Penalties and Punishments as the Laws most justly impose upon them.

King's Answer. " To the first Point his Majesty answereth, That he will, according to your Desire, give both Life and Motion to the Laws that stand in force against the Jesuits, Seminary Priests, and all that have taken Orders by Authority of the See of Rome: And to that end, his Majesty will give strict Order to all his Ministers for the discovering and apprehending of them; and so leave them, being apprehended, to the Tryal of the Law. And in case after Tryal there shall be cause to respit Execution of any of them; yet they shall be committed (according to the Example of the best Times) to the Castle of Witch; and there be safely kept from exercising their Functions, or spreading their superstitious and dangerous Do-

The second Article was for watching Ports and Harbours, and searching Ships for Discovery of Jesuits and young Students: The third for prohibiting all Popish Recusants to come to Court, or within ten Miles of London: The fourth for taking away Compositions by which Papists purchase to themselves a sort of concealed Toleration: The fifth for restraining the Resort of English Papists to the Chapels of Foreign Ambassadors: The sixth that no Papist be put into any Place of Authority or Command: The seventh that all Judges and Justices be commanded to execute the Laws, and to give to the Lord Keeper a strict Account of their Proceedings: The eighth and last, for making a provisional Law for training and educating of the Children of Popish Recusants in the Grounds and Principles of our holy Religion. To all which Articles his Majesty return'd such distinct and full Answers, as might have convinc'd all rational People, that some late Concessions were really owing to the Hopes of a like Fidelity to foreign Protestants, and to an indulging Affection to the Queen, not at all to the King's own Judgment or Inclination, nor to any worse Design in the prime Ministers of State.

There was another Jealousie in the House of Commons, that some of the interior Clergy were advancing new Doctrines, to flatter the Court, and to give the King a Divine Right to Absolute Power. They thought this to be pragmatical and of pernicious Effect. And therefore about the latter end of May, Mr. Rous brought in a Charge against Dr. Edward Manwaring, for his Plot and Practice to alter and subvert the Frame and Fabrick of this Estate and Commonwealth. To which end (says he)

Complaint against the Clergy for Principles of Arbitrary Power.

1. " He labours to infuse into the Conscience of his Majesty, the Persuasion of a Power not bounding it self with Laws, which King James, of famous Memory, calls in his Speech to the Parliament Tyranny, yea Tyranny accompanied with Perjury.

Speech of Mr. Rous against Dr. Manwaring.

2. " He endeavours to persuade the Conscience of the Subjects, that they are bound to obey Commands illegal; yea, he damns them for not obeying them.

3. " He robs the Subjects of the Propriety of their Goods.

4. " He brands them that will not lose this Propriety with most scandalous Speeches and odious Titles, to make them both hateful to Prince and People; so to set a Division between the Head and the Members, and between the Members themselves.

5. " To the same end, not much unlike to Faux, and his Fellows, he seeks to blow up Parliaments and Parliamentary Powers.

Declaration of the Commons against Dr. Manwaring.

The Matter of this Charge was put into a formal Declaration of the Commons against Dr. Manwaring Clerk and Doctor in Divinity, which was presented on June 2. to the Lords at a Conference betwixt the Committees of both Houses, Mr. Pinn managing that Conference for the Commons, who in a very long Speech did inveigh and aggravate as much as Zeal and Talk could do. Soon after the Commons, by their Speaker, demanded Judgment of the Lords against the said Doctor; and they gave this Sentence.

Judgment of the Lords against him.

1. " That Roger Manwaring, Doctor in Divinity, shall be imprison'd during the Pleasure of the House.

2. " That he be Fined one thousand Pounds to the King.

3. " That he shall make such Submission and Acknowledgment of his Offences, as shall be set down by a Committee in Writing, both at the Bar, and in the House of Commons.

4. " That he shall be suspended for the time of three Years from the Exercise of the Ministry, and in the mean time a sufficient Preaching Mi-

1627. " nifter shall be provided out of his Livings to serve " the Cure: This Suspension and Provision to be " done by the Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction.
 5. " That he shall be hereafter disabled to have " any Ecclesiastical Dignity or Secular Office.
 6. " That he shall be for ever disabled to preach " at the Court hereafter.
 7. " That his said Book is worthy to be burnt,
 " and that for the better effecting this, his Maje" sty may be moved to grant a Proclamation to call " in the said Books, that they may be all burnt ac" cordingly in London and both the Universities;
 " and for the Inhibiting the printing thereof upon a " great Penalty.

In pursuance of the third Article of Penance, the Doctor made this Submission in Tears upon his Knees.

May it please this honourable House,

The Doctor's Submission

" I Do here in all sorrow of Heart, and true Re" pentance, acknowledge the many Errors and " Indiscretions which I have committed, in preach" ing and publishing those two Sermons of mine,
 " which I called Religion and Allegiance, and my great
 " Fault in falling upon this Theme again, and hand" ling the same rashly and unadvisedly in my own " Parish Church of St. Giles in the Fields, the 4th " of May last past. I do humbly acknowledge those " three Sermons to have been full of many danger" ous Passages, Inferences, and scandalous Asper-" sions in most part of the same. And I do humbly " acknowledge the Justice of this Honourable House " in that Judgment and Sentence pass'd upon me for " my great Offence. And I do from the bottom of " my Heart, crave Pardon of God, the King, and " this Honourable House, and the Church, and the " Common-wealth in general, and those worthy " Persons adjudged to be reflected upon by me in " particular, for these great Errors and Offences.

Roger Manwaring.

If all the other Particulars in the Sentence had been as duly executed, it had been more for the Interest of the King, and even for the Credit of the Preacher. But when, after this Solemnity of Censure and Submission, the Party was made a Favourite of the Court, and had Preferments heap'd upon him, this threw the Odium of the Doctrine upon the King and his Ministers, which might otherwise have rested upon the Indiscretion of the Preacher. And this marked out the Doctor for a more propense Design of Flattery, and for dissembling a Submission, when he might have been otherwise pitied for inconsiderate Rashness, and even below'd for the Ingenuity of Confessing and Retraacting.

Prefer'd

Court.

Fears of Arminianism.

Next to Popery and Arbitrary Power, the Commons were under terrible Apprehensions of what they called Arminianism. And tho' few understood the thing, or so much as the Name; yet it was enough that they thought it a Heresy, and even a Court Heresy. And therefore June 12. the Commons voted, that Dr. Neal, Bishop of Winchester, and Dr. Laud, Bishop of Bath and Wells, be named to be those near about the King, who are suspected to be Arminians; and that they are justly suspected to be unfound in their Opinions that way. And accordingly in the Commons Remonstrance against the Duke of Luckingham, they declare, " The Hearts of your " good Subjects are perplex'd, when with sorrow
 " they behold a daily growth and spreading of the " Faction of the Arminians, that being, as your " Majesty well knows, but a cunning way to bring " in Popery; and the Professors of those Opinions,
 " the common Disturbers of the Protestant Churches,
 " and Incendiaries in those States wherein they have " gotten any head; being Protestants in Show, but " Jesuits in Opinion: which caused your Royal Fa" ther, with so much pious Wisdom and ardent " Zeal, to endeavour the suppressing of them, as 1627. " well at home as in the Neighbour Countries. And " your gracious Majesty imitating his most worthy " Example, hath openly, and by your Proclama" tion, declared your dislike of those Persons and of " their Opinions; who notwithstanding, are much " favoured and advanced, not wanting Friends e" ven of the Clergy near to your Majesty, namely

 " Dr. Neal, Bishop of Winchester, and Dr. Laud, Bi" shop of Bath and Wells, who are justly suspected " to be unfound in their Opinions that way. And " it being now generally held the way to Preferment
 " and Promotion in the Church, many Scholars do " bend the course of their Studies to maintain those " Errors.

1627.
Bp. Neal and Bishop Laud expressly nam'd.

It is certain these Suggestions were founded much upon Prejudice and Inadvertence: For most of the English Divines called Arminians, had never read the Works of Arminius, but had drawn their distinguishing Opinions from the Primitive Fathers, and from the severe Absurdities of some of the Calvinistical Writers. The Arminians in Holland had been chiefly odious for being a state Faction, and it was under that Civil Character that King James was so incensed against them. His present Majesty, and the Duke, favoured these English Divines, not so much for their Sentiments in Point of Faith, as for their eminent Zeal in matters of Discipline, and their extraordinary Spirit of Loyalty: But however, the Popular Rumour obtained, that all who departed from the Rigours of Calvin were Arminians, and all Arminians were the Instruments of Popery and Arbitrary Power.

A Convocation was called in concurrence with this Parliament to meet.

A Convocation called with the Parliament.

But nothing of Ecclesiastical concern was so much as moved in it, tho' Opportunity, and even Provocation offer'd, by the unhappy Controversies in Religion then depending; and by the Examination and Censure of Books and Persons in the Civil Assembly, which might have been thought as proper to fall under the Cognizance of this Ecclesiastical Body. But the Principle and Practice were then fix'd, that a Convocation began no Debates in Religion, without Instruction from the Bishops and License from the King. And therefore not receiving such Commission to act in Spirituals, they kept only to their immemorial Right in Temporals, and granted five entire Subsidies to the King confirmed by Act of Parliament.

To do nothing but give their Money.

In the Intervals of Parliament and Convocation, the King pursued those Methods that were Wise and Honourable. He set forth a Proclamation to suppress the offensive Sermons of Dr. Manwaring, and therein declared, " That tho' the grounds were right" ly laid to persuade Obedience from Subjects to " their Sovereign, and that for Conscience sake:
 " yet in divers Passages, Inferences and Applicati" ons thereof, trenching upon the Laws of this " Land and Proceedings of Parliaments, whereof
 " he was ignorant, he so far err'd, that he had drawn " upon himself the just Censure and Sentence of the " High Court of Parliament, by whose Judgment " also that Book stands condemn'd. Wherefore be" ing desirous to remove occasions of Scandal, he

It was an Error and Misfortune, that the Advancement of Dr. Manwaring was soon after contriv'd, that seem'd to make the Proclamation a Court Jest, and the Counsels of the Ministry to be little Mysteries of deceiving the People.

Another Proclamation was issued to declare the King's Pleasure for a vigorous Proceeding against Popish Recufants, and for Directions to the King's Commissioners to suffer Recufants convict to compound for no less than two parts of three of their Estates, which by Law were forfeited to the Crown.

A third Proclamation for diligent Search to be made for all Priests and Jesuits, particularly for the Bishop 1627. Bishop of Chalcedon, to Apprehend them and Commit them, &c. The Jesuits taken at Clerkenwel, were from severall Prisons removed to Newgate, in order to be convicted and condemned. The Privy-Council wrote to the Bishop of Ely to prepare the Castle of Wibich for the safe Custody of Popish Prisoners; and sent to require the Lord Mayor of London, to search out all Recusants within the City and Liberties thereof. So as the King appeared to act in perfect compliance with the Sense of the Parliament last sitting.

Promotions not Popular. But some Steps were taken, at which the discontented Party would be sure to murmur: For Dr. Land, Bishop of Bath and Wells, who was thought a Creature of the Duke of Buckingham's, and stood censur'd for an Arminian in the Commons Remonstrance, was on July 15. translated to the Bishoprick of London, and thereby brought to a nearer access to Court, and to a greater Influence upon the Church. Mr. Mountague was promoted to the See of Chichester, and Dr. Manning to the good Rectory of Stanford Rivers in Essex, and to each of them was granted a Royal Pardon of all Errors heretofore committed by them, either in Speaking, Writing or Printing, for which they could be any way liable to be hereafter question'd. And as Manning had a Royal Favour to reverse and sweeten the late Sentence of his Majesty's Proclamation against him: So Mountague had just contrary, a Proclamation to censure him immediately after the Letters Patent to promote him. For the King thought fit to call in that Authors Work, entitled Appello Casarem, and to declare "That out of his Princely Care to maintain the Church, in the unity of the true Religion and the bond of Peace, to prevent unnecessary Disputes, he had lately caused the Articles of Religion to be Reprinted, as a Rule for avoiding diversities of Opinions; and considering that a Book written by Richard Mountague, now Bishop of Chichester, entitled Appello Casarem, was the first cause of those Disputes and Differences, which since have much troubled the quiet of the Church; he would take away this occasion, by commanding all Persons that had any of those Books in their hands, to deliver them to the Bishop of the Diocess, or if it be in either of the Universities, to the Chancellor and Vice-Chancellor thereof, who were commanded to suppress them.

And yet his Book called in. But this too was thought a false appearance of Policy, to prefer a Writer, and then to suppress the very Book for which the World thought him prefer'd. Others imputed it to a farther reach of making a shew of Impartiality; when about the same time the severall Answers made to the Appello Casarem by Dr. Festly, Dr. Goad, Mr. Ward, Mr. Burton, Mr. Tates, Mr. Wotton, and Francis Rous, Esq; were all in like manner suppress'd, and some of the Printers questioned in the High Commission.

Character of Arminians and Calvinists, from the Ld. Clarendon's Hist. of Rebel. B. 1. p. 71. These warm Contentions are thus judiciously stated by a Witness of those Times. "Some Doctrinal Points in Controversie had been agitated in the Pulpits with more warmth and reflections than had us'd to be, and thence the Heat and Animosity encreas'd in Books Pro and Con upon the same Arguments. Most of the Popular Preachers, who had not look'd into the ancient Learning took Calvin's Word for it, and did all they could to propagate his Opinions in those Points: They who had studied more, and were better versed in the Antiquities of the Church, the Fathers, the Councils, and the Ecclesiastical Histories, with the same heat and passion in Preaching and Writing defended the contrary. The latter were called Arminians, tho' many of them had never read a Word written by Arminius. Either side defended and maintained the different Opinions as the Doctrine of the Church of England; as the two great Orders in the Church of Rome, the Dominicans and the Franciscans, did at the same time, and had many hundred Years before, with more vehemence and uncharitableness, maintained the same Opinions one against the other; either Party professing to adhere to the Doctrine of the Catholick Church, which had been ever wiser than to determine the Controversie. And yet that Party here, which could least support themselves with Reason, were very sollicitous, according to the Ingenuity they alway practise to advance any of their Pretences, to have the People believe, that they who held with Arminius did intend to introduce Popery. And truly the other side was no less willing to have it thought, that all who adhered to Calvin in those Controversies, did in their Hearts likewise adhere to him with reference to the Discipline, and desir'd to change the Government of the Church, and to set up the Discipline that he had established at Geneva; and so both Sides found such reception generally with the People, as they were inclin'd to the Persons. Whereas in truth, none of the one side were at all inclin'd to Popery; and very many of the other were most Affectionate to the Peace and Prosperity of the Church, and very Pious and Learned Men.

When the Parliament reassembled on Tuesday, January 20. the Fears and Jealousies about Religion were so much in the Heads of the leading Men in the House of Commons, that when the King sent a Message to them to consider speedily of a Bill for Tonnage and Poundage, they rejected the King's Desire, and resolv'd to proceed in the first place with Matters of Religion, and particularly against Arminianism: Upon which occasion Mr. Rous spoke with most indecent Bitterness. — I desire we may consider the encrease of Arminianism: an Error that makes the Grace of God loney it after the Will of Man, that makes the Sheep to keep the Shepherd, and makes a Mortal Seed of an Immortal God: Tea, I desire that we may look into the very Belly and Bowels of this Trojan Horse, to see if there be not Men in it ready to open the Gates to Romish Tyranny and Spanish Monarchy: For an Arminian is the Spawn of a Papist, &c.

On Tuesday January 27. The draught of a Remonstrance concerning Religion in the last Session, since delivered by the Clerk to the King, was now brought back to the House by Mr. Secretary Cook, with a repeated desire from his Majesty, that they would give the precedency to the Business of Tonnage and Poundage. But the House again thought fit to prefer Religion; and upon this Debate Mr. Pym made a very eager Speech: Two Diseases there be (said he) the one old the other new; the old Popery, the new Arminianism, &c. And because it had been objected in the House, that they ought not to handle Questions touching Matters of Religion, which were proper for his Majesty and a Convocation to determine, Mr. Pym made this Argument against the said Objection. — It belongs to the Duty of Parliaments to establish true Religion and to punish false; we must know what Parliaments have done formerly in Religion. Our Parliaments have confirm'd General Councils: In the time of King Henry VIII. the Earl of Essex was condemn'd for countenancing Books of Heresie. For the Convocation, it is but a Provincial Synod of Canterbury, and cannot bind the whole Kingdom. As for York, that is distant, and cannot do any thing to bind us or the Laws. For the High Commission, it was derived from Parliament.

On Wednesday Jan. 28. Upon another Message from the King for dispatch of Tonnage and Poundage, the House again agreed to persist in the Matters of Religion. And Sir John Elliot deliver'd himself in most provoking Language. — As to Popery and Arminianism our Faith and Religion is in danger by it; for like an Inundation it doth break in at once upon us. It is said, if there be any difference in Opinion concerning the Interpretation of the 29 Articles, the Bishops and the Clergy in Convocation have Power to dispute it, and to order which may they please: and then for ought I know Popery and Arminianism may be introduc'd by them. — We see there are some among our Bishops who are not Orthodox.

Commons postpone all matters to Religion.

Mr. Pym against Popery and Arminianism.

Sir John Elliot very free on the same subject.

1627. thodox nor found in Religion as they should be; witness the two Bishops complain'd of the last meeting of the Parliament, &c. He put the House into such a ferment, that they made this solemn Protestation.

Protestation of the Commons upon the Scate of the 29 Articles.

“ WE the Commons in Parliament assembled, do claim, protest, and avow for Truth the Sense of the Articles of Religion, which were established by Parliament in the 12th Year of our late Queen Elizabeth; which by the publick Acts of the Church of England, and by the general and current Expositions of the Writers of our Church have been deliver'd unto Us. And we reject the Sense of the Jesuits and Arminians and all others, wherein they differ from us.

This Declaration upon the Sense of the Articles, was of greater Latitude than any Interpreter had used in expounding of them: But it being drawn up thus large and dubious, it was the fitter for a Charm and Spell to affright and drive away ignorant People.

Commons insist upon Redress of Grievances in Religion.

Soon after the Commons presented a Declaration to the King, to justify their Resolutions of giving Precedency to Religion: Wherein they tell him, “ That finding the extreme Dangers wherewith their Religion is threatened, they think they cannot, without Impiety to God, Disloyalty to his Majesty, and Unthankfulness to those from whom they are put in Trust, proceed to other Business, till something be done to secure them in this main Point, which they prefer above their Lives, and all earthly things whatever.” The King answered, “ As for the Cause of Delay in my Business being Religion, there is none of you shall have a greater Care for the true Preservation of it than my self; which since it is confelld by your Answer, you must either think I want Power (which cannot be) or that I am very ill counselld, if it be in so much Danger as you affirm. I must think it strange, that this Business of Religion should only be a Hinderer of my Affairs, whereas I am certainly informed all other things go according to their ordinary course.

But the Spirit was now rais'd, and it was the Art of cunning Men to keep it up. And therefore on Wednesday Feb. 4. the House fell into Debate upon the King's Declaration publish'd in Print to prohibit Disputing or Preaching one way or other in the Controversies lately rais'd; and did conclude, that the main End of the Declaration was to suppress the Puritan Party, and give Liberty to the opposite side. They conceiv'd that Bishop Laud and Bishop Montague had advis'd the King to that Declaration. They complain'd of the King's Pardon granted to the latter; and observ'd, that the Warrant to draw a Pardon was for him only: and yet the Attorney General had put in three others, Dr. Cosens, Dr. Sibthorp, and Dr. Manwaring.

Thursday Feb. 12. a Report was made from the Committee of Religion about soliciting and obtaining the Pardons lately mentioned. And 'tis observable, that the Hand of Oliver Cromwell was in this Religious Feud: He was one of this warm Committee, and inform'd the House, that the Bishop of Winchester gave countenance to some Divines that preach'd flat Popery; and it was by his Means that Manwaring (who by Censure the last Parliament was disabled from farther Preferment) was now advanced to a rich Living. If these be the steps (said he) to Church Preferment, what are we shortly to expect?

Bookellers Petition.

It was the Artifice, or at least the Countenance of this Committee, that brought in the Booksellers and Printers of London with a Petition, complaining of the Restraint of Books written against Popery and Arminianism, and the contrary Books allow'd by the only means of the Bishop of London; and that Licensing was now restrain'd to him and his Chaplains.

Friday Feb. 12. the Heats were more inflam'd, by an Order of the House to examine the releasing of the Jesuits committed to Newgate, and the Pay of Proceedings against several Recusants. And tho' fair Accounts were given of the King's Justice and Mercy in Execution of the Penal Laws; yet the Out-cry held on, and the first Protestation made in the House just before Dissolving, (while the Speaker was held in the Chair) was this.

“ Whosoever shall bring in Innovation of Religion, or by Favour or Countenance seek to extend or introduce Popery or Arminianism, or other Opinion, disagreeing from the Truth and Orthodox Church, shall be reputed a Capital Enemy to this Kingdom and Commonwealth.

Though there seems to have been more Reason for Dissolving this Parliament than any other in this Reign before the Long One, (which unhappily could not be Dissolv'd by the King) yet the leading Members, who were interrupted in their Schemes of Policy and Power, were engag'd at being no longer capable to shew themselves. They cast the Odium of this Council upon the Bishop of London, who was thereupon libel'd with Reflections and Libels. And it is indeed probable, that this Prelate join'd heartily in the Advice for Dissolving this Parliament: for in his own Diary he observ'd, that this Parliament sought his Ruin: and it was no doubt his Judgment, that they sought the Ruin of the Church.

His Majesty, in his Declaration of the Causes which mov'd him to Dissolve this Parliament, made this solemn Profession, “ We call God to Record, before whom we stand, that it is and always hath been our Hearts Desire, to be found worthy of that Title which we account the most glorious in all our Crown, Defender of the Faith. Neither shall we ever give way to the Authorizing of any thing whereby any Innovation may steal or creep into the Church; but to preserve that Unity of Doctrine and Discipline, established in the time of Queen Elizabeth, whereby the Church of England hath stood and flourish'd ever since.

“ And as we are careful to make up all Breaches and Rents in Religion at home, so did we, by our Proclamation and Commandment for the Execution of Laws against Priests and Popish Recusants, fortifie all Ways and Approaches against that foreign Enemy; which if it have not succeeded according to our Intention, we must lay the Fault where it is, in the subordinate Officers, and Ministers in the Country, by whose Remissness Jesuits and Priests escape without Apprehension; and Recusants from those Convictions and Penalties which the Law and our Commandment would have inflicted on them. For we do profess, that as it is our Duty, so it shall be our Care, to command and direct well: but it is the Part of others to perform the Ministerial Office. And when we have done our Office, we shall account Our-self, and all charitable Men will account Us, innocent both to God and Men. And those that are negligent, we will esteem as culpable both to God and Us; and therefore will expect that hereafter they give us a better Account. — We do here profess to maintain the true Religion and Doctrine established in the Church of England, without admitting or conniving at any backsliding either to Popery or Schism.

But the discontented Members, upon their unwilling Return into the Country, made an Impression of Unbelief to all that the King declared; and caus'd the popular Prejudices to swell so high, that for the future there should be no Decency in Worship without the Imputation of Popery; and no Reasoning in Doctrine without the Reproach of Arminianism. And this created an Obstruction and an Odium to all that the King and Bishops should hereafter do, when very much was fit to be done. The prime Mover and Agent was Bishop Laud, of whom it may be more proper to take a Character than to give it. “ The Duke

Final Protestation of the Commons:

King's solemn Protestation.

The People taught to be jealous of Popery.

1628. " Duke had observ'd and discover'd that the Channel in which the Church Promotions had formerly run, had been liable to some Corruptions, at least to many Reproaches; and therefore had committed the sole Representation of those Affairs, and the Recommending to the Vacancies which should happen, to Dr. Laud then Bishop of Bath and Wells, and sworn of the Privy Council. And the King, after the Duke's Death, continued that Trust in the same Hands, infinitely to the Benefit and Honour of the Church, tho' it may be no less to the Prejudice of the poor Bishop; who, too secure in a good Conscience, and most sincere worthy Intention (with which no Man was ever more plentifully replenish'd) thought he could manage and discharge the Place and Office of the greatest Minister in the Court, without the least Condescension to the Arts and Stratagems of the Court, and without any other Friendship or Support, than what the Splendour of a pious Life, and his unpolish'd Integrity, would reconcile to him: Which was an unskillful Measure in a Licentious Age, and may deceive a good Man in the best Times that shall succeed; which expos'd him to such a Torrent of Adversity and Misery, as we shall have too natural an occasion to lament in the following Discourse, in which it will be more reasonable to enlarge upon his singular Abilities and immense Virtue.

By the Remissness of Archbishop Abbot there had crept in a Contempt of Ecclesiastical Authority even among the Clergy themselves. One Huntley, beneficed in Kent, had been required by the Archdeacon of Canterbury to preach at a Visitation, which he wilfully declined to do: Afterwards the Archbishop by his Letters enjoyn'd him to preach another Turn, which he again stubbornly omitted. For these Contempts he was conven'd before the High Commission Court, and fined and committed to Prison; and being upon a Habeas Corpus brought to the King's-bench Bar, the Cause of his Commitment was return'd, Default in his Canonical Obedience. He was first Bail'd, and afterwards discharg'd upon this Opinion of the Court, That breach of Canonical Obedience is an Offence punishable by the Ordinary by Ecclesiastical Censures; and not by the Commissioners Ecclesiastical by Fine and Imprisonment.

To restore the decayed Discipline of the Church, Bishop Laud presented to the King these good Considerations for the better settling of the Church Government.

- Confiderations presented to the King by Bp. Laud.
- " That his Majesty would be graciously pleas'd,
1. " To command the Lords the Bishops to their several Sees, excepting those which are in Attendance at Court.
 2. " That none of them reside upon his Land or Lease that he hath purchased, or on his Comendams, if he hold any; but in one of his Episcopal Houses; and that he waste not the Woods where any are left.
 3. " That they give Charge in their triennial Visitations and at other times, both by themselves and the Archdeacons, that the Declaration for settling the Questions in difference be strictly observed.
 4. " That a special Charge be given them against frequent and unworthy Ordinations.
 5. " That a special care be had over the Lecturers in every Diocese, which by reason of their Pay are the Peoples Creatures, and blow the Bellows of their Sedition: For the abating of whose Power, these ways may be taken.
 1. " That the Afternoon Sermons in all Parishes may be turned into Catechising by Questions and Answers, according to an Order set out by King James of blessed Memory. If this cannot be, then
 2. " That every Bishop ordain in his Diocese, that every Lecturer do read Divine Service in his Surplice before the Lecture.

3. " That where a Lecture is set up in a Market Town, it be read by a Combination of grave and orthodox Divines near adjoining.
 4. " That if an Incorporation do maintain a Lecturer, that he be not suffer'd to Preach, till he take upon him Cure of Souls within that Incorporation.
 5. " That the Bishop do countenance and encourage the grave orthodox Divines of his Clergy, and gain them in the several Quarters of his Diocese to be present at such Lecturers-Sermons as are near them; that so the Bishop may have Knowledge.
 6. " That the Bishop suffer none under Noblemen and Men qualified by Law, to have any private Chaplain in his House.
 7. " That his Majesty may be graciously pleas'd, that Men of Courage, Gravity, and Experience in Government, be preferred to Bishopricks.
 8. " That Emanuel and Sidney Colleges in Cambridge, which are the Nurseries of Puritanism, may from time to time be provided of grave and orthodox Men for their Governours.
 9. " That his Majesty's High Commission be countenanced by the Presence of some of his Majesty's Privy Council, so oft at least as any matter of moment is to be sentenc'd.
 10. " That some course may be taken, that the Judges may not send so many Prohibitions.
 11. " That his Majesty would be graciously pleas'd once in half a Year to call for an Account of all, or so many of these, as he in his Wisdom shall think fit.
 12. " A consideration also to be had as to the general Feoffees, for Benefices and Impropriations; and as to a new Authorising of the Injunctions. These were indeed very excellent Heads of Intimation, and the putting many of them in Practice had a mighty Influence upon the Beauty and Honour of the Church; and must needs have had a much better effect, if the inveterate Prejudice of People had not infected these Times with an Iniquity soon established by Custom.
- The King did what he could to make his Subjects sensible that Popery should have no more favour out of Parliament than in it. And therefore he made a strict Order in Council, that all English Papists going to the Houses of Ambassadors to hear Mass, should be Apprehended and Prosecuted according to Law.
- And to shew the Sincerity of his Intentions, he declares, that he has begun already at his own House, not permitting any to go to the Queen's Chapel but those of the Queen's own House, who are bound to attend upon her. Another Order of Council to the Attorney General, that the Statute 3 Jacobi be put in Execution against Recusants dwelling within ten Miles of London; and the Statute of Confinement, to be executed upon all Popish Lodgers within the City; and a Bill of Indictment to be exhibited against the Keeper of New-Prison, for suffering Priests committed to his Custody to walk abroad at their Pleasure; and a Letter from the Council to the High Sheriff and Justices of Peace in Northumberland, to reprove them for their Remissness, and to require them to execute the Laws against Popish Recusants without Partiality or Connivance; and a Proclamation dated March 24. 1628. for the Apprehension of Richard Smith a Popish Priest, calling himself the Bishop of Calcedon; and an Order of the Lord Mayor of London for a strict Care in the better Observation of the Lord's day, dated Apr. 20. 1629. And because one of the most visible Scandals of the Nation was the lamentable Decay of Churches, and the frequent Prohibitions that stay'd the Process in Ecclesiastical Courts for Repair of them; therefore his Majesty, at Hampton-court, Octob. 11. Regn. 5. set forth a Proclamation for preventing the Decays of Churches and Chapels for the time to come wherein he declares,

1629. " That having of late taken special notice of the " general decay and ruin of Parish Churches " in many Parts of this Kingdom; and that by Law
 " the same ought to be repaired and maintained at " the proper Charge of the Inhabitants, and others
 " having Land in those Chapelries and Parishes re" spectively; who had wilfully neglected to Repair
 " the same, being consecrated Places of God's Wor" ship and Divine Service. His Majesty doth there" fore charge and command all Archbishops and Bi" shops, that they take special care of the Repair" ing and Upholding the same from time to time,
 " and by themselves and their Officers to take a " View and Survey of them, and to use the Power " of the Ecclesiastical Court for putting the same
 " in due Execution: and that the Judges be requir'd " not to interrupt this good Work by their too easy
 " granting of Prohibitions.

By the vigilant Zeal of Bishop Land, the Considerations which he had lately presented to the King, were now formed into Regal Instructions, sent to the Archbishops of Canterbury and York, by them to be transmitted to all the Bishops within their respective Provinces. Those for Canterbury were thus entitled, Instructions for the most Reverend Father in God our right-Trusty and right-entirely beloved Counsellor George Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, concerning certain Orders to be observed and put in execution by the several Bishops in his Province.

King's Instructions to the two Archbi-shops.

They differ in nothing from the Considerations before recited, excepting these Additional Particulars.

" That the Bishops take special Care that Divine " Service be diligently frequented, as well for Pray" ers and Catechisms as Sermons; and take a particu" lar Note of all such as absent themselves, as Re-" cusants or otherwise.

" That every Bishop, who by our Grace and Fa" vour, and good Opinion of his Service, shall be " nominated by us to another Bishoprick, shall " from that Day of Nomination not presume to make " any Lease for three Lives, or twenty one Years " or concurrent Lease, or any ways to renew any " Estate, or cut any Wood or Timber, but merely " to receive the Rents due, and quit the Place. For
 " we think it a hateful thing that any Man's leav" ing the Bishoprick should almost undo the Suc" cessor. And if any Man shall presume to break
 " this Order, we will refuse our Royal Assent, and " keep him at the Place he hath so abused.

" And lastly, We command you to give us an " Account every Year, the second of January, of " the Performance of these our Commands.

Nothing was more seasonable and honourable than the last but one of these Instructions. For Translations began now to be more frequent than in former Reigns; and some Bishops upon the prospect of Removal had been Sordid and Scandalous in leaving Places bare behind them. This must, however, be an Argument of the Innocence and Integrity of Bishop Land, who suggested this Advice, when he had been already removed from two Sees, and had a full view of being Translated to another.

Ep Land
 zealous for executing of them.

He was vigorous in providing for the strict execution of those Royal Injunctions: And therefore he first cited all the Ministers and Lecturers within the City and Suburbs of London, and made an affectionate Speech to them, exhorting them to obey his Majesty's late Instructions, as founded on Religion and Justice, and adapted to the Honour and Interest of Church and Common-wealth, and dislik'd by few but those who had not weigh'd them, nor so much as seen them. After which he wrote an earnest Letter (including a Letter to him from his Grace in Obedience to the King) to his several Archdeacons to press the Duty on them in their respective Visitations.

But there was now a warm Spirit of Disaffection to the Court in many of the Inferiour Clergy; Mr.

Bernard, Lecturer at St. Sepulchre's Church in London, 1629. had on January 28. 1629. used this Expression in his Prayer before Sermon: Lord open the Eyes of the Queens Majesty, that she may see Jesus Christ, whom she hath pierced with her Infidelity, Superstition and Idolatry. For which being question'd in the High Commission, the Court declared, that the Saying was unadvised and scandalous: but Mr. Bernard making an open and humble Submission, the Court desired the Bishop of London to inform his Majesty, and upon his Report the Offender was with great Mercy dismissed. Mr. Charles Chamy Minister of Ware, had likewise in a Sermon been bold to say, That Idolatry was admitted into the Church; that the preaching of the Gospel would be suppress'd; that there is much Atheism, Popery, Arminianism and Heresie crept into the Church: For which intolerable Liberty he was brought into the High Commission, and by Order of that Court the Cause was referred to the Bishop of London, who enjoind him no other Penalty than a Latin Form of Submission. And Mr. Palmer a Lecturer at St. Alphage in Canterbury, was by the Archdeacon's Certificate found to Preach without License, to read Prayers against the Minister's Will; to Catechise not according to Canon; to take upon him to declare the King's Mind in his Royal Instructions; never to use the Surplice; to have preached a factious Sermon in the Cathedral Church; and therein to have detracted from Divine Service; and so to have gained all factious Parties to be his Auditors. For which the Commissioners had only enjoind him Silence, till being informed that the Archbishop had authoris'd him to preach again, they then found a way to drive him from that City. This Seditious ferment among some few of the Lower Clergy was too easie to be improv'd, when so many of the leading Gentry were pleas'd with it; and when the Archbishop himself in Jealousie and Discontent conniv'd at it.

In Ireland the Apprehensions of Popery were more dreadful and more just. The Popish Bishops and Priests had held their publick Assemblies in all parts of that Kingdom, and exercised an open Jurisdiction: Convents were professedly erected; and even in Dublin the Friars were enough to make a Riot. Upon a due Information of these Disorders, a Letter was sent from our Privy-Council, January 31. 1629. to the Lords Justices and Council of Ireland, with Thanks for suppressing the Seditious Riot moved by the Friars and their Adherents at Dublin; with Advice to restrain them by a due and seasonable Execution of the Laws: speedily to demolish the House in Dublin, where the Archbishop and Mayor received the first Affront; and that other Houses erected to the use of superstitious Societies be converted into Houses of Correction, &c.

There can be no doubt but the King was in Conscience averse to Popery; and whatever Favours were obtained for some of that insolent Party, were all extorted from his Majesty's good Nature, in compliance with an importunate Queen. When Judgment and Inclination could exert themselves, the King always fell upon the proper Measures of establishing the Church of England at home, and of supporting the Protestant Interest abroad. To this latter effect, he granted his Letters Patents given at Westminster March 16. Regn. 5. " for a Collection to be made throughout England and Wales for the poor exiled Ministers of the Palatinate, and their Wives and Children, being spoiled of all their Temporal Estates, and exposed to unexpressible Miseries; whose Case is the more to be deplored, because these Extremities fell upon them for their Sincerity and Constancy in the true Religion. But here again some People catcht at an Offence, because in the first Patent after the Words Sincerity and Constancy in the true Religion, it follow'd thus, which we together with them do Profess, and which we are all bound in conscience to maintain to the utmost of our Powers. The Bishop of London was dissatisfied at the last Expression, and prevailed with his Majesty to have that that first Patent cancell'd, and a new one drawn with omission of that Clause. And though this Alteration was but cautious and strictly proper, yet when discovered, there were not wanting those Wits who could make a sort of Popish Plot of it.

1630. To return to the course of Civil Affairs from the beginning of the sixth Year of this Reign 1630.

Death of Will. Earl of Pembroke. On April 10. died a great Minister of State, William Earl of Pembroke, Lord Warden of the Stannaries, Governour of Portsmouth, Knight of the Garter, Lord High Steward of the Kings Household, and Chancellor of the University of Oxford. He supp'd that Night with the Countess of Bedford at Bishopsgate, and was more than ordinarily cheerful, it being his Birth-Day: After Supper he went home to Bernard's-Castle, and being that Day Seventy Years of Age, he was boasting of his Health and Strength, and said he would never trust a Woman Prophetess for the Lady Davis's sake, who had told him he should die upon that Day of his Birth. He went to Bed very well, and died of an Apoplexy before Morning.

Character of the Earl of Pembroke, by the Lord Clarendon in his Hist. of Rebel. b. 1. P. 45. His Character is thus given by the Lord Clarendon. One the most universally Beloved and Esteemed of any Man of that Age; and having a great Office in the Court, he made the Court it self better esteem'd and more reverenc'd in the Country: Well-bred, and of excellent Parts, and a graceful Speaker upon any Subject, having a good proportion of Learning, and a ready Wit to apply it, and enlarge upon it: Of a pleasant and facetious Humour, and a Disposition Affable, Generous and Magnificent. He was Master of a great Fortune from his Ancestors, and had a great addition by his Wife; but all serv'd not his Expence, which was only limited by his great Mind and Occasions to use it nobly. He lived many Years about the Court, before in it; and never by it: being rather regarded and esteem'd by King James than loved and favour'd.— He stood upon his own Feet without any other Support than of his proper Virtue and Merit.— Exceedingly beloved in the Court, because he never desired to get that for himself which others laboured for, but was still ready to promote the Pretences of worthy Men. And he was equally celebrated in the Country, for having received no Obligations from the Court, which might corrupt or sway his Affections and Judgment.— He was a great lover of his Country, and of the Religion and Justice, which he believed could only support it; and his Friendships were only with Men of those Principles.— Yet he was not without some alloy of Vice, and without being clouded with great Infirmities, which he had in too exorbitant a proportion.— He died exceedingly lamented, &c.

Project of raising Money. By occasion of the late Wars, and a want of Parliament Supply, the greatest care of the Court must be how to advance the publick Revenue: To which effect the Lords of the Council advised the King to put forth a Proclamation; declaring his Pleasure to confirm to his Subjects their defective Titles in Estates and Possessions (as well by colour of former Grants, as without any Grant from the Crown) and a Proclamation was accordingly issued May 27. to inform the People, that his Majesty had renewed a Commission to some Lords, Judges and Counsel learned, to sell, grant and confirm to them all Possessions to which their Titles were any way defective, by making of such Composition as the said Commissioners should approve and accept. Though this Method might have very well tended to the Quiet and Relief of the Subject in many dubious Tenures, which might be now made unquestionable Settlements: yet either the proceeding of the Commissioners in this Matter, or the natural Prejudice against raising Money out of Parliament, turned it into the popular Notion of a new Grievance and Oppression.

Birth of Prince Charles. On May 29. a little before One after Noon, the Queen was delivered of a Son, baptized Charles by the Lord Bishop of London, who had the Honour to see him before he was an Hour old. The King rode publickly to St. Paul's Church to give Thanks to God for the Queen's safe delivery of a Son: at which time a Star appeared in a clear Sky; seen and attested by very many Spectators. 1630.

On the same Day a great Cause was brought to Hearing in the Star-Chamber, concerning a Discourse entitled, A Proposition for his Majesty's Service to bridle the Impertinency of Parliaments; which had given so much Offence and Jealousie about the time of the last Dissolution, that the King order'd his Attorney-General to prefer an Information against the Earls of Bedford, Clare and Somerset, Sir Robert Cotton, Mr. Selden, Mr. Saint John and others, for spreading the said Libel. The Earl of Somerset by his Council pleaded, "That this Discourse was either the same that was shewed him in the time of his attendance upon his late Majesty King James, or had the same things in it. And finding no cause of concealing such a former Project, and imagining it to be of no scandal to the present Government, he had casually imparted it to the Earls of Bedford and Clare; who after perusal thereof delivered this Opinion of it at their next meeting, that it was a phantastick Project of some Brain-sick Traveller, who had made Collections of some Princes in Italy, and other Foreign States, no way suitable to the Government of this Kingdom. And upon the Depositions of Sir David Fowles it appear'd, that the very Original Manuscript was pen'd by Sir Robert Dudley at Florence, and sent over hither in the time of King James by one Mr. Tates, who sent it in a Letter to the Deponent, and he deliver'd it to the Earl of Somerset, and the Earl communicated it to the King. While this Cause was hearing in a great presence of Nobility and Gentry, the King sent Word to the Lord Keeper, "That in respect of the great Joy, upon the Birth of his Son, he should immediately order the Proceedings to be stopp'd, and the Detendants to be discharg'd. Accordingly the Keeper acquainted the Court with his Majesty's special Command: Upon which, the said Writing was ordered to be burnt as Seditious and Scandalous; and the Proceedings were taken off the File. And here, though the Project was prov'd to have been a private Essay in a former Reign, and in a Foreign Country: and tho' the stopping of Process hereupon was a generous Act of Favour upon a proper season of publick Joy; yet those Persons who had the Art and the ill nature to turn every thing, as a Disgrace and a Disadvantage upon the Court, knew how to insinuate, as if the King and the Ministry had really form'd that Scheme against the use of future Parliaments; and therefore would not suffer it to be examin'd to the bottom.

The urgent necessity of Supplies, to be in some measure suitable to the King's Honour, and the very Nations Support, must exercise the King's Council in finding out all possible Ways and Means to bring in Money. In order to this urgent end, the King sent his Letters, dated May 13. to the Judges and Attorney-General, to frame and publish certain Orders for execution of the Office of Receiver and Collector of Fines and Forfeitures, erected by his late Father of blessed Memory, and by his present Majesty confirm'd to John Chamberlayn his Majesty's Physician, and Edward Brown, Esq;. The Judges met and concluded, that the said Letters Patents were both against Law and his Majesty's Profit, and sent an account of the Excesses and Irregularities in the said Patent, in a Letter from all the Justices and Barons, directed severally to the Lord-Keeper and Lord-Treasurer. And though this did well demonstrate the Integrity of the Judges, that they would never prostitute an Opinion to the meer Interest of the King; and did as much vindicate his Majesty's Honour, that he would insist upon no Method (tho' begun by his Father) which the Judges of his Realm should not pronounce to be strictly Lawful; yet, however, this too was applied to the prejudice of the Court, as if they were pursuing Methods which the very Judges condemn'd for Arbitrary and Illegal.

hood.

Another Project was re-assum'd about imposing the Order of Knighthood, or requiring a Fine for Neglect of it, as founded upon an old Statute and customary Writts. The King set forth his Proclamation July 6. that "Whereas he had formerly sent Writts to severall Sheriffs for Summoning all that had forty Pound Land or Rent yearly, to appear at the day of his Coronation, and prepare themselves to receive the Order of Knighthood; he had now establish'd a Commission to certain Lords and others of his Privy Council, to treat and compound with all those who had made Default by not taking the said Order on them. Upon this the Nobility were ordered to compound before the Lords of the Council; and the Gentry before other Commissioners appointed in the severall Counties. The Rate for Composition was commonly requir'd to be one third and a half of as much as the Persons compounding were found rated in the Subsidy. But this too was grievously resent'd as an Imposition out of Parliament; so that many in all Parts neglected to appear, or refused to compound. This gave occasion to new Summons, and to farther Process; and the Issue in all Courts being in Favour and Confirmation of the King's Prerogative; this left upon some Spirits the deeper Impression of Regret, that they were oppress'd against Law, and yet had no Law to relieve them.

London ri-
cious.

Disaffection and Sedition were so industriously fomented in the City of London, that upon Friday July 10, upon occasion of an Arrest made by the Sheriff's Officers in Fleetstreet, a very tumultuous Riot was made upon it; and the Lord Mayor and Sheriffs, and Train'd Bands, coming down to disperse the Mob, did for a while meet with open and violent Opposition. Upon which, Proclamation was made to apprehend the Ringleaders, and in particular one Captain Vangban, Wand an English, and Henry Stamford: Several of them were soon after indicted and convicted of Murders; and among the principal, Stamford was executed.

Prohibition to Eccles.
Courts

Westminster-hall was exercis'd with many singular Cases, that serve much to express the Disposition of the Times. In Easter-Term Sir Henry Martyn, Dr. of Laws, and Judge of the Admiralty, made a great Complaint to the King against the Judges of the King's-bench, for granting Prohibitions against his Court: And upon this Occasion the Judges were called before the King, where they stoutly justified their Proceedings in those cases to be according to Law, and from whence they could not depart by virtue of their Oaths. About the next Term, the Feoffees in Trust for the buying in of Improvements to be bestow'd upon preaching Ministers, were brought into the Exchequer for breach of their Trust in not augmenting poorer Vicarages, but giving arbitrary Pensions to Lecturers and disaffected Preachers: Their Corporation was dissolved, and their Fund and Stock adjudg'd to the King; of which we must take some farther notice in our view of Church Affairs. Nigh the same time, Huntley, a Minister in Kent before mentioned, having been censur'd and imprison'd by the High Commission Court, brought now his Action of false Imprisonment against the Keeper Mr. Barker, and some of the Commissioners by Name. The Attorney General moved, that the Action might lay against the Goaler only, and by no means against any of the Persons in the High Commission: but after long Debate, the Court ordered that two of the Commissioners should Answer. The Bishop of London made the King sensible, that the Authority of his High Commission Court would fall to nothing, if the Judges of it must be now expos'd to personal Actions. Upon which the King sent his Advocate Dr. Ryles to the Lord Chief Justice, requiring him to proceed no farther in that Cause till he had spoken with his Majesty. The Chief Justice answer'd, We receive the Message, and then consulted with the Judges, and they came to this Resolution, that they conceived such a Message not to stand with their Oaths, which commanded an indefinite stay of a Cause between Party and Party, that might stop the Course of Justice so long as the King would. And they farther declared the Doctor to be no fit Messenger, all Messages from the King to them being usually by the Lord Keeper, or the Attorney General, in Causes relating to the Administration of Justice. By the Court's Desire, the Chief Justice acquainted the Lord Keeper and the Bishop of London, who both agreed that the Message was mistaken, and that the King's Mind was not to command a Stop, but to desire as much Stannets as might stand with Justice. After this, upon the Importunity of the Commissioners, who would no longer act if thus expos'd to Suits at Common Law; the King assumed the matter to himself, and sending for the Judges, charg'd them with express Command, that they should not put the Commissioners to answer. The Judges stoutly replied, that they could not, without breach of their Oaths, perform that Command. Afterwards the matter was handled at the Council-Table in Presence of the Judges; where, after long hearing, it was determin'd, that the Judges had done their duty, and that the Commissioners ought to answer. Toward the End of Trinity Term the Sickness encreasing in Southwark, Hobart, Stroud, and Valentine, three of the late Members, imprison'd in the Marshalsea, sued to the Judges of the King's-bench to be removed to the Gate-House, and were by Writ from the Court so removed. But Mr. Selden, being at the same time in the Marshalsea, had forgot or omitted to make the like Application to the King's-bench till the Term was over, and the Judges in the Circuit: After which he sued to the Lord-Treasurer for the like favour of Removal, and by Warrant from his Lordship was accordingly so removed. But in Michaelmas Term the Judges called the Marshal for his Prisoner Selden; and he producing the Treasurer's Warrant by the King's direction, they declared such Warrant to be illegal, and sent their Writ to remand the Prisoner back again to the Marshalsea. In the Hilary Term following, the Attorney-General exhibited two several Informations against Sir Miles Hobart, Kt. and William Stroud, Esq; (who by Writ from the King's-Bench had been remov'd from the Marshalsea to the Gate-House) for Escapes out of Prison, proving that Stroud had resided with a Keeper in his own Chambers at Gray's-Inn; and Hobart had continued with a Keeper at his Lodgings in Fleetstreet. The Jury return'd their Verdicts severally not Guilty: And the Judges resolv'd, that The Prison of the King's-Bench is not any local Prison confined to one Place; but that every Place where any Person is by Authority of that Court restrained of his Liberty, is a Prison. These several Cases, and the Decision of them, do abundantly prove, that the present Set of Judges were no servile Creatures of the Court; and that the King did not insist upon their obsequious Compliance with him: but they gave their Judgments with Freedom and Courage, and the King acquiesc'd in their Opinion, tho' contrary to his own.

Affairs.

Expedition of Gust.
Adolphus
King of Sweden.

We must now look over upon the Foreign Affairs of this Year. The King was in Honour and Good-nature earnest to relieve his Sister, and restore if possible the Palatinate to her Husband. In order to this the Marquess of Hamilton was to carry over an Army of six thousand Men, for assistance of the King of Sweden, to be employ'd against the Imperialists or any other Enemies, for restoring our oppress'd Friends in Germany. And Articles of Agreement between Gustavus Adolphus, King of Sweden, and James Marquess of Hamilton, were signed May 31. 1620. Soon after, the King of Sweden crosses the Baltick Sea with a Fleet; and declaring the Causes of his Expedition into Germany, he landed upon the Coast of Pomeran about the middle of June. To enable the Marquess Hamilton to raise and transport his Men, the King granted him a Lease of the Custom of Wines in Scotland for sixteen Years. Upon this Fund the Marquess levied his Men in Scotland; and toward Winter

1630. ter came back to the Court in England to receive the King's Order for their Embarkment. But here one Mackay, Lord Ochiltry, charg'd the Marquess with a treasonable Design of Raising this new Army with an Intention when he was at the Head of them to set himself up as King of Scotland. The Lord Treasurer Weston encourag'd this Suggestion, and press'd it home to the King; who told Hamilton, the next time he came into his Presence, what an Accusation was brought against him: but, says the King, I don't believe it; and that the World may know I have a Confidence in your Loyalty, you shall lie in my Bed-chamber this Night. And the Marquis did accordingly continue in the most intimate Accesses to the King, who hitherto had this Principle, Never to suspect his Friends, and never to desert them.

Endeavours for Restituti-
on of the Palatinate.

At this time a Dyet was held at Ratisbone in Germany, to which an Ambassadour was sent from the King of Great Britain, and another from the Palgrave, to accommodate, if possible, the Restitution of the Palatinate. Sir Robert Anstruther, the English Ambassadour, presented his Master's ardent Request to his Imperial Majesty, "That having regard to the many Intercessions of his late Father, and other Kings and Princes, he would remit the Displeasure conceived against his Brother the Prince Elector, and recall the Proscription issued out against him. It was only answered, "That the present Affairs of Germany, which occasioned the Dyet, were so important, as not to admit of any foreign Debate; and ver, upon Opportunity and Leisure, the King of Great Britain should receive such Satisfaction as would be agreeable. This Answer was soon found to be a Complement: for the Emperour propos'd to the Dyet to pass an Act, that the Palgrave should continue a banish'd Man, and that no Offers of Return should be made to him. And many other of the Protestant Princes had their Lands confiscated, and had other great Hardships impos'd upon them. Upon which the Dyet broke up on Nov. 3. leaving the Palatinate and the whole Protestant Interest in a more desperate Condition. This made the Reformed Princes enter into Consultation for their own Safety, and by a Letter from the Duke of Saxony to his Imperial Majesty, they obtained Leave to hold a Dyet by themselves at Lipsick on Feb. 8. following: where they laid open their Grievances to the Emperour; and upon Denial of their Requests, they enter'd into a League to redress themselves. The Emperour put forth his Imperial Ban against them, but they supported their Cause and Courage by the Advances of the King of Sweden.

In the mean time, the King of Spain promising that he would improve his utmost Interest in the Emperour towards the Restoration of the Prince Elector, Articles of Peace were publish'd Dec. 5. between the Crowns of England and Spain. So that now the King was deliver'd from two very expensive and very ineffectual Wars, that had unhappily betrayed him to be somewhat too poor and weak both Abroad and at Home.

Tried and Executed.

We pass on to the 7 Car. 1631. when Mervin Lord Audley, Earl of Castlehaven in Ireland, having had 3 Indictments found against him at Salisbury Assizes for a Rape upon his own Wife, and for Sodomy, was tried by his Peers in Westminster-hall on Apr. 25. and being found guilty of those abominable Sins, in the most aggravating ways of Commithon, he was sentenc'd to Death, and soon after executed.

More little Projects for Raising Money.

The Ways and Means of raising Money in the Intervals of Parliament, were thought as necessary to the King, as they were odious to the People: and the Necessity defend'd to little Arts, that were not for that reason less offensive. An Office was now erected for the Sealing of Playing Cards; and the Duties hence arising were Farm'd out to one Henry Cogan. The Master and Wardens of the Company of Card-makers made some Opposition to it, but submitted to a Contract with the King that made the Profit answerable to the Project. A like Contract was made between his Majesty and the Dicemakers of the City of London, to pay an allotted Proportion for every Bale of Dice. On July 27. by Order of the Privy Council, there came out Printed Instructions for Musters and Arms and the Use thereof, upon occasion of the Trained-Bands of several Counties being order'd to march to the Sea-coasts for Defence of the Kingdom: The Rates to be paid to the Muster-master of each County were thought a Grievance, tho' grounded upon Precedent in the Reigns of K. James and Q. Elizabeth. Several Persons refusing to pay the Assessment, were sent for up by Messengers to the Council-Table, where they most of them submitted. But the Misfortune was, that under a Jealousie of new Impositions, People were alarm'd and affrighted at the calling for any old Custom or Tribute.

Further to increase the Revenues of the Crown, Letters Patent were granted to erect a new Society or Body corporate, by the Name of The Governour, Assistants, and Society of Soap-makers. And all who did not come into this Corporation, were prohibited the Trade of Soap-boiling. This brought into the Exchequer ten thousand Pounds by way of Advance, and eight Pound a Tun for all Soap hereafter boiled. This was look'd on as a Monopoly, and all other Trades began to be jealous of the like practising upon them.

On Monday Aug. 22. the Lord-Keeper and Judges consulted how to examine into the Truth of the late Charge against the Marquis of Hamilton. The Lord Rex, a Scotch Baron, impeach'd Ramsay and Meldrum for moving him beyond the Seas to join in this Conspiracy: Ramsay denied the Fact, and offer'd to clear himself by Combat; and Rex accepting of the Challenge, the Judges now declared, 1. That it was an high and horrible Treason, if the matter in the Examinations were found true. 2. That the Trial might be by an Appeal of Treason, after the manner of the Civil Law, the Judges not to intermeddle. Upon which Opinion, a Court of Chivalry was erected by Commithon under the Great Seal, dated Novemb. 24. And after very long and formal Proceedings, when the Parties were just ready for Combat, the King interpos'd; and to prevent the Duel, sent them both Prisoners to the Tower.

agreed between Ramsay
and Rex.

On Friday Aug. 26. Sir Nicholas Hyde, Chief Justice of the King's-Bench, died at his House in Hampshire, a Man of great Integrity, Wisdom, and Temper. He had this Character given him by Judge Whitlock; Being made Chief Justice 2 Car. he lived in the Place with great Integrity and Uprightness, and with great Wisdom and Temper, considering the Ticklishness of the Times. He would never undertake to the King, nor adventure to give him a resolute Answer in any weighty business, when the Question was of the Law; but he would pray that he might confer with his Brethren: and the King ever gave way to it. This latter Acknowledgment from a Writer who was not partial to the King, is a great Argument that some following Opinions of the Judges in this Reign were not extorted by any Menace from their Royal Master.

Sir Nich.
Hyde, Ch-Justice.

His Character.

As to our foreign Affairs this Year, the Marquis of Hamilton was early provided to transport his six thousand Men to be employed in the Service of the King of Sweden; yet he could not set Sail with them before the 19th of July. He landed in Pomerania Aug. 2. where he stay'd for the coming of six thousand Swedes to march with them through the Enemies Quarters to the King. But that Convoy failing, he lost the Honour of being engaged in the Battle of Lipsick, which happen'd about a Month after, to the great Regret of himself and his Army.

Affairs.

The King of Sweden in a Letter under his own hand, gave our King an account of his Victory obtained against Tilly the Imperial General, in the Battle before Lipsick. After this signal Defeat, he march'd on with little opposition. In this Month of September, Sir Henry Vane, Kt. Comptroller of his Majesty's Household, and one of the Privy Council, was sent Ambassador Extraordinary to the Kings of 1631. Sweden and Denmark, and other Princes and States of Germany, with command to impart his publick and private Instructions to the Marquis of Hamilton, whom he met at Wintzburgh in October; and was admitted to Audience of the King of Sweden on January 29. at Frankfort, where he earnestly press'd that his Majesty would undertake the Restitution of the Elector Palatine, King of Bohemia, to his Estates and Dignity. The King answer'd, "That he could not do this without having War with France and Bavaria; nor could he undertake any such War unless the King of England would enter into an Alliance with him against the Spaniards. However it was concerted, that upon the King of Bohemia's arrival at the Swedish Camp, where he was speedily expected, the Chancellor of the Swedes and the English Ambassadour, should enter into Treaty of this difficult Affair.

Form of Healing.

To resume the Thread of Church History for these two last Years. Decency and Order in Religion were continually Suggested by the Bishop of London, and as heartily approv'd by the King; who on April 6. 1630. published a Proclamation for the better ordering of those who repair to the Court for the Cure of the Disease called the Kings Evil. At which time a Form of Divine Service was used, the Gospel from the 16th of St. Mark, Jesus appeared unto the Eleven, &c. and from the first of St. John, In the Beginning was the Word, &c. when the King put the Angel about the Neck of the Party touch'd, these Words were repeated: That Light was the true Light, which lighteth every Man that cometh into the World. After this the Lord's Prayer; then a Collect on behalf of the Disease'd, that they receiving Health may give Thanks to God, &c. Tho' there was nothing in this Matter but what was grave and regular; yet, those who sought for Offences, knew how to murmur about Superstition and Will-Worship.

Petition of the Clergy of York for a better Maintenance.

The Ministers of the City of York, on May 24. made an Address to the Archbishop of that Province, and to the President of the North, for a more ample Allowance; they approv'd the Cause, and refer'd it to the Lords of the Privy-Council, who made an Order, directed to the Archbishop, the President, the Mayor and Aldermen of York, to enter into serious Consideration, how the Wants of those Ministers might be supplied, by levying an indifferent and competent Sum out of every Man's House-Rent as might not be burthensom; that to the poor City Clergy, having their Maintenance augmented, might be enabled and encouraged to discharge their Duty. But tho' the thing was highly reasonable, and there were Precedents for it in the Cities of London and Norwich; yet this too made a noise of Arbitrary Power and illegal Imposition.

Case of Dr. Leighton.

On June 4. the Cause of Alexander Leighton, D.D. a Scot, was heard in the Star-Chamber. An Information had been exhibited against him, for framing and publishing a scandalous and seditious Book, entitled, An Appeal to the Parliament, or a Plea against Prelacy: wherein he asserted, that God's People were persecuted in this Island; that the Prelates were Men of Blood; that their Prelacy was Antichristian and Satanicall; that kneeling at the Sacrament was a spawn of the Beast; that the Queen was a Daughter of Hell; and many other insolent and libellous Expressions. The Defendant confess'd the writing of the Book, and pleaded nothing but his good Intention of remonstrating certain Grievances in Church and State, for the Parliament to redress them. The two Lord Chief Justices being present, delivered their Opinions, that they would have proceeded against him for Treason, if the Cause had come before them. And other Lords affirmed it to be his Majesty's great Mercy and Goodness, that he was brought to receive the Censure of this Court, and not arraigned for a Traitor at another Bar.

1631.

Upon this Conviction and Confession and Declaration of the Judges and Lords of the Council, he was sentenced to a perpetual Imprisonment in the Fleet, and to a Fine of ten thousand Pounds; to be degraded in the Ecclesiastical Court; to be then Pilloried and Whipp'd, to have his Ears cut off, his Nose slit, and his Face branded. But waiting for the Penitence of the Offender, no part of this Sentence was put in execution, till the beginning of November; when being degraded on the 4th. he was to have had his corporal Punishment on the 10th of that Month: But he escaped out of Prison the Evening before, and being soon after apprehended in Bedfordshire, and brought back to the Fleet, he had the former Sentence fully executed on him. And tho' the nature of the Crime, and the obstinacy of the Offender, and indeed the necessity of suppressing the Spirit of Zealots, did sufficiently require this Severity, yet it had the natural effect of moving pity in the People, and of raising harder Thoughts against the Government.

His Escape

Taken and Suffers

Upon the Death of the Earl of Pembroke the Chancellorship of the University of Oxford was by great majority of Votes conferr'd upon Dr. Laud Bishop of London, who was absolutely the greatest Patron of Learning and Religion, the greatest Promoter of Discipline and Government, and the greatest Benefactor to all publick Designs of Piety and Charity, and therefore the most fit for this Honour. The greatness of his Soul may be measured by these Projects, which he set down in November 1630, and he finish'd most of them, and at least began all the rest.

1. "To build at St. John's in Oxford, where I was bred up, for the good and safety of that College.
2. "To overthrow the Feoffments, dangerous both to Church and State, going under the specious pretence of buying in Impropriations.

4. "To set upon the Repair of St. Paul's Church in London.
5. "To collect and perfect the broken Statutes of the University of Oxford, which have lain in a confused heap some hundred Years.
6. "To settle the Statutes of all the Cathedral Churches of the new Foundations, whose Statutes are imperfect and not confirmed.
7. "To annex for ever some settled Commendams, and those if it may be fine curâ, on all the small Bishopricks, for Bristol, Peterborough, St. Asaph, Chester and Oxford.

9. "To see the Tythes of London settled between the Clergy and the City.

12. "To procure a large Charter for Oxford, to confirm their ancient Privileges, and obtain new for them, as large as those of Cambridge, which they have got since Henry VIII. and Oxford have not.

 them to have a greatnefs of Soul above the ordinary extent of Mankind: And his profecuting moft of them to their full effect did prove that by a conftancy of Mind his Refolutions (as far as poffible) came up to his generous Attempts. A Prelate of his excellent Spirit might have had fome Infirmities allowed and forgiven to him: And efppecially becaufe without thefe Infirmities, he could have never had thofe Virtues. For without a warmth of Temper, and fome vehemence and impetus of Mind, he could never have fupported himfelf in fuch glorious Intentions, that drew infinite Difficulties and Dangers on him. A Man whom the World fhould have called Wife, would never have engaged in fuch vaft Undertakings, or would at leaft have timely receded from them.

Consecration of Creed Church in London.

By this active zeal of doing Good out of the ordinary courfe of other Men, he raifed Envy and Oppofition in all he did. On the 16th of Jan. 1630. he con-fecrated St. Catharine Creed Church in London; where obferving all the Ceremonies of Reverence and Devotion, that could make fuch an Office more Solemn and Sacred; he had on this occafion the charge of Innovation and Superftition renewed upon him: and it was remember'd and objected at his Tryal; where he learnedly defended his Form of Consecration, and proved it the fame which Bp. Andrews had drawn up.

He promotes the Repair of St. Paul's Church.

He had fet his Heart upon the Strength and Beauty of his own Cathedral: and to that pious end he obtained a Commiffion under the Broad-Seal, dated Apr. 10. 1631. to authorize the Abps. of Canterbury and York, the Bp. of London and Wincheftler, all the Lds. of the Council, the Lords Ch. Juftices, the Mayor and Aldermen, the Dean and Residentiaries, to purfue this Work. And for the more effectual promoting of it, a Register was appointed for the Subfcription of Benefactors; Briefs were iffued forth to ftir up Contributions; Letters Monitory were fent from the Council Table to feveral Juftices in the Country; and thefe Re- folutions taken by a Committe to carry on the Buftnefs.

And decent ufe
 of it.

1. " That once a Year Certificates be made of the " Monies given, and the Donors Names.
2. " That a Clerk of the Work be choſen, and a " Pay-Maſter and a Purveyor.
3. " The Work not to begin till there be 10000 l.
 " in Bank.
4. " When the Scaffolds are up, and the Work be" gan; 2 or 3 Chelts to be fet within the Church, " for receiving the Benevolences of well difpofed
 " Perfons to the ſaid Work.

And the Council Board by ſpecial Direction and Commiffion from his Majesty, took into confideration a care as well for the Religious and Decent ufe of the Infide as for repairing of the Outſide; and how to remove that Offence taken as well by Foreigners as thoſe of our own Nation, that in time of Divine Service, while the upper part of the Church is uſed for Praying and Preaching, the nether part of the Church is uſed as an Exchange for Men to meet in, to walk, talk, and difcourſe of all things: Upon their Deliberation and Advice, his Majesty publiſh'd his ſpecial Commands and Orders for the Reformation of Abufes in Cathedral Churches, particularly that of St. Paul in London, lately begun.

1. " That no Man of what Quality ſoever, ſhall " preſume to walk in the Iſles of the Quire, or in the " Body or Iſles of the Church, during the time of divine Service, or the celebration of the bleſſed Sacrament, or Sermons, or any part of them; neither do any thing that may diſturb the Service of the Church or diminifh the Honour due to ſo holy a Place.

 2. " That no Man preſume to profane the Church, by the carriage of Burthens or Baskets, or any Portage whatſoever.
 3. " That all Parents and Maſters of Families do ſtrictly forbid their Children and Servants to play at any time in the Church, or any way miſdemean themſelves in that place, in time of divine Service or o-therwiſe. And if any Children or Servants be found ſo doing, beſides the puniſhment of the Delinquents, their Parents and Maſters ſhall be ſubject to ſuch Cenſures and Punifhments as is thought fit to be inflicted.

 Orders for the reforming abuſes in Cathedral Churches.

" Theſe Orders by command of his Majesty now published, to the intent that no Man may hereafter pretend ignorance for his Excufe in any of them.

No one could imagine that this new Structure of the principal Church in the chief City of the Kingdom could have met with any Exceptions to it, but from the profefs'd Enemies of Piety and Charity and common Good. And yet it ſo happen'd, that by ſome Neceſ-ſities or Overſights in the management of this Work, ſome Offences were taken, and grievous Complaints were made of them: For ſome Houſes and Shops adjoining to St. Paul's were thought fit to be demolifh-ed, for the greater ſafety or beauty of the Fabrick: and tho' reaſonable compenſation was made to the Owners, yet this was thought obtruding and extorting. Again, the Limits of the Church-yard were to be ſomewhat enlarged, and to be cleared from the obſtruction and encroachment of ſome Walls and Buildings; which (tho' with due Satisfaction to all Parties concerned) had a ſhow of waſt and depopulation. A Vault for Burial, belonging to the Pariſh of St. Gregory's, running too near the Sides of the Cathedral, and threatning the Foundations of it, was order'd to be fill'd up with Earth. Firſt a Wall of St. Gregory's, and then the whole Church it ſelf was found neceſſary to be pull'd down by Order of Council; and the Pariſhioners afſigned to the Weſt-end of Chriſt-Church, even againſt the conſent of that Pariſh. After all voluntary Contributions greater Supplies were ſtill wanting to carry on the vaſt Expence; and therefore to raiſe more Money, the Fines and Commutations in the High-Commiſſion and Spiritual Courts, were commonly affigned to this uſe; and this made Offenders murmur, as if their Penalties were impos'd only for a Tax to Pauls. In ſhort, this glorious Enterprize of Bp.
Land, tho' it might have wipp'd out all other prejudice againſt him, yet it unhappily ſerv'd to foment the Paſſions of thoſe little angry People, who turned all the Marks of Generoſity and Magnificence into the Tokens of Pride and Ambition.

Offences

 the Repair of S. Paul's

In June and July there were ſome diſorders in Oxford occaſioned by Mr. Tho. Ford of Magdalen-Hall, Mr. Giles Thorn of Baliol College, and Mr. Giles Hodges of Exeter College, who in their Sermons at St. Mary's had bitterly inveigh'd againſt the Arminians as Pelagians and Hereticks. This was thought a breach of the K's Inſtructions, that had been publiſh'd to quiet theſe Controverſies; and therefore at the motion of the Chancellor Bp. Land, they were cited as Offenders before the Vice-chancellor Dr. Smith, and charg'd with per-turbation of the Peace, and violation of the King's Injunctions. They appeal'd from the Vice-chancellor to the two Proctors, Mr. Bruch and Mr. Doughly, who received their Appeals, and thereby obſtructed Juſtice in a Cauſe that did not ſtatutably come before them. The Vice-chancellor by Advice appeal'd to the King, who heard the Matter in Council at Woodſtock on Tueſday Aug. 23. where Sentence was, that the 3 Preachers ſhould be expelled the Univerſity; the two Proctors ſhould come into the Convocation Houſe and there reſign their Office. And becauſe Dr. Pi- deaux Rector of Exeter, and Dr. Wilkinſon Principal of Magdalen-Hall, did ſeem to countenance the Men and their Cauſe, they receiv'd a ſharp Admonition from the Council Board.

Mr. Hodges submitting, was ordered,

1. "To make a publick Recantation Sermon in St. Mary's Church, before the Univerſity, confeſſing his great Offence in Preaching contrary to his Majesty's Declaration.

2. "To make a Submiſſion and Recantation in a Form preſcrib'd, in the Convocation-Houſe, before the whole Aſſembly of the Doctōrs, Proctors, Regent and Non-Regent Maſters, on his bended Knees.

3. "In the ſaid Recantation to acknowledge, that he fell upon the Delivery of thoſe Points, which by his Majesty's Royal Injunctiō were forbidden him to meddle with; and particularly to confeſs, that he let fall ſome Paſſages which might be taken to the Diſparagement of the Government of the Church, in making Erroneous and Heretical Opinions the way to Preferment; for which he was to crave the Pardon of the Univerſity in general, and more eſpecially of the moſt honourable Chancellor.

But however juſt and reaſonable this Diſcipline was to reſtrain the Intemperance of forward Preachers, and to ſilence, if poſſible, thoſe dark and dangerous Diſputes; yet this too did not fail to be charg'd as a Partiality upon the Biſhop, and as an Argument of his too potent Influence upon the King and Council.

In Michaelmas-Term certain Queſtions were propoſed to the Judges concerning the Liberties and Exemptions of the Clergy.

1. Whether Clergy-men were bound to find Watch or Ward day or night? To this the Answer was deferred till the Judges had inform'd themſelves of the Practice in the Counties where they went their Circuit.

2. Whether Clergy Men might be compelled to take Apprentices by the Statute of the Poor in 43 Eliz.? They agreed that no Man was expreſly out of the Statute: but there was a diſcretion to be uſed in the Juſtices of Peace, to conſider where it was fit to put the Child to be kept; and where it was fitter to take Money toward the putting of it out.

The obſervation of the Lord's-Day was now made a moſt unhappy ſubject of Diſpute: Some Doctrines were advanc'd ſo Sabbatarian and Jewiſh, that the Rigours of this one Party gave occaſion to extreme looſeneſs in another. The Liberties taken at Wakes, or annual Feaſts of Dedication of Churches, were grown to that exceſs in ſome Parts, that Judge Richardſon in a Circuit, made an Order to ſuppreſs them. This was thought intruding upon the Eccleſiaſtical Power; Bp. Laud complain'd to the King, and the Judge was reprov'd. Nothing made this Controverſy more unhappy, than that it gave occaſion for the Book of Sports to be hereafter mention'd.

We are now to proſecute Civil Affairs from the beginning of 1632. 8 Car. The too great Reſort of the Nobility, Gentry, and dignified Clergy to the Court and City, and thereby leaving the Country deſtitute of Hoſpitality, and the other Benefits of Reſidence; was a good Reaſon for his Majesty, by Proclamation, dated June 20. "To charge and command, that before the end of forty days, all Lords, Knights, Gentlemen, and Clerks, ſhould reſort to the ſeveral Counties where they uſually reſided, and there keep their Habitations and Hoſpitality, except ſuch as were of his Majesty's Council, or bound to Attendance on the King or Queen, or their Children. But the immediate cauſe of this Diſmiſſion, was a Fear, that the Acceſs of People from infeſted Places in the Country, might again endanger the Town lately delivered from the Plague. And therefore another Proclamation was dated the ſame Day at Greenwich, "To inhibit the Reſort of his Majesty's People to the Court, for Cure of the King's Evil, and to reſtrain the Acceſs of others from Infeſted Places.

Mr. Attorney General Noy, in the Eaſter Term, brought in Information in the King's Bench againſt the Mayor and Commonalty of London, for that in June 1628. Dr. John Lamb was ſlain in a Tumult and Riot, and none of the Offenders taken, nor any Perſon known or indicted for that Felony. The Mayor and Commonalty appearing, confeſſed the Offence, and ſubmitted themſelves to the Favour of the Court, and were Fined in 1500 Marks, as for a Tranſgreſſion in Common Law. But tho' the Proſecution was juſt, and Submiſſion made the Amercement as it were voluntary; yet the Diſgrace and the Loſs together left a ſore place upon the Hearts of many of the Citizens, who began to hate the Court for bearing hard upon them.

Mr. William Pryme now publiſhed his Hiſtorio-Maſtix, or Book againſt Stage Plays, Licenſed by the Chaplain of Archbiſhop Abbot; wherein, with very profane Collections, he expoſ'd the Liberties of the Stage, and condemn'd the very Lawfulneſs of Acting. In his way of Writing he could not refrain from over-doing any Subject and from many Appearances of Railiing. And becauſe the Court became now more addiſted to theſe ludicrous Entertainments, and the Queen her ſelf was ſo fond of the Amuſement that ſhe had bore the Part of a Paſtoral in her own Royal Perſon; therefore this Treatiſe againſt Plays was ſuſpected to be level'd againſt the Practice of the Court, and the Example of the Queen: and it was ſuppos'd an Imuendo, that in the Table of the Book this Reference was put, Women Actors notorious Whores. The Attorney-General proſecuted Pryme for this Libel in the Star-Chamber, where he was ſentenc'd to Imprifonment and other Penalties. The Miſfortune was, that Biſhop Laud was the Inſtrument and Abetter of this Proceſs againſt the Book and the Author, by ſhewing the Book to the King, and pointing at the offensive parts of it; and then by employing Dr. Heylyn to pick out all the virulent Paſſages, and give the ſevereſt Turn to them; and laſtly, by carrying thoſe Notes to the Attorney-General for matter of Information, and urging him earneſtly to proceed againſt the Author: Which tho' a Prelate might do with ſincere Intention to ſuppreſs Libelling, and to aſſert a Reſpect to crown'd Heads; yet it was look'd upon, by ſome ſerious Men, as a giving countenance to the Licentiouſneſs and Prophaneneſs of the Stage, which ought rather to have been Reproved and Reſtrained by a Chriſtian Biſhop.

Mr. Francis Windebank (ſoon after Knighted) was made Secretary of State by the Intereſt of Biſhop Laud, who has thus enter'd it in his Diary, 1632. June 15. Mr. Francis Windebank, my old Friend, was ſworn Secretary of State; which Place I obtained for him of my gracious Maſter King Charles. He proved ſo much a Creature of the Queens, and ſuch an Advocate and Patron of all ſuſtaining Priests and Jeſuits, that he got the Character of a Papiſt, and brought the greater Odium upon Biſhop Laud, who preferr'd him, and who for that Reaſon was to answer to the People for his good Behaviour. That which created the more Envy, was the turning out an old Secretary, Sir John Coke, whole Age and Infirmities had indeed made him unfit for Buſineſs.

Take his Character from a Writer excelling in that way. "Sir John Coke, upon the Death of Sir Albert Moreton, was, from being Maſter of Requeſts, preferr'd to be Secretary of State. A Man of a very narrow Education, and a narrower Nature; having continued long in the Univerſity of Cambridge, where he had gotten Latin Learning enough; and afterwards in the Country in the condition of a private Gentleman, till after he was fifty Years of Age; when upon ſome Reputation he had for Induſtry and Diligence, he was called to ſome painful Employment in the Office of the Navy, which he diſcharg'd well, and afterwards to be Maſter of Requeſts, and then to be Secretary of State, which he enjoy'd to a great Age: And was a Man rather unadorn'd with any Parts of Vigour and Quickneſs, and unwindow'd with any notable Virtues, than notorious for any weakneſs or defect of Underſtanding, or tranſported with any vicious Inclinations, Appetite to Money

King had the Small Pox. Toward the end of November, the King was much indisposed, and had the Small-Pox appearing on him, on Sunday Decem. 2. but the Disease was very gentle and safe, tho' so fatal to many of his Royal Posterity.

State of Ireland. Ireland, under the Government of Lords Justices, was under great Ferments and Distempers, owing chiefly to the potent Faction of the Papists; who had been too much conniv'd at and encouraged, and according to the Nature of those Men, and that Religion, had turned all Favour into intolerable Insolence. To reduce the Affairs of that Kingdom into better Peace and Order, the King sent the Lord Wentworth, under the Title of Lord Deputy, upon good Experience of his Spirit of Discipline and Conduct, as President of the North; where he had indeed carried some things with extremity of Rigour, tho' perhaps no farther than the Necessity and Iniquity of Times requir'd.

Foreign Affairs. As to Foreign Affairs, we left Sir Henry Vane in an Embassy to the King of Sweden, at the head of a marching Army, solliciting for the restauration of the Palgrave to his Dominions in the Palatinate. He had his last Audience about the middle of July, when that successful Prince offer'd these hard Proposals.

- Offers of the King of Sweden.
- I. " That the Palgrave should hold his Country as a Donative of the King of Sweden.
 - II. " That he should make no Martial Levies without the Swedes consent.
 - III. " That during this War he should furnish the Swedes with so many thousand Men upon his own Pay.
 - IV. " That two of his chiefest Towns should stand Cautionaries for the performing of Covenantants.
 - V. " That he should make no League nor Article with any other Prince without the Swedes consent.

The Ambassador knew, that his Master and the Palgrave, and all Mankind, would think these Terms dishonourable; and therefore he expostulated with the King of Sweden, upon the hardness of them, in so much freedom of Speech, that they both parted in a Passion, and the Treaty broke off. The King of England perceiving his Forces not likely to be employ'd, as he designed them, for the Service of the Palatinate, wrote to the Marquis of Hamilton to make an Excuse and return home: and sent Letters to the King of Sweden, charging him with obstructing a League between them, and so recalling his Ambassador, who came away in the beginning of November, leaving Instructions with his Secretary Mr. Curtius, who staid behind as his Majesty's Agent with the King of Sweden. After this, the Swedish Army pass'd on with rapid Success. Tilly had been often defeated, and at last wounded to Death; and Count Wallenstein in great disgust for having been cashier'd at the Diet of Ratisbone, had been now forc'd to be courted to re-accept the Office of Generalissimo of the Imperial Army. The deciding Battle was fought at Lutzen on Novem. 6. 1632. wherein the King of Sweden was unfortunately Slain; and yet his Death was so far from being a damp to his Army, that it incens'd them to Revenge, and they came off with Victory. The Palgrave, or Prince Elector, much encourag'd by the King of Sweden to hope for Right and Restitution, tho' no Conditions could be expressly made, died of an Infection taken at Mentz, on the 29th of the same Month. And Wallenstein soon after being discover'd in a Conspiracy, to make himself King of Bohemia, was murder'd in his Bed-Chamber.

The Emperor of Muscovy designing to regain the Town of Smolensko from the King of Poland, applied himself to the King of England for leave to raise two thousand Men; who by consent were accordingly rais'd, and Commanded by Colonel Thomas Sanderfon, who landed them at Archangel on the 6th. of August, and march'd them to the Siege of Smolensko, where, upon a pretence of Honour, Colonel Sanderfon was basely murder'd by Colonel Lejey, and this drew the Scotch and English into Parties of Revenge and Defence. The Poles took advantage of this Mutiny and Distraction, and at that Juncture fell upon the Muscovite with that fury and success, that they made them quit the Siege and comply with dishonourable Terms of Peace.

The Earl of Leicefter was sent Ambassador to Denmark, to condole the decease of the Queen Dowager, and to demand the Dividend of a sixth part of her Estate, as due to our King and his Sister the Lady Elizabeth, in Right of their Mother Queen Anne. But the King of Denmark pretended to a Debt from the Crown of England, and so one Demand was to satisfy the other. And in December the Earl of Arundel was by the King sent over to his Sister at the Hague, to condole the Loss of her unfortunate Husband, and to invite her and her Children into England: But she sent an Excuse for the present, as being too much immers'd in Sorrow, and not yet able to undertake the Journey.

The Year 1633. began with the King's Preparation for a Progress into Scotland, where he had been expected for the solemnity of a Coronation ever since his Fathers Death. His long delay had been unkindly resent'd in that Kingdom; and some Murmurs were given out, that if the King did not think the Crown of Scotland worth his Journey thither, there might be some other way of disposing of it.

To make this seasonable Progress with more Pomp and Order, the King issued his Proclamation on the 4th of May, that competent Provisions should be made for his Royal Person and Attendants, in the several parts of this Realm through which he was to pass; and that the Prizes of them should be Assess'd and Rated by the Clerk of the Market of the King's Household. And the next Day, May 5. another Proclamation was published for the better ordering his Majesty's Court and Train in his Journey to Scotland, and his return from thence. And then his Guests or Stays upon the Road being appointed as to Time and Place, on May 12. his Majesty set out from London with a noble Retinue of the Earls of Northumberland, Arundel, Pembroke, Southampton, Holland, Marquis Hamilton, Bishop of London, and many other Persons of Quality. He accepted of many noble Entertainments by the way; at Welbeck from the Earl of Newcastle, at Raby Castle from Sir Henry Vane, at Durham several Days by Bishop Morton, and at Newcastle from the Magistrates and Town. The King enter'd Scotland on the 12th of June, when immediately all his English Servants and Officers yielded up their places of Attendance to the Scots, who were admitted to the same Titles and Duties. June 15. the King enter'd Edinburgh in great State and Magnificence; and indeed the Pomp and Grandeur of the Scotch Nobility, had so much Emulation and Profuseness in it, that the Debts which they now contracted, did help to breed and foment the Seditions that soon after broke out. June 18. was the Coronation Day, which pass'd with as much Solemnity and publick Joy as could possibly fill the Hearts of Prince and People: The Sermon was preach'd by Dr. David Lindsay Bishop of Brechin, upon 1 Kings 1. 39. and the chief Ceremonies performed by Dr. Spotswood Archbishop of St. Andrews.

The Parliament began June 20. the Archbishop of St. Andrews preach'd, and the King made a very gracious Speech. Then the Lords and Members of the Articles being chose, they prepared and presented several Bills, which were pass'd, agreeable to the King's 1633. King's Desire, and the Parliament dissolved on Friday June 28. the King returning toward Berwick on Tuesday July 16.

He returns. Effect of this Progress.

In this Progress the King carried himself with great Prudence and Moderation, and yet many things concurr'd to open a way for those Commotions which afterward distracted both Kingdoms. For first, it did now appear, that the Scotch Noblemen, who had been greatest Favourites in the English Court, had the least Interest in their own Country: and that the Bounties thrown upon them by the King and his Father were not look'd upon as any Favour to the Nation, but as Obligations cast away upon those particular Men, who in being the more gracious with the King, were but the more suspected to the People. Secondly, Some of the Scotch Nobility endeavour'd to make themselves Popular by speaking in Parliament against those things which were most grateful to his Majesty; and in entering their Dissent to some Acts; for which the King did openly discountenance several of them, and made them not forgive the King, because they imagin'd the King would never forgive them. Thirdly, Two or three Acts were passed, which did much lessen the Authority of the great Men, and the Subjection and Dependence of their Tenents; which serv'd to incense the one, and to make the other more licentious. But fourthly, the worst of all was, the Fears and Jealousies taken up by the Kirk Party: They were taught to be upon their Guard by the Bishop of London's waiting on the King; and they look'd with a worse Eye upon him, when they heard him preach in the Royal Chapel at Edenborough, chiefly on the Benefit of Conformity, and the Reverence due to the Ceremonies of the Church. They grew more and more angry, when the King during his Stay had erected and endowed an Episcopal See at Edinburgh, and had promoted some of the Bishops to principal Offices of State, and had committed the framing and composing of a Liturgy for the Church of Scotland to a select Number of their Bishops. These softest Steps were with great Indignation exclaim'd upon, as a Project to make Scotland subject to all the Forms and Establishments of England, which they pretended would make their Kingdom appear like a depending Province, and leave their Kirk deprived of all the Remainder of its own way of Reformation.

Death of Abp. Abbot.

His Character by the Lord Clarendon.

The King having come Post from Berwick in four days, reach'd on Saturday July 20. to Greenwich, where the Queen kept her Court. Aug. 4. Archbishop Abbot, having been long dead to the Church, died at Lambeth. An honourable Author observes, that "He had fate too many Years in that See, and had too great a Jurisdiction over the Church. — He had been promoted to Canterbury upon the never enough lamented Death of Dr. Bancroft, that Metropolitan who understood the Church excellently, and had almost rescued it out of the hands of the Calvinian Party, and very much subdued the unruly Spirit of the Nonconformists; countenanced Men of the greatest Parts in Learning, and disposed the Clergy to a more solid course of Study than they had been accustomed to; and if he had lived would quickly have extinguished all that Fire in England which had been kindled at Geneva; or if he had been succeeded by Bishop Andrews, Bishop Overal, or any Man who understood and loved the Church; that Infection would easily have been kept out, which could not afterwards be so easily expelled. But Abbot brought none of this Antidote with him, &c. — And tho many other Bishops plainly discern'd the Mischief which daily broke in to the prejudice of Religion, and prevented it in their Diocesses as much as they could — yet that temper in the Archbishop, whose House was a Sanctuary to the most Eminent of that factious Party, and who Licens'd their most pernicious Writings, left his Successor a very difficult work to do, to reform and reduce a Church into Orders that had been so long neglected, and that was so ill filled with many weak and more willful Church-Men.

This Honour and this Difficulty were sure to fall upon Bishop Laud, who had in effect of late years been Administrator of the Province, and therefore the first time he waited on the King, Aug. 6. His Majesty received him with this Compellation, My Lord's Grace of Canterbury, you are very welcome; and gave Order the same day for the dispatch of all necessary forms for his Translation, which was expedited and compleated by Sept. 19. the day before, when he went first to Lambeth, the Ferry-boat that carried his Coach and Horses and Servants sunk to the bottom of the River, tho' without damage to the Men or Goods. He entred this Accident in his Diary as an observation of Omens, to which he was somewhat superstitiously addicted; yet rather from a sense of Religion and an awe of Providence, than from any conceits of Fate or Chance. Upon his merited Accession to this highest Seat in the Church, it may be proper to take the continuation of his Character. "He was a Man of great Parts and very exemplary Virtues, allayed and discredited by some unpopular natural Infirmities, the greatest of which was (besides a hasty sharp way of expressing himself) that he believ'd Innocence of Heart and Integrity of Manners was a Guard strong enough to secure any Man in his Voyage through this World, in what Company soever he travel'd, and through what Ways soever he was to pass; and sure never any Man was better supplied with that Provision. — He was always malign'd and persecuted by those who were of the Calvinian Faction, which was then very powerful, and who, according to their usual Maxim and Practice, call every Man they do not love, Papist: and under this senseless Appellation they created him many Troubles and Vexations. — When he came into great Authority, it may be he retain'd too keen a Memory of those who had so unjustly and uncharitably persecuted him before; and I doubt was so far transported with the same Passions he had reason to complain of in his Adversaries, that as they accused him of Popery because he had some doctrinal Opinions which they liked not, though they were nothing allied to Popery; so he entertained too much Prejudice to some Persons, as if they were Enemies to the Discipline of the Church, because they concurr'd with Calvin in some doctrinal Points; when they abhor'd his Discipline, and reverenc'd the Government of the Church, and pray'd for the Peace of it with as much Zeal and Fervency as any in the Kingdom, as they made manifest in their Lives, and in their Sufferings with it and for it.

1633. Ep. Laud succeeds to the See of Cant.

The King issued his Proclamations for preventing the Abuses that did arise by the unorder'd retailing of Tobacco, and reduced the Vending of it to those only who should receive License to do so; and for the Use of the Bow and Pike together in Military Discipline, authorizing William Neal to instruct the Train Bands in the Use of a Warlike Invention to that purpose. And in Michaelmas-Term, upon Consultation with the Judges, and Certificate of their Opinions, a Decree was made to confirm the Orders given by his Majesty against Ingrossing of Grain by Chandlers, and against many Exactions and Abuses of Taverners, Victuallers, Bakers, Inn-keepers, and other Retailers of Provision: The Reformation whereof was as much a Relief to the Subject, as it was made a Benefit to the King: tho' the Offenders aggriev'd by it would have had it thought an Art only of advancing the King's Revenue. In Hilary-Term, Sir David Foulis, one of the Council of York, Deputy-Lieutenant and Justice of Peace, upon an Information in the Star-Chamber, for opposing his Majesty's Service, and deterring his Subjects from making Fines for Knighthood, and traducing and affronting the Commissioners, was censur'd to be committed 1633. committed to the Fleet, to pay a Fine of five thousand Pounds, and to acknowledge his Offences in several open Courts, and to be incapable of any Office, and to pay three thousand Pounds to the Lord Wentworth.

Mr. Will. Pryn.

In the same Term, Mr. William Pryn was prosecuted in the same Court, for compiling and printing a Libellous Volume entitled Histrio-mastix, against Plays, Masques, Dancings, &c. And being sufficiently convicted of many foul and slanderous Reflections in it, he was sentenced to have his Book burnt in the most publick manner, to be himself put from the Bar, and made for ever incapable of his Profession; to be excluded from the Society of Lincolns-Inn, and degraded in Oxford, and stand in the Pillory in Westminster and Chapside, and lose both his Ears, one in each place, with a Paper on his Head, declaring his Offence to be an Infamous Libel against both their Majesties, the State, and the Government; and to pay a Fine of five thousand Pounds, and to suffer perpetual Imprisonment. These Prosecutions and Penalties in the Star-chamber, were thought to exceed the Proportion of the Crimes, by those especially who favoured the Committers of them: And this Terror serv'd but to increase the Aversion against that Court and the principal Assessors of it.

Masque by the Inns of Court.

It was a softer Answer to Mr. Pryn's Book against Plays and Actings, that about the beginning of November, to congratulate the King's Return, and divert his Royal Consort, the four Inns of Court, by some of their principal Members, offer'd a splendid Masque to be perform'd by their Societies jointly, as an Expression of their Love and Duty to their Majesties. The Offer was very graciously accepted; and upon Consult and Order of the Benchers, was very nobly perform'd at Whitehall on Shrove-Tuesday February the 18th, and again at Merchant-Taylor's-Hall, where the King, Queen, and Court, were magnificently entertain'd by the City.

State of Ireland.

In Ireland great Confusions began to be compos'd by the vigilant and active Lord Deputy Thomas Viscount Wentworth, who wrote a Letter to his Majesty dated January 22. 1633, wherein he advises the calling of a Parliament, and suggests the Ways and Means of a Parliamentary Supply to make up the Revenue, which within a Year would fall short twenty thousand Pounds Sterling, and to discharge a Debt upon the Crown of fourscore thousand Pounds, and to support the Army; with Propositions for the Peace and Interest of his Majesty's Affairs, and Considerations for the better Government of the Church and Clergy in that Kingdom: Wherein he prescribed, and afterward pursued such Measures as shew'd him to be an expert Soldier, an able Statesman, and a good Christian.

There was nothing remarkable in foreign Affairs, because the King was at Peace with all States and Princes: and the Thoughts of restoring the Palatinate seem'd at present to die with the Prince Elector. But to countenance his Son and Heir, the young Prince, his Majesty bestow'd on him the Honour of a Garter, and he was by Proxy install'd Novemb. 6.

State of Religion.

1632. 8 Car. I.

To review the state of Religion for these two last Years. Arminianism was thrown for an odious Name upon those Divines who had the greatest Reputation for Learning, and were most considered in the Church Preferments. This Respect of the Court paid to them, created them more Envy and Hatred than the bare Opinions charg'd upon them could possibly have done. And for these Political Reasons, more than for any Merit of the Cause, the Popularity went most on the Calvinian side; and many Preachers who inclin'd to please the People, took a zealous freedom to reflect upon the Tenets called Arminian, and upon the Professors of them. This Liberty was Penal, as a Transgression of his Majesty's Injunctions; and Bishop Land never failed the Opportunities of making an Example of every such bold Preacher.

Noise against Arminianism.

Mr. Nathaniel Barnard, Lecturer of St. Sepulchre's in London, had preach'd at St. Mary's in Cambridge, upon 1 Samuel 4. 21. The Glory is departed from Israel, &c. in which he tragically complain'd of Pelagian Errors brought into the Doctrine of our Church, with superstitious Inventions of Men; to the Authors whereof he pray'd for Conversion or Destruction, &c. For which he was question'd in the High Commission, and was enjoin'd a Form of Recantation; which he refusing to submit to, he was suspended from his Office, fined a thousand Pounds, condemned in Costs, and committed to Prison.

1632. 8 Car. I. Sermon of Mr. Barnard.

The great care of Bishop Land was to recommend such Persons to the Dignities of the Church as he thought to be Men of the greatest Probity and Publick Spirit. Under this View, he got Dr. Carl to be Translated from the See of Bath and Wells to that of Winchester, and Dr. Pierce to be promoted to Bath and Wells; Dr. Augustine Lindsey to the See of Peterborough, Dr. Robert Wright to be Translated from Bristol to Coventry and Lichfield; and with a more particular Affection, as his Diary expresses, July 10. 1632. Dr. Juxon, the Dean of Worcester, at my Suit sworn Clerk of his Majesty's Closet, that I might have One that I might trust near his Majesty, if I grew weak or infirm, as I must have a time.

Church Preferments.

The Cause against the Feoffees for buying in of Impropriations, as Instruments of the Puritan Faction to divide and destroy the Church, was now brought by Information into the Exchequer; where the Attorney-General set forth, that the said Feoffees had purchased divers Rectories, Tithes, &c. under a Pretence of augmenting poor Vicarages, but had not employ'd them according to such pious Uses, according to the true Intention of the Donors. The Defendants made Answer, that they believed Impropriations in the Possession of Lay-men, not employ'd for the Maintenance of Preachers, to be a great Damage to the Church of England; and therefore, that the Purchasing thereof for the Maintenance of Divine Service and Preaching, was a pious Work: and that the Donors and Benefactors had not specially assign'd the Endowment of perpetual Vicars, but intended the Maintenance of Preachers, and such other good Uses, as the Defendants should think meet; and that they had converted the Money to such Uses, according to the best of their Discretion. The Court gave Judgment, That the Defendants had usurped upon the King's Regality, and of their own Authority had made themselves a Body or Society; that they had purchased divers Impropriations, but never restored one of them to the Church; that by disposing the Profits to Lecturers and Ministers, they had drawn a Dependency of the Clergy upon them, and introduced many Novelties of dangerous consequences. The Court did forbear to proceed to Punishment, because his Majesty had determin'd a criminal Process against them in the Star-Chamber.

Prosecution of Mr. Sherfield.

In February this Year, Henry Sherfield Esq; Bench-er of Lincolns-Inn, and Recorder of Salum, was inform'd against in the Star-Chamber, for taking down the painted Glass from a Window in St. Edmund's Church in Salisbury; for which he was sentenc'd to a Fine of five hundred Pounds, to be remov'd from the Recordership of that City, to make a publick Acknowledgment of his Fault, and to be bound to his good Behaviour. This shew'd the Puritanical Humour of being now offended with those Ornaments which had stood unblamable ever since the Reformation. And yet these Censures upon the Heat and Indiscretion of forward Menders, did but encrease the Rumour of favouring Superstition and Idolatry.

Upon Complaints made concerning Ale and Revels upon the Wakes or Dedication-Sundays in Somersetshire, the Lord Chief Justice Richardson and Baron Denham, in their Circuit in that County, had made this Order.

9 Car. I.
Order of Assizes against Wakes
and Revels

“ WHereas divers Orders have been made here-“ fore, by Judges of the Assize, for the sup-“ prelling of all Ales and Revels, the same Order “ is now confirmed at the Assizes, and again order’d “ by the Court, in regard of the infinite number of “ Inconveniencies daily arising by means of Revels, “ that such Revels, Church-Ales, Clerk-Ales, and all “ other Publick-Ales, be henceforth utterly suppress“ ed; and to the end this may be observ’d, it is “ farther Order’d, that the Clerk of the Assizes shall “ leave Copies hereof with the Minister of every “ Parish within his severall Hundred, and shall give “ a Note under his Hand, that he shall publish it “ Yearly, within the Parish, the first Sunday in Fe“ bruary, and likewise the two Sundays before Easter “ yearly.

The Abo-
offended.

The Archbishop did well apprehend, that this Proceeding of the Judges in an Ecclesiastical Affair, and imposing an Order upon the Ministers to publish, without consent or knowledge of the Bishop, might grow into greater Encroachments upon the Authority of the Church, and make the Discipline of it depend upon the Pleasure of the Lay Magistrate. Under this concern, he complains to the King of this Irregularity of the Judges; and writes to the Bishop of Bath and Wells, for a full Account how the Feasts of the Dedication of Churches, commonly called Wakes, were observed in those Parts; and to know whether the Disorders of them might not be prevented by the care of the Justices of Peace, without abrogating the Feasts themselves; which if decently kept up might encourage neighbourly Meeting, and a seasonable Recreation of the People. The Bishop return’d Answer, That the ancient Custom of those Feasts was laudable and Innocent; that the late Suppression was very unacceptable; and the Restitution of them would be grateful to the Clergy, Gentry and common People. Upon this Report and farther Enquiries, the Lord Chief Justice was Reprov’d at the Council Table, and commanded to revoke his Order; which he did at the next Assizes, but with so much Reserve and Regret, that it look’d like a Penance impos’d, and like declaring the Will and Pleasure of the King, against his own Conscience. This Revocation however well intended, was thought the giving Countenance to Mispending and Profaning of the Lord’s-Day. And many devout People were so much offended at it, that from being Serious they grew Precise, and condemned all the customary Sports and Diversions upon Sundays (which after Divine Service had been long practis’d without scruple) as now absolutely unlawful. This one Extreme of the Puritans put the Government upon another more unhappy.

It was remember’d, that when the like rigorous Notions of a Sabbath began to obtain, in the Reign of King James, he in his Princely Wisdom publish’d a Declaration, To all his loving Subjects, concerning lawful Sports to be used upon Sundays after Evening Prayers ended, and upon Holidays. Wherein he declares, “ that in his late Progress through Lancashire “ he did rebuke some Puritans and precise People, “ and took Order that the like unlawful Carriage “ should not be used by any of them hereafter, in “ the prohibiting and unlawful punishing of his “ good People, for using their lawful Recreations “ and honest Exercises upon Sundays, and other Ho“ lidays, after the Afternoon Sermon or Service---- “ which cannot but produce two Evils, the one the “ hindring the conversion of many Papists, whom “ their Priest will take occasion hereby to vex, per“ suading them that no honest Mirth or Recreation “ is lawful or tolerable in Religion; ---- the “ other, that this Prohibition barreth the com“ mon and meaner sort of People from using such “ Exercises, as may make their Bodies more a“ ble for War, when his Majesty or his Successors “ shall have occasion to use them. ---- The Sports.

King’s express Pleasure therefore is, that the Laws of this Kingdom, and Canons of the Church, be well observed; and that no lawful Recreation shall be barred to his good People, which shall not tend to the breach of the aforesaid Laws and Canons of the Church. — That after the end of Divine Service, his good People be not disturbed, letted or discouraged, from any lawful Recreation; such as Dancing, either Men or Women, Archery for Men, Leaping, Vaulting, or any such harmless Recreation. — But withal, his Majesty doth here account still as prohibited, all unlawful Games to be used upon Sundays, as Bear and Bull-Baitings, Interludes and Bowling. And likewise bars from this Benefit and Liberty all such known Recusants, either Men or Women, as will abstain from coming to Church, or Divine Service, and to all, that tho’ conform in Religion are not present in the Church at the Service of God, before their going to the said Recreations. — He doth likewise strictly command, that every Person shall resort to his own Parish Church to hear Divine Service, and each Parish by it self to use the said Recreation after Divine Service. — And his Pleasure is, that this his Declaration shall be Published, by Order from the Bishop of the Diocess, through all the Parish Churches, and that both the Judges of the Circuits, and the Justices of the Peace, be informed thereof. Given at the Mannor of Greenwich the 24th Day of May, in the 16th Year of his Majesty’s Reign, of England, &c. and of Scotland the 5th. 1618.

The King and Council thought fit to renew and confirm this Declaration, and therefore a like Declaration was now drawn, which gives an account of the occasion taken by King James, and then recites his said Declaration at large, and concludes thus:

Declara-on of King
Charles.

“ Now, out of a like pious Care for the Ser“ vice of God, and for suppression of any Humours “ that oppose Truth, and for the Ease, Comfort “ and Recreation of his well-deserving People, his “ Majesty doth ratifie and publish this his blessed “ Father’s Declaration, the rather because of late in “ some Counties of this Kingdom, his Majesty finds “ that under pretence of taking away Abuses, “ there hath been a general Forbidding, not only “ of ordinary meetings, but of the Feasts of the “ Dedication of the Churches, commonly called “ Wakes. Now his Majesty’s express Will and “ Pleasure is, that these Feasts with others shall “ be observed, and that his Justices of the Peace, “ in their severall Divisions shall look to it, both “ that all Disorders there may be prevented or pu“ nished; and that all neighbourhood and freedom “ with Manlike and lawful Exercises be used. And “ his Majesty farther commands all Justices of As“ size in their severall Circuits to see, that no “ Man do trouble or molest any of his Loyal or “ Dutiful People, in or for their lawful Recreati-“ ons, having first done their Duty to God, and “ continuing in Obedience to his Majesty’s Laws.
“ And for this his Majesty commands all his “ Judges, Justices of the Peace, as well within Li“ berties as without, Mayors, Bailiffs, Constables “ and other Officers, to take notice of, and to “ see observed, as they tender his Displeasure.
“ And doth farther Will, that publication of this “ his Command be made, by Order from the Bi“ shops, through all the Parish Churches of their “ severall Diocesses respectively. Given at our Pa“ lace of Westminster the Eighteenth Day of October, “ in the ninth Year of our Reign.

Nothing more proves the diversity of Times than the different Operation that the same Act shall have upon the one and the other. This Declaration in the Reign of King James was generally thought more than Innocent, even seasonable and popular. But now under King Charles it was resented

Ill Effects of this Declaration.

1633. sented by many sober People as worfe than needles, as even Irreligious and Profane. Great numbers of People could not endure to hear it, and several Ministers refused to read it: And this one thing, tho' founded upon so late a Precedent, drew on more prejudice against the King and the Archbishop, than any other part of the publick Administration. It had been more happy to have timely considered the Pulse and Temper of the People: For it seems the Political Physick in one Age may be Poison in another.

The State of Religion in Scotland, had so great an influence on Publick Affairs, that it will be proper here to represent it, in the Words of a profound Judge in Matters of Church and State. "The King was always the most punctual observer of all Decency in his Devotion, and the strictest promoter of the Ceremonies of the Church; and believing in his Soul the Church of England to be instituted the nearest to the practice of the Apostles, and the best for the propagation and advancement of Christian Religion of any Church in the World, he had the highest dislike and prejudice to that part of his own Subjects, who were against the Government establish'd, and did always look upon them as a very dangerous and seditious People. This Temper and Disposition in England lurk'd with wonderful Secrecy: In Scotland, indeed, it cover'd the whole Nation, so that though there were Bishops in Name, the whole Jurisdiction, and they themselves, were upon the Matter subject to an Assembly, which was purely Presbyterian; no Form of Religion in practice; no Liturgy, nor the least Appearance of any Beauty of Holiness. — Yet the King's own Chapel at Holy-Rood-House, had still been maintained with the Comeliness of the Cathedral Service, and all other Decencies: And the whole Nation seem'd in the time of King James well inclin'd to receive the Liturgy of the Church of England, which that King exceedingly desired, and was confident of bringing the work to pass; however, upon some extraordinary Junctures he thought it necessary to suspend the Prosecution. The King his Son propos'd nothing more to himself, than to unite his three Kingdoms in one Form of God's Worship and publick Devotions; and there is great Reason to believe that in his Journey into Scotland to be crowned, he carried this Resolution with him. — And many wise Men were then, and are still of Opinion, that if the King had then propos'd the Liturgy of the Church of Engl. to have been received and practis'd by that Nation, it would have been submitted to without opposition. — But there were Obstructions that diverted the King; yet the party that was averse from the thing, and abhorred any thought of Conformity, could not have been powerful enough to have stop'd the progress of it. The mischief was, that they who most desir'd it, and were most concern'd to promote it, were the Men who us'd all their Credit to divert the present attempting it; and the Bishops themselves applied all their Counsels secretly to have the Matter more maturely considered. — The great Objection was, that the English Liturgy without Alterations would be dangerous to impose upon a jealous People, who, had been long afraid of Scotland being reduc'd as a Province to England, and made subject to their Laws and Government. — This made a deep Impression on his Majesty, and so he committed the framing and composing such a Liturgy as would most probably be acceptable to that People, to a select number of the Bishops there, who were very able and willing to undertake it.

While this was in agitation, Archbishop Laud most truly zealous in this work of Uniformity, kept a constant Correspondence with the Scotch Bishops, and directed and encouraged them to proceed, with such an Air of Authority, and in such Terms of Prescribing; that even this was a pretence to carry on the Prejudice, that a Scotch Liturgy should be still dictated and impos'd from England. And it was made another Advantage of the like Suspicions; that while a Liturgy and Canons were under a due deliberation in Scotland, the King was thought to interpose with too much hast, by sending Articles of Conformity for the better ordering of Divine Service in his Chapel Royal in Scotland, certified to the Lords of the Privy Council to be executed with Diligence and Care, dated the 8th of October 1633. with a sufficient Intimation, that this was a Patern of the intended Reformation to all Cathedrals, Parish Churches and Chapels in Scotland. This more and more fill'd the Heads of a People that mightily affected to be free and independent.

A like Jealousie against any Alterations prevail'd too much in England. "The remissness of Abbot, and of other Bishops by his Example, had introduced, or at least conniv'd at a Negligence that gave great scandal to the Church, and no doubt offended very many pious Men. The People took so little care of the Churches, and the Parsons as little of the Chancels, suffering them to be kept so indecently and slovenly, as they would not have endured in the ordinary Offices of their own Houses; the Rain and the Wind to infect them, and the Sacraments themselves to be administered where the People had most Mind to receive them. This profane Liberty and Uncleanliness, Archbishop Laud resolv'd to reform with all expedition, requiring the other Bishops to concur with him in so pious a Work; and the Work sure was very grateful to all Men of Devotion: yet I know not how, the Prosecution of it with too much affection of expence it may be, or with too much Passion between the Ministers and Parishioners, rais'd an evil Spirit towards the Church, which the Enemies of it took much advantage of, as soon as they had an opportunity to make the worst of it.

The Archbishop had observ'd, that placing the Communion Table in the body of the Church, or at the entrance only of the Chancel, was not only an impediment of the Church, in obstructing the Passage of the People; nor only a prostitution of the Table to other ordinary and sordid Uses; but that it made the Chancel look like a useles Building, fit only for Schooling and Parish Meeting, tho' originally design'd for the most solemn Office of Religion. To redeem these Places from Profaneness, and restore them to the primitive use of the holy Sacrament; the Archbishop us'd his utmost diligence to remove the Communion Table from the body of the Church, and fix it at the upper end of the Chancel, and secure it from the approach of Dogs, and all servile Uses, by Railing it in, and obliging the People to come up to those Rails, to receive the Sacrament in more Decency and Order. This now, however regular and agreeable to devout Persons, was thought a Grievance in many Parishes, more on the account of Trouble and Expence, than upon any other Scruple. These Murmurs were artificially improv'd into the cries of Innovation, Superstition and Popery it self. The Archbishop guided purely by his Zeal and Reverence for the place of God's Service, and by the Canons and Injunctions of the Church, with the Custom observ'd in the King's Chapel, and in most Cathedral Churches, without considering the long intermission and discontinuance in many other Places, prosecuted this Affair more passionately than was fit for the Season, and had Prejudice against those, who out of fear or foresight, or not understanding the thing, had not the same warmth to promote it.

The first opposition and disturbance in this Matter, was in the Parish of St. Gregory's, Lond. where the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's, as Ordinaries, had appointed the Communion Table to be remov'd from the middle of the Chancel to the upper end, in such manner as it standeth in the said Cathedral and Great opposition given to the Abp.

1633. Mother-Church. Some few of the Parishioners did 9 Car. I. complain of this Act by Appeal to the Dean of Arches, where they had Advocates to plead, that the Book of Common-Prayer, and the eighty second Canon did give Liberty to place the Communion Table where it may stand with most fitness and convenience, which a general Custom had determined to be in the body of the Church, or toward the bottom of the Chancel. This Question was brought before Case of St. Gregory's. his Majesty in Council, Novem. 3. 1633. where an Order was made, "That his Majesty having heard particular Relation made by the Council of both Parties, of all the Carriage and Proceeding in this Cause, was pleased to declare his dislike of all Innovation and receding from antient Constitutions, granted upon just and warrantable Reasons, especially in Matters concerning Ecclesiastical Order and Government, knowing how easily Men are drawn to affect Novelties, and how soon weak Judgments in such Cases may be overtaken and abused. That the Cathedral Mother Church, was a fit Example by which all other Churches depending thereon ought to be guided; and if a few Parishioners might have their Wills in affecting a difference from it, this might give too much subject of Discourse and Disputes. As to what concerns the Liberty given by the Common-Prayer Book or Canon, for placing the Table with most convenience: such Liberty is not to be so understood, as if it were left to the discretion of the Parish, much less to the particular fancy of any humourous Person, but to the Judgment of the Ordinary, to whose Place and Function it doth properly belong to give direction in that point, both for the thing it self, and for the time when,
 and how long, as he may find cause. Upon which consideration, his Majesty declares, that he well approved and confirmed the Act of the said Ordinary, and did require it to be confirmed by the Dean of the Arches, if the Parishioners should proceed in their Appeal.

Whether it was Policy to interest the King and Council in so small an Affair of Church Discipline, that might have been sufficiently determined in the Ecclesiastical Courts, without seeming to interrupt the Process, or to prescribe the Sentence of them, is not hard to judge. But this Application is very obvious, that the Governours of the Church ought to keep up their Jurisdiction to the utmost bounds of Law, and to maintain an even and regular practise of all decent Ceremonies, and orderly Reverence in Divine Service: Or otherwise, if they recede into Neglect and Indifference, this may breed first a contempt and then a dilinage in the People, and that by degrees may settle into such a custom of Rudeness and Disrespect to sacred things; that those of their Successors, who shall labour to restore the good old ways, shall bear the odium of Change and Innovation. This was the Case of Archbishop Land, and of those Prelates who assisted in the reforming many Corruptions crept in of later times.

One other great Abuse was the easy Ordination of young Divines, who often came into the Church with no affection to it, only to be domestick Chaplains in Malecontent Families, or to be forward Preachers in Popular Lectures, with no inclination to a regular Cure of Souls. To prevent this growing Mischiefe, the Archbishop procured a wise Injunction from the King, given at Westminster September 19. 1633. for the strict observation of such Canons of the Church as concern those that are to take Orders in their several times; more especially of keeping that particular Canon which enjoins, that no Man be made a Priest or a Minister without a Title; and that nothing shall be reputed a Title to enable a Man for Orders, but that which is so by the ancient consue of the Church and the Canon Law, so far forth as that Law is received in this Church of England. The Archbishop communicated this Royal Injunction to his Comprovincial Bishops, and declared to them what should be a Canonical Title.

1. "A Presentation to some Ecclesiastical Preferment. 1633.
 9 Car. I.
2. "A Certificate undoubted, that he is provided of some vacant Church.
3. "A Grant of a petty Canon's Place, or the like Office, in a Cathedral or Collegiate Church.
4. "A Fellowship, or right of a Fellowship, in some College in Oxford or Cambridge.
5. "The being Conduct or Chaplain in some College in Oxford or Cambridge.
6. "The being Master of Arts of five Years standing, living at his own charge in either of the Universities.
7. "The Intention of the Bishop that Ordains, shortly to admit him to some Benefice or Curate's Place then void.

These Rules were a very seasonable Restraint from the promiscuous and bold intruding into Orders, and for that very Reason were an Offence to many young Students, to some of the Nobility, and to several Corporations, because no Lecture in a populous Place, and no Chaplainship to a great Family were any longer allowed to be a sufficient Title.

To carry on the Series of Civil Affairs for the Year 1634. 10 Car.

The Narrow Seas were at this time infested with Pirates of all the neighbour Nations, and the Dutch began to challenge such a Right of Fishery, as would have robb'd the King of that Dominion, which had been alway claim'd and exercis'd by his Royal Ancestors. To carry on this new Pretension, they encouraged their Learned Grotius to assert their free use of Shipping, in a Treatise stiled Mare Liberum; answer'd, and sufficiently refuted, by our excellent Antiquary Mr. Selden, in his Mare Clausum, of which the Materials had been formerly thrown together at the motion of King James, and were now put in Order, and within a Twelve Month publish'd at the command of King Charles. But this Controversie was not likely to be determin'd in Paper: Therefore to shew a just concern for the Honour and Safety of the Nation, the King on May 5. published two several Proclamations. In the first declaring his Royal Will and Pleasure, "That no Mariner or Seafaring Men, Shipwright or Ship-Carpenter, whatsoever, being his Majesty's Subjects, should without the King's License, or the License of the Admiral of England, enter, or attempt, or go about to enter into the Service of any foreign Prince or State, or be employed out of this Realm in any Sea Service whatsoever, unless it were in the King's own Service, or of some of his Subjects.
 And if any at this time be in the Service of any Foreign Prince, that they forthwith return under a great Penalty. In the other of the same date, he declares his farther Pleasure concerning the Flags to be employ'd for his Royal Navy, as well as for the Ships of his Subjects of South and North Britain; and conceiving it meet for the Honour of the King's own Ships in his Navy Royal, and of such other Ships as are, or shall be employ'd, in the King's immediate Service, that the same be by their Flags distinguish'd from the Ships of any other of his Subjects; doth therefore prohibit and forbid, that none of the Subjects of any of his Nations and Kingdoms, shall from henceforth presume to carry the Union Flag in the Main-top, or other part of any of his Ships, that is St. George's Cross and St. Andrew's Cross joined together; but that the same Union Flag be still reserved as a Ornament proper to the King's own Ships, and Ships in his immediate Service and Pay, and none others. And his Majesty's farther Will and Pleasure is, that all other Ships of his Subjects of England or South Britain, bearing Flags shall from henceforth carry the Red Cross, commonly called St. George's Cross; and also that all the other Ships of the King's Subjects of Scotland, should from henceforth carry the White Cross, commonly called St. Andrew's Cross.

But

1634. But the great difficulty was how to raise Money for fitting out a Navy sufficient to guard the Seas; as Necessity seemed now to require not only against the encroachments of the Dutch, but against the growing Insolence of the Turkish and Algerine Pirates. By degrees a Project was fram'd out of ancient Records by Mr. Attorney General Noy, to impose upon every Sea-Port and place of Merchandize the finding such a number of Ships and Men, in proportion to their Wealth and Trade, or to compound with Commissioners at such a rate. The first Writ for this Tax called Ship Money was dated the 20th of October, beginning with the City of London in this Form:

Ship Money projected by Mr. Noy.

First Writ for Ship-Money.

Carolus Rex, &c. To the Mayor, Commonalty and Citizens of our City of London, and to the Sheriffs of the same City, and good Men in the said City and in the Liberties, and Members of the same, Greeting;

“ Because we are given to understand that certain Thieves, Pirates and Robbers of the Sea, as well Turks, Enemies of the Christian Name, as others, being gathered together wickedly taking by Force, and spoiling the Ships and Goods and Merchandizes, not only of our Subjects but also of the Subjects of our Friends in the Sea, which hath been accustomed antiently to be defended by the English Nation; and the same at their pleasure have carried away, delivering the Men in the same to miserable Captivity. And forasmuch as we see them daily preparing all manner of shipping further to molest our Merchants, and to grieve the Kingdom, unless Remedy be not sooner apply'd, and their Endeavours be not more manly met withal; also the Dangers consider'd, which on every side in these times of War do hang over our Heads, that it behoveth us and our Subjects, to hasten the defence of the Sea and Kingdom with all expedition or speed that we can: We willing, by the help of God, chiefly to provide for the defence of the Kingdom, safeguard of the Sea, security of our Subjects, safe Conduct of Ships and Merchandizes to our Kingdom of England coming, and from the same Kingdom to Foreign Parts passing: Forasmuch as we and our Progenitors Kings of England, have been always heretofore Masters of the aforesaid Sea, and it would be very irksome unto us, if that Princely Honour in our times should be lost, or in any thing diminished. And although that charge of Defence, which concerneth all Men ought to be supported by all, as by the Laws and Customs of the Kingdom of England hath been accustomed to be done: Notwithstanding, we considering, that you constituted in the Sea Coasts, to whom by Sea as well great Dangers are imminent, and who by the same do get more plentiful Gains, for the defence of the Sea, and conservation of our Princely Honour in that behalf, according to the Duty of your Allegiance against such Attempts, are chiefly bound to set to your helping Hand: We command, firmly enjoining you the aforesaid Mayor, Commonalty and Citizens, and Sheriffs of the said City, and the good Men in the same City and in the Liberties, and Members of the same, in the Faith and Allegiance wherein ye are bound unto us, and as ye do love us and our Honour, and under the Forfeiture of all which ye can forfeit to us, that ye cause to be prepared and brought to the Port of Portsmouth, before the first Day of March now next ensuing, one Ship of War of the Burthen of Nine hundred Tons, with Three hundred and fifty Men at the least, as well Masters as very able and expert skilful Mariners; one other Ship of War of the Burthen of Eight hundred Tons, with Two hundred and sixty Men at the least, as well skilful Masters as very able and expert Mariners; Four other Ships of War, every of “ them of the Burthen of Five hundred Tons, and every of them with two hundred Men at the least, as well expert Masters as very able and skilful Mariners; and one other Ship of War of the Burthen of Three hundred Tons, with a hundred and fifty Men, as well expert Masters as very able and skilful Mariners. And also every of the said Ships with Ordnance, as well greater as lesser, Gun-powder and Spears and Weapons, and other necessary Arms sufficient for War, and with double Tackling and with Victuals, until the said first of March competent for so many Men, and from that time for twenty six Weeks at your charges, as well in Victuals as Men's Wages, and other things necessary for War, during that Time, upon defence of the Sea in our Service in command of the Admiral of the Sea, to whom we shall commit the custody of the Sea, before the aforesaid first Day of March, and as he on our behalf, shall command them to continue, so that they may be there the same Day at the farthest, to go from thence with our Ships, and the Ships of other faithful Subjects, for the safeguard of the Sea, and defence of you and yours, and repulse and vanquishing of whomsoever busying themselves to molest or trouble upon the Sea our Merchants, and other Subjects and faithful People coming into our Dominions for cause of Merchandize, or from thence returning to their own Countries. Also we have assigned you the aforesaid Mayor and Aldermen, of the City aforesaid, or any thirteen or more of you, within thirty Days after the Receipt of this Writ, to Assess all Men in the said City, and in the Liberties, and Members of the same, and the Landholders in the same, not having a Ship, or any part of the aforesaid Ships, nor serving in the same, to contribute to the Expences, about the necessary Provision of the Premises, and to Assess and lay upon the aforesaid City, with the Liberties and Members thereof, viz. upon every of them according to their Estate and Substances, and the Portion assessed upon them, and to nominate and appoint Collectors in this behalf. Also we have assigned you the aforesaid Mayor, and also the Sheriffs of the City aforesaid, to levy the Portions so as aforesaid assessed upon the aforesaid Men and Landholders, and every of them in the aforesaid City, with the Liberties and Members of the same, by Distress and other due Means, and to commit to Prison all those whom you shall find Rebellious, and contrary in the Premises, there to remain until we shall give further Order for their delivery. And moreover we command you, that about the Premises ye diligently attend, and do and execute those things with effect, upon peril that shall fall thereon; but we will not that under colour of our aforesaid Command, more should be levied of the said Men, than shall suffice for the necessary Expences of the Premises; or that any who have levied Money for Contribution, to raise the aforesaid Charges, should by him detain the same, or any part thereof, or should presume by any manner of colour to appropriate the same to other uses. Willing, that if more than may be sufficient shall be collected, the same may be paid out among the Contributors, for the rate of the part to them belonging. Witness, my self, at Westminster the twentieth Day of October, in the tenth Year of our Reign.

1634. 10 Car. I.

This Writ was read in a Common Council held at Guild-hall Dec. 2. where the Matter gave a general Disgust, and brought out this Resolution upon it. This Court, after due and serious consideration taken of the Premises, conceiving that by their ancient Liberties, Charters, and Acts of Parliament, they ought to be freed and discharged of those things which by the said Writ are required by them to be done, doth order and agree, That the Draught of a Petition touching the said Business, this day read to this Court, shall be engrossed, and with all dutiful respect for and on this City's behalf, humbly

The Writ read in Common Council.

1634. humbly presented to the King's most excellent Majesty. 10 Car. I. Which Petition was drawn up, and presented in this Form:

Petition of the City of London against Ship Money.

To the King's most excellent Majesty.

The humble Petition of your faithful Subjects, the Mayor and Commonalty, and Citizens of your City of London, most humbly shewing;

“ That where your Majesty by Writ bearing teste 20. Octob. last, commanded your Petitioners, at their Charge to provide seven Ships of War furnished with Men, Victual, and all Warlike Provisions, to be at Portsmouth by the first of March next, and to continue from thence by the space of twenty six Weeks in your Majesty's Service, upon the Defence of the Seas, and other Causes in the said Writ contained:

“ Your Petitioners do in all submissive Humbleness, and with Acknowledgment of your sacred Majesty's many Favours unto your said City, inform your Majesty that they conceive, that by ancient Privileges, Grants, and Acts of Parliament (which they are ready humbly to shew forth) they are exempt and are to be freed from that Charge. And do most humbly pray, “ That your Majesty will be graciously pleased, That the Petitioners, with your Princely Grace and Favour, may enjoy the said Privileges and Exemptions, and be freed from providing of the said Ships and Provisions.

And they shall pray, &c.

General Offence taken at Ship Money.

This Petition seem'd to have no other effect, but only to express a Dissent, when there must follow a Compliance. And the Example of Submission, however extorted from the City of London, would have its sure and certain influence upon all inferiour Places. The legal Right of this Aid was not yet disputed in any Court of Justice, but it created a general Offence and Odium. The Nobility and Gentry had reason to be jealous of any Methods of raising Money out of Parliament: The Merchants and Traders had the Grievance of thinking the whole Burden cast upon them: The Clergy could not at first obtain an Exemption from their considerable share in it; and the Country Farmers thought it little less than seizing their Corn and Cattel to be sent on Shipboard. The Murmurs were indeed so universal, and so artificially improv'd by the Enemies of the Court, that they look'd upon the Death of the Projector to be a Judgment sent upon his Head. Mr. Attorney-General Noy departed this Life August 9. His Character is thus drawn by one that understood him well:

Character of Mr. At. Gen. Noy. Lord Clarendon Hist. of the Rebellion B. 1. p. 57.

“ Mr. Noy upon the great Fame of his Ability and Learning (and he was very Able and Learned) was by great Industry and Importunity from Court, perswaded to accept that Place, for which all other Men labour'd (being the best for Profit, that Profession is capable of) and so he suffered himself to be made the King's Attorney General. The Court made no impression upon his Manners, upon his Mind it did: and though he wore about him an affected Morosity, which made him unapt to flatter other Men; yet even that morosity and pride render'd him the most liable to be grossly flatter'd himself that can be imagined. And by this means the great Persons, who steer'd the publick Affairs, by admiring his Parts and extolling his Judgment as behind his back, wrought upon him by degrees for the eminency of the Service, to be an Instrument in all their Designs; thinking that he could not give a clearer testimony, that his knowledge in the Law was greater than all other Mens, then by making that Law which all other Men believed not to be so. So he moulded, framed and pursued the odious and crying Project of Soap; and with his own Hand drew and prepared the Writ for Ship-Money, both which will be the lasting Monuments of his Fame. In

On the Death of Mr. Noy. Sir John Banks was constituted Attorney - General by Patent dated September 27. 10 Car. And Sir Robert Heath being without reason given removed from the honour of Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, Sir John Finch was advanced to that honour. Great were the Discourses what the occasion should be of that sudden Advancement. But four days after the Writ for Ship-Money coming forth, it was conceived by common Discourse, that he was to be instrumental to advance that Business.

His concern in this invidious Matter is thus represented by the Lord Clarendon. “ Sir John Finch had much that the other (Mr. Noy) wanted, but nothing that the other had. Having led a free Life in a restrained Fortune, and having set up upon the stock of a good Wit, and natural Parts, without the Superstructure of much knowledge in the Profession by which he was to grow; he was willing to use those Weapons in which he had most skill, and so (being not unseen in the Affections of the Court, but not having reputation enough to guide or reform them) he took up Ship-Money where Mr. Noy left it; and being a Judge carried it up to that Pinnacle, from whence he almost broke his own Neck; having in his Journey thither, had too much influence on his Brethren, to induce them to concur in a Judgment they had all cause to repent.

By the Interest of the Queen, the King was too often prevailed upon to grant Letters of Grace and Favour in behalf of the Papists and to direct his Precepts to the Courts of Justice to stay all Proceedings against them, upon Indictment, Presentment or Information for Recusancy. And even after their conviction, Letters of Protection were sent by the Secretary of State to the Judges of the Court, that their Penalties and Fines should not be estreated into the Exchequer. Many of the Privy Council were indeed suspected to be inclining to Popery, and some of them died of the Romish Religion: as the Lord Cottington, and the Lord Treasurer Weston, which latter died at the end of this Year, March 13th, and left the Character to be bestowed on him.

“ Sir Richard Weston had been advanced to the white staff, into the Office of Lord High Treasurer of England, some Months before the Death of the Duke of Buckingham; and had in that short time so much disoblige'd him, at least disappointed his expectation, that many who were privy to the Duke's most secret purposes, did believe, that if he had out-liv'd that Voyage in which he was engaged, he would have remov'd him and made another Treasurer. — He was a Gentleman of very ancient Extraction by Father and Mother; his Education had been very good amongst Books and Men. After some Years study of the Law in the Middle-Temple, he Travelled into Foreign Parts, and at an Age fit to make Observations and Reflections; out of which, that which is commonly call'd Experience, is constituted. After this he betook himself to the Court, and liv'd there some Years at that distance, and with that awe, as was agreeable to the modesty of the Age; when Men were some time before they were known; and well known before they were prefer'd, or durst pretend to it. — When made Lord Treasurer, he did indeed appear on the sudden wonderfully elated, and so far threw off his old Affectation too to please some very much, and to displease none, in which Art he had excell'd; that in few Months after the Duke's death, he found himself to succeed him in the publick Displeasure, and in the Malice of his Enemies, without succeeding him in his Credit at Court, or in the affection of any considerable Dependents. And yet

His Character.

The King importun'd by the Queen to favour the Papists.

Character of the Lord Treasurer Weston.

1634. " yet though he was not superiour to all other 10 Car. I. " Men in the Affection, or rather Resignation of the " King, so that he might dispense Favours and Dif" favours according to his own Election. He had a " full share in his Master's Esteem, who look'd up" on him as a wise and able Servant, and worthy " of the Trust he repos'd in him. — The King's " Revenue had been very loofely managed during " the late Years, and might by industry and order
 " have been easily improved; and no Man better " understood what method was necessary towards " that good Husbandry, than he. — No Man had " greater Ambition to make his Family great, or " stronger designs to leave a great Fortune to it.
 " Yet his Expences were so prodigious, especially " in his House, that all the ways he us'd for sup" ply, which were all that occur'd, could not serve " his turn; insomuch that he contracted so great " Debts (the anxiety whereof he pretended broke " his mind, and restrained that attention and in" dustry, which was necessary for the due execu" tion of his Office) that the King was pleas'd " twice to pay his Debts; at least towards it, to " disburse Forty thousand Pounds in ready Money " out of his Exchequer. — He was of an impe-" rious Nature, and nothing wary in disobliging and " provoking other Men, and had too much Courage " in offending and incensing them: But after having " offended and incens'd them, he was of so unhappy
 " a Feminine Temper, that he was always in a ter" rible Fright and Apprehension of them. —
 " He quickly lost the Character of a bold, stout and " magnanimous Man, which he had been long re" puted to be in worse times: And in his most pro" sperous Season, fell under the Reproach of being a " Man of big Looks, and of a mean and abject Spi" rit. — To conclude, all the Honours the " King conferr'd upon him (as he made him a Bar" on, then an Earl and Knight of the Garter, and " above this, gave a young beautiful Lady nearly " Allied to his Majesty, and to the Crown of Scot" land, in Marriage to his Eldest Son) could not " make him think himself great enough: Nor could " all the King's Bounties, nor his own large Accef" sions raise a Fortune to his Heir; but after six or " eight Years spent in outward Opulency and in" ward Murmur and Trouble that it was not greater;
 " after vast sums of Money and great Wealth got" ten, and rather consum'd than enjoy'd; without " any Sense or Delight in so great Prosperity, with " the agony that it was no greater, he died unlamented
 " by any; bitterly mention'd by most who " never pretended to love him; and severely cen" sur'd and complain'd of by those, who expected
 " most from him, and deserved best of him; and " left a numerous Family, which was in a short " time worn out, and yet out-lived the Fortune he " left behind him.

 Sir Edw.
 Cook.

Detection of four Reigns by Reg. Cook.
 1634.

In September, this same Year, died the eminent and long Abdicated Judge Sir Edward Cook, who having made himself obnoxious to the Court, was the more Popular in the Country, and the more an Oracle in the House of Commons. There is an account given of one of his Posterity: " That upon " his Death-Bed Sir Francis Windebank, Laud's old " Friend, by an Order of Council, came to Search " for seditious and dangerous Papers; by Virtue " whereof he took Sir Edward Cook's Comment up" on Littleton, and the History of his Life before it,
 " written with his own Hand; his Comment upon " Magna Carta, &c. the Pleas of the Crown, and Ju" risdiction of Courts, and his 11th and 12th Re" ports in Manuscript, and (as this Writer thinks)
 " 51 other Manuscripts, with the Last-Will of Sir
 " Edward; wherein he had for several Years been " making Provisions for his younger Grand-Chil" dren. The Books and Papers were kept till seven " Years after, when one of Sir Edward's Sons in " 1641. mov'd the House of Commons, that the " Books and Papers taken by Sir Francis Windebank, 1634. " might be delivered to Sir Robert Cook, Heir of Sir 10 Car. I. " Edward; which the King was pleas'd to grant, " and such as could be found were delivered: but " Sir Edward's Will was never heard of more to this

 " Day.

There was a Spirit of Discontent in Scotland, that could yet shew it felt in no other way but in Murmurs and seditious Reports. By the impulse of this Spirit there was now published a Pamphlet properly called The Libel, which reflected on the King's Proceedings in the last Parliament of 1633. charging his Majesty with gaining of Votes by undue means, for obtaining an Act to pass for wearing of Whites, &c.
 The Lords of the Council found out the Author to be one Hagg, who escaped and went beyond Seas; but on farther Enquiry, the Lord Balmerino was found to have the principal Hand in it, who was Apprehended, Try'd and Condemn'd, for Loss-Majesty; but the King was graciously pleas'd to restore him to his Life, Honour and Estate. His Father, Secretary to King James had fell under the like Sentence, and received the like Pardon: So that Gratitude should have been as Hereditary to this Family, as were their Crimes and the Remission of them.

Seditious
 in Scotland

Ireland under the active Government of the Lord Deputy Wentworth, had a Parliament called to consider of Ways and Means to maintain the Army, and to discharge a Debt of eighty thousand Pounds, which the Crown had there contracted. By the Courage and Prudence of the Lord Deputy; these ends were obtained, and three Subsidies were granted.
 And in a concurrent Convocation, there was a Canon pass'd, Of the Agreement of the Church of England and Ireland in the Profession of the same Christian Faith, by receiving and approving the Book of Articles of Religion agreed upon by the Archbishops and Bishops, and the whole Clergy in Convocation holden at London, Anno Dom. 1562. Which was charg'd as an Arminian Project upon the Deputy and his Chaplain Dr. Bramhall, when the Pricate Usher and other Calvinists perceived, that the thus admitting the 39 Articles of the Church of England had repealed and excluded the Articles of the Church of Ireland, established Anno 1615. wherein the nine Articles of Lambeth determining the Predestinarian Doctrines, and many other Calvinian Rigours were asserted and received.

State of Ireland.

Abroad there was nothing so remarkable as the signal Victory obtained by the Imperialists against the Swedes, who had got Possession of almost halt Germany; and under the Command of Gustavus Horn and Duke Bernard, attack'd the Imperial Army near Nord-lingen on Sept. 6. Commanded by the Duke of Lor-rain and John de Wert, supported by the Cardinal Infanto, who had marched from Milim thro' Switzerland with the old Spanish and Italian Troops. The Victory was absolute on the Imperial side; the Swedes lost all their Canon and Bagage, and above ten thousand Men; and of their two Generals Duke Bernard was Wounded, and the brave Gustavus Horn was taken Prisoner. Our English Court had no great concern for this Action, having an Alliance with both Parties, tho' no very right Understanding with either of them. The great Minister of Sweden, Chancellor Oxenstiern, had this Year sent his eldest Son as Ambassadour into England; but either wanting proper Credentials from the Queen of Sweden, Regent in her Son's Minority, or making hard Proposals for assisting the Prince Elector against the Emperor, he was so much slighted and disobliged, that he left England in discontent, and made such a Report of his usage to his Father, that he and his Family so resent'd this Affront as never to forgive
 the King.

Foreign Affairs.

As to the Affairs of Religion in this Year 1634. State of Religion.
 1634. Abp. Laud, who had set his Heart, where his Conscience did direct him, upon a Uniformity of Worship through his whole Province, was offended at the Practice of the French and Dutch Churches here allow'd, and thought their separate Service was an Example

1624. Example and Encouragement to our own Dissenting 10 Car. I. Brethren. He was resolv'd therefore, if possible, to bring them to a Conformity with the Church of England. And having for this Purpose the Advice and Assistance of the Privy Council, in a Visitation at the beginning of this Year, he tender'd these three Articles to the French Congregation in Canterbury, and to the two Dutch Congregations in Sandwich and Maidstone, Apr. 14. 1624. 1. What Liturgy do you use? or whether you have not the Dutch or French Liturgy in use? 2. Of how many Descents, for the most part, they were born Subjects? 3. Whether such as were born Subjects would conform to the Church of England? They look'd upon themselves as tolerated and exempted from ordinary Jurisdiction, and accordingly put in their Pleas of Right, and with a Salvo to it, by consent of their several Churches, they prepared these Answers to be deliver'd on the 5th of May: 1. "That they had that Liturgy "which all the Churches of the French Tongue "(both in France, and in the United Provinces of "the States) have had since the blessed Reformati"on, and which their Churches refuged here have "had this sixty or seventy Years, or more: That "the English Liturgy was Translated into French,
 "but that they used it not; and, that they know
 "not whether it be Translated into Dutch or not.
 "2. That the greatest part of the Heads of the Fam"ilies were not born here, but about a third part,
 "because that the greatest part of the old ones were "Strangers born, and many others are newly come "over within a few Years. 3. They desire to be "excused from giving any Answer to the third Arti"cle, because of the Maintenance of their Mini"stry and Relief of their Poor, which would be "obstructed by any Division of their Members.

They put in a Declarator.
 But before these Answers were put in, they consulted the Cætus of the French and Dutch Churches in London; where, by the influence no doubt of some of our own Nonconformists, they advis'd their Brethren to suppress those Answers, and to present their Declinator, or a Plea of Privileges and Challenge of Exemption granted them by King Edw. 6.
 and confirm'd by several Acts of Council in the following Reigns.

Abp sends Injunctions.
 This incens'd the Abp. and confirm'd him in the Resolution of taking away their Liberty of Separation.
 And therefore he sent down these Injunctions to Canterbury, deliver'd Dec. 19. with time of Conformity allow'd to March 1.

First. "That all the Natives of the Dutch and "Walloon Congregations in his Grace's Diocese "should repair to their several Parish Churches of "those several Parishes where they inhabited, to "hear Divine Service and Sermons, and perform all "Duties and Payments required in that behalf.

Second. "That the Ministers and all other of the "Dutch and Walloon Congregations, which were not "Natives and born Subjects to the King's Majesty, "that should come over to them, might have and "use their own Discipline, as formerly they have "done; yet it was thought fit that the English Li"turgy should be Translated into French and Dutch
 "for the better fitting their Children to the English "Government.

They would not obey.
 These Injunctions might have been thought the more reasonable, because the last (which was indeed qualified by the King in Council) did not intrench upon their Liberty as Foreigners, but claim'd their Obedience only as native Subjects; and rather provided for a Conformity of the Children, than of the present Parents. But the innate Ambition of keeping themselves up as a distinct Tribe of Strangers, and the Honour of not letting their Families recede from the Example of their Heads and Governours; and above all, the Countenance and Infligation given to them by the Puritan Faction, and even by many sober Church-men who were jealous of the Zeal of Archbishop Land, made them reject and oppose these Injunctions, in several Remonfrances and Petitions. To all which the Archbishop answer'd to this effect: That his Majesty was resolv'd the Injunctions should be obey'd by all the Natives after the first Descent, who might continue in their former ways; but all of the second Descent, born here in England, should resort to their several Parish Churches. He doubted not but they themselves, or their Posterity, would have cause to thank both the State and the Church for this care taken of them. But if they refused, he must then proceed against the Natives according to the Laws and Canons Ecclesiastical.

This good Endeavour of the Archbishop was afterward, in the beginning of his Troubles, severely charg'd upon him: and at his Trial it made up a twelfth original Article against him, in these words:
 He hath traitersonly endeavour'd to cause Division and Discord between the Church of England and other Reformed Churches; and to that end hath suppress'd and abrogated the Privileges and Immunities which have been by his Majesty and his Royal Ancestors granted to the French and Dutch Churches in this Kingdom: and divers other ways hath express'd his Malice and Disaffection to those Churches.

And yet in the Pleadings against him upon that 12th Article, "What is the Reason (says the Abp.)
 "why here's nothing urg'd against me about abro"gating the Immunities and Privileges of the French "and Dutch Churches, which fill the Body of this "Article? Why, I conceive, there may be two "Reasons of it: One, because there was taken by "Mr. Pym, among other Papers for my Defence,
 "a Letter under Queen Elizabeth's own hand, to "the Lord Pawlet Marquis of Winchester, then Lord
 "Treasurer, in which she expresses her Willingness "that those Strangers distressed in and for point of "Conscience, should have Succour and free Enter"tainment, but should conform themselves to the "English Liturgy, and have that translated into their "own Language: And they knew I would call to "have this Letter produced, proved, and read:
 "And had this Letter been stood unto, they had "never been able to do the Church of England half "the Harm they have since done. The Other was,
 "because they found by their own Search against "me, that all which I did concerning those Church"es was with this Moderation, that All those of "their several Congregations in London, Canterbury, "Sandwich, Norwich, or elsewhere, which were of "the second Descent, and born in England, should "repair to their several Parish Churches, and con"form themselves to the Doctrine, Discipline, and "Liturgy of the Church of England, and not live "continually in an open Separation, as if they were "an Israel in Egypt, to the great Distraction of the "Natives of this Kingdom, and the assisting of that "Schism which is now broke forth. And as this "was with great Moderation, so was it with the "joint Approbation of his Majesty and the Lords "of his Council, upon the Reasons openly given "and debated. And all this before I proceeded to "do any thing: as appears apud Acta.

The Archbishop was farther concern'd in settling the regular Worship of the Church of England in our Factories beyond the Seas; for which he had obtained an Order from the Council Table, dated Octob. 1.
 1623. enjoining a strict Observation of the English Liturgy and Rites and Ceremonies. Which not being much regarded by the Merchants, the Archbishop now presented to the Council some Propositions concerning English Preachers employ'd in Foreign Parts.
 And wrote a Letter to the Factory at Delft, dated 1624. and the greater Encouragement to Lecturers and 10 Car. I. Preachers depending on the People. Wherefore, in Petition of the London Clergy for better Maintenance.

 May 1624. the Parsons and Vicars in the City of London presented a Petition to his Majesty, humbly shewing, " That the Benefices in London were a hundred Years since very great: That a Decree now in force provided 2 s. 9 d. to be paid upon every Pound Rent without fraud: That notwithstanding they were now very poor and mean, many of them not worth 40 l. per Ann. That the Petitioners have not independent Maintenance, and for want thereof are daily thrust upon dangerous and great Inconveniencies: That they are not able to discover the true Value of the Rents, because the Landlords make double Leases or Provisions of Collusion. And the Lord Mayor being their ordinary Judge, they have no Ability or Leisure to prosecute and appeal to the Lord Keeper: And therefore beg, that it may please the great Pat-tron of the Church, his Royal Majesty, to take into his Princely Consideration these Petitions and Grievances of his poor Clergy of London for Redress thereof.

Referr'd to Commissioners
 This Petition was by the King refer'd to the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, the Lord Keeper, the Earl Marshall, the Bishop of London, the Lord Cot-tington, Secretary Windbank, and the Lord Chief Justice Richardson, or any five or three of them, whereof the Archbishop to be one. While they were endeavouring to settle the disputed Tithe, several Citizens petition'd the King and Council against their manner of Proceeding, which came to several Hearings, November the 5th, 16th, and 23d: and being again taken into Consideration December the 17th and January the 18th, it was agreed between the Clergy and City mutually to submit the said Differences to be arbitrated and settled by his Majesty. But even the King was afraid to make any absolute Decision against the Inclinations of the People.

This objected to Archbish.
 Laud.
 On the 4th day of the Archbishop's Trial, The business of the Tithe in London (says he) was raised up in Judgment against me -- I had been much to blame, having been Bishop of London, should I have bid at the Objections: For their case is very hard, all their Offerings being shrank away into nothing but a poor Easter-Peak.
 The Ministers of London had often petitioned for some Relief long before my time; and I did them, and do still think it most just they should have it: for they are now under the Task-Masters of Egypt; the Tale of Brick must be made, they must Preach twice a Sunday, get Straw where they can: And yet I never thought of any thing contrary to Law, had all been done which I desired; for that was no more, than that the Citizens would voluntarily yield to some reasonable Addition, where Right and Need appeared: And this I am sure nor did nor could cross with the Act of Parliament concerning the Tithes of London.

Metropolitan Vilita-
 tion.
 The Archbishop held a Metropolitan Visitation through his whole Province by his Vicar-General Sir Nathaniel Brent: And upon Articles of Enquiry, a great many Defects and Abuses were reform'd, as to the Fabrick of Churches and the Ornaments of them, and the decent Habit of the Clergy, who in the Country parts had almost lost that apparent distinction of their Order. Whence we find Sir Nathaniel Brent giving this Admonition to the Clergy of the Diocese of Lincoln on Aug. 11. 1624. that All who wanted Canonical Cloaks, commonly called Priests Cloaks, should provide themselves before Allhallowtide next, on pain of Ecclesiastical Censures.

Annual Account of his Province for 1633.
 But the Zeal and publick Spirit of Archbishop Laud will best appear from the annual Accounts of his Province sent to the King. In that of 1622. he certifies his Majesty, " That, according to his Royal Commands, he does here, upon the second of Jan. 1622. Comput. Anglic. present his Account of both the Diocese and Province of Canterbury concerning all those Church Affairs which were contained within his Majesty's most gracious Declaration and Instructions. And first, for his own Diocese of Canterbury, he heard of many things amiss; but as yet his time had been so short, that he had no certain Knowledge of any thing fit to certifye.

For the Bishoprick of London, the now Bishop had not received Complaint against any of his Clergy since his coming to that See, which was since Michaelmas last. For the former part of the Year he was himself Bishop, and had then left Mr. Nathaniel Ward under the Censure of Excommunication for refusing to subscribe to the Articles; had convented Mr. John Beadle Rector of Barnston in Essex, for omitting some parts of Divine Service, and had dismiss'd him with Canonical Admonition only; and that he found Mr.
 John Newport Vicar of St. Stephen Coleman-street (whom he had used with all Moderation) had now resign'd his Vicarage, and declared his Judgment against conformity.

For Bath and Wells, he found the Bishop had in his late Visitation taken a great deal of pains to see all his Majesty's Instructions observ'd: and particularly had put down divers Lecturers in Market Towns which were beneficed Men in other Bishops Dioceses; and had sent up a List of Romiss Recusants.

In the Diocese of Rochester, the Town of Mar-ting, and that whole Deanry, were very much out of order; but the Archbishop, by my Lord the Bishops Command, had settled them; that the Bishop complain'd that the Cathedral Church suffer'd much for want of Glass in the Windows, and the Church-yard lay very uncleanly, and the Gates down; and that he had no power to remedy these things, because the Dean and Chapter refused to be visited by him, upon pretence that the Statutes were not confirm'd under the Broad Seal. [To which the King wrote this Postill in the Margin] This must be remedied one way or other, concerning which I expect a particular Account of you.

Concerning Peterborough Diocese, whereas his Majesty's Instructions required that Lecturers should turn their Afternoon Sermons into Catechising; some Parsons and Vicars made a question, whether they were bound to that Order, because Lecturers only are named.

As to Coventry and Lichfield, the Bishop com-plain'd that the Peculiars of his Diocese (wherein he had no power) were much out of Order; that he had suppress'd a seditious Lecture at Re-pon, and divers monthly Lectures, with a Fast and a Moderator; as also the Running Lecture, so called because the Lecturer went from Village to Village; ordained, as they said, to illumine the dark Corners of that Diocese. [To which the King noted in the Margin] I there be dark Corners in this Diocese, it were fit a true Light should illuminate it, and not this that is false and uncertain.

My Lord of St. Davids was now resident in his Diocese, and would take care to whom he gave holy Orders; had suspend'd a Lecturer for his Inconformity, and found but few Romish Recu-sants.

In St. Asaph all was exceeding well save only that the Number and Boldness of some Romish Recusants increased much in many places; and was encouraged by the superstitious and frequent concourse of that Party to Holy Well, long com-plain'd of without remedy.

The Bishop of Landaff had certified, that he had not one refractory Nonconformist, or Schismatical Minister, within his Diocese; but two Lecturers, and they both licenc'd Preachers.

The Bishop of Lincoln had signify'd, that the Company of Mercers in London, traffick with the Gift of one Mr. Fishburn, had set up a Lecturer in Huntingdon, to be retained or removed, with-1624. " out any relation to Bishop or Archbishop. His 10 Car. I. " most humble Suit to his Majesty is, that no

 " Lay-man whatsoever, and least of all Companies " or Corporations, should have power to put in or " put out any Lecturer, or other Minister. [To " which his Majesty remark'd in the Margin] Cer" tainly I cannot hold fit, that any Lay Person or Cor" poration whatsoever should have the Power these Men " take to themselves: for I will have no Priest have any " necessity of a Lay Dependency. Wherefore I command
 " you to show me the way to overthrow this, and to bind-
 " der the performance in time to all such Intentions.

" That all the Bishops above-mention'd did agree,
 " that all other things in his sacred Majesty's In" structions contained, were carefully observed; and " particularly that of avoiding factious meddling
 " with the prohibited Questions.

" From the rest of the Bishops he had not yet re" ceived any Certificate. And so he humbly sub" mitted this his Certificate subscrib'd W. CANT.

Annual Account
 of the Prov. of Canterb.
 1624.

The second yearly Account of his Province was for 1624. wherein he first represents to his Majesty,

" That he had this Year, partly by his Vicar-Ge" neral, and partly by the Dean of the Arches, vi" sited seven Dioceses, beginning at his own Metro-" political Church of Canterbury. That he found in " his own Diocese, (especially about Abford side)
 " divers professed Separatists, with whom he should " take Order. That he conceived the Dutch Church" es in Canterbury and Sandwich were great Nur" ries of Inconformity, of which he had already " complained to his Majesty and the Council-board,
 " and had humbly desired, that they, both of the " French, Italian, and Dutch Congregations, which " were born Subjects, might not be suffer'd any " longer to live in such a Separation both from " Church and State. [The King remark'd in the " Margin] Put me in mind of this at some convenient " time, when I am at Council, and I shall redress it.

" For Rochester, he found no eminent thing amiss,
 " but the Bishop himself fell into a Palfie.

" For Salisbury, he found the Bishop had taken a " great deal of care about his Majesty's Instru" ctions, and had caused Copies of them to be sent to " most of the Ministers. The greatest part of Wilt-
 " shire was overgrown with the Humours of those " Men who do not conform: That the Cathedral " of Salisbury was much pester'd with Seats, which " he had given Order to remove, and hoped his " Majesty would approve, as well as he did at York
 " and Durham, and add the Royal Power, if his " own be not sufficient.

" For Bristol, he found in his Visitation that the " Bishop had taken very good Pains and Care. And " some Clergy-men in Dorsetshire, who gave great " cause of Suspicion, had quitted themselves in a " better manner than was expected: tho' all was " not right in those Parts.

" Concerning Bath and Wells, all his Majesty's " Instructions were punctually observed, and the " Lectures read, not by any particular factious Per" sons, but by a company of learned neighbouring " Ministers, every way conformable to the Church.

" For Exeter, he must do my Lord Bishop this " Right, that for his Majesty's Instructions, they " had been carefully observed: but a great Division " was between the Dean and Chapter; and another " great Difference between the Dean and Chapter " and the City, about burial within the Church" yard of the Cathedral.

" As for Lincoln, that greatest Diocese in the " Kingdom, had been visited this Year. And his " Visitors found Bedfordshire, for the bigness, most " tainted of any part of the Diocese. Many Ana- " baptists were in Lincoln it self, their Leader one " Johnson a Baker. In divers parts the Clergy and " Laity excessively given to Drunkenness. The " Town of Boston, a great Nursery of Inconformity, " was, since the calling some of the Magistrates in-
 " to the High Commission, become very orderly; 1628. " but the Town of Louth somewhat to blame. At " Kenworth in Hertfordshire, and some other places, 10 Car. I.

 " many gadded from their own Churches by Troops
 " after other Ministers. The Cathedral of the Dio" cese was not well ordered either for Reparation
 " or Ornaments. For Eaton College, the Provost
 " Sir Hen. Wotton, had carried himself very worthily.

" Thus far concerning the Dioceses which he had " visited this Year; in all which he found one great " Complaint, and very fit to be redressed. The " general Grievance of the poor Vicars, that their " Stipends are scarce able to feed and cloath them;
 " and which was worse, the Vicars in great Market-" Towns, where the People are very many, were " for the most part worst provided for. He hum" bly thanks his Majesty some Good had of late been " done for them; and he should pursue all just " and fair ways to give them relief, humbly beseech-
 " ing his Majesty's gracious Assistance.

" For Winchester, he found his Majesty's Instru" ctions well observed, save only that in two Parishes
 " the Bishop found some Defect about Catechizing " in the Afternoon, which should be remedied. There " were divers obstinate Recufants in those Parts.

" The Bishop of London had visited his Diocese
 " this Year; the City and Middlesex in Person, the " rest by his Chancellour. Divers Complaints about " Inconformity to the Church Discipline; but the " Proofs came home only against four, three Cu" rates and a Vicar: The Vicar and two Curates
 " had submitted, the third was suspended.

" For Norwich, the Bishop had certified that he " had put down some Lecturers, where factious Men
 " performed them; had heard complaint of Mr.
 " Ward of Ipswich, for some Words utter'd in Ser" mons, for which he was now called into the " High-Commission; that he had suspended one
 " Enoch Grey for unsound Doctrine; and that he had " made two wandring Preachers run out of his Dio" cese.

" The Bishop of Ely had certified, that all the " Royal Injunctions for the good of the Church had " been carefully observed, and that he would have " a watchful Eye concerning all Lecturers.

" For St. David's, the Bishop was now gone and " settled in his Dioceses, whence he had not been ab" sent two Months these two Years; that his Lord" ship complained grievously (and not without " cause) that divers Impropiators in those Parts
 " have either pulled down the Chancels, or suffered " them to fall, or left them so open and cold, that " the People in those Mountainous parts must en" dure a great deal of hardship.

" The Bishop of St. Asaph professed he had little " to return, they were not troubled with Inconfor-" mity; but heartily wishes, they might be as well
 " acquitted from Superstition and Profaneness.

" The Bishop of Landaff had certified, that this " last Year he visited in Person, and found William
 " Erbury, Vicar of St. Mary's in Cardiff, and Walter
 " Craddock his Curate, very Schismatical Preachers:
 " that he hath given the Vicar a Judicial Admoni" tion, and had suspended the Curate, and taken " away his License to serve the Cure.

" The Bishop of Glocester certified, that he is for" ced to Ordain some very mean Ministers in his " Diocese to supply Cures as mean. He hath put " down some Lecturers, and set up other some, which " he conceives he did without offence, being done " upon different occasions. [The King noted in the " Margin,] I must be satisfied that the Occasions were very " necessary, otherwise he shall answer it.

Hereford, the Bishoprick was void.

" Oxford, the Bishop was very careful, had ac" cording to his promise made unto his Majesty, built " a House at Cuddesden, held in Commendam; which " House he desired might be annexed to the See of " Oxford.

" My Lord of Chichester had certified All very " well in his Diocese; save only in the East Part,
 " some 1635. " some Puritan Justices of the Peace had awed some 11 Car. I. " of the Clergy into like Opinions with themselves.

 " The Bishop of Peterborough had visited his Diocese this last Year; and begun so well to look to " all good Orders, that he hoped things would go " very well there.
 " That he had received no Account from the Bishops of Worcester, Coventry and Lichfield, and " Bangor.

So I humbly submit my Certificate.

W. CANT.

The good Application of Ship
 Money.

By the Fund of Ship-money (which was not mingled with the other Treasure or Accounts in the Exchequer, but was kept as a separate Bank for the Navy) the King was enabled to set out a Fleet of forty Men of War under the Command of the Earl of Lindsey Admiral, and twenty Sail more under the Earl of Essex Vice-Admiral, for securing of the Narrow Seas, and asserting the Dominion of them. And indeed the considerable Increase of the French Navy, and their late building several greater Ships, and threatening the Sea-Ports in Flanders, together with the Progress which the Hollanders had now made in their Attempts of Fishing upon our Coasts, and the great Improvements of Piracy made by the Algerines and other Rovers, who now infested the very Channel; were a great Argument for the Necessity of setting out a Fleet, which under present Circumstances could not be done without an extraordinary Aid. To make this Aid more ample and more continual, it was found expedient to enlarge the Extent of it; and whereas in the former Year the Writs were directed to Maritime Places only, it was now resolv'd to bring in all Counties of the Kingdom to some proportionable share. And accordingly Instructions and Directions were prepared by the Lords of the Council, to be sent with the Writs to the respective Sheriffs, to inform them, " That his Majesty, for " his own Honour, and the ancient Renown of the " Nation, and the common Safety of his People, " had issued the like Writs to all Counties, Cities, " and Towns through the whole Kingdom; that " for due Execution hereof, they should first settle " the general Assessment on the whole County, and " then subdivide the particular Charge on each Hun- " dred and Parish: Not to assess poor Cottages; " nor Rent of Houses, but with regard to the Abi- " lity of the Inhabitants; to take Distresses upon " such as refuse to pay; to collect with speed, and " pay the Money to the Treasurer of the Navy.

 mand of Ship Money enlarg'd.

Lord Keeper's Charge for Ship
 Money.

To promote the Execution of these Writs, Thomas Lord Coventry, Lord Keeper, deliver'd a Charge in his Majesty's Name to all the Judges of England, in the Star-Chamber, June 17. concluding with this Affair of the Navy; " That his Majesty, out of his " great Wisdom, had found it expedient to set a " Fleet to Sea, and resolv'd to add a greater Strength, " and must therefore send out new Writs for the " Preparation of a greater Fleet next Year, not on- " ly to the Maritime Towns, but to all the Kingdom " besides. That therefore his Majesty did require " and command them, that in their Charges at the " Assizes, and in all other places, they should take " an occasion to let the People know how careful " and zealous his Majesty was to preserve his own " Honour, this Kingdom, and the Dominion of the " Sea, and to secure both Sea and Land by a pow- " erful Fleet, that foreign Nations might see, that " England is both able and ready to keep it self and " all its Rights; and to let them know farther, how " just it was, that his Majesty should require this " for their Defence, and with what Cheerfulness " they ought and were bound in Duty to contri- " bute unto it.

Ship-Money grows more odious.

These Charges at the County Assizes (however proper and just to promulge Orders before the Execution of them) did but alarm the Country, and

and make 'em feel the Burden before it touch'd 'em. 1635.
 What was before thought a particular Provision to 11 Car. I. be made by particular Ports for their own immediate Safety, was now found to be intended for a National Tax, and therefore the more odious for want of an Authority of Parliament. And though the Load it self was not heavy, for the yearly Income was at height computed to be not above 2,36000*l.* which was not fully 20,000*l.* a Month through the whole Kingdom; yet the making it a universal Aid, and the assessing and collecting it in the Parliamentary Methods, gave it much the greater Air of Grievance and Oppression. This is certain, that if Ship-Money had been rais'd with Appearance of voluntary Contribution (as the Royal Loan was) and not by rated Imposition, it had made less Noise, and might have produced as high Effects: Or if while turn'd into a necessary Aid, it had been in good time communicated to a Parliament, while the King and his Friends might have had Interest to justify the past Necessity, and to authorize the Continuance or Intermision by the Legislative Power; then the People of England would have been ea-sie and quiet, who will never, by any means, endure the extorting of Taxes from them without their own Consent in Parliament.

More Projects for Money.

But besides this extraordinary Aid of Ship-Money, which was not sufficient for the meer Occasions of the Navy; the King's Necessities urg'd him to many other Projects of supporting and improving his Revenues: as, By erecting an Office for giving Licence by the King, or by six of the Privy Council, to any Subject departing out of the King's Dominions, by Proclamation July 21. And by granting to Robert Lesley Esq; the Profits of the Office erected for receiving the Forfeitures incurred by profane Swearers and Curfers, by Proclamation July 26. And by fixing a Letter-Office for England and Scotland, and appointing Thomas Wubering Esq; to be Post-Master, and commanding that no Letters should be otherwise carried, except by common known Carriers, or by a particular Messenger, as by Proclamation July 31. And by renewing a Commission to some Lords and others, to Sell, Grant, and Confirm to the People their defective Estates, Possessions and Titles, as by Proclamation Aug. 24. And by inflicting Penalties on excessive Carriages that were to the Destruction of the Highways, and on Hackney-Coaches disturbing the Streets of the City, and by other Ways and Means, which however lawful, and how much soever for the Benefit of the Subject as well as of the Prince, yet all these, at this juncture, were look'd on with a jealous Eye, as Inventions how to maintain the King without a Parliament.

Yet our Dangers from abroad were very imminent, and might well justify some extraordinary Provisions. For, the Hollanders had made a League with the French against the Spaniards, by which a French Army was to invade Flanders by Land, and to attempt Dunkirk, while a Dutch Fleet were to attend, and assist at Sea. And possibly the Design had been effected, if the Terror of our English Navy had not quickly perswaded the Dutch to draw off their Ships, and return home.

In November, Charles Prince Elector came over to solicit his Royal Uncle to promote his Restoration; and in the Month after came his younger Brother Prince Rupert, who were received with great Civilities; and their Cause seem'd to look somewhat better by the Conclusion of a Peace at Prague, whereby at least the Protestants were restor'd to their Liberties and Profession, as settled in the Year 1627.

Prince
 comes into England.

In Decem. the Queen was brought to Bed of a 2d Daughter, named Elizabeth, to congratulate this new Accession of Happiness to the Court, the States of Holland sent hither a solemn Ambassy, with a noble Present of Amber-grease, China-Basons, a Clock, the Workmanship of Rudolphus the Emperor, and some exquisite Pieces of Painting.

1635. As to Church Affairs, A Liturgy and Book of 11 Car. I. Canons for the Church of Scotland, by the Advice of State of Religion. 1635. Bishop Laud, had been committed to some Bishops of of Scotland, who sent a Letter to the Archbishop of Canterbury, dated April 2. 1635. brought hither by the Bishop of Ross, wherein they acquainted his Grace, that they all wish a full Conformity in the Churches, but his Grace knew that this must be the Work of Time.
 Scotch Li- They had made a farther Progress than could have been turg. expected, and hoped still to go farther, if it should please God to continue his Grace in Health and Life. The Liturgy was not yet finish'd, but this Book of Canons was by the King referred to the Archbishop of Canterbury and Bishop of London, and after their Approbation, it was confirm'd by Royal Authority, under the Great Seal 23d of May, and sent back to be enforced in the nature of Royal Injunctions. But the Scotch quarrel'd with them, and rais'd so many Objections against them, that they could never grow into a settled Use and Practice. Farther Advice was sent in a Letter of Archbishop Laud to the Abp. of St. Andrew's, dated November 10. 1635. That for all the Business of that Church in future, they were im-mutably to hold this Rule, that they were privately to acquaint the Earl of Traquair with every Matter, before it was propos'd in Publick; and that the Earl had as-sur'd the King in his Presence, that he will strictly observe a good Correspondence with them, and faithfully do all good Offices for the Church, according to the Commands he should receive from the King; which mutual Relation between the Earl of Traquair and them was to be kept very secret. And in another Letter he advises the said Archbishop of St. Andrew's, that the King was much dis-pleas'd with the Bishop of Aberdeen, for allowing a publick Fast thro' his Diocess to be kept upon the Lord's-Day; expressing his Majesty's Will, that no Bishops should there presume to command or suffer any Fast to be kept on that Day, or on any other without the special Leave and Command of the King; and that if the Canons were not already printed, they should make a Canon purposely against this unworthy Custom. Which Advices and Orders, however just and seasonable, rais'd some uneasie Jealousies, even among the Scotch Bishops themselves, as if they interfer'd with the Liberty of their national Church; and were more especially offensive to the People, who hated to receive Ecclesiastical Discipline from England, and especially from the Archbishop of Canterbury, who seem'd to them by this means to affect a British Primacy.

Injunctions to the Church of Winchester.

The Archbishop might have expected less Envy within his own Province, where he carried on his Metropolitan Vifitation with great Zeal for Uniformity: In which, by his Vicar General, Sir Nathaniel Brent, he gave these Injunctions June 19. to the Cathedral Church of Winchester, "That the Dean " and Chapter should provide four Copes; should " bow at their coming in and going out of the " Quire; should read the Epistles and Gospels at " the Altar; and in greater Festivals should read
 " the Divine Service by turns in their own Persons.
 And the like Orders were prescribed to other Cathedrals, which however fit and decent in themselves, and now more especially seasonable, because of the Disorders and various Abuses crept in by the con-niverance of late Governours: Yet by a great part of the Laity and Clergy not used to any standing Rules, they were look'd on as Innovations and perfect Impositions.

Preaching against Innovations.

And unless the Regulation could be evenly carried on, and perfectly establish'd, it would be sure to give advantage to the Puritans, who waited for Complaints of Innovation: And many of the Calvi-nistical Divines shew'd a high Spirit of Impatience.
 In November Mr. Samuel Ward, a Minister in Ipswich, preach'd against Bowing at the Name of Jesus, and against the King's Book of Sports; and said, The Church of England was ready to ring Changes in Religion, and the Gospel stood on Tiptoe, as ready to be gone. For this he was censur'd in the High-Commission, Suspended, and enjoyn'd a publick Recantation; which he refusing was committed to Prison. 1635.

 And Mr. Chancey, Minister of Ware in Hertfordshire, 11 Car. I. for opposing the making of a Rail about the Communion Table in that Church, and calling it an Innovation and Snare to Men's Consciences, was brought into the High Commission, and censur'd for contempt of Ecclesiastical Government, and made a solemn Recantation; after which the Archbishop dismiss'd him with a severe Admonition.

That which created Archbishop Laud the greater Envy was, his Interest in disposing of most of the Preferments in Church and State. Of which the two great Instances this Year, were the promoting of Dr. Roger Manwaring, so obnoxious to former Parliaments, to the See of St. David's, Feb. 28. and procuring the great Office of Lord-Treasurer for Juxon Bishop of London; who though he had Abilities for it, and an Integrity that his Enemies could never question, yet his Education and Order made it a most invidious Honour to him: The Nobility thought themselves injur'd; and most of the Courtiers had their peculiar Indignation. Archbishop Laud enters it thus in his Diary; 1635. March 6.
 William Juxon, Lord Bishop of London, made Lord High-Treasurer of England; no Church-Man had it since Henry VII. time. I pray God bless him to carry it so, that the Church may have Honour, and the King and the State Service and Contentment by it. And now if the Church will not hold up themselves, under God, I 1635.

 " According to your Royal Commands, I do
 " here upon the second of January 1635. Com-
 " put. Anglic. present my Account, both for the Dio" ccess and Province of Canterbury, concerning all " those Church Affairs, which are contained in your " Majesty's most gracious Instructions, published " out of your most princely and religious Care to " preserve Unity in Orthodox Doctrine, and Con" formity to Government within this your Church " of England.

" And, first, for my own Diocess, I humbly re" present to your Majesty, that there are yet very " many refractory Persons to the Government of " the Church of England, about Maidstone and Ash-" ford, and some other Parts; the Infection being " spread by one Brewer, and continued and increased " by one Turner. They have been both censur'd in " the High-Commission Court some Years since; but " the hurt which they have done is so deeply rooted,
 " as that it is not possible to be plucked up on the " suddain. But I must crave time to work it off
 " by little and little.

" I have, according to your Majesty's Commands, " required Obedience to my Injunctions, sent to the " French and Dutch Churches at Canterbury, Maid" stone and Sandwich; and albeit they made some " shew of Conformity, yet I do not find they have " yielded such Obedience as is required, and was " order'd with your Majesty's Consent and Appro" bation: So that I fear I shall be driven to a quicker " Proceeding with them.

The Cathedral Church begins to be in very good " Order: And I have almost finished their Statutes;
 " which being once perfected will (mutatis mutandis)
 " be a sufficient Direction for the making of the " Statutes for the other Cathedrals of the new Ere" ction, which in King Henry VIII.'s. time had " either none left or none confirm'd; and those " which are, in many things not Canonical. All " which Statutes your Majesty hath given Power
 " to Me, with others, under the Broad-Seal of Eng" land, to alter or make new as we shall find cause.
 " And so soon as these Statutes for the Church of " Canterbury are made ready, I shall humbly sub" mit them to your Majesty for confirmation.

" There

1635. II Car. I. " There is one Mr. Walker of St. John's the Evangelist, who hath all his time been but a disorderly and peevish Man; and now of late hath very frowardly preached against the Lord Bishop of Ely's Book concerning the Lord's-Day, set out by Authority. But upon a Canonical Admonition given him to desist, he hath hitherto recollected himself, and I hope will be advised.

London. For the Diocess of London, I find my Lord the Bishop hath been very careful for all that concerns his own Person. But three of his Archdeacons have made no return at all to him; so that he can certifie nothing but what hath come to his Knowledge without their help. There have been convented in this Diocess Dr. Stoughton of Aldermanbury, Mr. Simpson, Curate and Lecturer of St. Margaret's New-Fishstreet, Mr. Andrew Moline, Curate Lecturer of St. Swithin, Mr. John Goodwin, Vicar of St. Stephen Coleman-street, and Mr. Viner, Lecturer of St. Lawrence in the Old-Jury, for breach of the Canons of the Church in Sermons, or Practice, or both. But because all them promised Amendment for the future, and Submission to the Church in all things, my Lord very moderately forbore farther Proceeding against them.

" There were likewise convented Mr. Sparrowhawk Curate and Lecturer at St. Mary Woolchurch, for preaching against the Canon for bowing at the Name of Jesus; who because he wilfully persisted is suspended from Preaching in that Diocess. As also one Mr. John Wood a wild turbulent Preacher, and formerly censured in the High-Commission Court. But his Lordship forbore Mr. White of Knightsbridge, for that his cause is at this present depending in the Court aforesaid.

Lincoln. " Concerning the Diocess of Lincoln, my Lord the Bishop returns this Information, that he hath visited the same this Year all over in Person, which he conceives no Predecessor of his hath done these hundred Years: And that he finds so much good done thereby, beyond that which his Chancellors use to do when they go the Visitation; that he is sorry he hath not done it heretofore, in so many Years as he hath been Bishop.

" He farther certifies, that he hath prevailed beyond Expectation for the augmenting of four or five small Vicarages; and conceives (as your Majesty may be pleased to remember I have often told you upon my own Experience) that it is a Work very necessary and fit to be done, and most worthy of your Majesty's Royal Care and Consideration.

" For Conformity his Lordship professeth, that in that large Diocess he knoweth but one unconfordable Man, and that is one Lindhall, who is in the High-Commission Court and ready for Sentence.

Bath and Wells. " My Lord the Bishop of Bath and Wells certifies, that his Diocess is in very good Order and Obedience: That there is not a single Lectur in any Town Corporate, but grave Divines preach by course; and that he hath changed the Afternoon Sermons into Catechizing by Question and Answer in all Parishes.

" His Lordship farther certifies, that no Man hath been presented unto him since his last Certificate, for any breach of the Canons of the Church, or your Majesty's instructions; and that he hath received no notice of any increase of Men Popishly affected, beyond the number mention'd in his last Certificate.

Norwich. " The Bishop of this See died almost half a Year since, and had sent in no Certificate. But I find by my Visitation there this present Year, that the whole Diocess is much out of Order, and more at Ipswich and Yarmouth than at Norwich it self. But I hope my Lord that now is will take care of it, and he shall want no Assistance that I can give him.

" Mr. Samuel Ward Preacher at Ipswich was cen-1635. II Car. I. " fured this last Term in the High-Commission Court, for preaching in disgrace of the Common Prayer Book, and other like grofs Misde meanours.

" These six Bishops respectively make their Answer, that in their own Persons they have observed all your Majesty's Instructions; and that they find all their Clergy very conformable, no one of them instancing in any Particular to the contrary.

Landaff. " In this Diocess the Bishop found in his Triennial Visitation the former Year two noted Schismatics, Wroth and Erbmey, that led away many simple People after them. And finding that they wilfully persisted in their Schismatical course, he hath carefully preferred Articles against them in the High-Commission Court; where, when the Cause is ready for Hearing, they shall receive according to the Merits of it.

Hereford. " Concerning this Diocess your Majesty knows, that the late Bishop's Residence upon the Place was necessarily hindred by his Attendance upon your Majesty's Person, as Clerk of the Closet. But he hath been very careful for the observance of all your Instructions, and particularly for catechizing the Youth; as also for not letting of any thing into Lives, to the prejudice of his Successor, in which he hath done exceeding well: And I have by your Majesty's Command laid a strict charge upon his Successor, to look to those particular Leases which he hath made stay of, that they may be reduc'd into Years, for the good of that See which abundantly needs it.

Winton. " My Lord Bishop of Winchester certifies, that there is all Peace and Order in his Diocess; and that himself and his Clergy have duly obey'd your Majesty's Instructions: But he informs, that in the Parish of Avington in Hampshire, one Unguyon an Esquire, is presented for a new Recusant, as also three others, whereof two are in Southwark.

Peterborough, Rochester, Exeter. " These three Bishops for their several Diocesses respectively make return, that all Obedience is yielded to every of your Majesty's Instructions.

S. David's. " The late Bishop of St. David's (now of Hereford) hath in his time of Residence taken a great deal of pains in that See, and hath caused two to be question'd in the High-Commission, and Suspended one Roberts a Lecturer, for Inconformity. Three or four others which were Suspended he hath released upon hope given of their Obedience to the Church, and hath absolutely deprived two for their exceeding scandalous Life. He complains much, and surely with cause enough, that there are few Ministers in those poor and remote Places, that are able to Preach and Instruct the People.

" My Lord the Bishop informs, that that County is very full of Impropropriations, which makes the Ministers Poor; and their Poverty makes them fall upon Popular and Factious Courses. I doubt this too true, but it is a Mischiefe hard to cure in this Kingdom; yet I have taken all the care I can, and shall continue so to do.

" From the rest of the Bishops of my Province, I have received no Certificate this Year, viz. Coventry and Lichfield, Worcester, Bangor.

So I humbly submit this my Certificate.

W. CANT.

To proceed to the Year 1636. It began with a Plague, that broke forth in the usual Seat of Infection among the Burchers in the Row leading from Aldgate to White Chapel. Upon which his Majesty by Proclamation dated April 22. provided, That whereas in the time of the last Plague there were divers good Orders published with Rules preservative and Directions against the Infection; the said Orders, Rules, and Medi-1626. Medicines, should be again now published and renewed. And by another Proclamation, dated May 27. The King's Majesty finding that the Infection of the Plague is at this present scattered and dispersed in the Cities of London and Westminster, hath thought fit to Adjourn some part of Trinity-Term next from the second Return thereof to the last Return of the same. This publick Calamity reign'd the whole Summer and Autumn, till his Majesty by Proclamation dated October 18. commanded a general Fast to be weekly observed throughout the Realm of England, by reason of the heavy Judgment of God in his present Visitation in the Cities of London and Westminster, and divers other parts of the Kingdom at this time with the Pestilence. In the Book of Prayers prescrib'd for this Fast, a Passage in a former Collect reflecting on the Abuse of Fasting by thinking it meritorious, was now left out. This Omission was made an Article against the Archbishop at his Trial; to which he pleaded, "That the Alteration was made not by himself, but by him that had the ordering of that Book for the Press: yet he approv'd the Reason given for it, and that without any the least Approbation of Merit. For in this Age and Kingdom, when and where set Fastings of the Church are cried down, there can be little fear of that erroneous Opinion of placing any Merit in Fasting.

The Abp. charged with an Omission in a Form of Prayer.

King's Care of the Fleet

The King's great Care was to have a good Fleet at Sea, to raise his Honour abroad, and preserve the Peace at home, by letting his Subjects see a just and wise Disposal of the Ship-Money. To give countenance to these Naval Designs, his Majesty in Council March 26. taking into consideration a Book lately publish'd by John Selden Esq; intitled Maritime Jurisdiction, written by the King's Command, which he had done with great Industry, Learning, and Judgment, and hath asserted the Right of the Crown of England to the Dominion of the British Seas; the King requires one of the said Books to be kept in the Council Chest, another in the Court of Exchequer, and a third in the Court of Admiralty, as faithful and strong Evidence to the Dominion of the British Sea. And on April 15. the King farther express'd his Pleasure, that whereas the said Book had been Printed beyond Sea, and to the said Impression more was added than what was therein Printed at first, and the Name of the City of London was fully put for the Place of the Impression; no Person should import, publish, or set to sale, any of the said Books of the said foreign Edition, either in Latin or English. This was an Encouragement not only to Learning, but to the Naval Expedition of this Year, when the King prepar'd for it by a Proclamation dated May 10. which renew'd an Order of K. James, whereby "All Persons, of what Nation or Quality soever, being not his natural born Subjects, were restrain'd from Fishing upon any of the Coasts and Seas of Great Britain, Ireland, and the rest of the Isles adjacent, without Licence first obtained from the King or his Commissioners. And his Majesty now farther declares, that his Resolution is, to keep such a competent Strength of Shipping upon his Seas, as may (by God's Blessing) be sufficient both to hinder such farther Encroachments upon his Regalities, and assist and protect those his good Friends and Allies, who shall henceforth, by vertue of his Licences first obtained, endeavour to take the benefit of Fishing upon his Coasts and Seas in the Places accustomed.

Repeal'd and to Mr. Selden's Maritime Jurisdiction.

A good Fleet.

Disperses the Dutch & other.

Accordingly the King appeared this Year with a formidable Armado in the Narrow Seas, Algeron Earl of Northumberland being Admiral, who with sixty Sail under his Command set out from the Downs toward the North, where the Dutch Busses were Fishing upon our Coasts: The Admiral requiring them to forbear, they seem'd indispos'd to it; upon which, he fired at them: Some of 'em were taken, others sunk, and the rest fled. The Dutch immediately hereupon prevailed with the Admiral to mediate with the King that they might by his Permission go on this Summer to fish upon the Coasts, and agreed to give the King for this Year thirty thousand Pounds, which was paid accordingly: And the States express'd their Willingness to obtain a Grant from the King, for his Permission of their Vessels to Fish for the time to come, paying a yearly Tribute.

1626. 12 Car. I.

Yet all this honourable Disposal of the Ship-Money, and good Effects of it, could not reconcile the People of England to a new Tax levied without an Act of Parliament. Murmurs and a general Sense of Oppression went through the Kingdom. In London, one Richard Chambers, Merchant, had peremptorily refused to pay, for which he had been committed to Prison by Sir Edward Bromfield Lord Mayor, against whom he commenc'd a Suit for Trespass and false Imprisonment; which Case was to be argued in this Trinity-Term: But Sir Robert Berkley, one of the Justices of the Court of King's-Bench, would not suffer the Point of Legality of Ship-Money to be argued by Chambers's Council; declaring openly in Court, "That there was a Rule of Law and a Rule of Government, and that many things which might not be done by the Rule of Law, might be done by the Rule of Government. But this Distinction was thought new and dangerous; and this silencing a Cause, made People the more to suspect the Merits of it.

Courtinaid Murmurs against Ship-Money.

Arbitrary Judgment

The City of London, who had most Ability, and indeed most Reason to bear the Burden, betray'd so much Aversion to it, that the Lords of the Privy-Council wrote to them to advise their Submission: but they met with such a stout Return, that their Lordships were forced to write again on August 8. to inform the Lord-Mayor and Court, that "They had received by some of the Aldermen a Denial in the Name of the City, to their late Letter for the setting forth of Shipping, and Excuses had been since made upon the like occasion; which they could not impute to any thing but want of Duty; and therefore in his Majesty's Name, and by his Commandment, their Lordships require them to see the Directions of their Letter performed upon their Allegiance, and as they will answer the contrary at their Perils. When the City perceived they could not shake off the Burden, they desired however a Mitigation of it; and therefore on August 11. they presented a Petition, desiring an Abatement of the twenty Ships rated upon the City unto ten Ships, and two Pinnaces. But this too was denied in a manner that made the Denial more grievous; for Mr. Secretary Cook, by Order of the Privy Council, told them, "That the former Commandment was necessary, and the Charge upon them was not immoderate; that Petitions and Pleadings against such Commandment were not to be received: And whereas they mention'd Precedents, they should know, that the Precedents of former Times were Obedience and not Direction; that there were also Precedents of the Punishment of those that disobey'd his Majesty's Commandments signified by the Board in the case of the Preservation of the State. This Answer might extort a Submission, but it could not give a Satisfaction.

The City of London would not yield.

And therefore the King took a more plausible Method to suffer the Legality of this Tax to be decided by the Judges, putting this Case to them in Letters dated Febr. 2. Regn. 12.

Carolus Rex.

When the Good and Safety of the Kingdom in general is concerned, and the whole Kingdom in danger, whether may not the King by Writ, under the Great Seal of England, command all the Subjects of our Kingdom, at their Charge, to provide and furnish such a Number of Ships, with Men, Victuals, and Munition, and for such time as we shall think fit, for the Defence and Safeguard of the Kingdom from such Danger and Peril, and by Law compel the doing thereof in case of Refusal or Refractoriness? And whether, in such a case, Case put to the Judges.

1636. is not the King the sole Judge both of the Danger, and when and how the same is to be prevented and avoided?

To which the Judges returned this Opinion.

May it please your most excellent Majesty,

Judges Answer.

WE have according to your Majesty's Command, every Man by himself, and all of us together, taken into serious consideration the Case and Question signed by your Majesty, and included in your Royal Letter; and we are of Opinion, that when the Good and Safety of the Kingdom in general is concerned, and the Kingdom in Danger, your Majesty may by Writ, under the Great Seal of England, command all your Subjects of this your Kingdom, at their charge to provide and furnish such a number of Ships with Men, Victuals and Munition; and for such time as your Majesty shall think fit for the defence and safeguard of this Kingdom from such Danger and Peril; and that by Law your Majesty may compel the doing thereof in case of Refusal or Refractoriness. And we are also of Opinion, that in such Case your Majesty is the sole Judge, both of the Danger, and when, and how the same is to be prevented and avoided.

Judges censur'd for their Opinion.

Tho' this Judgment solemnly delivered might justify the King, yet it could not acquit the Judges themselves, who were by many suspected in this case, rather to make Law than to pronounce it; and to have been tempted or aw'd into this extrajudicial Opinion. A Suspicion that encreas'd the more, because some of them betray'd a surprize to hear their Resolution openly read by the Lord Keeper in the Court of Star-Chamber, Feb. 12. as if they had meant to deliver it for the private Satisfaction of the King and Council, nor for the knowledge of the whole Nation; and because two of them Hutton and Crook, did afterward, in the Case of Hampden, recede in effect from their own Subscription.

Lord Clarendon's Opinion of Ship-Money.

The Influence and Effect of this stated Opinion may be delivered in these Words of the Lord Clarendon.

“ It is notoriously known, that Pressure was born with much more cheerfulness before the Judgment for the King, than ever it was afterward; Men before pleasing themselves with doing somewhat for the King's Service, as a Testimony of their Affection, which they were nor bound to do. — But when they heard this demanded in a Court of Law as a Right, and found it by sworn Judges of the Law adjudged so, upon such Grounds and Reasons as every stander by was able to swear was not Law, and so had lost the Pleasure and Delight of being kind and dutiful to the King; and instead of giving were required to pay, and by a Logick that left no Man any thing which he might call his own: They no more look'd upon it as the Case of one Man, but the Case of the Kingdom; nor as an Imposition laid upon them by the King, but by the Judges, which they thought themselves bound in Conscience to the publick Justice not to submit to. — The Damage and Mischief cannot be expressed, that the Crown and State sustained by the deserved Reproach and Infamy that attended the Judges by being made use of in this and like Arts of Power, there being no possibility to preserve the Dignity, Reverence and Estimation of the Laws themselves, but by the Integrity and Innocency of the Judges, &c.

It was a less invidious Opinion which the same Judges had delivered in the case of Burton and Bastwicke, who had been so fierce in their Libels against the Government, that it was consider'd by the King's Council how to draw them into an Arraignment of High-Treason. For which purpose there was a meeting of the Judges at Serjeant's-Inn, before whom the King's Council laboured to prove, that divers Passages in the Books of the said Authors did amount to High-Treason. But when the Council withdrew, the Judges in Debate among themselves, came to these Resolutions.

1636. 12 Car. I.

1. That if there were any thing in the Books that amounted to Treason, no Indictment could be found good for Treason, unless it was grounded upon the Statute of 25 Ed. III. either for compassing the King's Death, or imagining the same, or else for levying of War.
2. That if any Man seditiously, maliciously and of purpose to raise Rebellion, and to incite Rebellion, did take Arms to reduce the course of Government of the State, either Ecclesiastical or Civil, and thereby to compass the King's Destruction, this was Treason.
3. That such Indictment was to be framed upon the said Statute of 25 Ed. III.

Resolutions of the Judges in case of Burton and Bastwicke.

This Resolution being delivered by the Lord Chief Justice to the King and Council, had this regular effect, that the said Offenders were not Indicted of High-Treason, but prosecuted in a softer manner, tho' afterward thought severe and arbitrary.

It was another unhappines to the Government, that for want of Parliamentary Supplies suited to the occasional exigencies of Affairs, they were driven upon new Projects for Money, which however fair and Just in themselves, were thought but Inventions to make Parliaments the less frequent and the less significant. Among these Projects, one was to erect a Court of Enquiry after Depopulations made by the conversion of Arable Lands to Pasture, since the 10th Year of Queen Elizabeth, by which Commission there was brought into the Exchequer above 30000*l*. Another Project was, the granting Letters for the surveying and sealing of a Reel, and other Standards to be used by all Clothiers and Workers in Cloth and Yarn: with other ways and means by enlarging the Powers of prizing of Wines; by prohibiting the Importation of Gun-powder, and requiring all Subjects to be supplied out of his Majesty's Store-Houses only.

New Projects for Money.

As to Foreign Affairs, Ferdinando the second, Emperor of Germany, finding in himself a decay of Health, began to think of settling the Succession of the Empire; and so called a Dyet to meet at Ratisbon in the middle of September, where the French managed an Intrigue for promoting the Elector of Bavaria; but the Poland Ambassador prevailed for Ferdinand the Emperor's Son, already King of Hungary, to be elected King of the Romans, on Decem. 22. who succeeded his Father dying Feb. 15. Our King upon the News of this change, sent Thomas Earl of Arundel, Earl Marshal of England, his Ambassador to the new Emperor Ferdinand III. to represent the condition of the Palgrave now in the English Court, and to sollicite the Restitution of his Patrimony. The Emperor answer'd, that he made no doubt in time it might be considered for enjoying the Lower Palatinate; but for the other, it concerned the Duke of Bavaria with whom consultation must be had on that Affair. Upon such consult, Bavaria answer'd like a Soldier, That what he had won by the Sword he would maintain by the same Power. After which, our Ambassador so far resented the Slights and Indignities put upon him, that he came away without taking leave; and made such a Report to the King, that he shewed his Displeasure with the Imperial Agent: which more and more obstructed the King's Endeavours of restoring his Nephew.

Foreign Affairs

At the latter end of this Year, Seignior Gregorio Panzani, the Pope's Nuncio in England, and Major Bret, our English Agent at Rome from the Queen, being discharged from their Negotiations, Seignior Gregorio Con a Scot, was appointed by the Pope to succeed Panzani as his Nuncio; and Sir William Hamilton a Scot, was sent hence Ledger to Rome, where Cardinal Barberino was made Patron and Protector of Pope's Nuncio's.

 State of Religion. Which brings us to the State of Ecclesiastical Affairs for this present Year 1626. As to the Liturgy design'd for Scotland, upon the 19th of April the King thus express'd his Pleasure.

Charles Rex,

King's Order for Scotland Liturgy.

1. Give the Archbishop of Canterbury command to make the Alterations expressed in this Book, and to fit a Liturgy for the Church of Scotland; and wheresoever they shall differ from another Book signed by us at Hampton-Court, September 28. 1624. Our pleasure is to have those still used rather than the former, unless the Archbishop of St. Andrews, and his Bishops who are upon the Place, shall see apparent reason to the contrary.

Further Instructions.

Archbishop Land sent an Account of this to Weldonborne Bishop of Durblain, and Dean of the Royal Chapel at Edinburgh. But there were still found some Defects and Errors in this new Liturgy, that required Alteration. And therefore on October 18. the King directed his further Instructions to the Abps and Bishops of Scotland, "That they should take care, 1. That the Proclamation to be made for authorizing the Service-Book should not derogate in any thing from his Royal Prerogative. 2. That in their Kalenda they should keep such Catholick Saints as were in the English, with such other Saints as were most peculiar to that Kingdom. 3. That in their Book of Ordination in giving Orders to Presbyters, they should keep the Words of the English Book without change: Receive the Holy-Ghost, &c. 4. That they should insert among the Lessons ordinarily to be read in the Service, out of the Book of Wisdom, the first, second, third, fourth, fifth and sixth Chapters; and out of the Book of Ecclesiasticus the first, second, fifth, eighth, thirty fifth, and forty ninth Chapters. 5. That every Bishop within his Family twice a Day cause the Service to be read; and that all the Archbishops and Bishops make all Universities and Colleges within their Diocesses to use daily twice a Day the Service. 6. That the Preface to the Book of Common-Prayer, signed by his Majesty's Hand, and the Proclamation for authorizing the same, should be printed and inserted in the Book of Common-Prayer.

According to these Instructions and the several Corrections, the Scotch Liturgy was at last finished, and ratified and confirmed by his Majesty's Royal Declaration, dated at Edinburgh 20 Decem. Regn. 12. 1626.

Offence taken at the Scotch Liturgy.

The great Offence was, that this Liturgy was imposed by the Civil Power, without being presented to the Kirk, or tendered to any approbation of the general Assembly, as had been done in the Reformation of the Episcopal Government, and Introduction of the five Articles of Pertb. Yet this omission was not owing to Archbishop Land, but it proceeded from the Scotch Bishops, who dared not trust the majority of the Clergy, or venture the reception or refusal of it to a general Vote of the Assembly. And indeed this method of enjoining by Civil Authority, without calling in the Church Representative, had been the practise of Reformation in the Church of England, where King Edward VI. and Queen Elizabeth, in fitting and enjoying their several Liturgies, had acted by their Sovereign Right of Supremacy, not submitting the Books to Convocation, because they could not then depend upon the consent of the Clergy so much Popishly affected. Another main Objection among the Scots to the Liturgy was, that it was so very near the English Book, as to look like a diminution of the Liberties of their own Kirk; and yet had several Alterations from the English, that were all for the worse, and tended more to Superstition. These and other Censures passed upon the Book were industriously improved by the Preachers, and fomented such a prejudice among the People, that we must expect to hear 1626. of the unhappy effects of it.

12 Cor. I. Abp of Canterbury claims a Power of visiting the Universities.

There was another load of Envy drawn upon the well-meaning Archbishop, by his claiming the Right of visiting the two Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, Jure Metropolitico. Both those learned Bodies denied his Claim, and pleaded they were subject only to Royal Visitation. The Cause came to a Hearing before the King and Council at Hampton-Court, June 21. where Sir John Banks, Attorney-General, argued for the Archbishop's right against the Royal Prerogative; and Mr. Gardner, Recorder of London, pleaded the Subjection only to Royal Power, in behalf of the University of Cambridge, as Serjeant Thin did in behalf of Oxford. The King himself argued for the Archbishop, and at last gave judgment for him, i. e. against his own Crown and Dignity, as most People understood it.

Most of the other Ecclesiastical Affairs of any moment are contained in the Archbishop's account of his Province to the King for this Year 1626.

May it please your sacred Majesty,

According to your Royal Commands express'd in your late Instructions for the good of the Church, I do here most humbly present my yearly Account for my Diocess and Province of Canterbury for this last Year, ended at Christmas 1626. And first for my own Diocess, I have every Year acquainted your Majesty, and so must do now, that there are still about Windsor and Egerton divers Erasmians, and other separatists: But they are so very mean and poor People, that we know not what to do with them. They are said to be Disciples of one Turner and Fenner, who were long since Apprehended and Imprisoned, by Order of your Majesty's High-Commission Court. But how this part came to be so infected with such a humour of Separation, I know not, unless it were by too much connivance at their first beginning: Neither do I see any Remedy like to be, unless some of their chief Seducers be driven to abjure the Kingdom, which must be done by the Judges at the Common-Law, but is not in our Power. The King wrote thus in the Margin, C. R. Inform me of the Particulars, and I shall command the Judges to make them Abjure.

Abp's Account of his Province.

Canterbury

I have received Information from my Officers, that the Wallboys, and other Strangers in my Diocess, especially at Canterbury, do come orderly to their Parish Churches, and there receive the Sacraments, and Marry, &c. according to my Injunctions, with that Limitation which your Majesty allowed.

There have been heretofore many in Canterbury that were not conformable to Church Discipline, and would not kneel at the Communion; but they are all now very conformable, as I hear expressly by my Officers; and there is no falling away of any to Recusancy.

There hath been a Custom, that some Ministers thereabouts have, under divers pretences, lived for the most part at Canterbury, and gone seldom to their Benefices; which hath given a double scandal, both by their absence from their several Cures, and by keeping too much Company, and that not in the best manner. I have seen this remedied in all save only one Man; and if he do not presently conform, I have taken Order for his Suspension.

In the Diocess of London, I find that my Lord the Bishop there (now by your Majesty's Grace and Favour Lord High-Treasurer of England) hath very carefully observed those Instructions which belong to his own Person. And for the Diocess, his Lordship informs me of three great Misdemeanours; the one committed by Dr. Cornelius Burgess, who in a Latin Sermon before the Clergy of London, uttered divers insolent Passages against the Bishops and Government of the Church; and refu.

1636. " refused to give his Lordship a Copy of the Sermon; so there was a necessity of calling him into the High-Commission-Court, which is done.

" The second Misdemeanour is of one Mr. Wharton a Minister in Essex; who in a Sermon at Chelmsford, uttered many unfit and some scurrilous things. But for this he hath been convented, and received a Canonical Admonition; and upon his Sorrow and Submission any farther Censure is forborn.

" The third Misdemeanour which my Lord complains of, is the late spreading and dispersing of some factious and malicious Pamphlets against the Bishops and Government of the Church of England. And my Lord farther certifies, that he hath reasonable ground to perswade him, that those libellous Pamphlets have been contrived or abetted, and dispersed by some of the Clergy of his Diocese; and therefore desires me to use the Authority of the High-Commission, for the farther discovery of this notorious Practice, to prevent the Mischiefs which will otherwise ensue upon the Government of the Church. This, God willing, I shall see performed. But if the High-Commission shall not have Power enough, because one of those Libels contains seditious Matter in it, and that which is very little short of Treason, (if any thing at all) then I humbly crave leave to add this to my Lord Treasurer's Motion, and humbly to desire, that your Majesty will call it into a higher Court if you find cause: since I see no likelihood but that these Troubles in the Church, if they be permitted, will break out into some Sedition in the Common-wealth. [To which the King answered in the Margin, C. R. What the High-Commission cannot do in this, I shall supply, as I shall find cause, in a more powerful way.]

" My Visitation is yet depending for this Diocese; and by reason of the Sicknes, I could not with safety hold it, nor think it fit to gather so much People together; but God willing, I shall perform that Duty so soon as conveniently I may, and then certify your Majesty at the next Return, what shall come under mine own view.

Winchester. " In this Diocese, I find by my Lord's Report from his Officers, that there are divers Recusants in several parts of the Country; and that some of them have been seduced away from the Church of England within these two or three Years.

" For all things else I receive no complaint thence; save only of three or four Ministers that are negligent in Catechizing, and observe it not at all, or but in the Lent only. But I shall call upon the Bishop to see this remedied, and to be as vigilant as he can against any farther encrease of Recusants.

Bath and Wells. " From Bath and Wells, I have received a very good and happy Certificate, both that all your Majesty's Instructions have been exactly performed throughout that whole Diocese; and that by God's blessing, and the well-ordering of Church Affairs, there have been fewer Popish Recusants presented than formerly, and that the number of them is much decreased. And this I cannot but highly approve to your Majesty, if there be not fewer presented, either by the over-awing of them which should present, or some cunning in those which would not be presented.

Norwich. " For this Diocese my Lord hath given me in a very careful and punctual Account, very large, and in all Particulars very considerable; and I shall return it to your Majesty as brief as I can reduce it. And first, he hath for this Summer, but by your Majesty's leave, lived (from both his Episcopal Houses) in Ipswich, partly because he was informed, that that side of his Diocese did most need his presence, and he found it so; and partly because his Chapel at his House in Norwich was possessed by the French Congregation, and so

" His Lordship found a general defect of Catechizing quite thro' the Diocess, but hath settled it. And in Norwich, where there are 24 Churches, there was no Sermon in the Sunday Morning save only in four, but all put off to the Afternoon, and so no Catechizing: but now he hath ordered that there shall be a Sermon every Morning, and Catechizing in the Afternoon in every Church.

" For Lectures they abounded in Suffolk, and many set up by private Gentlemen, even without so much as the knowledge of the Ordinary, and without any due observation of the Canons, or the Discipline of the Church. Divers of these his Lordship hath carefully regulated according to Order, and especially in St. Edmund's-Bury, and with their very good Content, and suspended no Lecturer of whom he might obtain Conformity; and at Ipswich it was not unknown unto them, that now Mr. Ward stands censured in the High-Commission and obeys not: Yet the Bishop was ready to have allowed them another, if they would have sought him; but they resolve to have Mr. Ward or none, and that (as is conceived) in despite of the Censure of the Court.

" At Tarmonth, where there was great division heretofore for many Years, their Lecturer being censur'd in the High-Commission, about 2 Years since went into New-England, since which time there hath been no Lecture, and very much Peace in the Town, and all Ecclesiastical Orders well observed: But in Norwich one Mr. Bridge, rather than he would conform, hath left his Lecture and two Cures and is gone into Holland. [The King writes in the Margin, Let him go, we are well rid of him.] The Lecturers in the Country generally observing no Church Orders at all: And yet the Bishop hath carried it with that Temper, and upon their promise, and his hopes of Conformity, he hath inhibited but three in Norfolk, and as many in Suffolk, of which one is no Graduate, and hath been a common Stage-Player.

" His Lordship craves direction what he shall do with such Scholars (some in Holy Orders and some not) as Knights and Private-Gentlemen keep in their Houses, under pretence to teach their Children; as also with some Divines that are Beneficed in Towns, or near, but live in Gentlemens Houses. For my part, I think it very fit the beneficed Men were punctually commanded: to reside upon their Cures; and for the rest, your Majesty's Instructions allow none to keep Chaplains but such as are qualified by Law. All which, notwithstanding, I most humbly submit (as the Bishop doth) to your Majesty's Judgment. [The King wrote thus, I approve your Judgment in this, I only add, that care must be taken, that even those qualified by Law keep none but conformable Men.]

" For Recusants, whereas formerly there were wont to be but two or three presented, his Lordship hath caused above 40 to be indicted in Norwich at the last Sessions; and at the Assizes in Suffolk he delivered a List of such as were presented upon the Oath of the Church-wardens to the Lord Chief Justice, and his Lordship to the Grand-Jury: But they slighted it, pretending the Bishop's Certificate to be no Evidence. But the true reason is conceived to be, because he had also inserted such as had been presented to him for Recusant Separatists, as well as Recusant Romanists. [The King wrote in the Margin, Bishops Certificates in this Case must be most unquestionable Evidence.]

" His Ldp's care hath been such, as that tho' there are about 1500 Clergy in that Diocese, and many Disorders; yet there are not thirty Excommunicated or Suspended; whereof some are for contumacy, and will not yet submit, some for obstinate denial to publish your Majesty's Declaration; and some for contemning all the Orders and Rites of the " Last of all he found, that one half of the Churches

" his Lordſhip hath ſtriſtly enjoined a Reforma" tion.

" If this Account, given by my Lord of Norwich,
" be true, as I believe it is (and ought to believe " it, till it can be diſproved) he hath deſerved
" very well of the Church of England, and hath " been very ill rewarded for it. His humble " Suit to your Maſteſty is, that you will be gra" ciously pleaſed in your own good time to hear " the Complaints that have been made againſt him, " that he may not be overborn by an outcry for

" the Dioceſe, conformable Men, and allowed by Ely. " From my Lord of Ely I have received a very " ſair Account, that his Dioceſe is very orderly and " obedient; inſomuch, that he hath not any thing

" of note to acquaint me with.

Lincoln. " My Lord in his Certificate mentions two Par" ticulars fit for your Maſteſty's knowledge. The " firſt is, that one of his Clergy in Bedfordſhire, a " Learned and Pious Man, as he ſaith, ſet up a " Stone upon Pillars of Brick for his Communion
" Table, believing it to have been the Altar-Stone.
" And becauſe this appeared to be but a Grave-" Stone, and for avoiding of farther Ruinours in " that Country among the preciſer fort, his Lordſhip
" cauſed it to be quietly removed, and the antient " Communion Table placed in the room of it: but " did not farther queſtion the Party, becauſe they " found him a harmleſs Man, and otherwiſe a de" ſerver. But how deſerving ſoever he be, I muſt
" judge it a very bold part in him to attempt this " without the Knowledge and Approbation of his " Ordinary. [Over againſt this the King wrote
" the following Note, This may prove a bold part in " the Biſhop, and the poor Prieſt in no Fault, as the " other Day his Information proved, concerning the Ship
" Busineſs at the Council Board; therefore examine this
" farther.]

" The ſecond is, that there are riſen ſome Diffe" rences in the Southern parts of his Dioceſe, about " the Miniſters urging the People to receive at the " Rails, which his Lordſhip, ſaith he, hath procu" red to be placed about the Holy Table, and the " People in ſome places reſuſing ſo to do. Now
" becauſe this is not regulated by any Canon of the " Church, his Lordſhip is an humble Suitor, that " he may have direction herein. And truly, I think,
" for this Particular, the People will beſt be wou-
" by the Decency of the thing it ſelf; and that I ſu" poſe may be compaſſed in a ſhort time. But if " your Maſteſty ſhall think it fit that a quicker way
" be held, I ſhall humbly ſubmit. [The King ſub-" join'd, Try your way for ſome time.]

Sarum. " From the Lord Biſhop of this Dioceſe I have " received no Particular; but in General thus; that " all your Maſteſty's Inſtructions are now obſerved
" there without repugnance, for ought either Chan-cellour, or any other Officer of his hath informed 1636.

" him. 12 Car. I.

" My Lord the Biſhop of this See certifies, that " your Maſteſty's Inſtructions are carefully obſerved,
" and that there are only two Lecturers in the City
" of Worceſter, both very conformable, and that they " ſhall not longer continue than they are ſo; and that " the one of them preaches on Sundays in the After" noons, after Catechizing and Service in the Pariſh " Churches, and ending before Evening-Prayers in " the Cathedral.

" I may not here forbear to acquaint your Maſteſty,
" that this Sunday Lecture was ever wont to be " in the Cathedral; and that it is removed becauſe
" the City would ſuffer no Prebendary to have it.
" And Evening-Prayers in their Pariſh Churches
" muſt needs begin betimes, and their Catechizing
" be ſhort, and the Prayers at the Cathedral begin " very late if this Lecture can begin and end in the " Space between. But if it can be ſo fitted, I think " the Dean and Chapter will not complain of the re" move of the Lecture to a Pariſh Church.

" For theſe three Dioceſes, my Lords the Bi-" ſhops certify that all your Maſteſty's Inſtructions
" are carefully obſerv'd; neither do any of them
" mention any thing amiſs in the general, either " for Doctrine or Diſcipline. Only the Biſhop of " Exeter hath ſent me up two Copies of the late Li" bel, entituled News from Ipſwich, which were ſent
" thither to a Stationer with blank Covers.

" Theſe five Dioceſes following I have viſited
" this Year, by my Vicar-General and other Com-" miſſioners: And for Hereford I find not many " things amiſs, tho' the after-change of the Bp. there,
" which hath of late happen'd, hath done no good " among them. But ſome pretenſions there are to " certain Cuſtoms, which, I conceive, were better
" broke than kept: And I ſhall do my beſt to re" form them, as I have opportunity, and humbly
" beg your Maſteſty's aſſiſtance if I want Power.
" [C. R. Which ye ſhall not want if you need.] " For St. David's, the Biſhop is now there, and " will take the beſt care he can to ſee all things in " Order. But there is one Mutthews the Vicar of " Penmays, that preaches againſt the keeping of all " Holidays, with divers others as fond or profane " Opinions. The Biſhop hath inhibited him, and " if that do not ſerve, I ſhall call him into the High-" Commiſſion Court.

" Baronet Rudde is in this Dioceſe, the Son of a " late Biſhop there, who is a ſober Gentleman: he " hath built him a Chapel, and deſires the Biſhop to " Conſecrate it. But his Lordſhip finding one of your " Maſteſty's Inſtructions to be, that none ſhould keep " a Chaplain in his Houſe, but ſuch as are qualified
" by Law, which he conceives a Baronet is not,
" hath hitherto forbore to Conſecrate this Chapel,
" as being to be of ſmall uſe without a Chaplain,
" and humbly craves Direction herein what he ſhall
" do. I humbly propoſe to your Maſteſty, whether " conſidering the Charge this Gentleman hath been
" at, and the ill Ways which many of them there " have to Church, it may not be fit to Conſecrate
" this Chapel, and then that he may have a Licence " to uſe the Miniſter of the Pariſh, or any other " lawfully in Orders: Always provided, that he uſe
" this Chapel but at times of ſome neceſſity, not ma" king himſelf or his Family ſtrangers to the Mother-" Church; and that there be a Clauſe expreſſed in

" Archbiſhop of the Province. [C. R. Since he

" For Landaff, there is very little found amiſs;

" Majesty this Answer, that now the loss of two " Terms by reason of the Sicknes, hath cast the " Proceedings of that Court, as well as of others,
" behind hand: And there is no Remedy where all " things else stay as well as it.

St. Asaph. " In the Diocese of St. Asaph, there is no com" plaint but the usual, that there is great resort
" Recufants to Holy-Well, and that this Summer the " Lady Falkland and her Company came as Pilgrims
" thither; who were the more observ'd, because they " travelled on Foot; they dissembled neither their " Quality nor their Errand: And this Boldness of " theirs is of very ill construction among your Maje" sty's People. My humble Suit to your Majesty
" is, that whereas I complained of this in open " Council in your Majesty's presence, you would " now be graciously pleased, that the Order then " resolved on for her Confinement may be put in " execution. [C. R. It is done.]

Bangor. " For Bangor, I find that catechising was quite " out of use in those remote Parts (the more the " pity) but the Bishop is now in hope to do much " good, and sees some Reformation in that Particu" lar already. And I would say for this and the " other Diocesses in Wales, that much more good " might be done there in a Church way, if they were " not overborn by the Proceedings of the Court of " the Marches there. And this present Year in " this Diocese of Bangor, my Commissioners for my " Metropolitanical Visitation there complain unto " me, that the Power which belongs to my Place,
" hath been in them very much wronged and im" peach'd by that Court. And I do most humbly " beseech your Majesty, in your own good time, to " give this my Cause a Hearing, if it take not a " fair end without that trouble. [C. R. I doubt not " but by the Grace of God, to agree these Differences by " my hearing of them.]

Rochester, Gloucester and Bristol. " For Rochester, the Bishop (God comfort him)
" is very ill of a Palfie, and that I fear hath made " him forget his Account. Neither hath the Bishop " of Gloucester sent me any, but why I know not;
" and for Bristol that See is void.

Coventry and Lichfield. " For this Diocese, I have likewise received no " Account: But I fear, that whereas the Bishop was " lately complained of to your Majesty for making " waste of the poor Woods there remaining, he is " not over-willing to give an Account of that Par" ticular, nor of the gross Abuse committed in the " Cathedral Church by the Lady Davis, who I most " humbly beseech your Majesty, may be so restrain" ed as that she may have no more power to com" mit such horrible Profanations.

" And so I most humbly submit this my yearly " Account of my Province of Canterbury to your " Majesty's Princely Wisdom.

W. CANT.

[C. R. For the Bishop of Gloucester and Coventry and Lichfield, I must know why they have not made other Account. Whitehall the 21st of February 1637.]

Many Families transport themselves to the West-Indies. Some of the Schismatical and factious Spirits, having been severely prosecuted in the Ecclesiastical Courts, began to think of taking Refuge in our Foreign Plantations, where their Trade and Humour in Religion might be free to themselves, till the number of the Families thus Transported began to raise the Jealousie of the State, as fearing those Parts of America wherein they proposed to settle, might be such a Receptacle of disaffected People, as in time to set up both for an Ecclesiastical and Civil Independence. Hence April 30. A Proclamation was issued forth to restrain the disorderly transporting his Majesty's Subjects to the Plantations within the parts of America, without a License from his Majesty's Commissioners, because of the many idle and refractory Humours, whose only or principal end was to live without the reach of Authority. And on May 1. an Order was made in Council, " That the Lord Treasurer of England should take speedy and effectual course for the stay of eight Ships, now in the River of Thames, prepared to go for New-England; and should likewise give Order for the putting on Land all the Passengers and Provisions therein intended for that Voyage. And because some of the Clergy under Ecclesiastical Censures were willing to accept of the same Protection and Refuge, therefore another Warrant from the Council was directed to the Lord Admiral " To stop all Ministers unconformable to the Discipline and Ceremonies of the Church, who frequently transport themselves to the Summer-Islands, and other his Majesty's Plantations abroad; and that no Clergy Man should be suffered to go over without Approbation of the Lords Archbishop of Canterbury and Bishop of London. Now tho' there might seem a sufficient Reason of State in these Prohibitions, yet they increased the Murmurs and Complaints of the People thus restrained, and raised the Cries of a double Persecution, to be vexed at home, and not suffered to seek Peace or Refuge abroad. And there was certainly this unhappy consequence, that some of the principal Refugees holding New-England a Plantation by Patent from the King, drew hither such a Tribe and Colony of their own, that they cast off all Subjection to the old English Church, and their Posterity are not yet reconciled.

In Trinity Term came on the remarkable Cause in Star-Chamber, upon Information of the Kings Attorney-General, against John Bastwick, M. D. Henry Burton, B. D. and William Prynne Barister at Law; for writing and publishing Seditious, Schismatical and Libellous Books against the Hierarchy of the Church, and to the Scandal of the Government. The Defendants prepared their Answers; but their Council refusing to sign them, the Court would not receive them, but ordered that each Person should be proceeded against pro confesso. It was the less hardship that their Council should decline signing those Answers which the Parties had drawn up with their own Hands, if we reflect on the want of Temper and Discretion in all those Men; and that in Doctor Bastwick's Answer there were these Passages, The Prelates are Invaders of the King's Prerogative Royal, Contemners and Despisers of the Holy Scriptures, Advancers of Popery, Superstition, Idolatry and Profaneness; they abuse the King's Authority to the Oppression of his Loyal Subjects, and therein express great Cruelty, Tyranny and Injustice; and in the execution of this impious Performance, they shew neither Wit, Honesty nor Temperature; nor are they Servants of God or the King, (as they ought to be indeed) but of the Devil, &c.

The Sentence of the Court was a Fine of 5000 l. upon each Delinquent to the King, with Pillory and Loss of Ears, and the very Remainder of Ears: After which Suffering, they were committed close Prisoners, one to the Castle of Lancaster in Cornwall, another to the Castle of Lancaster, and a third to Carnarvan Castle in Wales; from whence they were afterward remov'd to remote Islands, and no Access of Friends allow'd to them. And here, tho' the Insolence of these Men was very great, their Punishment was thought extremely to exceed it. Some moderate Penalties might have left them under the Neglect of being bold and imprudent Writers. But these terrible Blows upon them, raised them in the eyes of the People into the Reputation of Sufferers and Confessors for the best of Causes, Religion, Liberty, and Property. The Lord Clarendon delivers a wise and true Opinion of these Men, and their Prosecution. " They were three Persons most notorious for their declared Malice against the Government of the Church by Bishops, in their several Books and Writings, which they had published to 1637. 13 Car. I. " corrupt the People, with Circumstances very scandalous, and in Language very scurrilous and impudent; which all Men thought deserved very exemplary Punishment: They were of the three several Professions which had the most Influence upon the People, a Divine, a Common Lawyer, and a Doctor of Physick; none of them of Interest, or any Esteem with the worthy part of their several Professions, having been formerly all look'd upon under Characters of Reproach: yet when they were All sentenced, and for the execution of that Sentence brought out to be punish'd as common and signal Rogues, expos'd upon Scaffolds to have their Ears cut off, and their Faces and Foreheads branded with hot Irons (as the poorest and most mechanick Malefactors used to be, when they were not able to redeem themselves by any Fine for their Trespases, or to satisfie any Damages for the Scandals they had rais'd against the good Name and Reputation of others) Men begun no more to consider their Manners, but the Men; and each Profession, with Anger and Indignation enough, thought their Education, and Degrees, and Quality, would have secured them from such infamous Judgments, and treasur'd up Wrath for the time to come.

Lord Clarendon's Opinion

Discontents in Scotland more inflam'd.

The popular Discontents in Scotland were much greater, and seem'd owing to these Reasons. Since the Accession of King James to the Crown of England, they seem'd to have the Name of Monarchy without a single Person; they thought their Prince a sort of Prisoner in another Kingdom, and their chief Nobility were run away after him: so as they had in effect no Court, no Money, no Trade, and therefore no possible Content. This (beside the original Prejudices from their way of Reformation) made them now the more averse to Episcopacy and Forms of Prayer, because they were the Rites of the Church of England, from which they were to preserve themselves distinct and independent. Under these jealous Inclinations they had been alarm'd with King James's obtaining an Act for a publick Liturgy in a General Assembly at Aberdeen 1616, and some Conclusions agreeable to the English Church in another Assembly at Perth 1618, and the bringing their Bishops to be consecrated by English Prelates in 1610, and the instituting at that time a High Commission in that Kingdom for the ordering of Causes Ecclesiastical; and an Absolution given in England to the Marquis of Huntley, who stood excommunicate in Scotland; and an Article pass'd in Parliament 1617, that Whatsoever his Majesty should determine in the external Government of the Church, with the Advice of the Archbishops, Bishops, and a competent Number of the Ministry, should have the Strength of a Law. These Advances toward the Constitution of the Church of England in the former Reign, however just and reasonable, had made the People more and more averse to the Church and Court of England. Under these popular Fears and Jealousies, the King being in Scotland 1633, had committed it to the Care of some of the Bishops there, to provide a Book of Canons and a Liturgy for that Kingdom, to be transmitt'd to the Archbishop of Canterbury, and some other English Bishops, and after their Approbation, to be confirm'd and enjoyn'd by the King. The Book of Canons, which should have followed the Liturgy (because referring to the Rites and Ceremonies requir'd by it) came preposterously out before it in 1635, and had many invidious things in it, such as a Declaration of the unlimited Power, and full personal Supremacy, of their Kings; that all Bishops and Clergy-men should bequeath somewhat to the Church; that no Presbyter should reveal any thing received in Confession; and other Provisions very new and odious to the common People, because they would not understand 'em. This Disposition of Things and Persons made it an ill Season for the Reception of the Liturgy that was to be now sent among them; after it had been compiled in Scotland, and perused and amended by three Bishops in England, and confirm'd by the King, and now publish'd with his Majesty's Reasons for enjoining of it, and with Instructions to the Bishops of that Kingdom to proceed with Moderation and Patience in obtaining the good Effects of it. Easter-day in this Year had been appointed for the first Reading of this Service: but either upon better Consideration of the English Court, or rather a sly Design of the Scotch Ministry, it was deferred to the 23d of July; on which Day it was begun to be read in the chief Church of St. Giles in Edinburgh: but immediately the People fell into Clamours and Confusion, crying out, a Pope, a Pope, Antichrist, Antichrist, slane him, slane him, meaning the Dean of Edinburgh, then reading in the Desk, habited in a Surplice.

1637. 13 Car. I. First Reading of the Common Prayer in Scotland.

The Bishop of Edinburgh, who was to Preach that day, step'd into the Pulpit, and attempted to appease the Tumult; but a Stool was thrown at his Head, diverted by the hand of one present. The Archbishop of St. Andrews, and other Lords, could have no Influence on the Mob, till the Provost, Bailiffs, and City-Magistrates, did with some difficulty thrust out of the Church the chief of the Murriners, and shut the Church-doors against them. After which the Dean read the Service, tho' grievously interrupted by the Rabble, who stood knocking at the Doors, and threw in Stones at the Windows, and betrayed all the Fury of an enraged Multitude. The Lords of the Council complain'd to the King of this Disorder, and spared not to lay the blame of it upon the Bishops, whose late Advances in Power and Revenue, with their Zeal to pursue all Directions from the English Court, had help'd to make them the more odious to the Commonalty, and indeed the more envied and fear'd by the Nobility and Gentry. These Commotions, tho' inhibited by several Proclamations, and restrain'd as far as possible by the Civil Power, frequently returned with greater Noise and Numbers, till they ended at last in that Conspiracy of a Solemn League and Covenant, that was the one great Occasion of the Civil War.

Tumult in the Church.

The same Spirit was working hard in England; where, to fall under the Displeasure of the King and the Archbishop, was enough to make a Popular Man. This was the Case of Williams Bp. of Lincoln, who having highly offended the King, and continually oppos'd Abp. Laud, was the greater Favourite of the Country, and especially of the Puritan Faction; for which Reason, and for his Speaking and Writing with a singular Freedom, many Resolutions had been taken at Court to put some publick Rebuke upon him.

Case of Ep. Williams.

Information had been given in the Court of Star-Chamber, by Sir John Lamb and Dr. Sibthorp, " That the said Bishop did give them great Discouragement in their Proceedings in the Ecclesiastical Courts against the Puritans; and that the Bishop asked Sir John Lamb, What kind of People those Puritans were of whom he complain'd? and whether they did not pay the Loan Money? To which Sir John answered, that they did indeed conform in that Point, and paid their Money; but nevertheless they were Puritans not conformable to the Church. To which the Bishop replied, If they pay their Momes so readily to the King, the Puritans are the King's but Subjects: and I am sure (said the Bishop) the Puritans will carry all at last. But as to this Information, either the Matter was thought too frivolous, or even such a poor Story wanted sufficient Testimony to support it: And therefore the Attorney-General let fall this first Bill, and preferred a second against him for Tampering with the King's Witnesses; and upon that Issue the Cause came to Hearing on July 11. and held nine days Debate, with a great Concourse of People who pitied the Bishop, as a Man mark'd out for a sacrifice to the Court; and had the greater Veneration 1637. Veneration for him, when they found the Penalty so much exceeding the Offence, as ten thousand Pounds Fine to the King's Majesty, and a thousand Marks to Sir John Mounson, Suspension from all Office and Benefice, and Imprisonment in the Tower during the King's pleasure. All which was executed without any Mitigation, till at last he was releas'd and restor'd to please the People in the times of Danger. But neither the People, nor he himself, could forget, or heartily forgive, the Severities us'd to him.

Another Person who now gain'd Popularity by his Sufferings, was John Hampden Esq; of the County of Bucks; who refusing to pay the Quota of Ship-Money assess'd upon him, had a Scire Facias brought against him Tell. 22 Maii 13 Car. and the Case was argued in the Exchequer Chamber from Novem. 6. to Decem. 18. by Oliver St. John Esq; of Lincolns-Inn, and Robert Harbourn Esq; of Lincolns-Inn, for the Defendant; and on the King's side by Sir Edward Littleton Solicitor-General, and Sir John Banks Attorney-General. In fine, Judgment was given against Mr. Hampden; but it being thought the Prepossession of the Judges more than the Result of the Arguments, it did Mr. Hampden no Hurt, and the King no Service. The Lord Clarendon passes this just Reflection on it. "After the continued Receipt of Ship-Money for about four Years together, it was at last (upon the Refusal of a private Gentleman to pay twenty or thirty Shillings as his Share) with great Solemnity publickly argued before all the Judges of England in the Exchequer Chamber, and by much the major part of them the King's Right to impose asserted, and the Tax adjudg'd lawful: Which Judgment proved of more Advantage and Credit to the Gentleman condemn'd (Mr. Hampden) than to the King's Service.

No foreign Affairs of this Year had any Influence on England, save that the Prince Elector, and his Brother Prince Rupert departed from our Court June 26. for Holland; where getting together a small Army, they march'd into Uesphalia, and besieged Limoges, but were fought by the Imperial General Halisfeld, and received a perfect Defeat, two thousand slain, Prince Rupert and the Lord Craven taken Prisoners, and the Elector himself very hardly escaping.

As to the Ecclesiastical Matters of this Year: The Proceedings in the Spiritual Courts, not only against open Separatists and profess'd Puritans, but even against many true Members of the Church that did not come up to new Measures, were so strict and severe, that it gave occasion to strike at the Jurisdiction of those Courts, and to plead that they were held illegally, because not kept by Patent under the Broad Seal, and because the Processes were not in the King's Name. These Objections being publickly made in the Star-Chamber, an Order was there made to have the Opinion of the Judges in this Case; who return'd the following Certificate into the Star-Chamber, dated primo Julii 1637.

May it please your Lordships,

According to your Lordship's Order made in his Majesty's Court of Star-Chamber the 12th of May last, we have taken Consideration of the Particulars wherein our Opinions are required by the said Order, and we have all agreed;

That Processes may issue out of the Ecclesiastical Courts in the Name of Bishops; and that a Patent under the Great Seal is not necessary for the keeping of the said Ecclesiastical Courts, or for the enabling of Citations, Suspensions, Excommunications, or other Censures of the Church: and that it is not necessary that Summons, Citations, or other Processes Ecclesiastical in the said Courts, or Institutions or Inductions to Benefices, or Correction of Ecclesiastical Offences by Censure in those Courts, be in the King's Name, or with the Stile of the King, or under the King's Seal, or that their Seals of Office have in them the King's Arms: and that the Statute of primo

Edwardi sexti cap. 2. which enacted the contrary, is not now in force.

We are also of Opinion, That the Bishops, Archdeacons, and other Ecclesiastical Persons, may keep their Visitations, as usually they have done, without Commission under the Great Seal of England so to do.

This Certificate was enrolled in the Courts of Exchequer, King's-Bench, and Common-Pleas; and registered in the Courts of High-Commission and Star-Chamber. And then the King issued a Proclamation dated August 18. in the 13th Year of his Reign, that "Whereas in some of the Libellous Books and Pamphlets lately publish'd, the most Reverend Fathers in God the Lords Archbishops and Bishops of this Realm are said to have usurped upon his Majesty's Prerogative Royal, and to have proceeded in the High-Commission and other Ecclesiastical Courts contrary to the Laws and Statutes of this Realm. Therefore his Royal Majesty hath thought fit, with Advice of his Council, that a publick Declaration of these the Opinions and Resolutions of his Reverend and Learned Judges, being agreeable to the Judgment and Resolutions of former Times, should be made known to all his Subjects, as well to vindicate the Legal Proceedings of his Ecclesiastical Courts and Ministers from the unjust and scandalous Imputation of invading or trenching on his Royal Prerogative, as to settle the Minds and stop the Mouths of all unquiet Spirits, that for the future they presume not to censure his Ecclesiastical Courts or Ministers in these their just and warranted Proceedings. And hereof his Majesty admonisheth all his Subjects to take Warning, as they shall answer the contrary at their Perils.

Another Popular Outcry against Archbishop Laud and the Bishops directed by him, was Innovation in Matters of Religion; few People being willing to distinguish between arbitrary Alterations and the restoring an antecedent Decency and Order: which latter was undoubtedly the good Archbishop's Meaning. This Charge, and the Vindication from it, will best appear from Archbishop Laud's Speech at the Censure of Bastwick, Burton, and Pymne; in which the Archbishop recites the several Instances of Innovation that his Adversaries had objected to him, and answers them with great Strength and Candour.

The first Innovation was, that the last Year's Fast was enjoined to be with ut sermons in London, the Suburbs, and other infected Places, contrary to the Orders for other Fasts in former times. To which the Archbishop answered, That it was so concluded at the Council-Table, by reason that Infected Persons, known in their own Parishes, might not take occasion on those by-days to run to other Churches.

The second Innovation was, That Wednesday was appointed for the Fast-Day, and that this was done with this Intention, by the Example of this Fast without Preaching, to suppress all the Wednesday Lecturers in London. To which it was answer'd, that Wednesday was a usual Day of Fast, yet the Prelates named not the Day, but the Lord-Keeper who had no intention of suppressing Wednesday Lectures; nor was one of them yet suppress'd. The Third Innovation was, That the Prayer for seasonable Weather was purged out of this last Fast-Book, which was one cause of Ship-wrecks and tempestuous Weather. Answered, when the Book was set out, the Weather was very seasonable. And it was not the Custom of the Church, nor fit in it self, to pray for seasonable

“The Fourth Innovation was, that there was one very useful Collect left out, and a Clause omitted in another. Answer, the Abp. and Bishops under the King had Power to put in or leave out whatever they thought fit for the present Occasion; provided nothing were done contrary to the Doctrine or Discipline of the Church of England. And there were special Reasons at that time to omit the said Collect and Clause.

“The Fifth Innovation was, that in the sixth Order for the Fast, there was a Passage left out concerning the Abuse of Fasting in relation to Merit. Answer, that in this Age and Kingdom, there was little Opinion of Meriting by Fasting, rather a contempt and scorn upon it.

“The Sixth Innovation was, that the Lady Elizabeth, and her Princely Children were dashed out of the new Collect, whereas they were in the Collect of the former Book. Answer, they were left out of the Collect in latter Editions of the Common-Prayer Book, as well as in the Book for the Fast, and this by the King’s Command.

“The Seventh Innovation was, that these Words [who art the Father of thine Elect and of their Seed] are changed in the Preface of that Collect, which is for the Prince and the King’s Children. And that this was done by the Prelates to exclude the King’s Children out of the number of God’s Elect, which was an intolerable Impiety and horrid Treason. The Abp. answers, that this Alteration was made in his Predecessor’s time, and that by his Majesty’s special Direction.

“The Eighth Innovation was, That in the Epistle the Sunday before Easter, the Prelates have put out IN and made it AT the Name of Jesus every Knee shall bow; which Alteration is directly against the Act of Parliament. Answered, in the new Translation of King James, and even in the Geneva Bible, printed 1557. it is at the Name, &c.

“The ninth Innovation was, that two places are changed in the Prayers set forth for the fifth of November, and ordered to be read by Act of Parliament. The first place changed thus [Root out that Babylonish and Antichristian Sect which say of Jerusalem, &c.] into this form of Words [Root out that Babylonish and Antichristian Sect of them which say, &c.] The second place went thus in the old [Cut off these workers of Iniquity, whose Religion is Rebellion.] But in the Book printed 1635. ’tis thus altered, [Cut off those Workers of Iniquity, who turn Religion into Rebellion.] Answer, the Book was never ordered to be read by Act of Parliament; the Act only commanded Prayers and Thanksgivings, but the Form was left to the Church. The alteration of both those Phrases was by the King’s Warrant, without the Archbishops moving for it, and there were very good Reasons for softning those Expressions.

“The Tenth Innovation was, that the Prayer for the Navy is left out of the late Book for the Fast. Answer, with good Reason; because the King had then no declared Enemy, nor had he any Navy at Sea.

“The Eleventh Innovation, The reading of the second Service at the Communion Table or the Altar. Answer, it was on the ancient Custom altered of late by the Emiffaries of the Faction; and it is agreeable to the Rubrick of the Common-Prayer.

“A Twelfth Innovation, Bowing or doing Reverence at first coming into the Church, or at nearer approaches to the Holy Table; wherein People must worship the Table, or God knows what. Answer, it is a decent Act of bodily Worship, intended to God alone, and of antient practice.

“A Thirteenth Innovation, The placing of the Holy Table Altar-wise at the upper end of the Chancel, setting it North and South, and placing a Rail before it, which was done to advance and usher in Popery. Answer, this is agreeable to the Practice and Command and Canon of the Church of England: Having been so in the Royal Chapels, and divers Cathedrals ever since the Reformation.

“The Fourteenth and last Innovation was said to be, that the Prelates to justify their Proceedings, have forged a new Article of Religion brought from Rome (which gives them full power to alter the Doctrine and Discipline of our Church at a blow) and have foisted it into the beginning of the twentieth Article; [The Church hath Power to decree Rites and Ceremonies, and Authority in matter of Faith.] a Forgery fit to be examined, and deeply censured; for it is not to be found in the Latin or English Articles of Ed. VI. or Queen Elizabeth. Answer, a heavy Charge, but utterly false: For this affirmative Clause of the Churches Power is expressly in the printed and in the original Copy of the Articles agreed on 1562. left out indeed in the printed Articles of 1571. Latin and English, which could not be done without the malicious Cunning of the opposite Faction; for in the Copy to which the Lower-House of Convocation subscribed in 1571. the Clause is inserted, and in most Editions since that time. Therefore (said the Archbishop) I do here openly in the Star-Chamber, charge upon that Pure Sect this foul Corruption of falsifying the Articles of the Church of England, let them take it off as they can.

This Account summs up all the strength of the popular Objections against the Archbishop and Bishops for their Inclination and Attempts toward Superstitious Innovations. And when we consider how poor and frivolous they are, it is a Subject of Wonder how the Leaders of the Faction could improve Feathers and Flies into such dreadful Monsters, and affright People with Shadows as effectually as with the most real and substantial Beings. But such is the Art of Managers in an ill Cause, to raise Apparitions that terrifie more than living Bodies: And such is the Infirmitie of the lower part of Mankind, that they sooner believe their Imagination than their Eyes; and to apprehend an Evil makes a deeper impression than the very feeling of it. ’Tis certain Archbishop Laud and his Brethren meant nothing but Decency and Uniformity; but then indeed they pressed them with more Zeal than the things deserved, while not expressly enjoined; and this contending for them with vehemence made People suspect a dangerous design in them: soft and slower Measures might have done. We have since seen most of those Externals introduc’d and quietly establish’d into Custom; because they have been recommended rather than enforced, and Men without imposition have been allowed to receive them.

Nay, Archbishop Laud was so far from the designs of Popery, that he was at this time the great Obfructer of it: The Bigotry of the Queen for her French Religion, and the King’s entire Affection for her, had gained the Papists such an influence at Court, that they began to be insolent and very assuming; and they would have triumph’d more in their Strength and Numbers, if the good Abp. had not interposed; and at the very Council Table took the courage to use what he himself in his Diary calls free Speech to the King, concerning the encreasing of the Roman Party, the freedom of Denmark House, the Carriage of Air. Walter Mountague and Sir Toby Mathew: And says he, the Queen was acquainted with all that I said that very Night, and highly displeas’d, and so continues. It is said farther by a Writer of good credit, that the Archbishop presented a Roll to the King of all the Queen’s Officers and other Courtiers, who countenanced and promoted Popery; to which the King professed, that he had it in his Mind to have referred the consideration thereof to the Board from his own observation, and commanded them all to see it reformed. This bold Integrity of the Archbishop had a good effect, for on December 20. the King issued out a Proclamation to signify, how “ Finding of late, that some of his natural born Subjects have abused his Majesty’s Princely Goodness, through the Ease which they enjoy under his gracious and mild Government, by withdrawing sundry of his Subjects to the Roman Superstition, and to forsake the Church of England; and likewise by resorting to Masses and Service celebrated according to the Rites of the Church of Rome, expressly contrary to the Law of this Realm: for Prevention whereof for the time to come, and for Preservation of Religion as it is established in the Church of England, which his Majesty is resolved constantly to maintain; the King therefore hath thought fit to set forth this Declaration of his Royal Will and Pleasure, and doth expressly command all Persons, Clerks and Laicks, that they from henceforth forbear to attempt to withdraw any the King’s Subjects from the Religion that is now professed. And the King doth declare, That if any of the Roman Party shall from henceforth give Scandal by celebrating or hearing of any Mass or Masses, that then his Majesty will cause to be put in execution against such contumacious Persons, those Penalties which by the Laws are inflicted.

The King heartily averse to Popery.

This Proclamation, tho’ occasion’d by the generous Freedom of Abp. Laud, was agreeable to the Opinion and voluntary Inclinations of the King himself. Of whom the Lord Clarendon gives this just Character: “ The King was always the most punctual Observer of all Decency in his Devotion, and the strictest Promoter of the Ceremonies of the Church, as believing in his Soul the Church of England to be instituted the nearest to the Practice of the Apostles, and the best for the Propagation and Advancement of Christian Religion, of any Church in the World. And on the other hand, No Man was more averse from the Romish Church than he was, nor better understood the Motives of their Separation from us, and Animosity against us.

Abp.’s Account of his Prov. 1637.

The remaining State of Church Affairs for this Year is best shewn in this Account of his Province given by the Abp. to the King.

May it please your most gracious Majesty,

“ According to your Commands in your Instructions published for the Good of the Clergy, and my bounden Duty, I here present my annual Account for the Province of Canterbury for the Year last past, 1637.

“ And first to begin with my own Diocese: I must give your Majesty to understand, that at and about Ashford in Kent, the Separatists continue to hold their Conventicles, notwithstanding the Excommunication of so many of them as have been discovered. They are all of the poorer sort, and very simple, so that I am utterly to seek what to do with them. Two or three of their principal Ringleaders, Brewer, Fenner, and Turner, have long been in Prison; and it was once thought fit to proceed against them by the Statute for Abjuration: But I do much doubt, they are so ignorantly wilfull, that they will return into the Kingdom, and do a great deal more hurt, before they will again be taken. And not long since Brewer slipt out of Prison, and went to Rocheester and other Parts of Kent, and held Conventicles, and put a great many simple People, especially Women, into great Distempers against the Church. He is taken again, and was called before the High Commission, where he stood silent, but in such a jeering scornful manner, as I scarce ever saw the like: So in Prison he remains. [To which the King put this Note] Keep those particular Persons fast until ye think what to do with the rest.

“ In the Churchyard of the same Town a Butcher’s Slaughter-house opened, to the great Annoyance of that place; which I have commanded should be remedied, and the Door shut up.

1637. 13 Car. I.

“ At Biddenden I have suspended Richard Warren the School-master, for refusing the Oath of Allegiance and of Canonical Obedience, and to subscribe to the Articles. Besides, this precise Man will read nothing but Divinity to his Scholars; no not so much as the Grammar Schools, unless Mars, Bacchus, Apollo, and Pol, Ædopol, may be blotted out.

“ The Strangers in Canterbury do not so much resort to their Parish-Churches as formerly they did, at my first giving of my Injunctions. But Visiting this Year, I have given a publick and strict Charge that the Delinquents be presented and punished if they do not their Duty in that behalf.

“ There is one dwelling in Addisham, a married Man, called by the Name of Thomas Jordan: He was formerly called Thomas Mounton, because he was found in the Church-porch in Swadling-Cloaths; left there, in all likelihood, by his Mother, who was some Beggar or Strumpet. It is believ’d he was never Christned: I have therefore given Order that he shall be Christned, with that Caution which is prescribed in the Book of Common Prayer where the Baptism is doubtful.

“ About Sittingborn there are more Recufants than in any other part of my Diocese: and the Lady Roper Dowager is thought to be a great means of the increase of them. But I have given strict Charge that they be carefully presented according to Law.

“ There is still a Remainder of Schismaticks in Egerton, and the Parishes adjacent: but they are as mean People as those about Ashford; and I am as much to seek what to do with them.

“ My Lord Treasurer complains, that he hath little Assistance of his Archdeacons; and I believe it to be true: and shall therefore, at your Majesty think fit, cause Letters to be written to them to awake them to their Duties. [C. R. It is most fit.]

The Year 1638. was taken up with the Distractions in Scotland, which toward the end of the former Year were grown so formidable, that in January his Majesty sent the Earl of Roxborough, Lord Privy Seal, to Scotland, with certain Instructions to the Council, who were to meet at Dalkeith, to consider of the disorder’d Affairs of that Kingdom. The Council were so oppress’d with Crowds of People, and daily Insults of them, that at Sterling, on Febr. 19. they issued a Proclamation for dispersing the dangerous Tumults there assembled, and to assure the King’s Subjects of his Majesty’s Sincerity toward the Religion established in that Kingdom. But on the Publication of it, several of the Noblemen, Barons, Ministers, and Burgers, set out a Protestation against it, and insisted that, 1. They might have immediate Recourse to their sacred Sovereign, to present their Grievances. 2. That the Archbishops and Bishops Parties complained upon, should not be reputed or esteemed lawful Judges to sit in any Judicatory upon any of the Supplicants. 3. That no Act or Proclamation pass’d in Presence of the Archbishops and Bishops should be any ways prejudicial to them. 4. That neither They nor their Adherents should incur any Danger in Life or Lands, nor any other Pains, for not observing Acts, Books, Canons, &c. introduced without General Assemblies or Acts of Parliament. 5. That the Inconveniences falling out upon pressing the Innovations, should not be imputed to them, who sought only for Reformation. 6. That their Requests proceeding from Conscience, and a due Respect to his Majesty’s Honour, called only for Redress of their pressing Grievances.

After this Protestation, they erected a great number of Tables (as they call’d them) in Edinburgh; Four 1638. 14 Car. I. Four Principals, One of the Nobility, Another of the Gentry, a Third of the Boroughs, and a Fourth of the Ministers; with subordinate Tables of the Gentry, according to their several Shires. These distinct Tables or Committees did consult of what they thought fit to be propounded at the General Table, which consisted of several Commissioners chosen from the four principal Tables. And in these Cabals they proceeded in Framing and Subscribing of their Covenant, under this Title; The Confession of Faith of the Kirk of Scotland, Subscribed at first by the King's Majesty and his Household in the Year of God 1580; thereafter by Persons of all Ranks in the Year 1581, by Ordinance of the Lords of the Secret Council, and Acts of the General Assembly: Subscribed again by all sorts of Persons in the Year 1590, by a new Ordinance of Council, at the Desire of the General Assembly: with a General Band for Maintenance of the true Religion and the King's Person; and now Subscribed in the Year 1638, by us Noblemen, Barons, Gentlemen, Burgessees, Ministers, and Commons, under subscribing: Together with our Resolution and Promises for the Causes after specified, to maintain the said true Religion and the King's Majesty, according to the Confession aforesaid, and Acts of Parliament, the Tenure whereof here followeth.

Solemn League and Covenant.

WH All and every one of us under-written do protest, that after long and due Examination of our own Consciences in matters of true and false Religion, we are now thoroughly resolved of the Truth by the Word and Spirit of God, &c.

Mischief of it.

This solemn League and Covenant was indeed the Band of Iniquity that confederated all the Malecontents in both Kingdoms into a Civil War. The King's Declaration calls it, The first Ding which from these Stables was thrown upon the face of Authority and Government, that lewd Covenant and seditious Band annexed to it. This Test grew so very Popular, that it was sworn to by Multitudes at Edinburgh in February, and sent away through all the Country to be Subscribed, according to that Example. The Council, alarmed at the Heats of the People, appointed a solemn Meeting on March 1. at Sterling. But when the Day came, the Lord Chancellour sent his Excuse, and the rest of the Bishops, except Ercebin, declined to come. However, the Lords of the Council agreed upon Instructions to Sir John Hamilton, to go to the King and acquaint him with Proceedings, and to declare their Opinion, that the causes of the general Combustions in that Country, were the Fears apprehended of Innovation by occasion of the Service-Book, Book of Canons, and High Commission. And therefore his Majesty may please to declare, that he will take Trial of his Subjects Grievances, and in the mean time not press or urge them therewith. These Instructions given by the whole Council, were seconded by a private Letter to the King signed by Traquair and Roxborough, signifying, that the general Combustion was come to such a height, and daily like to increase more and more, that they saw no probability of Force or Power to suppress the Fury, except his Majesty would be graciously pleased, by some Act of his own, to secure them from that which they seem'd so much to apprehend by the In-bringing of the Books of Common Prayer and Canons.

And indeed it seems probable, that if the King had first broke the Storm by that free Compliance to it, he might have made things quiet enough to have gain'd leisure for a firmer Peace and Settlement. But the Denial of one Request, made them improve into continual new Wants and Desires; till the Granting at last of what was at first Refus'd, was thought to be their own Victory, not the King's Concession; and therefore did but flush them into more and more Demands of Satisfaction. It seems a stalling Policy for Princes to gratifie the first Petitions for Redress of any Grievance, or upon Denial once made to justifie that Denial; for, when Subjects find they can extort Favours, they know not when to desist from extorting of them.

1638. 14 Car. I. Upon Sir John Hamilton's coming to Whitehall, and communicating his business, his Majesty consulted with a select Council, and resolv'd to send Marquis Hamilton as High Commissioner to Scotland, for the Service of quieting the Fury of the People. On May 7. Letters were sent into Scotland to give notice of taking these Measures; and on May 16. the Marquis received his Instructions, and his Commission on May 20. and began his Journey May 26. Coming to Berwick June 3. the Earl of Roxborough met him, and told him the People would not be pacified without the Covenant allowed to them, Articles of Perth annulled, Service-book and Canons abolished, and Episcopacy limited, all to be done in a General Assembly and Parliament to be suddenly called. The Marquis could not think it honourable to come so soon to any Terms; so with very small Attendance he came first to Dalkeith, and thence, upon Supplication of the Citizens of Edinburgh, to the King's Palace at Hally-Rood-House, where he offer'd to the Covenanters these two Propositions: 1. What they should expect to bear in the King's Name for accommodating their Grievances? 2. What might be expected from them for returning to their former Obedience, especially in renouncing and delivering up their late Covenant? To which they would give no other Answer, but that the only method of Satisfaction must be a General Assembly and Parliament. And thereupon they put themselves into such a posture of Defence, that the High Commissioner, to avoid Imprisonment in his Palace, was glad to retire to Dalkeith, and to send to the King for new Instructions. Upon which Terrors, his Majesty order'd him to publish his Royal Declaration, that He would neither now nor hereafter press the Practice of the Service-book, or Canons, or any thing of that nature, but in such a fair and legal way as should satisfy all his loving Subjects. And for the High Commission, he would so rectify it, that it should never impugn the Laws, nor be any Grievance. These Promises could give no Satisfaction; but on June 28. they answered them with a very bold Protestation, that they expected a more gracious and satisfactory Answer, and would in the mean time adhere to their Confession of Faith and solemn Covenant. The Marquis finding little hopes of Accommodation, propos'd to go into England, and fetch more immediate Instructions from the King. He began his Journey on July 6. and coming directly to Court, he gave a full Account of the Condition of that Kingdom, and of the Strength and Rage of the Covenanters, and of the Fears and Inconstancy of many of the secret Council: And therefore, under these Difficulties, he advis'd the King to renew the Confession of Faith ratified in Parliament 1507, and to enlarge his Instructions for the indicting a free General Assembly, and for discharging the Use of the Service-book, Book of Canons, and the Practice of the High Commission. With these Powers, and with Letters and Declarations of the King, the Marquis comes back to Edinburgh on Aug. 10. where he found things in a much worse posture than he had left them: for, the Covenanters had come to publick Resolutions, "That they would have a General Assembly, that the Bishops should have no Vote in it, that Episcopacy should be abolished, the Articles of Perth condemned, and all Persons, under pain of Excommunication, should take the Covenant. The Marquis endeavoured to convince them, that the Royal Answer which he had brought was full of Grace and Goodness; and to assure them, that immediately upon their Return to Obedience, he would indict an Assembly and Parliament. He found them so refractory, and so pressing upon him, that on August 20. he desist'd twenty Days time to go again to Court, and bring a fuller Answer from his Majesty: and on August 25. went toward London, carrying with him Articles of Advice offer'd to the King

On Sept. 17. the Marquis came back to Hally-Rood-House; and being attended by the Heads of the Covenanters on Sept. 21. he told them the King had granted them all that they desired, and more also, a free Assembly and Parliament, which should be immediately indicted. Upon this gracious Condescension, they could not but seem to be satisfied, and yet resolv'd to quarrel on; therefore they pressed the Marquis to desist from renewing the Confession of Faith, pretending this would dissatisfie a great many of their Party. But the Marquis calling a Council, found it carried by Vote, that the Confession of Faith should be presently signed, the Proclamation of Grace published, and a General Assembly to meet at Glasgow 21. Nov. and a Parliament at Edinburgh 15. May following. The Episcopal Party foresaw they should be run down in the General Assembly, and therefore pressed the Marquis to prologue it, who referred the Matter to his Majesty: the King said his Reputation was concern'd in keeping the Day, and he would by no means alter it. The Covenanters being thus assured of their time, boldly moved the High Commissioner for a Warrant to cite the Bishops to appear before the Assembly. The Marquis declining this, they address'd themselves to the Presbytery of Edinburgh, who gave Warrant for a Summons stuff'd with the most abominable Scandals, citing the Bishops as guilty of Heresie, Simony, Perjury, Incest, Adultery, Fornication, Breach of Sabbath, &c.

The Marquis went toward Glasgow on Nov. 16. and required the King's Advocate to prepare himself there to defend Episcopacy to be according to the Laws of Scotland: but his Answer was, that it went against his Conscience so to do; and therefore he was prevail'd with not to go. So potent was the Faction, that the King's nearest Ministers and Officers were drawn into it.

The General Assembly began on the Day appointed Novemb. 21. where the Marquis sitting as King's Commissioner on a raised Seat with his Assessors about him, order'd his Commission to be read dated at Orkland July 29. and the King's Letter to the Assembly, dated at Whitchhall Oct. 29. and then made a Speech to wipe off the Aspersions cast upon the King, and to give Assurances of their Religion and Liberties: and then tender'd the Paper containing his Majesty's gracious Concessions to them. Then Mr. Alexander Henderson was chosen Moderator, and Mr. Archibald Johnston Clerk Register. The Bishops cited to the Assembly put in their Declinator, which was read Nov. 27. the Marquis in a Speech recommending the Necessity of it, and the Strength of the Reasons contained in it. But the Moderator, in return, deplored the Hardness of the Bishops hearts; and one of the Clerks of the Session thunder'd out a verbal Protestation, that they would pursue their Libel against the Bishops as long as they had Lives and Fortunes. The Marquis seeing their insolent Demeanour, declares to the Lords of the Council Nov. 28. his Resolution to dissolve the Assembly: and accordingly the same day he went to the Church where they sat, and after a long Speech against the Illegality and Nullity of their Proceedings, he concluded with dissolving the Assembly in his Majesty's Name, and discharging their farther Proceedings under pain of Treason. The Moderator and the Earl of Rothes made Answer, that they were sorry he left them, but their Consciences bore them witness they had hitherto done nothing amiss, and therefore would not desert the Work of the Lord. Accordingly they form'd A Protestation of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, made in the high Kirk and at the Market Cross of Glasgow Nov. 29. 1638. where in they declared for a freedom of uninterrupted Sitting, and for his Majesty to contramand, was to prejudge the Prerogative of Jesus Christ, and the Liberties of the Kirk. So they continued sitting, and went impetuously on, to declare six former General Assemblies to be null and void; to condemn all Arminian Tenets, without defining what they were; to deprive the Archbishop of St. Andrews, and the Bishops of Galloway and Brechin, &c. to abolish Episcopal Government, as inconsistent with the Law and Church of the Kingdom of Scotland; and many other extravagant and vile things. The King published a Declaration against their illegal Proceedings, dated Decemb. 8. to which the Assembly made a long Protestation Decemb. 18. and set up now for a Sovereign Independent Power.

Hamilton, the King's Commissioner, seeing no hopes in Clemency and Reason, had sent Advice to his Majesty, that there could be no way to reduce that Country to Obedience, but by sending a Fleet of Ships to lie in the Firth, and block up their Trade, and then to follow with a Royal Army. These Measures were approv'd in Council, and Resolutions taken that the King should go in Person, and the Nobility attend him at Tork by the first day of April next ensuing.

If we now stand to look back on the Causes of this Scotch Rebellion, it might be enough to ascribe it to the implacable Spirit of Presbytery: This alone was the Beginning of Troubles, but the Progress and Success of them found a great many other Springs and Wheels: The importunate Zeal of many of the Scotch Bishops in severely executing all Orders receiv'd from the English Court, and obsequiously submitting to the Archbishop of Canterbury as if he had been their own Metropolitan; which rais'd the Jealousie and Indignation of a great part of the Clergy and Laity of that Kingdom. Then the Civil Grievances of Poverty, and Decay of Trade, and some late Advances in the Exercise of Regal Power, made the Nobility and Gentry somewhat cooler and more indifferent for the King and his Ministers; chusing as it were to stand by and connive at the Covenant and Assembly, hoping it would bring on the opportunities of regaining what they thought their former Liberties. Next, the Popish Emisaries had certainly a busie hand in this Work of Rebellion: They found the King and Abps of Canterbury as much their Adversaries, as the opposite Faction charg'd them to be their Friends; they had no Hopes but in troubled Waters, and some new Revolution. And then in England there were many Persons griev'd and discontented, some Ministers depriv'd or otherwise censur'd; many of the common People strictly prosecuted; a few of the Gentry Fined and Imprisoned: and in short, all manner of Persons disoblig'd by the Court or the Church, took Pleasure in the remote Prospects of Revenge, and blew up those Coals they saw kindling in the North. And finally, One great Advantage to the growing Faction was the Irresolution and Indifference, not to say Treachery, of the King's Council and Ministry in Scotland: Traquair the Lord Treasurer, and for a long time the prime Minister, was not a right Friend to the Bishops; and even Hamilton himself was thought by the Covenanters to be the Son of a Guile Mother.

But to return to the English Affairs of this Year, we find little else remarkable; in October, Mary de Medices the Queen Mother of France, by Invitation of the Queen her Daughter, came over into England for Pleasure and Protection. The Archbishop enter'd it thus in his Diary: Oct. 19. News was brought to us as we sat in the Star-Chamber, that the Queen-Mother of France was landed at Harwich: many and great Apprehensions upon this Business. For indeed the Queen's Mother comes over to England.

1638. English People hated her, or suspected her for her own, for her Churches, for her Country's, for her Daughter's sake; and having shifted her Residence in other Courts, upon Calamities and Troubles which still pursued her, they thought it her Fate to carry along Misfortunes with her, and so dreaded her as an ill-aboding Meteor, wherever she appeared.

Prince Elector.

The Prince Elector, after his defeat in Westphalia, was advised by the Prince of Orange, to apply himself again to his Uncle the King of England, to put him in a condition of pursuing the means of his Restauration: The King told him the difficulty of his own Affairs in Scotland would not at present allow him to furnish him with any Supplies; and therefore all he could now do was to recommend him to the French Ambassador, who undertook to make an Interest for him with his Master and with Cardinal Richelieu. While this was in agitation, the Prince in November passed thro' France in disguise, for a nearer Passage to the Swedish Army; but in Lions he was discovered and arrested, and kept long a Prisoner of State, till his hopes for this Year were entirely defeated.

Death of the Lord-Keeper Coventry.

There was some Alteration at Court by the Loss of the Lord Coventry Lord-Keeper, who died at Durham-House in the Strand, 14 Jan. 1638. This Thomas Coventry, bred in the Inner-Temple, gained a Reputation in the Law to be Recorder of London, and in 14 Jan. to be the King's Solicitor; and being then knighted, he was in the Year following made Attorney General. And in 1 Car. Novemb. 1. was advanced to the Office of the Lord-Keeper of the Great Seal of England, and 4 Car. Apr. 10. was made a Baron of the Realm, by the Title of Lord Coventry of Ailesborough Com. Wigorn. Hear his Character from the Lord Clarendon.

His Character.

“ He enjoyed his Place with a universal Reputation (and sure Justice was never better administer'd) for the space of about sixteen Years. He knew the Temper, Disposition and Genius of the Kingdom most exactly; saw their Spirits grow every Day more Sturdy, Inquisitive and Impatient: and therefore naturally abhorred all Innovations, which he foresaw would produce ruinous Effects: Yet many who stood at a distance, thought that he was not active and stout enough in opposing those Innovations. — Seldom known to speak in matters of State, — though in his Nature he had not only a firm Gravity, but a Severity and even some Morosity; yet it was so happily temper'd, and his Courtesie and Affability towards all Men so transcendent, and so much without affectation that it marvellously recommended him to all Men of all Degrees; and he was look'd upon as an excellent Courtier, without receding from the native Simplicity of his own Manners. He had, in the plain way of speaking and delivery, without much ornament of Elocution, a strange power of making himself believed, the only justifiable Design of Elocution. — He held Dissimulation to be the worst of Lying. — But then this happy Temper, and these good Faculties, rather preserved him from having many Enemies, and supplied him with some Well-wishers, than furnished him with any soft and unshaken Friends; who are always procured in Courts by more Ardour and more vehement Professions and Applications than he would suffer himself to be entangled with. — He retired within himself as much as he could, and stood upon his Defence, without making desperate Sollies against growing Mischiefs, which he knew well he had no power to hinder, and which might probably end in his own Ruins. To conclude, his Security consisted very much in having but little Credit with the King; and he died in a season most opportune, in which a Wise Man would have pray'd to have finish'd his Course, and which, in truth, crown'd his other signal Prosperity in the World.

The Church Affairs of this Year were the least considerable, because the impending Storms in Scotland made the Archbishop and Bishops more tender and reserved in their Proceedings here at home; wisely resolving not to irritate the Faction here while it was there so turbulent and strong. The Archbishop to open the Eyes of those who look'd on him as a Papist, and to justify the King from the like Slanders, did now enlarge and reprint his Conference with Father the Jesuite, and presented it to the King, Feb. 10. He interposed in the Scotch Tumults as far as possible to suppress them, and kept a constant Correspondence with the Marquis of Hamilton; and when he saw things must come to a Rupture, he was forward in procuring an Order of Council, directed to the two Archbishops Jan. 29. by which they were required to Write their several Letters to the Lords Bishops in their respective Provinces, forthwith to convene before them all the Clergy of Ability in their Diocesses, and to invite them by such Ways and Means as should be thought best by their Lordships, to aid and assist his Majesty with their speedy and liberal Contributions and otherwise, for defence of his Royal Person and Kingdom. And in pursuance of these Directions the Archbishop of Canterbury wrote to his several Suffragans, to press them, that in Case of so great Danger, both to the State and Church of England, they and their Clergy would contribute toward the raising of such an Army, as by God's Blessing and his Majesty's Care might secure this Church and Kingdom from all intended Violence; and hopes every Man will give at the least after the Proportion of 2 s. 10 d. in the Pound, of the valuation of his Preferment in the King's Book.

1638. 14 Car. I. State of Religion 1638.

Wisdom of Abp. Laud.

The Money raised by the Clergy on this occasion came to a very great Sum. The Diocese of Normich where the Clergy have the meanest Provision, raised above two thousand Pounds. And yet as every thing gives Offence to angry People, so this Method had Objections made to it: Some pretended it an arbitrary Imposition on the Clergy, tho' it was only by way of free Benevolence; others said it was a Price paid by the Church-Men for Persecution and the Blood of the Brethren; and some graver Folks seeing the Zeal of the Clergy to promote the Expedition into Scotland, began to think it a Religious War.

In the Archbishop's Account of his Province to the King for the Year 1638. we'll take out this state of his own Diocese of Canterbury.

Abp's Account of his Province 1638.

May it please your most sacred Majesty,

“ TO begin with my self and my own Diocese, I have been careful to obey all your Majesty's particular Instructions, both for the residing upon my Houses and preserving of my Woods, &c. “ There was one Bedle a Minister of Essex came in to this Diocese, and at Harbledown near Canterbury, (the Curate there being dead) preached very disorderly three Hours together at a time, and got himself many ignorant Followers. But so soon as ever he was enquired after by my Officers, he fled the Country; and I purpose, God willing, to speak with the Chancellour of London concerning him.

“ I do not find that there are either any increase or decrease of Papists or Puritans in the Diocese: But the Separatists about Ashford are very busie, miserably poor, and out of that bold against all Church-censure; so that without some temporal Assistance from the Judges, we know not what to do; and this I have often and humbly represented: Yet two notorious Separatists being called in question are fled the Country, and one of them broke Prison. — [C. R. Demand their (i.e. the Judges) help, and if they refuse, I shall make them assist you.]

“ At Tenterden some People are somewhat refractory; but the Archdeacon assures me, he hath great hope to reduce them; which I shall be glad of.

1638. " of. The Strangers at Canterbury do reasonably 14 Car. I. " well obey my Injunctions for coming to our " Churches; and I shall give them all Encourage" ment, holding it fitting to keep a moderate hand
 " with them.

1639. To suppress the Scotch Rebellion, in the beginning 15 Car. I. of this Spring the King had got together an Army of near six thousand Horse, and about that Number of Foot, well disciplin'd, under experienc'd Officers.
 The Earl of Arundel was made General, the Earl of Effex Lieutenant-General, and the Earl of Holland
 General of the Horse. On March the 27th, his Coronation-day, the King began his Journey Northward, and in three Days came to Tork, with a glorious Attendance of Nobility and Gentry, summon'd in to serve the King. It look'd more like the Pomp and Parade of an Eastern Prince, than the Expedition of an English Monarch. The Lord Clarendon observes,
 " If there had been none in the March but Soldiers,
 " it is most probable that a noble Peace would " have quickly ensued, even without Fighting; but " the Progress was more illustrious than the March,
 " and the Soldiers were the least part of the Army.
 The Earl of Effex had been sent before with a Party of Horse and Foot to possess himself of Berwick, which he enter'd without Opposition: and had he march'd on to Edinburgh, followed and supported by the Remainder of the English Army, the War had been soon ended; for the Scots had not three thousand Men together, and as yet wanted Arms and Unity. " But it was the fatal Misfortune of the " King, which proceeded from the Excellency of " his Nature, and his Tenderness of Blood, that " he deferr'd so long his Resolution of using his " Arms; and after he had taken that Resolution,
 " that it was not prosecuted with more Vigour.
 And yet such was the Advice of the Lord Deputy of Ireland, who by Letters to the King dated at Dublin April 1. 1639. acquainted his Majesty, that he had Shipp'd off five hundred Irish to be put into Carlisle; and concludes, As to my poor Judgment, your Majesty both no more to do this Summer, but to secure Berwick and Carlisle by strong Garrisons, to exercise your Army in the knowledge of their Arms, prevent their Incursion into your Kingdom of England, and by all means to avoid fighting this Year.

The Covenanters, tho' not daring to approach the Borders, had shewn their Power and Will at a safer distance: They forced the Earl of Traguir to surrender Dalkeith to them, and carried thence the Re- galia in triumph to Edinburgh, and soon after seized the Castle of Dunbarton, a place of great strength, and much greater Importance, because designed for the landing of the Irish Forces as Occasions should call for 'em: And then the King's Forces near Aber- deen were beaten and dispersed by Momroe, and Aber- deen taken, with great store of Arms, Ammunition, and Treasure, sent thither for the King's Use and Service.

While the King was at Tork there was such a Conflux of People, and such a multitude of Scots among them, that it gave matter of Offence and Jealousie to the King's Council; who thereupon resolv'd, That a short Protestation should be drawn, in which all Men should profess their Loyalty and Obedience to his Majesty, and disclaim and renounce the having any Intelligence, or holding any Correspondence with the Rebels. The Scots who were most suspected took the Protestation without scruple: but when it came to the English Nobility, the Lords Say and Brook positively refus'd it in the King's own Presence; for which they were at first a while restrain'd; and then dismiss'd and sent home. This Perverseness and open Affront to the King so mildly pass'd by, gave Advantage to the King's Enemies in his own Court; who perhaps did him more mischief than those in the Field. " Indeed (says the Lord Clarendon) if the King himself had stay'd at London, or which had been the next best, kept his Court and resided at Tork, and sent the Army on their proper Errand, and left

" the matter of the War wholly to them, in all hu-1639. mane Reason his Enemies had been speedily sub-15 Car. I. dued, and that Kingdom reduced to their Obe" dience.

While the King resided here at Tork, the Scots, in craft, sent Letters and Petitions to his Majesty, pretending, " Their Loyal Hearts had ill Fortune, and " that they desired nothing but to be admitted into " the Presence of their gracious Sovereign, to lay " their Grievances at his Royal Feet, and leave the " Determination of them entirely to his own Wis" dom and Pleasure. By which they gain'd their Ends of Time and Popularity, and even Pity from their Enemies. But all the while their Preparations were so encreasing, that the King thought it necessary to march toward the Borders of Scotland, by New-Castle, to Berwick, where the General had the Army drawn up in Battalia, and the King march'd at the Head of them, till near the Tweed, two Miles West from Berwick, in an open Field called the Berks, the King encamp'd, and lodg'd in his Tent with the Army.

May 30. the King had Intelligence that General Lesley, with about 6000 of the Scotch Army, was Quarter'd at Dunce, a Town about seven miles distant from the English Camp: Next day the Earl of Holland march'd thither with a Body of 3000 Horse and 2000 Foot; and coming thither, he found the Scots drawn up on the side of a Hill, where the Front could be only in view, with great Herds of Cattel at a distance upon the Hills on either side; a Stratagem of Lesley, to make the Appearance of a formidable Body, when there were not above 3000 Men, and they very ill arm'd, most Country Fellows brought thus together for a Shew. The Earl of Holland, who by ill Accidents had his Foot and Artillery three or four miles behind, was so frighted with the Apparition of the Scotch Army, that he sent Orders to his Foot not to advance, and made his Retreat toward them, and so most ingloriously came back to the King's Camp; with another Misfortune of having quarrel'd in the March with the Earl of New-Castle, which afterward produc'd a Challenge.

This mock Attempt was seconded by another of no better Conduct or Success: for on Sunday June 2.
 Information was brought that the Scots were in their Quarters at Kesley, about six miles distance, being not above 1500 Men: whereupon it was resolv'd in a Council of War to send a Detachment toward 'em.
 So the next day June 3. the Earl of Holland, with a Body of 2000 Horse and 2000 Foot marched again over the Tweed toward Kesley, and came with his Horse within sight of the Enemy, while the Foot were still three miles behind. The Scots sent a Trumpeter, and immediately drew up their Forces to so much Advantage and Surprize, that the English General again retreated to his Foot, and so quietly return'd once more to the Camp. These two Sallies of Bravery, as if only to shew and then to disappear, gave a great Discouragement to the King's Army, by keeping them from the Glory and the Reward of Action; and made the Scots more daring, when they saw it was likely to be no worse than the Jest of a War.

Upon this Apprehension of their own Safety, the Covenanters from Edinburgh wrote three dissembling Letters to the three Generals, the Earl of Arundel, the Earl of Effex, and the Earl of Holland; all to desire their Intercession with the King for Peace and Protection to them; and all so adapted to the Humours of those great Men, that at last the Earls of Arundel and Holland began to incline and advise to Accommodation.

The Expedition at Sea, under the Marquis of Hamilton, came to the like no Effect: The Fleet en-tred the Firth on May 1. and cast Anchor in Leith- Road, where the Marquis landed some Forces only to grow Sick and to so: be shipp'd again. He spent his time in a fruitless Correspondence with the Earl of Roths, one of the chief Malecontents, and in fre-

This moved the Marquis to possess the King of the Dangers of farther Hostility: So that indeed all things conspired to lose the Opportunity of Honour and Success in this Royal Expedition. The Generals and Admiral were indifferent, and rather complaisant in the Matter; the common Soldiers and Sea-men were sick and weary of the Mock-show; the Courtiers and Council of the King thought it wiser not to carry things to extremity, while there could be any hopes of Submillion. And in my Ld Clarendon's Opinion, It was suspected and believed, by those who stood nearest, that his Majesty himself had in truth never any purpose to make the War in Blood; but believed that by shewing an Army to them, which was able to force them to any Conditions, they would have begged Pardon for the Contest they had made, and so he should have settled the Church, and all things else according to his Pleasure: And sure he might have done so if he had but state Skill, and been constant to his own Interest, and positive in denying their insolent Demands.

A Mock-War.

Treaty and Pacification.

This disposition in the King and his Ministers encouraged the Scots to some Petitions and Addresses; which meeting with civil and soft Answers, a Treaty was agreed on June 8. and Articles of Pacification sign'd June 18. with a Declaration of the King for Pardon and Peace, upon disbanding the Scotch Forces, and delivering up his Majesty's Forts and Ammunition. The King's Army was presently disbanded, and the Scots returned to Edenburgh with all they desired; having gotten many more Friends in England than they had before, kept all their Officers and as many of their Men as they thought fit in pay; and prosecuted all those who had not shewed the same Zeal in their Covenant, and enter'd a publick Protestation against the Bishops, &c. So that by the time the King came to London, it appeared plainly that the Army was disbanded without any Peace made, and the Scots in equal Inclination, and in more Reputation, to affront his Majesty than ever. — The Mischiefs that beset the King from this wonderful Atonement cannot be expressed, nor was it ever discoursed what prevailed over his Majesty to bring it so wofully to pass: All Men were ashamed who had contributed to it.

Earl of Traquair made High Commissioner.

An Assembly and Parliament were to meet in Scotland before the end of August, and the Marquis of Hamilton was again design'd to be his Majesty's High-Commissioner, but he earnestly excused himself; upon which the King was forced to employ the Earl of Traquair, and signed his Instructions at Berwick on July 27. and taking Post the next Day came to London August 1.

Earl of Essex disgrac'd.

The Factions and Animosities at Court were now greater than ever. The Earl of Essex, who had merited very well throughout the whole Affair, and had never made a false step in Action or Council, was discharged in the Croud without ordinary Ceremony, and was soon after denied the command of the Forest of Needwood, which lay at his very Door, and would have been so agreeable, that the Denial made the deeper impression. The Earl of Newcastle Governour to the Prince, who at his own charge had brought in a brave Troop of Horse against the Scots, had been so affronted in the Order of March by the Earl of Holland, that he sent him now a Challenge; and the King upon notice was forced to interpose his Authority, not to the satisfaction of either Party. The Marquis of Hamilton was more and more afraid of his Country-men, and enter'd upon dark Designs that made him suspected on all sides. The Lieutenant of Ireland, newly made Earl of Strafford, opposed the Queen in some of her Court Intrigues, and offended her so much, that she declared a most unseasonable Displeasure against him. Sir Henry Lane (of whom the Lord Deputy had a contempt and detestation) was grown to be the Queen's crea-

He was now near fourscore Years of Age, and One for whom no Body cared, rather unadorned with any parts of Vigour and Quickness, and unendowed with any notable Virtues, than notorious for any weakness or defect of Understanding, or transported with any vitious Inclinations, Appetite to Money only excepted. His Cardinal Perfection was Industry, and his most eminent Infirmary Covetousness. His long Experience had informed him well of the State and Affairs of England; but of Foreign Transactions, or the common Interest of Christian Princes, he was entirely undiscerning and ignorant.

In August the Assembly and Parliament met at Edenburgh, and were both so assuming that the Earl of Traquair not able to keep to his Instructions, prorogued the Parliament to November 14. But the Covenanters protested against the legality of Prorogation without consent of Parliament, and sent away the Earl of Dunfermling and the Lord Loudon as their Deputies to the King at Whitehall, who refused them Audience, and in disdain commanded them home, because they came without Warrant from his Commissioner. After this, they sent another Petition to his Majesty by one Cunningham, desiring permission to send some of their Number for their own Vindication; which his Majesty granting, the Lords Loudon and Dunfermling were again sent up; who behaved themselves like the Ministers of a Foreign State, had their Audience with a solemn Speech, put in their Articles of Request, and when referred for an Answer to a Committee of Council, they refused to go, alledging that they had Order and Instruction to treat with none but his Majesty himself. They carried it the more high upon the continual Encouragements they received from their Brethren in Scotland, who upon the Honour of making War and Peace with their King, were grown more considerable at Home and Abroad. At Home, where the People were so flush'd with the hopes of what was to be done for them, that their Lives and Fortunes were now at their Leaders Service; and the Tide so strong that most of the King's Privy-Council and great Ministers fell into the Faction, and among others the Earl of Argyle, who had the greatest Obligations imaginable to the King, and yet on the sudden became his greatest Enemy. Abroad where they enter'd correspondence with Holland, and obtained Credit for Arms and Ammunition; and were raising Men in Germany and Sweden, and had especial countenance in France, from whence Cardinal Richlieu sent an Agent privately to Edinburgh, to foment their Rebellion, as the most effectual curb to English Monarchy: And received another Agent from them, who solicited Supplies and communicated Counsels, and established a Correspondence with the French King himself: For a Letter was intercepted endorsed Au Roy, subscribed by the Lords Rothes, Montrose, Montgomery, Lefly, Marre, Loudon, Forrester, wrote in French, to signify their addressing to his Majesty as the Refuge and Sanctuary of afflicted Princes and States, most humbly beseeching him to give Faith and Credit to Mr. Colvil, whom they had sent to represent the Candour and Ingenuity of their Proceedings, and to assure themselves of an Assistance equal to his wonted Clemency. This intercepted Letter was brought to the Council at Whitehall, while one of the Subscribers, Loudon, was here negotiating the Cause of his Brethren; who being examined upon it, refused to give any other Answer than, That it was writ before the Agreement, and thereupon reserved and never sent, that if he had committed any Offence, he ought to be questioned for it in Scotland and not in England; and insisting upon his safe Conduct demanded his Liberty to return. But this Treason and insolent excuse of it raised Scots insolent at Home and Abroad.

Letter of the Scots to the Fr. King.

1639. raised such a just abhorrence in the King's Council, that the Ld Loudon and Colvil (who was then apprehended in London) were both committed to the Tower; and had they been brought to a speedy Trial, it might have struck Terror into the Scots, and made their Rebellion more abominable to all the World.

But the King was mild and delatory, and hoped a slow and sure Expedient would be to call an English Parliament, which had been now intermitted near twelve Years. So in December the King directed the Lord-Keeper to issue out Writs for the meeting of a Parliament on the third of April next ensuing; not doubting but his Parliament would express a very sharp sense of the Scots Insolence, and provide Remedies for Peace and Subjection. To prepare them the better, within a Month of the Session, the King published a large Declaration concerning his Proceedings with his Subjects in Scotland, since the Pacification in the Camp near Berwick.

Such was the Result of this Year in relation to Scotland: As to Ireland, there was an unhappy Quarrel between Wentworth Lord-Deputy and Loftus Lord-Chancellor, which produced a Complaint and a Hearing at the Council-Board Nov. 26. 1639. where his Majesty and Council justified the Conduct of the Ld. Deputy, and censured the Lord Loftus as unfit to hold the Office of Lord-Chancellor of that Kingdom. The Lord-Deputy was then himself in the English Court, and appeared in greater Favour with the King, who took him into his most secret Counsels, and gave him extraordinary marks of Favour, creating him Earl of Strafford, Lord-Lieutenant of the Kingdom of Ireland, and Knight of the Garter. He was a Man of extraordinary Abilities, and of most faithful Affection to the King: He saw now the necessity of reducing the Scots by Force of Arms, and did all that was possible to promote another Expedition against them. In the Subscription of a Loan at the Council-Board for that Service, he began first, and for Example subscribed 20000*l.* He returned to Dublin March 18. at the end of this Year, and met the Parliament which he had before summon'd; and for the King's Supply obtained from them four entire Subsidies; and in the Preamble of the Act had publick Thanks given to the King for providing and placing over them so Just, Wise, Vigilant and Profitable a Governour, &c.

About the middle of September, there appeared upon the English Coasts an unexpected Fleet from Spain, consisting of above seventy Sail of Ships, commanded by Don Antonio D'oquendo. The Dutch Fleet of not above twenty five Sail set upon them, and forced them into the Dowris, where the Spaniards expected to be safe under the King of England's Protection: For both Parties being our Allies, it was thought a Law of Nations, that our Shores and Harbours should be a Refuge to protect the Weaker; but at last Van-Trump the Dutch Admiral, fell upon the Spaniards without the Ceremony of asking leave, and burnt, and sunk and drove on shore a great part of their Navy. This, tho' not justified at Court, upon the Rules of Honour, was yet pleasing enough to the common People, who hated the appearance of a Spanish Armado, and had indeed reasons to suspect their Design: For tho' they pretended only to carry Recruits and Money to Dunkirk; yet that alone did not require so many Ships or Men. The Expedition did seem to be meant for some greater purpose; and by some Evidences since recovered, it is plain the Project was much the same with that in eighty eight. And in the beginning of the following Parliament a Book was produc'd in the House of Commons, containing, that The Papists should fish in troubled Waters whilst the King was at War with the Scots, with Prayers in it for the Holy-Martyrs that suffered in the Fleet sent against the Hereticks in England, Anno 1639.

As to the Ecclesiastical Affairs of this Year, Abp. Lud was wisely considering how, if possible, to appease the Religious Feuds in Scotland. To which purpose, he took Order for translating the Scottish Liturgy into the Latin Tongue, and drew up an Apology to be published with it, to give Satisfaction to the learned World of the excellency of the Book, and of the Piety and Justice of the King in enjoining the use of it. This Work was finished, but the Distemper of the times hinder'd the publication of it. Next he considered how to assert the Rights of Episcopacy, which with so much violence had been voted down in the Assemblies of the Kirk, and even one of the Bishops frighted into an Abjuration of his Order; he therefore recommended to Bishop Hall of Exeter, the drawing up a Defence of the Divine Right of Episcopacy; who accordingly applied himself to that Work, and sent the Abp. the Model of it in these two Propositions, 1. That Episcopacy is a lawful, most ancient, holy and divine Institution (as it is joined with imparity and superiority of Jurisdiction) and therefore where it hath through God's Providence obtained, cannot by any humane Power be abdicated, without a manifest Violation of God's Ordinance. 2. That the Presbyterian Government, however vindicated under the glorious Names of Christ's Kingdom and Ordinance, hath no true Footing either in Scripture or the Practice of the Church in all Ages from Christ's time to the present; and that howsoever it may be of use in some Cities, or Territories, wherein Episcopal Government through Iniquity of Times cannot be had; yet to obtrude it upon a Church otherwise settled under an acknowledged Monarchy is utterly incongruous and unjustifiable. These Propositions were attended with several Postulata, as, 1. That Government which was of Apostolical Institution cannot be derided to be of Divine Right. 2. Not only that Government which was directly commanded and enacted, but also that which was practised and recommended by the Apostles to the Church, must justly pass for an Apostolical Institution, &c. The Archbishop read over the projected Scheme, and freely offered his own Thoughts in suggesting some Amendments, in these Words: "You say that Episcopacy is an ancient, holy and divine Institution; it must needs be ancient and holy if divine. Would it not be more full went it thus? So ancient as that it is of divine Institution. Next you define Episcopacy by being joined with Imparity and Superiority of Jurisdiction, but this seems short; for every Archpresb's or Archd's Place is so. I draw the Superiority not from the Jurisdiction which is attributed to Bishops Jure Positivo in their Audience of Ecclesiastical Matters, but from that which is Intrinsical and Original in the Power of Excommunication: Again, You say, that where Episcopacy hath obtained, it cannot be abdicated without violation of God's Ordinance. This Proposition I conceive is inter minus habentes, for never was there any Church yet where it hath not obtained. In your second Head you grant, that the Presbyterian Government may be of use where Episcopacy may not be had. Pray consider, Whether this Concession be not needless here, and in it self of a dangerous Consequence? &c. Concerning your Postulata, I shall pray you to allow me the like freedom; among which the two first are true, but as express'd too restrictive: For Episcopacy is not so to be asserted unto Apostolical Institution as to bar it from looking higher, and from fetching it materially and originally, in the Ground and Intention of it, from Christ himself, tho' perhaps the Apostles formaliz'd it, &c. The Learned and Pious Bishop submitted to these Censures and Advices, and soon after published his Book under the Title of Episcopacy by Divine Right, and defended it with incomparable Strength and Temper against all the Attacks of a Club of Writers. This peaceable Prelate moved the Archbishop by Letter, Sep. 28. 1639. to mediate with the King for calling a General Synod of the whole three Kingdoms, wherein all the Reverend Bishops and chief of the Learned and Dignified Clergy, and the Professors and some other eminent Doctors of all the Universities, might be assembled to pass their Judgment

Puritans in England encourg'd by the Scots.
The Puritanical Spirit in England was much animated by the Storms in Scotland, and took this Advantage to exert their unconformable Humour. This gave occasion to the Archbishop to complain to the King in his Account of this Year, that these were broken Times; that many who were brought to good Order, are now of late fallen off, &c. And it was this same Distraction of the Times that gave Encouragement to Mr. Bagshaw of the Middle Temple to begin his Readings Feb. 24. on the Statute 25 Ed. III. cap. 7. and to state these Questions; 1. Whether it be a good Act of Parliament without the Assent of the Lords spiritual? which he held Affirmatively. 2. Whether any beneficed Clerk were capable of temporal Jurisdiction at the time of making that Law? which he held in the Negative. 3. Whether a Bishop, without calling a Synod, have power, as Diocefan, to convict an Heretick? which he maintained also in the Negative. The Noise of this coming to the Archbishop's Ears, he informed the King; who order'd the Lord Keeper to interdict his farther Reading.

The state of the Diocefe of Canterbury is thus represented in the Archbishop's Account of his Province. "The great thing which is amifs there, and beyond my Power to remedy, is the Stiffness of divers Anabaptists and Separatists from the Church of England, especially in and about the Parts near Ashford. And I do not find, either by my own Experience, or by any Advice from my Officers, that this is like to be remedied, unless the Statute concerning Abjuration of your Kingdom, or some other way, by the Power of the Temporal Law or State, be thought upon. But how fit that may be to be done for the present, especially in these broken Times, I humbly submit to your Majesty's Wisdom, having often complained of this before.
[C. R. It were not amifs to speak with the Keeper about this.]

"Many that were brought to good Order for receiving of the Holy Communion where the Rails stand before the Table, are now of late fall'n off, and refuse to come up thither to receive: but this, God willing, I shall take care of, and order as well as I can, and with as much speed. And the same is now commonly fall'n out in divers other Dioceses. There was, about half a Year since, one that pretended himself a Minister, who got many Followers in Sandwich, and some neighbouring Parishes, but at last was found to have gone under three Names, Enoch, Swan, and Grey, and in as several Habits, of a Minister, an ordinary Lay-man, and a Rofter. And this being discovered, he fled the Country before any of my Officers could lay hold on him. Upon this occasion I have commanded my Commissary and Archdeacon to give Charge, in my Name, to all Parsons and Vicars of my Diocefe, that they suffer no Man to preach in their Cures, but such as for whom they will answer, as well otherwise as for the point of Conformity; which, I hope, will prevent the like Abuse hereafter.

Unhappy Resolucon for extraordina-

plies.
The Resolutions for a Parliament had been taken on the 5th of December last; and it was observable, that the first Movers to it were the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Lord Deputy of Ireland, and the Marquis of Hamilton. And at the same time in Council, as the Archbishop words it in his Diary, a Resolution was voted at the Board, to assist the King in extraordinary ways if the Parliament should prove peevish and refuse. Which tho' meant only of Loans and voluntary Contributions, yet was afterward interpreted a Design of the most arbitrary Power. 'Tis certain, as the Resolution was never executed, so it had been happier if never made: Perhaps the Parliament had fate longer to dispatch the ordinary Aid, 1640.

if the King had not too much depended on these ex- 16 Car. I. traordinary Supplies.

Before the Opening of the Parliament, the King An Army had begun his raising an Army to reduce Scotland; against of which Army the Earl of Northumberland was made Scotland.
General, the Earl of Strefford Lieutenant-General, and the Lord Comway General of the Horse. So that none of the Generals, and few of the chief Officers, who had been employed before, were now made use of; which gave a Distaste, and an ill blood, very prejudicial to the publick Interest.

On Monday April 12. the Parliament opened, and Parliam.
the King spoke thus to them. meets.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

There was never a King that had a more great and King's weighty Cause to call his People together than my Speech.
self: I will not trouble you with the Particulars; I have informed my Lord Keeper, and command him to speak, and desire your Attention.

After which Sir John Finch, Lord Keeper, deli- Lord vered a long Harangue, in an Eloquence peculiar to Keeper's the Times, or to himself. — Says he, "His Ma- Speech. jesty's Kingly Resolutions are seated in the Ark of his sacred Breast, and it were a Presumption of too high a nature, for any Uzzah, uncall'd, to touch it: Yet his Majesty is now pleas'd to lay by the shining Beams of Majesty, as Phabus did to Phacton, that the distance between Sovereignty and Subjection should not bar you of that filial freedom of Access to his Person and Counsels; only let us beware how, with the Son of Clymene, we aim not at the guiding of the Chariot; as if that were the only Testimony of Fatherly Affection: and let us ever remember, that though the King sometimes lays by the Beams and Rays of Majesty, he never lays by Majesty it self.

The Sense of what he told them in glorious Words was to this effect; That his Majesty was resolv'd to reduce his disaffected Subjects in Scotland; that he would by no means admit their Mediation; but before they entered on any other Debates, he expected their immediate Aid, and afterward would give them time for considering of any just Grievances to be heard and redress'd.

Then the King spoke thus:
My Lords, "You shall see he hath spoken nothing hyperbolically, or nothing but what I shall make good one way or other. And because he did mention a Letter by my Subjects in Scotland, who did seek to draw in foreign Power for Aid, here is the original Letter, which I shall command him to read unto you. And because it may touch a Neighbour of mine, whom I will say nothing of but that which is just, (God forbid I should) for my part I think it was never accepted by him: Indeed it was a Letter to the French King, but I know not that ever he had it: for by chance I intercepted it, as it was going unto him; and therefore I hope you will understand me right in that.

The King
resumes
his Speech
After the Lord Keeper had read the original Letter, and a Translation of it, and had first made a Remark on the Superfcription of it, the King added,
"Of these Gentlemen that have set their Hands to this Letter, here is one: and I believe you would think it very strange if I should not lay him fast: and therefore I have signed a Warrant to lay him close Prisoner in the Tower.

My Lords, "I think (but that I will not say positively, because I will not say any thing here but what I am sure of) I think I have the Gentleman that should have carried the Letter fast enough; but I know not, I may be mistaken.

The Commons returning to their House, chose Mr. Serjeant Mr. Serjeant Glanvil for their Speaker; who being Glanvil chosen presented to the King on Wednesday Apr. 15. made a durable and proper Speech, and was approv'd and confirm'd by his Majesty.

1640. April 16. the Commons desired the Lords to move his Majesty to appoint a Fast. Then several Petitions were read complaining of Ship-Money, Projects, Monopolies, Star-Chamber, High-Commission Courts, &c. then Harbottle Grimston, Esq; spoke upon the Subject of Grievances, arguing, That the Dangers at Home were greater than those from Abroad; and the Diseases and Distempers in our Bodies Politick were grown to that height, that they prayed for and importun'd a Cure. Then Sir Benjamin Rudyard spoke against the discontinuance of Parliaments, and that during this vacation of those Meetings, many Disorders had been committed, which must be now set right, to vindicate God in his Religion, the King in his Honour, and the Commonwealth in its gasping Extremities.

Mr. Pym's Speech. April 17. The Commons fell again upon the Debate of Grievances, and Mr. Pym made an elaborate Speech against them, reducing them to three Heads. 1. Those Grievances which during these eleven Years Interval of Parliaments were against the Liberties and Privileges of Parliament. 2. Innovations in Matters of Religion. 3. Grievances against the Propriety of our Goods. Concluding with this Proposal; For the Remedy of these Grievances, I advise to present them to the House of Peers, that they may join with us to go to the King, and pray that these Grievances, being clear in Fact, may be voted; if any thing in the Vote be stuck upon, that it may be debated and drawn according to the course of the House into a Remonstrance, with an humble Petition of both Houses for Redress. And I hope the Wisdom of this House will prepare such a Remedy, as will make the King a great King, and the People Happy.

The King Angry. On Saturday and Monday following, the House proceeded in voting the Grievances of the Members imprisoned 3, 4 Car. and of Sir John Finch then Speaker, refusing to obey the Commands of the House, &c. So that on Tuesday Apr. 21. the King not enduring that his main Business should be neglected or deferred, commanded the Lords and Commons to attend him in the Banqueting-House; where he order'd the Lord Keeper to acquaint them, that The Cause of calling this Parliament was for the Assistance and Supply of his Majesty; that if the Supply were not speedy it would be of no use at all, for the Army was now marching, and did stand his Majesty in at least one hundred thousand Pounds a Month; and if there were not means used to go on with this as was fitting, his Majesty's Design would be lost, and the Charge all cast away. That this Supply being granted, his Majesty would give them Scope and Liberty to present their just Grievances unto him, and would hear them with a gracious Ear, and give them such an Answer as they and all the Kingdom should have reason to joy therein.

Waller's Motion. April 22. On a Report made in the House of Commons of the King's Speech in the Banqueting-House, Edmund Waller, Esq; made a severe Speech, ending with this Motion, That there may be an Order presently made, that the first thing this House will consider of, shall be the restoring of this Nation in general to the fundamental and vital Liberties, and then to consider of the Supply desired.

Commons more averse to it. While the Commons were thus resolving on the redress of Grievances, his Majesty came to the Lords House, and expressed so great Concern for a speedy Supply, that the Lords desired a Conference with the Commons upon this Subject, and there urged them to trust his Majesty, and to begin with a present Supply. But this Advice of the Lords, in matter of Aid, was thought to be so irregular, that on April 27. it brought on this Resolution in the House of Commons, that The Lords voting the propounding and declaring Matter of Supply, before it was moved from the House of Commons was a breach of the Privilege of the said House; and therefore the Commons desire their Lordships in their Wisdom to find out some way for the reparation of their Privileges broken by that Matter, and to prevent the like Infringement for the future. 1640. 16 Car. I.

May 2. When his Majesty saw the Intercession of the Lords did but irritate the Commons, he took another Method of sending a Message to them by Sir Henry Vane, That his Majesty had several ways acquainted the House with the urgent Danger of losing Time, and had yet received no Answer, though he had before told them, that a Delay would be as destructive as a Denial; therefore again desires them to give him a present Answer concerning his Supply; his Majesty being still resolved on his part, to make good his Promise made by himself and the Lord-Keeper. The House turning themselves into a Grand Committee debated upon this Message, and would come to no Resolution upon it.

A second Message. Monday May 4. Sir Henry Vane brought a second Message to the House of Commons, That upon their granting twelve Subsidies, his Majesty would give way to the utter abolishing of Ship-Money; and for their Grievances would give them as much time as might be now, and another Session at Michaelmas. The House again debated upon this Message in a Grand Committee, but deferred their Resolution.

May 5. The King so ill repented the Delays of the Commons, and was so impatient of advancing toward Scotland, that he unhappily determin'd to dissolve the Parliament, and so parted with the two Houses in this following Speech.

My Lords,

There can no occasion of my coming to this House be so unpleasing unto me as this at this time. The fear of doing that which I am to do this Day, made me not long since come into this House, where I express as well my Fears as the Remedy which I thought necessary for the eschewing of what is to follow.

I must confess and acknowledge, that you, my Lords, of the Higher House, did give me so willing an Ear, and with such an Affection did shew your selves, that certainly I may say, that if there had been any means to have given an happy End to this Parliament, you took it; so that it was neither your Lordship's Fault nor mine that it is not so. Therefore, in the first place, I must thank you, my Lords, for your good endeavours.

My Lords, I hope you remember what the first Day of the Parliament my Lord-Keeper said to you in my Name, and what likewise he said in the Banqueting-House in White-ball, and what lately I said unto you in this Place my self. I name all this unto you, not doubting that you do not well remember it, but to shew you that I never said any thing in way of Favour to my People, but (by the Grace of God) I will punctually and really perform it.

I know that they have insisted very much on Grievances; I will nor say but there may be some, tho' I will confidently affirm, that there are not by many degrees so many as the publick Voice doth make them. Wherefore I desire you to take notice, now especially at this time, that out of Parliament I shall be as ready (if not more willing) to hear and redress any just Grievances as in Parliament.

There is one thing much spoken of, I mean as to matters of Religion; concerning which, albeit I expressed my self fully the last Day in this place, yet I think it fit again on this occasion to tell you, that as I am concerned, so I shall be most careful to preserve that purity of Religion, which I thank God is so well established in the Church of England, and that as well out of as in Parliament.

My Lords, I shall nor trouble you long with Words, it being not my fashion; wherefore to conclude, what

Upon which the Lord-Keeper pronounc'd the Parliament dissolved: And his Majesty soon after published a Declaration to all his loving Subjects of the Causes which moved him to dissolve the last Parliament; which however plausible, did not satisfy the English Subject: And indeed when Princes are forc'd upon Apologies to their People, it rather implies a Mis-government, and renews the Suspicions of it. This abrupt parting with a Parliament, in a Speech that made no application to the Commons, and yet hard Reflections on them, was undoubtedly a false and fatal step. The more unhappy, because it was only a formal dispute of Precedency, which should go first, Redress of Grievances or Grant of Taxes. The King was willing to Redress and the Commons to Grant; the Question was, in whom the Trust should be reposed? The King thought it his Honour to be first serv'd; the Commons thought it their Right to be first satisfied: However, the King and his Friends were soon sensible of the Error of dissolving; for the great States-man and Historian tells us, The King when he had better reflected upon what was like to fall out, and was better informed of the Temper and Duty of the House of Commons, and that they had voted a Supply, if Sir Henry Vane had not hinder'd it, by so positive a declaration that his Majesty would refuse it, was heartily sorry for what he had done, declared with great anger, that he had never given him such Authority. — He consulted the same Day or the next, whether he might by his Proclamation recal them to meet together again; but he found that impossible.

And yet the King shewed too much Anger against the leading Members, if ever he designed to meet them again. The Lord Brooks his Study, Cabinets and Pockets were searched for Papers; Henry Bellasis, Esq; Sir John Hotham, Knight and Baronet, and John Crew, Esq; were imprisoned, and some occasional Rebukes were given to many others. The King's greatest difficulty was to raise himself that Assistance that he lost in Parliament: And many of the Lords and Gentlemen were so sensible of his publick Necessities, that by voluntary Loan in less than three Weeks, there was three hundred thousand Pounds paid into the Exchequer.

Upon this Fund and the hopes of other Projects, the King was resolv'd to carry on the Reduction of Scotland. Orders had been sent March 26. to the Lords Lieutenants of the several Counties to provide Horses and Carters for the Train of Artillery and Ammunition, to be ready at Newcastle on June 15. where the general Rendezvous was, now by fresh Orders deferred to Aug. 5. The Lord Conway was there before with a considerable Body of Men, and in the beginning of July received an Alarm from Carlisle, that the Scots were within a few Days of Dunblair, meaning to fall into Cumberland. This hasten'd the 1640. March of the King's Army, who were now advanc'd 16 Car. I. into the County of York; where being quarter'd in private Houses, it produc'd a Petition of the Gentry to the King against this Grievance in the Assizes at York July 28. The Lord Conway sent Intelligence Aug. 15. that the Scotch Army was just ready to break in; upon which, Aug. 20. the King began his Journey from London towards the North in some haste, publishing the same Day a Proclamation, Declaring all Scots entering into England in an hostile manner, and their Adherents, to be Traitors; but promising a Pardon if they should return to Obedience. On that very Day the Scotch Army came over the Tweed, the Vant-guard commanded by the Earl of Montross; publishing Six Considerations of the lawfulness of their Expedition into England manifested; and by slow Marches encamped Aug. 27. at Newbourn upon Tyne, four Miles West from Newcastle. Upon which the King's Forces in Newcastle, 3000 Horse and 1500 Foot were drawn into a Meadow called Newbourn-Hugh, to hinder the Scots from passing the River; next Day a Skirmish began, which brought on a fierce Engagement, in which the English had so much disadvantage, that they retreated in confusion, and the Lord Conway in a Council of War at Midnight, resolv'd to retire with his Forces to Durham, and so quitted Newcastle, which immediately fell into the Scots hands. The King was come from York as far as North-Allerton, hoping to have reacht his Army at Newcastle before any Engagement; but meeting the ill-News, he hasten'd back Aug. 29. to York, and issued his Writs dated Sept. 7. to all the Peers to meet at a great Council at York on Sept. 24. which occasioned many Petitions for a Parliament, that was summon'd to meet Nov. 3.

In the mean time, at the opening of the great King's Council in the Dean's House at York Sept. 24. the King in a Speech declared to the Peers, " That upon sudden Invasions it had been the practice of his " Predecessors to assemble a like Council for Advice " and Assistance; that he desired nothing more than " to be rightly understood of his People; to which
 " end he had of himself resolv'd to call a Parliam" ent, but in the mean time must desire their Ad" vice in two Points; 1. What Answer to give to " the Petition of the Rebels, and in what manner " to treat with them. 2. How his Army should " be kept on foot and maintained until the Supplies " of a Parliament might be had. Then the Peti" tion and Letters, and other Proceedings were laid before the Lords; who as to the first Point resolv'd, That sixteen English Lords, with some Assistants, should be sent to treat with Commissioners of the Scots. And as to the second Point, Resolv'd, That a Letter should be written to the City of London, subscribed by all the Peers present for lending the Sum of two hundred thousand Pounds to keep the Army together for three Months.

 sioners.

The meeting of the Commissioners was appointed to be at Rippon on Thursday Oct. 1. where after much Alteration it was agreed Oct. 26. that there should be a Cessation of Arms; both Parties to retain during the Treaty what they possess'd at time of Cessation.
 The County of Northumberland and Bishoprick of Durham to be the Limits of the Scotch Army, who should have a Contribution of 850 l. a Day. These Articles were confirm'd by the King, with Advice of his great Council Oct. 27. and the continuation of the Treaty depending was adjourn'd to London, to which place the King and Lords immediately return'd.
 There seem to have been two false steps in this Expedition; first, that the whole Royal Army was not time enough at Newcastle to have repuls'd the Scots, before they were flush'd with the defeat of too small a Party of the English. And secondly, that a Treaty was allow'd, and a Cessation granted to declared Rebels, who should rather have been gratified in their Demands by the King's free Mercy, or should have been pursu'd to their own Submission. And says a late States-man, *The last 1640. and most confounding Error was, the removing the Treasury to London, and upon any Terms consenting, that the Scotch Commissioners should reside there before a Peace concluded.

Parliament meets. On Novemb. 3. the Parliament met, the King not riding, to Westminster in the accustomed State, but going privately in his Barge, as if under melancholy Apprehensions; and made this Speech with less Spirit than usual.

King's Sp. ech. My Lords, THE knowledge I had of the Desires of my Scotch Subjects, was the cause of my calling the last Assembly of Parliament; wherein had I been believed, I sincerely think, that things had not fallen out as now we see. But it is no wonder that Men are so slow to believe that so great a Sedition should be raised on so little Ground. But now, my Lords and Gentlemen, the Honour and Safety of this Kingdom lying so near at the Stake, I am resolved to put my self freely and clearly on the Love and Affection of my English Subjects, as these of my Lords as did wait on me at York very well remember I there declared.

Therefore, my Lords, I shall not mention mine own Interest, or that Support I might justly expect from you, till the common Safety be secured; though I must tell you, I am not ashamed to say, those Charges I have been at, have been merely for the securing and good of this Kingdom; tho' the Success hath not been answerable to my Desires: Therefore I shall only desire you to consider the best way, both for the Safety and Security of this Kingdom, wherein there are two parts chiefly considerable; first, the chaitizing out of the Rebels, and secondly, that other in satisfying your just Grievances, wherein I shall promise you to concur so heartily and clearly with you, that all the World may see my Intentions have ever been, and shall be, to make this a glorious and flourishing Kingdom.

There are only two things that I shall mention to you; first, the one is to tell you, that the Loan of Money which I lately had from the City of London, wherein the Lords that waited on me at York assisted me, will only maintain my Army for two Months. From the beginning of that time it was granted. Now, my Lords and Gentlemen, I leave it to your Considerations, what Dishonour and Mischief it might be, in case for want of Money my Army be disbanded before the Rebels be put out of this Kingdom. Secondly, the securing the Calamities the Northern People endure at this time and so long as the Treaty is on foot. And in this, I may say, not only they but all this Kingdom will suffer the harm: Therefore I leave this also to your Consideration, for the ordering of these great Affairs, whereof you are to treat at this time. I am so confident of your Love to me, and that your care is for the Honour and Safety of the Kingdom, that I shall freely and willingly leave to you where to begin; only this, that you may the better know the state of all the Affairs, I have commanded my Lord-Keeper to give you a short and free Account of these things that have happen'd in this interim, with this Protestation, that if this Account be not satisfactory as it ought to be, I shall, whensoever you desire, give you a full and perfect Account of every Particular.

One thing more I desire of you, as one of the greatest Means to make this a happy Parliament, that you on your parts, as I on mine, lay aside all Suspicion of one another, as I promised my Lords at York, it shall not be my Fault if this be not a happy and good Parliament.

The King had designed Sir Thomas Gardiner, Recorder of London, to have been Speaker in this House of Commons; and for that very reason the Enemies of the Court had prevented his Election for the City, and for all other Places: So that Mr. Lenthall, a Bench-er of Lincoln's-Inn (a Lawyer of competent Practice, and no ill Reputation for his Affection to the Government both of Church and State) was pitch'd upon by the King, and with very great difficulty rather prevailed with than perswaded to accept the Charge; and no doubt a worse could not have been deputed of all that Profession who were then return'd; for he was a Man of a very narrow, timorous Nature, and of no Experience or Conversation in the Affairs of the Kingdom, beyond what the very drudgery in his Profession (in which all his Design was to make himself Rich) engaged him in. In a word, he was in all respects very unequal to the Work, and not knowing how to preserve his own Dignity, or to restrain the Licence and Exorbitance of others, his Weakness contributed as much to the growing Mischiefs as the Malice of the principal Contrivers.

On Novemb. 5. the King declared his Approbation of the Speaker; and because great Offence had been taken by the Scots and their Well-wishers, that the King in his Speech the Day before, had twice called them Rebels, while he was under Treaty with them, his Majesty chose now to explain himself, I told you that the Rebels must be put out of this Kingdom; it is true, I must needs call them so, so long as they have an Army that do invade us: And although I am under Treaty with them, and I under my Great-Seal do call them my Subjects, and so they are too.

On Saturday Novemb. 7. the Scene of Complaints opened; Tragical Petitions were preferred to the House of Commons in behalf of the chief Sufferers for Sedition, Mr. Prynne, Dr. Bastwick, Mr. Burton, John Lilburn, Alexander Leighton, &c. Then the particular Grievances of the several Counties were represented; of Hertfordshire by Arthur Capel, Esq; of York by Mr. Bellasis and the Lord Fairfax, of Lincolnshire by Sir John Wray, of Wiltshire by Sir Philip Musgrave, of Wilts by Sir Francis Seymour, of Worcestershire by Sir John Puckington, of Rutland by Sir Guy Palmes, of Norfolk by Sir Edmund Montford, of Essex by Sir Thomas Barrington, of Kent by Sir John Culpeper, and of other Counties and Towns by other Knights and Burgeses. After which Mr. Pym made an Harangue upon the general Grievances of the Nation, under three Heads. 1. Against the Privilege of Parliament. 2. To the Prejudice of Religion. 3. Against the Liberty of the Subject. Then Sir Benjamin Rudynd delivered a Speech against the Innovations in Religion, and let fall this seasonable Expression; The King is reduced to great straits, wherein it were Undutifulness beyond Inhumanity to take Advantage of him; let us rather make it an Advantage for him to do him best Service when he hath most need. Mr. Bagshaw spoke feverely, concluding thus; Let the woful Violation of the Statute of Men polies, and the Petition of Right, be made Felony or Premunire at the least; but yet, in the interim, let them be made Examples of Punishment who have been the Authors of all these Miseries, according to the counsel of Solomon: Take away the Wicked from before the King, and his Throne shall be established in Righteousness. Sir John Holland spoke next with more Modesty and Temper; he touch'd upon the Grievances, and recommended a Redress of them, and then, says he, Touching supplying his Majesty's Wants, I do humbly desire we may proceed therein within its due time, and that with as much Loyal Duty and Liberality as ever any People expressed towards their Prince. — Let us remove the Scottish Army with a soft and gentle hand of Mediation, Pacification and Reconciliation, if possible it may be wrought with his Majesty's Honour and the Kingdom's Safety; if not, then to repel and repulse them with stout and resolute Spirits, with valiant and united Hearts and Hands, &c.

Novemb. 9. the Lord Digby made a Speech against the great and intolerable burden of Ship-Money; the Abuses in pressing Soldiers, and raising Monies for the Maintenance of them; the multitude of Mo-

Sir Edm.
Dering against the
Abp. of Canterbury

Novemb. 10. Sir Edmund Dering made a zealous Invective against the Archbishop of Canterbury, concluding, "That he hop'd before the Year run round, his Grace would either have more Grace or no Grace at all: For our manifold Griets do fill a mighty and vast Circumference; yet so that from every part our Lines of Sorrow do lead unto Him, and point at him the Centre, from whence our Mi-series in this Church, and many of them in the Common-wealth do flow.

Mr. Pym against the Earl of Strafford.

Novemb. 11. Mr. Pym inform'd the House, that there were several Persons who had given Information, that there was a good ground for Accusing Thomas Earl of Strafford of High-Treason; for which a select Committee was appointed, who brought in this Report, That they did find just cause to accuse the Earl of Strafford of High-Treason; and that the House would desire the Lords that he may be Sequestred from Parliament and Committed; and that within some convenient time this House will resort to their Lordships with particular Accusations and Articles against him. Mr. Pym carried the Message to the Lords, who returned Answer by the two chief Justices, that they had taken into serious Consideration the Accusation sent from this House against the Earl of Strafford, that they had Sequestred him from the House, and committed him into safe Custody to the Gentleman-Uther of their House, &c. It was afterward reflected on as a Rashness fatal to this great Minister, that when he was at the Head of the King's Army in the North, he should leave his safe Post, and come to a Parliament which he knew to be incens'd against him; when if he had pass'd over into his own Government of Ireland, or sent over for the Forces which there waited his Orders, he might have serv'd the King and sav'd himself.

Innovations in Religion.

Novemb. 21. Sir Edward Dering at the Grand Committee for Religion, made a very provoking Speech, saying, that God's true Religion was violently invaded by two seeming Enemies, but indeed (like Herod and Pilate) fast Friends for the destruction of Truth, the Papists for one Party, and the Prelating Faction for the other; declaring, He had rather serve one as far off as Tiber, than to have him come so near as the Thames; a Pope at Rome would do him less hurt than a Patriarch might do at Lambeth; concluding with a Motion To select a Committee of a few, and to empower them for the discovery of the numbers of oppressed Ministers under the Bishops Tyranny for these ten Years last past.

Resolution against Ship-Money.

Decemb. 7. upon the Debate concerning Ship-Money, the Lord Falkland made a vehement Speech against it; and it was resolv'd upon the Question, Ne-mine contradicente, "That the Charge imposed upon the Subjects for the providing and furnishing Ships, and the Assessments for raising of Money for that purpose, commonly called Ship-Money, are against the Laws of the Realm, the Subjects Right of Property, and contrary to the former Resolutions in Parliament, and to the Petition of Right.

Secretary Windebank flies beyond Sea.

Decemb. 10. Mr. Secretary Windebank, who had been declared the greatest Promoter of Popery, upon a peremptory Summons to appear before the House of Commons, fled beyond Sea; which must needs make an Impression upon the King, that he must be assaulted on the one hand and deserted on the other; because not able to Protect his Mi-1640. nisters, nor they able to Vindicate themselves. The late Historian makes this Remark on the flight of Windebank: "I could never yet learn the true Reason why they suffered Secretary Windebank to escape their Justice (for the Lord Finch, it was visible he was in their Favour, and they would gladly have preserved him in the Place) against whom they had more pregnant Testimony of Offences within the verge of the Law, than against any Person they have accused since this Parliament, and of some that it may be might have proved Capital, and so their Appetite of Blood might have been satisfied.

16 Car. I.

December 16. After voting the late Canons made in Convocation to be illegal, &c. a Committee was appointed to consider how far in particular the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury had been an Actor in the great Design of the Subversion of the Laws of the Realm, and of the Religion, and to draw up a Charge against him. The same Day the Scots Commissioners accused the Archbishop, and the next Morning exhibited to the House of Lords a long Charge of his being the Author of all their Troubles. December 18. Mr. Harbottle Grimstone made a bitter Invective against the Archbishop, calling him The Sty of all Pestilential Filth; — The great and common Enemy of all Goodness and Good Men; A Viper near his Majesty's Person to dis-still Poison into his sacred Ears, &c. At the end of this wrathful Speech, the Archbishop was voted to be a Traitor, and Mr. Hollis was sent to the Lords to accuse him of High-Treason; upon which he was committed to the Custody of the Gentleman Uther, and Sequestred from sitting in Parliament, till he cleared himself of this Accusation.

Proceedings against the
Abp. of Canterbury

December 21. the Lord Keeper Finch was the next obnoxious Man; who being threaten'd with an Impeachment, desir'd leave to speak for himself in the House of Commons, and did so in a very Eloquent Speech, delivered with an excellent Grace and Gesture; but was voted a Traitor, 1. For refusing to read the Remonstrance against the Lord Treasurer Weston, 4 Car. when the Parliament desired it. 2. For soliciting, perswading and threatning the Judges to deliver their Opinion for the Levy of Ship-Money. 3. For several illegal Actions in Forest matters. 4. For ill Offices done in making the King to dissolve the last Parliament, and causing his Declaration thereupon to be put forth. Upon which he got up early the next Morning and escaped into Holland. Sir Edward Littleton, Chief Justice of the Common-Pleas, being made Lord Keeper in his Place; the late Writer of the History of Rebellion, makes it visible, that the Lord Finch was in the Favour of the House of Commons, and that they would have gladly preserved him in the place, and that they used Artifices to give him all Advantages, tho' (says he) if their Rule were true, that an endeavour to alter the Government by Law, and to introduce an arbitrary Power were Treason, He was the most notoriously and inexcusably guilty of that Crime of any Man that can be named. This Censure seems a little too severe, but Mr. Hide was an Assistant for reading the Articles of Impeachment carried up to the Lords against him, on January 14. following, and had the Thanks of the House for his Service.

January 19. the Lord Digby made a Speech for the frequency of Parliaments, whereupon the Bill for the preventing of Inconveniences happening by the long intermission of Parliaments was passed, and carried up to the Lords by the said Lord Digby. And the Majority of the Commons purged their House of several Members disaffected to their Proceeding, Mr. William Sandys Burgess for Evesham, Sir John Jacob, Mr. Thomas Web and Mr. Edmund Windham.

 pond with the Scots. ded to this dishonourable Vote, Jan. 22. That a friendly Assistance and Relief should be given towards supply of the Losses and Necessities of the Scots, and that in due time the House would take into consideration the Measure and Manner of it. It is certain the King had carried it with great Patience and Temper, and to all their occasional Applications to him, had given very calm and kind Answers. His disposition to Peace and Settlement was farther shewn in this Speech to both Houses, Jan. 25.

My Lords, and you the Knights, Citizens and Burgeffes, Kg's heal- THE principal cause of my coming here at ingSpeech this time, is by reason of the slow proceedings in Parliament, touching which is a great deal of Inconvenience: Therefore I think it very necessary to lay before you the State of my Affairs, as now they stand, thereby to hasten not to interrupt your Proceedings.
 First, I must remember you, that there are two Armies in the Kingdom in a manner maintained by you; the very naming of which doth more clearly shew the Inconvenience thereof, than a better Tongue than mine can express. Therefore, in the first place, I shall recommend unto you the quick dispatch of that Business.
 In the next place, I must recommend unto you the state of my Navy and Forts, the Condition of both which is so well known unto you that I need not tell you the Particulars; only thus much, they are the Walls and Defence of this Kingdom, which if out of Order, all Men may easily judge what encouragement it will be to our Enemies, and what disheartening to our Friends.
 Last of all (and not the least to be considered) I must lay before you the distractions that are at this present occasioned thro' the connivence of Parliament; for there are some Men that more maliciously than ignorantly, will put no difference between Reformation and Alteration of Government.
 Hence it cometh, that Divine Service is irreverently interrupted, and Petitions in an ill way given in, neither disputed nor denied. But I will enter into no more Particulars, but shew you a way of Remedy, by shewing you my clear Intentions, and some Rocks that may hinder this good Work.
 I shall willingly and cheerfully concur with you, for the Reformation of all Innovations both in Church and Common-wealth; and consequently that all Courts of Justice may be reformed according to Law, for my Intention is clearly to reduce all things to the best and purest Time, as they were in the time of Queen Elizabeth. Moreover whatsoever part of my Revenue shall be found illegal, or heavy to my Subjects, I shall be willing to lay it down, trusting in their Affections.
 Having thus clearly and shortly set down my Intentions, I will shew you some Rubbs, and must needs take notice of some very strange (I know not what Term to give them) Petitions given in in the Names of divers Counties, against the present establish'd Government, and of the great Threatnings against the Bishops, that they will make them to be but Cyphers, or at least their Voices to be taken away.
 Now I must tell you, that I make a great difference between Reformation and Alteration of Government; tho' I am for the first, I cannot give way to the latter. If some of them have over-stretch'd their Power, and encroached too much upon the Temporality, if it be so, I shall not be unwilling these things should be redressed and reformed, as all other Abuses, according to the Wisdom of former Times, so far I shall go 1640. with you; nay, farther, if upon serious Debate 16 Car. I. you shall shew me that Bishops have some Temporal Authority inconvenient to the State, and not so necessary for the Government of the Church, and upholding Episcopall Jurisdiction, I shall not be unwilling to desire them to lay it down. But this must not be understood, that I shall any way consent that their Voices in Parliament should be taken away; for in all the times of my Predecessors, since the Conquest and before, they have enjoy'd it, and I am bound to maintain them in it, as one of the fundamental Constitutions of this Kingdom.

There is another Rock you are on, not in Substance but in Form; yet the Form is so essential, that unless it be Reformed it will mar the Substance. There is a Bill lately put in concerning Parliaments; the thing I like well to have frequent Parliaments: but to give Power to Sheriffs and Constables, and I know not whom, to use my Authority, that I cannot yield unto. But to shew you that I am desirous to give you content in Forms which destroy not the Substance, you shall have a Bill for this purpose, so that it trench not against my Honour, nor against the ancient Prerogative of the Crown concerning Parliaments; to which purpose I have commanded my Learned Council to wait upon you, my Lords, with such Propositions as I hope will give you content. For I ingeniously confess, that frequent Parliaments are the best Means to keep a right understanding betwixt me and my People, which I so much desire.

To conclude, I have now shown you the State of my Affairs, my own clear Intentions, and the Rocks I wish you to eschew. In all which you may perceive the Desire I have to give you Content, as you shall find also by those Ministers I have, or shall have about me, for the effecting of these my good Intentions; which I doubt not will bring Peace and Happiness to my Subjects, and Contentment to you All. Concerning the Conference you shall have a direct Answer, which shall give you Satisfaction.

This Speech if it had been deliver'd in the preceding Parliament, had hardly failed of the Blessings of Unity and Peace: For the Concessions of it were indeed sufficient to have reconciled all things. But the prospect of the Scotch Army in the North, and the influence of the Scotch Commissioners in Town, made the leading Members too proud of their Advantage over the King's Necessities: So that instead of Thanks for this Speech, and Consideration of it, a Remonstrance of the two Houses was delivered to his Majesty Jan. 29. against the Impunity of Papists and the Pardon of Goodman, humbly desiring, "That a speedy course may be taken for the due execution of the Laws against the Priests and Jesuits:
 To which his Majesty answered the two Houses in a gracious Speech Feb. 3. That he took in good part their care of the true Religion established in this Kingdom, from which he would never depart; That it was against his Mind that Popery or Superstition should any way increase; and he would restrain the same, by causing the Laws to be put in execution; for which he would speedily publish a Proclamation. And that the Reason why he Repriev'd Goodman the Priest, was, that neither Queen Elizabeth, nor his Father, did ever avow, that any Priest in their times was Executed merely for Religion: However, he would remit the Cause to the two Houses, and desire them to consider the Inconveniencies that might fall on his Subjects and other Protestants Abroad by so great Severity.

But neither could this yielding to the Stream put any stop to it: The leading Majority depended on the Scots; and for a tacit condition of Help encouraged all their insolent Demands, and expelled a worthy Member from their House, Mr. Jarvis Hollis, because he spoke thus; Our younger Brother

1640. of Scotland, like Jacob, seemeth to supplant us, and take away our Birthright. No Man had a more charitable construction of Intentions than I had, while they made their Addresses in humble distance as befitting Subjects to their Sovereign; — but now, Sir, when I see them swell in their Demands, beyond all proportion; when I hear them enlarge upon their first Propositions, and require things unfit for a King to grant, and dishonourable for this Nation to suffer, I cannot but fix a mark of danger upon them; I fear we have nourished in our Bosom those that will sting us to Death: And then proceeded to this Resolution, “ This House doth conceive the Sum of three hundred thousand Pounds a fit proportion for the friendly Assistance and Relief, thought fit to be made towards the Losses and Necessities of our Brethren of Scotland; and in fine, accepted the Thanks of the Scots Commissioners, for the said Assistance and for the Style of Brethren given them in the Vote of the House. And indeed this dear Correspondence between the Scots in Arms, and the Commons of England in Parliament, was the Combination that destroy'd the King. The Commons look'd upon the Scots as their Protectors, and the Scots look'd back upon the Commons as their Pay-Masters, and would no longer value the King's calling them Rebels when the Parliament called them Friends and Brethren.

Feb. 17. An Act for Relief of his Majesty's Army and the Northern Parts, being a Grant of four Subsidies; and the Act for Triennial Parliaments were passed by the King with this following Speech.

My Lords, and you the Knights, Citizens and Burgessees of the House of Commons,

“ YOU may remember when both Houses were with me at the Banqueting-House at Whitehall, I did declare unto you two Rocks I with'd you to eschew; this is one of them, and of that consequence that I think never Bill passed here in this House of more favour to the Subjects than this is. And if the other Rock be as happily passed over as this shall be at this time, I do not know what you can ask, for ought I can see at this time, that I can make any question to yield unto. Therefore I mention this to shew unto you the Sense that I have of this Bill, and the Obligation, as I may say, that you have to me for it: For hitherto, to speak freely, I have had no great Encouragement to do it. If I should look to the outward Face of your Actions or Proceedings, and not look to the inward Intentions of your Hearts, I might make question of doing it.

“ Hitherto you have gone on in that which concerns your selves to amend, and not in those things that nearly concern the Strength of this Kingdom, neither for the State nor for my own Particular.

“ This I mention not to Reproach you, but to shew you the State of things as they are. You have taken the Government all in pieces, and I may say it is almost off the Hinges. A skilful Watch-maker to make clean his Watch will take it asunder, and when it is put together it will go the better, so that he leave not out one Pin of it. Now, as I have done all this on my part, you know what to do on yours; and I hope you shall see clearly, that I have performed really what I expressed to you at the beginning of this Parliament, of the great Trust I have in your Affections to me: For this is the greatest Expression of Trust, that before you do any thing for me, I do put such a Confidence in you.

Satisfaction of both Houses. There was a great Joy and Satisfaction in the two Houses at the passing of these Bills. They agreed to wait on the King and return their Thanks by the Mouth of the Lord-Keeper, for having now sufficiently provided for the security of the Commonwealth; and that there remained nothing to be done but such a Return of Duty and Gratitude to his Majesty, as might testify their Devotions to him, and that their only End was to make him a glorious King. 1640. 16 Car. I.

Had his Majesty now dissolved the Parliament when he had took off the Fears of long Intermission, and applied the Money to the Uses of the Bill for settling the North, and conferred the great Offices upon the leading Men design'd for them; as the Treasury on the Earl of Bedford, the Chancellorship of the Exchequer on Mr. Pym, the Mastership of the Wards on the Lord Say, a Secretary's place on Denzil Hollis, &c. the King in one or two Years might have prepared a way for an amicable meeting. But as the hasty dissolution of the last Parliament was one great Error, so the longer continuance of this does seem a greater.

For the next Day after their Address of Thanks, the Commons received the Bundles of Petitions that had been industriously prepared against Innovations in the Church, and against Episcopacy it self; and Feb. 17. they fell to adjusting their Method of Proceedings in the Impeachment of the Earl of Strafford; and had soon after the Articles read and carried up to the Lords against the Archbishop of Canterbury, and had the Pacification with the Scots renewed from time to time, without concluding upon the Articles of Peace; whereby, in effect, they retain'd them in Pay against the King.

The Affairs of the Church, as distinct from those of the State, begin with the Convocation opened April 14. with a Sermon preach't by Dr. Thomas Tunner, Residentiary of St. Pauls, on Matt. 10. 16. after which Dr. Richard Steward Dean of Chichester, was chosen Prolocutor, who being presented to the Abp. by Dr. Gilbert Sheldon at the next Session April 17. his Grace in a Latin Speech most affectionately bemoan'd the Dangers threaten'd to the Church, owing to the decay of Discipline and the growth of Errors; and then commended the special Favour of his Majesty in granting them a Commission (which he produced and order'd to be read) authorizing them to propose, confer, treat, debate, consider, consult and agree upon the Exposition or Alteration of any Canon or Canons now in force, and of and upon any such other new Canons, Orders, Ordinances and Constitutions, as they the said Lord Archbishop, President of the said Convocation, and the rest of the said Bishops, and other the Clergy of the same Province, or the greater number of them (whereof the said Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, President of the said Convocation to be one) shall think necessary, fit and convenient, for the Honour and Service of Almighty God, the Good and Quiet of the Church, and the better Government thereof.

In the third Session, April 22. his Grace sending for the Prolocutor and Lower House, informed them of the extraordinary Expences which lay upon his Majesty, and the imminent Dangers which at this time threaten'd the whole Kingdom: for which reason he and his Brethren had treated and agreed upon six Subsidies (or more, if it appear'd upon the Registers that More had been ever at once granted by the Prelates and Clergy of this Province) at the rate of four Shillings in the Pound; desiring them that, for a Testimony of their singular Obedience and Duty to the King, they would give their Assent, debating it among themselves, and then giving in their Answer. After which the Prolocutor and Clergy returned to their House, and after a little time came back, and the Prolocutor reported to his Grace, that they had unanimously agreed to the said Grant. Then the Archbishop had some Discourse with them concerning the making of Canons, and said, that he and his Brethren had already agreed upon two several Constitutions for suppressing of Popery.

April 25. a Form of Prayer, compos'd by the Archbishop's Chaplains, for God's Blessing upon the Parliament then assembled, was presented by the Prolocutor to his Grace and the Bishops, who approv'd it with the addition of one Word; and order'd it to be read daily in Convocation, immediately presume to copy out, or talk abroad of any Canon,

 King. The Archbishop by Schedule, as usually, prorogued to Wednesday April 29. On which day the

 "mov'd his Majesty for a Writ: His Majesty gave "me an unlook'd-for Reply; namely, that he was "willing to have the Subsidies which we had gran"ted him, and that we should go on with the fi"nishing of those Canons which he had given us
 "power, under the Broad Seal of England, to make "And when I replied, it would be excepted against "in all likelihood by divers, and desired his Maje"sty to advise well about it; the King answered me
 "presently, That he had spoken with the Lord Keeper,
 "the Lord Finch, about it, and that he assur'd him
 "it was legal. I confess I was a little troubled both "at the Difficulties of the Time, and at the An"swer it self; that after so many Years faithful "Service, in a business concerning the Church so "nearly, his Majesty would speak with the Lord "Keeper, both without me, and before he would "move it to me: and somewhat I said thereupon "which pleas'd not, but the Particulars I do not "well remember. Upon this I was commanded to "sit and go on with the Convocation.

Under these Reasons best delivered in the Archbishop's own Words: while the Lower House were on the said 6th of April expecting a Writ of Dissolution, Dr. Heylin, then a Member, tells us, that there came an Order from the Archbishop to the Pro-locutor to adjourn till Saturday, which was the next Synodical Meeting of the Upper House. So that indeed there was no room for those intermediate Sessions of the Lower House which have been lately urged from mistaken Minutes.

Saturday May 9th. Nothing done in the Upper House; the Archbishop not appearing, but by Commission prorogued to Wednesday May 12. In the Lower House, the Archbishop observes, that at first some little Exception was taken there by two or three Members, whether we might sit or no. Dr. Fuller takes the liberty to say, that Dr. Browning, Dr. Hacket, Dr. Holdsworth, &c. to the number of thirty six, earnestly protested against the Continuance of the Convocation. But Dr. Heylyn, an equal Witness, assures us, there was no oral Protestation heard, and none reduced into Writing. However, there was some Demur and Dissatisfaction in it, as there might well be among those who had not heard the Opinion in Law upon which the King proceeded: And therefore to take away all scruple, before the next Session, the Archbishop says, He acquainted his Majesty with this Doubt, and humbly besought him, that his learned Council, and other Persons of Honour, well acquainted with the Laws of the Realm, might deliver their Judgment upon it.

Accordingly Wednesday May 12. the Archbishop communicated to both Houses this solemn Opinion thus subscribed.

THE Convocation being called by the King's Writ, 1640. under the Great Seal, doth continue until it be dis- 16 Car. I. solv'd by Writ or Commission under the Great Seal, notwithstanding the Parliament be dissolved.

Opinion
of the Judges.

"The Judgment of these great Lawyers (says
 "the Archbishop) settled both Houses of Convo"cation. So we proceeded according to the Power
 "given us under the Broad Seal, as is required by "the Statute 25 Hen. VIII. cap. 19. For, because the first Commission determined with the Parliament, a new Commission, dated May 12. was pro-duc'd by his Grace this day, not differing from the former of April 15. saving in a Clause repealing the old Commission, and in altering the Force and Continuance of this new one: for whereas the Licence and Power were before to treat and conclude from time to time during the present Parliament, it was now alter'd into during our Will and Pleasure.

A new Commission.

In the next Session, May 15. Sir Henry Vane, one of the principal Secretaries of State, was sent from his Majesty with a Message, "That his Majesty "had granted a Commission to this Synod for the "making of Canons and Constitutions Ecclesiasti"cal; and that the Lords of the Council had una"nimously agreed, that this Synod ought to pro"ceed in the same, as being highly necessary; and "that therefore he was sent in his Majesty's Name
 "to exhort them with all expedition to make such "Canons as the present state and exigency of Affairs
 "required: and that it was his Majesty's farther "Pleasure, that none of the said Prelates or Cler"gy should withdraw themselves from the said Sy"nod or Convocation, till the Affairs they had in "Command from the King were perfected and fi"nished.

tion.

May 16. the Form of a Grant of free Benevolence, or Contribution of four Shillings in the Pound for six Years following, according to the Valuation of the First-fruits, was unanimously agreed to in the Lower House, with the Provisions for raising of it, under the Penalty of Ecclesiastical Censures. But because the Grants of the Clergy in Convocation had been usually confirm'd by an Act of Parliament, the Benevolence thus granted without the Civil Legislature gave great Offence: And yet by original Constitution the Clergy had certainly the power of giving away their own Money independently on the Lay Lords and Commons; and even since the Reformation there had been a Precedent of it. The Archbishop therefore is right in representing the Fact and the Law in this manner. "We made up our "Act perfect for the Gift of six Subsidies, accord"ing to ancient Form in that behalf, and deliver"ed it under Seal to his Majesty. This pass'd re- mine refragante, as may appear apud Acta. And "we followed a Precedent in my Lord Archbishop "Whitgift's time, Ann. 1586. who was known to be "a pious and a prudent Prelate, and a Man not gi"ven to do boisterous things against the Laws of "the Realm, or the Prerogative of the Crown; but "one that went just and fair ways to both. Nor did "this Grant lie dead and useless; for divers Pro"cesses are yet to be seen, for the fetching in of "that which was so granted to the Queen's use, in "case any Man refused Payment.

 made for suppressing the Growth of Popery by private Conferences, by publick Censures of the Church, by certifying to the Judges in their Circuit the Names of all Recufants, by taking care for the Education of Recufants Children, and by the Bishops returning every Year into the Court of Chancery a Significavit of all Recufants who have stood excommunicate beyond the time limited by Law. And then the Oath enjoin'd for preventing Innovations, was in this Form.

Oath enjoin'd by Convocat:

“ A. B. do swear, that I do approve the Doctrine “ and Discipline or Government established in “ the Church of England, as containing all things “ necessary to Salvation. And that I will not en“ deavour, by my self or any other, directly or in“ directly, to bring in any Popish Doctrine, con“ trary to that which is so established: Nor will I “ ever give my Consent to alter the Government of “ this Church by Archbishops, Bishops, Deans, and “ Archdeacons, &c. as it stands now established, “ and as by right it ought to stand; nor yet ever “ to subject it to the Usurpations and Superstitions “ of the See of Rome. And all these things I do “ plainly and sincerely acknowledge and swear, ac“ cording to the plain and common Sense and Un“ derstanding of the same Words, without any E“ quivocation, or mental Evasion, or secret Reser“ vation whatsoever. And this I do heartily, wil“ lingly, and truly, upon the Faith of a Christian.
 “ So help me God in Jesus Christ.

The several Constitutions and Canons bear this Title. 1. Concerning the Regal Power. 2. For the better keeping of the Day of his Majesty's most happy Inauguration. 3. For the suppressing of the Growth of Po- pery. 4. Against Socinianism. 5. Against Sectaries.
 6. An Oath enjoin'd for the preventing of all Innovati- ons in Doctrine and Government. 7. A Declaration

The manner of passing these Canons, and Subscription to them, is thus deliver'd by the Archbp.
 “ In the Debates concerning these Canons, I dare “ be bold to say, Never any Synod sat in Christen- “ dom, that allow'd more freedom either of Speech “ or Vote. The Canons which we made, were in “ number seventeen; and at the time of the Sub“ scription, no Man refused, or so much as checked “ at any one Canon, or any one Branch in any one “ of them; saving a Canonist or two, who excep“ ted against two or three Clauses in some of the “ last of the Canons, which concerned their Profit, “ and their Carriage towards the Clergy, in which “ they were publickly, and by joint Consent, o“ verruled in the House; and excepting Godfrey “ Goodman Lord Bishop of Gloucester, who was star“ tled at the first Canon about the Proceedings a“ gainst the Papists — Yet he at last subscribed “ in open Convocation.

Heylin's Animad.
on Fuller's Ch. Hist.
 p. 240.

Before these Canons were subscribed, they were imparted to the King by the Archbishop, and by the King laid before the Lords of his Privy Council, who calling to them the Assistance of the Judges, and some of the King's Counsel, learned in the Laws of this Realm, did cause the said Canons to be read and considered of in presence of the King:
 By all which, upon due and mature Deliberation the Canons were approv'd; and being so approv'd, were sent back to the Clergy in Convocation, and by them subscribed. And that Work ended, the Convocation was dissolv'd by the Archbishop in pursuance of his Majesty's Writ for that purpose, on Friday May the 29th. 1640. 16 Car. I.

These Canons were immediately Printed, and at their first Publication (says the Archbishop) “ they “ were generally approved in all parts of the King“ dom; and I had Letters from the remotest parts “ of it, full of Approbation: Infomuch, that not “ my self only, but my Brethren which lived near “ these Parts, and which were not yet gone down, “ were very much joyed at it. But about a Month “ after their Printing, there began some Whisper“ ings against them by some Ministers in London, “ and their Exceptions were spread in Writing a“ gainst them: And this set others on work, &c.
 “ Nay, Dr Heylyn farther tells us, “ That these Ca“ nons found great Approbation from the Mouths “ of some, from whom it had been least expected; “ particularly from Justice Crook, — of whom I “ have been told, by a Person of great Worth and “ Credit, that having read over the Book of Ca“ nons when it first came out, he lifted up his “ hands, and gave hearty Thanks to Almighty “ God, that he had lived to see such good Effects “ of a Convocation. Animad.
on Fuller,
 P. 234.

It was however the Interest of the Covenanting Scots, and all their Well-wishers in England, to raise Objections and Clamours against these new Canons.
 And for this purpose the disaffected London Ministers had many secret Meetings, and particularly at the House of Dr. Downham of St. Bartholomew Ex- change, where they drew up Reasons, and obtain'd Hands to a Petition against the Oath. And their Example soon infected the Country: For on Tuesday
Aug. 25. there was an Assembly of Ministers at Kete- ring in Northamptonshire, where they concluded against the Oath, and agreed not to take it. And from Botby-Paynel in Lincolnshire, Dr. Sanderson, by Letter to the Archbishop Septemb. 13. inform'd him, “ That he found, to his great grief (as well by the “ Speeches of some in those parts as by Letters “ from others farther off) that great Distaste was “ generally taken in the Kingdom at the Oath en“ join'd by the late Canons. And that he had exa-“ min'd the Exceptions, and could find no just Scru-“ ple; and should endeavour to remove the Scru“ ples of others. But that divers Papers passed se“ cretly from hand to hand, containing large Col“ lections of sundry Reasons against the taking the “ said Oath. For preventing the encrease of Dis“ affection, and the encouragement to the Scottish “ Rebels, and other Inconveniences, he suggests, “ That “ his Majesty should give special Direction to for“ bear pressing the Oath for a time; or that some “ short Explanation of such Passages in the said “ Oath, as by reason of their Ambiguity are most “ subject to Cavil and Misconstruction, should “ be sent to all the several Persons that shall have “ power to administer the same, to be publickly “ read before the Tendency of the said Oath. The “ Advice of this judicious Man was taken by Arch“ bishop Laud: He employ'd the Bishop of Exeter to “ draw up a Paper, entitled, A clear Explanation of “ the Clauses which are stuck at in the Oath appointed by “ the late Synod, according to the true sense of the Canon.
 “ And he himself seems to have advis'd the King to “ send his Commands for suspending the Oath till the “ next Convocation; as was done by this Letter from “ Mr. Secretary Vane.

May it please your Grace,

“ I Am, by his Majesty's Command, to let you “ I know, that upon several Petitions, presented “ by divers Church-men as well in the Diocese of “ Canterbury as York, to which many Hands are “ subscribed, as the mode of Petitions now are, “ against the Oath and Canons made in the last Sy“ nod, his Majesty's Pleasure is, that as he took “ Order before his coming into these parts, that the “ Exe-“ King's “ Letter to “ suspend “ the Oath.

Abp.'s Or- In obedience to these Instructions, his Grace sent ders to out his circular Letters dated Octob. 6. to the Suffraforbear gans of his Province, totally to forbear the Oath the Oath. both at Ordinations and Institutions as well as otherwise, till the next ensuing Convocation. But all this Caution and Temper, however they justified the Wisdom and Integrity of the King and Archbishop, yet, like all other occasions, they made the factious Spirits but the bolder to extort more and more from the Crown and the Church.

Next Par- When the Parliament began Nov. 3. it was made liament a popular Topick among the Commons to declaim declaims against the Benevolence, Canons, and Oath. The against Lord Digby, in his Speech Nov. 9. said, " The granthe Con- ting of Subsidies under so preposterous a Name as vocation. " of a Benevolence, was a Malevolence indeed. A " Malevolence in those that granted it against Parlia-Lord " Malevolence in those that refused it Digby. " against those that granted it: to see wrested from " them what they were not willing to part with " under no less a Penalty than the loss both of Hea" ven and Earth; of Heaven by Excommunication,
" and of the Earth by Deprivation, and this with" out Redemption by Appeal. And that no good " Christian could think with Patience of the ensna" ring Oath by the new Canons enjoined; where,
" besides the swearing such Impertinence, as that " things necessary to Salvation are contained in " Discipline; besides the swearing those to be of " Divine Right, which amongst the Learned never " pretended to it, as the Arch things in our Hie" rarchy; besides the swearing not to consent to " the Change of that, which the State may upon " great reason think fit to alter; besides the bot" tomless Perjury of an, &c Men must swear " that they swear freely and voluntary what they " are compelled unto; and lastly, that they swear " that Oath in the literal Sense, whereof no two of " the Makers themselves could ever agree in the " understanding. On the same day Sir John Culpeper argued these Canons to be a Grievance; 1. " In " respect of the Matter, besides the &c. Oath. 2. In " respect of the Makers, chosen to serve in a Con" vocation, that falling with the Parliament, the " Scene was alter'd; the same Men, without any " new Election shuffled into a sacred Synod. 3. In " respect of the Consequence, which in this Age, " when the second ill President becomes a Law, is " full of Danger. The Clergy, without Confirmation " of a Parliament, have assumed unto them" selves Power to make Laws, to grant Relief by " the Name of Benevolence, and to intermeddle " with our Freehold by Suspensions and Depriva" tions. This (says he) is a Grievance of a high " nature. And then Mr. Harbottle Grimston spoke
" thus to the same Point. " Mr. Speaker, There hath " been since the last Parliament a Synod, and in " that Synod a new Oath hath been made and fram" ed, and enjoined to be taken. They might as " well have made a new Law, and enjoined the Exe" cution of that, as enjoined and urged the taking " of the other, not being established by Act of Par" liament. — Exception is to be taken to the Mat" ter of the Oath; They would have us at the ve" ry first dash swear in a damnable Heresie, that " Matters necessary to Salvation are contained in

Sir John the Discipline of our Church; whereas it hath Culpeper. ever been the Tenet of our Church, that all things " necessary to Salvation are comprehended in the " Doctrine of our Church only. And for Preven" tion in case the Wisdom of the State in this great " Council should at any time think fit to alter any " thing in the Government of our Church, they " would anticipate and forestall our Judgments by " making us swear before-hand, that we would ne" ver give our Consent to any Alteration. Nay,
" Mr. Speaker, they go a little farther, for they " would have us swear, that the Government of " the Church by Archbishops, Bishops, Deans, Arch" deacons, &c. is Jure divino; their Words are, As
" of Right it ought to stand; whereas we meet not " with the Name of an Archbishop, or a Dean, or " an Archdeacon, in all the New Testament: And " whatsoever may be said of the Function of Bishops
" it is one thing; but for their Jurisdiction, it is " meerly humana institutione, and they must thank " the King for it. As for their gross, absurd, &c.
" wherein they would have them swear they know " neither what, nor how many Fathom deep, there " is neither Divinity nor Charity in it; and yet " they would put that upon us. — They have " likewise in this Synod granted a Benevolence;
" but the Nature of the thing agrees not with the " Name; for in plain English it is six Subsidies to " be paid by the Clergy in six Years: and the Pe" nalty they have imposed upon the Refusers for " Non-payment, is, to be deprived of their Functi" ons, to be stripped of their Freehold, and to be " Excommunicated: And this Act of their Synod is " not published amongst their Canons, for which " they might have some colourable seeming Autho" rity; but it comes out in a Book alone by itself
" in the Latin Tongue, supposing, as I conceive, " that Lay-men are as ignorant as they would have " them.

These Debates about the Book of Canons ended in an Order for Mr. Selden, Sir Tho. Widdrington, and Mr. Whistles to get the Warrants by which the Convocation was held after the Parliament, and the Letters Patents of the Benevolence. And when this Subject came to be afterwards reassum'd in the House, there were many other severe speeches, by Mr. Bagshaw, Mr. Nath. Fiennes, Sir Edward Dering, and others, that seem to have no new Matter, but what is before recited. Only that Mr. Bagshaw laboured to prove it Law, that the Bishops and Clergy who held the late Synod were in a Præmunire for holding of it, and were subject to the Pains and Penalties of a Præmunire. But the Zeal of the House could be carried no farther than these two Votes and Resolutions, Decemb. 16.
Resolved, " That these Canons and Constitutions
" Ecclesiastical treated upon by the Archbishops of " Canterbury and York, and the rest of the Bishops " and Clergy of those Provinces, and agreed upon " with the King's Majesty's Licence in their several " Synods begun at London and York 1640. do con" tain in them many matters contrary to the King's " Prerogative, to the fundamental Laws and Sta" tutes of this Realm, to the Rights of Parliament,
" to the Property and Liberty of the Subject, and " matters tending to Sedition, and of dangerous " consequence.
Resolved, " That the several Grants of the Bene" volence or Contribution granted to his most ex" cellent Majesty by the Clergy of the Provinces of " Canterbury and York, in the several Convocations " or Synods holden at London and York 1640. are " contrary to the Laws, and ought not to bind the " Clergy.

The farther Sense of the House upon this matter, was put into the fifth Article of Impeachment carried up against Archbishop Laud; running thus.
" He hath traiterously caused a Book of Canons
" to be composed and published, and those Canons
" to be put in execution without any lawful War" rant

 " trary to the King's Prerogative, to the fundamen" tal Laws and Statutes of this Realm, to the Right " of Parliament, to the Property and Liberty of the " Subjects, and Matters tending to Sedition, and of " dangerous Consequence; and to the establishment " of a vast unlawful and presumptuous Power in " himself and his Successors. Many of the which " Canons, by the Practice of the said Archbishop,
 " were surreptitiously passed in the last Convoca" tion, without due Consideration and Debate: O" thers by Fear and Compulsion were subscrib'd to
 " by the Prelates and Clerks there assembled, which " had never been voted and passed in the Convoca" tion as they ought to have been. And the said
 " Archbishop hath contriv'd and endeavour'd to " assure and confirm the unlawful and exorbitant " Power which he hath usurped and exercised over " his Majesty's Subjects by a wicked and ungodly " Oath, in one of the said pretended Canons, en" joined to be taken by all the Clergy, and many " of the Laity of this Kingdom.

Abp's Anfwer.

To which Charge the Archbishop plainly answer'd,
 " I compos'd no Book of Canons; the whole Con" vocation did it with unanimous Consent: so ei" ther I must be free, or that whole Body must be " guilty of High-Treason; for in that Crime all are " Principals that are Guilty, Accessory there is " none.

" Neither did I Publish or put in Execution those " Canons, or any of them, but by lawful Authority.
 " And, I do humbly conceive, and verily be" lieve, there is nothing in those Canons contrary " either to the King's Prerogative, the fundamental " Laws of the Realm, the Rights of Parliament, the " Propriety and Liberty of the Subjects, or any mat" ter tending to Sedition, or of dangerous Conse" quence, or to the Establishment of any vast or un" lawful Power in my self and my Successors; nei" ther was there any Canon in that Convocation sur" reptitiously passed by any Practice of mine, or " without due Consideration and Debate; neither was " there any thing in that Convocation but what " was Voted first, and Subscribed after, without " Fear or Compulsion in any kind. And I am veri" ly perswaded, there never sat any Synod in Chri" stendom wherein the Votes pass'd with more free" dom or less justice than they did in this. And " for the Oath injoin'd in the sixth Canon, as it was " never made to confirm any unlawful or exorbitant
 " Power over his Majesty's Subjects, so I do " humbly conceive that it is no wicked or ungodly " Oath in any Respect. And I hope I am able to " make it good in any learned Assembly in Chri" stendom, that this Oath and all those Canons (then " made and here before recited) and every Branch
 " in them, are Just, and Orthodox, and Moderate, " and most Necessary for the present Condition of " the Church of England, how unwelcome soever to " the present Dissemper.

Priority in the 1640.

And yet these publick Censures of the Canons,
 " however grounded on Prejudice and Faction, have " made them ever since reputed null and void, tho'
 " it is hard to find any defect of Legality in the ma" king of them, or any just Authority that did after" ward repeal them. It is true the Act 13 Car. II. Cap.
 " 12. would not confirm them, but so neither did it " repeal them; they are left with the same force they " had from the Beginning. There was indeed a Reso" lution made in the House of Commons December 15.
 " 1640. That the Clergy of England, convened in any " Convocation or Synod, or otherwise, have no Power to " make any Constitutions, Canons or Acts whatsoever, in " Matter of Doctrine, Discipline, or otherwise to bind the " Clergy or the Laity of the Land without common consent " of Parliament. But as this was a warm Vote, contra" ry to the Stream of Custom and Statutes: so the " House it self seem'd to recede from it by forming
 " their Resolutions the next Day to a different Sense.

1640. 16 Car. I. And indeed if the King's Licence and Confirmation
 " does not make the Canons regularly pass'd in Con" vocation to be binding without Parliament, we have " had no proper Canons since the Reformation: Those " of 1603. are as invalid as these of 1640. Some Wri" ters have suggest'd that their Invalidity arise from " their passing in a Convocation sitting after the Par" liament: But this cannot be a Reason in the true
 " Constitution of Parliaments and Synods, which may " certainly act independently on one another. But " whatever Reasons of State have combin'd to let these " Canons sink into a dead letter; yet it must be con" fessed, that in very much of Doctrine and Discipline
 " they would be a good Example to any future Con" vocation: and we can hardly hope for Unity and " any tolerable Regularity, without some Constitu" tions of the like Nature, if possible to be had with-" less Offence.

There was another Convocation this Year that " met with the second Parliament, and open'd in the " Church of St. Paul's Novemb. 4. The Sermon was " preach'd by Dr. Isaac Baygrave Dean of Canterbury, " and Dr. Stewart Dean of Chichester, was again chosen
 " Prolocutor. At their next Meeting in Henry VII's " Chapel, the Archbishop in an eloquent but sad Oration, " bemoan'd the Infelicities which he saw hanging over the " Church, advising every one there present to perform their " Duties, and not to be wanting to themselves, or the cause " of Religion, as for forth as they were concerned in their " several Places. There was no Commission granted, " and therefore no Business propos'd: But some of the " Lower-House began to be afraid of the Popular Of" fence taken against their Proceedings in the last Con" vocation; and therefore Mr. Thomas Warmist're one " of the Clerks for the Diocese of Worcester, made a " Motion to this effect, " That they should endea-
 " your, according to the Levitical Law, To cover
 " the Pit which they had opened; and to prevent their " Adversaries Intention by condemning such offen" sive Canons as were made in the last Convocati" on. But the House were of no such Opinion as " to think the Canons obnoxious to just Censure; nor " had they that meanness of Spirit as to condemn " themselves before they were accused. So that Mr.
 " Warmist're, in a very irregular manner, seem'd to ap" peal from his Brethren to the People, by printing a " long Speech as deliver'd on this Occasion, Bitter e" nough against some Canons and Proceedings in the for" mer Session, but such as could not save him from a Se" questration, when the rest of the Clergy were brought un" der the same Condition. The House of Commons
 " were dispos'd to shew them no Favour; and there" fore when Dr. Layfield Archdeacon of Essex, was " complain'd of for innovations in his Church of All-
 " ballows Ferking, he insist'd upon his Privilege declar" ed by Statute 8. Hen. VI. Cap. 1. The Committee " for Religion were of Opinion, that Though he were a " Member of the Convocation House, yet he should be sent " for as a Delinquent. And it was accordingly order'd
 " by the House Novemb. 25. " That Dr. Layfield Vi" car of St. Allballows Ferking, be forthwith sent for
 " as a Delinquent, by the Serjeant at Arms atten" ding on this House, notwithstanding he is a Mem" ber of the Convocation House. All that related
 " more to the Convocation was an Order on Friday
 " March 19, " That Mr. Treasurer and Mr. Comp" troller move his Majesty to grant a Commission " to the Convocation, to treat about the granting " of Subsidies to the Clergy.

But this came to no effect, for by the Archbi" shop's imprisonment the regular Sessions broke off,
 " the Bps discontinued their meeting, and the Lower-" House by degrees dwindled away. And indeed
 " there was by this time no occasion for Synodical " Meetings: for there was not only one very busie
 " Committee for Religion in the House of Commons,
 " but on Monday Mar. 15. there was another settled in " the House of Lords, to consist of ten Earls, ten Ba" rons, and ten Bishops, on which the Archbishop " made this Reflection. This Committee (wherein the 1640. Lay Fotes will be double to the Clergy) will meddle with 16 Car. I. Doctrine as well as Ceremonies, and will call some Di-vines to them to consider of the Business; as appears by a Letter hereto annexed, sent by the Lord Bishop of Lincoln to some Divines to attend this Service. Upon the Diary of whole matter, I believe this Committee will prove the Abp. Land National Synod of England, to the great Dishonour of this Church. And what else may follow upon it, God knoweth. The Divines called to be Assistants, were Dr. Brownrig, Dr. Featley, Dr. Hacket, Dr. Westfield, Dr. Burges, Mr. Shute, Mr. Calamy, Mr. White, Mr.
 " Lay

Marshal. This was laying a Foundation for an Assembly of Divines.

The prevailing Party in the House of Commons betray'd a great Disaffection to the Rites and Ceremonies of the Church, by holding their solemn Fast on Tuesdays; by ordering the Communion-Table to be remov'd from the Chancel to the middle of the Church at the time of their Receiving the Sacrament, as a House; by troubling and punishing those Divines who had been most zealous for Conformity, as Dr. Cofins, Dr. Pocklington, Dr. Belcanquail, Dr.
Layfield, Dr. Brag, Dr. Chyffin, &c. by chusing out the most disaffected Ministers to Preach before them, as Mr. Marshal, Mr. Calamy, &c. by countenancing and restoring those Ministers who had suffer'd any Ecclesiastical Censures, as Mr. Burton, Mr. Smart, Mr. Wilson, &c. by receiving and justifying a Petition of the Refuse of the People in and about London, on December 11. that the Government of Archbishops, Bishops, Deans, &c. with all its Dependencies, Roots and Branches, may be abolished, &c. by Ordering January 23. "That Commissions be sent into "all Counties, for the defacing and demolishing,
"and quite taking away out of Churches and Cha"pels, all Images, Altars, or Tables turned Altar-
"wise, Crucifixes, superstitious Pictures, Monu"ments, and Reliques of Idolatry. By ordering "Febr. 5. that the Lord Keeper be desired to leave "out the Clergy in England and Wales at the renew"ing of the Commission of the Peace. By resolving "upon the Question, That the Legislative and Ju"dicial Power of Bishops in the House of Peers in "Parliament, is a great Hindrance to the Dis"charge of their Spiritual Function, prejudicial
"to the Commonwealth, and fit to be taken away
"by Bill; and that a Bill be drawn to that pur"pose. And farther resolving, March the 11th,
"That for Bishops or any other Clergy-man what"soever to be in the Commission of the Peace, or "to have any judicial Power in the Star-Chamber,
"or in any Civil Court, is a great Hindrance to "the Discharge of their Spiritual Function, preju"dicial to the Commonwealth, and fit to be taken "away by Bill. And indeed the Disposition of the House did so much abet and encourage the Schismatical and Enthusiastick People, that they broke into the most insolent Rudeness; of which a Complaint and Proof being made in the House, they resolv'd that this Order following should be read publicly in all the Parish-Churches of London, Westminster, and the Borough of Southwark and the Liberties, "That the Divine Service be per"formed as it is appointed by the Acts of Parlia"ment of this Realm: And that all such as shall "disturb this wholesome Order, shall be severely "punished according to Law; and that the Par"sons, Vicars, and Curates, in the several Par"ishes, shall forbear to introduce any Rites or "Ceremonies that may give Offence, otherwise "than those which are established by the Laws of the Land.

The King was so well pleas'd, as to return the House Thanks for this Order; not so much considering that the Reading it in Churches should have been rather enjoyn'd by his own Prerogative, or the Jurisdiction of the Ordinary; nor believing that, soon after when the chief Offenders were brought to the House and convicted of denying the Act 35 Elizabeth to be a true Law because it was made by Bishops; of refusing to go to their Parish-Churches, because they were not true Churches; of saying, the King could not make a perfect Law, because he was not a perfect Man, &c. Yet the House definis'd them with a soft Admonition only; by which one might suspect, that they re-tain'd the Sectaries as they did the Scots, for some future Use and Service.

The Storm against the Church fell with great Violence on the Archbishop of Canterbury. May the 11th at Midnight, his Palace at Lambeth was beset with five hundred of the Rascally Mob, who for two hours were assaulting the Gates and Walls to enter; but were repulsed, and one of them hanged. And again October the 22d the High Commission sitting at St. Paul's as a Place of the greatest Safety, the Archbishop being supposed to be present, two thousand of the Sectaries made a Tumult at the End of the Court, tore down all the Benches in the Consistory, and cried out, They would have no Bishop, and no High Commission. But the Blows of the Parliament were heavier than those of the People. Upon Voting down the Canons and Benevolence December the 16th a Committee was appointed to consider in particular, How far the Archbishop of Canterbury had been an Actor in those Proceedings, and in the great Design of the Subversion of the Laws of the Realm and of Religion; and to draw up a Charge against him:
And even some Members stood up to have him accus'd of High Treason. The next Day the Earl of Bristol acquainted the House of Lords, that the Scotch Commissioners had presented some Papers concerning the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, which were read that Day at a Conference of the two Houses: And on December the 18th the Debate arising in the House of Commons, Mr. Grimston made an aggravating Speech, and concluded with a Motion, To strike while the Iron was hot, and to go up to the Lords in the Name of the Commons, and to accuse him of High Treason, and to desire their Lordships his Person may be sequestred; and that in convenient time they would bring up his Charge. And accordingly Mr. Denzil Hollis went up to the Lords and deliver'd the said Charge. Upon which the Archbishop was commanded to withdraw; but desiring first the liberty of Speaking, he spoke to this effect: "That he was heartily sorry for the "Offence taken against him; and that he was "most unhappy to have his Eyes open to see that "Day, and his Ears to hear such a Charge; but "humbly desired their Lordships to look upon "the whole course of his Life, which was such,
"as that he did verily persuade himself, not one "Man in the House of Commons did believe in "his Heart, that he was a Traitor. At which the Earl of Essex interrupted him, and said, That Speech of his was a Scandal put upon the whole House of Commons, that they should charge him with so high a Crime which themselves did not believe. "He then "humbly desired that he might be proceeded with "in the ancient Parliamentary way of England.
To this the Lord Say excepted, as if he would prescribe them how they should proceed. So he withdrew, and being called in again to the Bar, was delivered to the Usher of the Black Rod, to be kept in safe Custody, till the House of Commons should farther Impeach him. On December the 21st he was condemn'd, by an Order of the House of Lords, to pay Five hundred Pounds to Sir Robert Howard for false Imprisonment, by a Decree of the High Commission. After ten Weeks Restraint in the Usher's House, the Charge was brought up to the Lords by Sir Henry Vane junior, on February the 26th, consisting of Fourteen General Articles. Upon which he was brought to the House; and after the Articles were read, he spoke to this effect: "That "it was a great and heavy Charge; and he must

 " sion of his Religion; as if he should profess with " ingly. Then he besought their Lordships that he 100 confi-

his own Innocence

It appears plain, that though the Archbishop had some hopes to reconcile the more moderate Papists by a seeming Compliance in some innocent matters, yet he was in his Judgment and Resolutions most averse to Popery, and was indeed well known by that Faction to be their greatest Enemy. And therefore there was a Treason plotted by Signior Con and his Complices in England, wherein they resolv'd that the Life of the Archbishop must be first taken away, before they could hope to get their Will of the King. This Plot was discovered to Sir William Boswell his Majesty's Agent in Holland; and the Letters and Papers sent over, which are all now published, and are a Demonstration that the Papists, who knew their own Interest, did know that the Archbishop was the greatest Obstructor of it. " Now this (says he) is a hard Straight into " which I am cast: The Pope's Agent plots my " Death because I will not be wrought upon to " help bring in the Roman Superstition; and the " Parliament, on the other side, Articles to over" throw me, out of a Jealousie that I go about to " bring it in.

This Year 1641. must begin with the Fall of the greatest Statesman and Soldier of the Age, Thomas Earl of Strafford, who at the opening of the Parliament in November last was at the Head of the King's Army in the North, while the Scots were labouring to take him Prisoner at Westminster. For this Plot, many Irish People were encourag'd to prefer their Complaints to the House of Commons in England, and to sue for Relief from Oppression and Male-Government. This Practice, that was now laid for a Snare to this great Man, turn'd by Divine Justice into a Prejudice to the whole Kingdom of Ireland, by Appeals and Reviews, and including Powers that made their Courts and very Parliaments more depending. Upon this Complaint of the Subjects in Ireland, Nov. 6. a Grand Committee was appointed to consider of that Grievance. The Friends of the Lord Strafford knew the Meaning, and sent him notice of it, leaving to his own Prudence, whether he would stay at the Head of the Army, or come up to the House. Those about him dissuaded him from exposing himself to a confederate Malice, advis'd him to keep in his Post of Command in the English Army, or step over to his Army in Ireland, or retire into foreign Parts, till things were more calm and cool. But a sense of Honour and his own Innocence made him resolve to go directly to Parliament, and stand the Storm that was there rising against him. He took one Method of Defence that wanted nothing but Expedition; for he had got good Evidence in the North, that the Scots came in by Invitation and Confederacy between the Heads of the Covenanters and some of the English Members of both Houses: which Intelligence he had almost digested into the Form of an Impeachment, and Intended to present it to the House of Peers.

 But the leading Commons were too quick for him;
 for on November 11. Mr. Pym carried up an Impeachment of High Treason, and the Lords sequestred him from their House, and committed him to Custody.
 And then came the Scottish Commissioners with a most bitter and virulent Declaration against him, pressing vehemently the Trial of him, and intimating there could be no Treaty of Peace between the two Kingdoms, before exemplary Justice was done upon that Earl.

In this impetuous Haste, two exorbitant Steps were taken to expedite the Trial: the First, For a Committee to be settled of both Houses for the taking Preparatory Examinations; which was indeed an Inquisition contrary to the Practice of former times, and capable of extorting Evidence in any other crafty Prosecution of innocent Men: The Second was, For the examining upon Oath Privy Counsellors, upon such matters as had pass'd at the Council Table.
 This indeed could not have been without the Consent of the King and his Council: They, conscious of no ill Mysteries that would not bear the Light, did unhappily consent. " The Damage (says a " Statesman) was not to be express'd, and the Ru-
 " in that Act brought to the King was irreparable;
 " for besides that it serv'd their Turn to prove those " Words against the Earl which Sir Harry Vane so " punctually remembred; and besides that it was " matter of Horror to the Counsellors, to find that " they might be arraign'd for every rash Word they " had us'd there; it banish'd for ever all future
 " freedom from that Board, &c.

Clar. Hist. of Rebell.

On Monday March the 22d the Earl was brought to his Trial in Westminster-hall; and next Day Mr.
Pym began to open the Evidence with great Indignation. The Trial lasted eighteen Days; in all which time, " The Earl behaved himself with great " shew of Humility and Submission; and in truth
 " made his Defence with all imaginable Dexterity;
 " answering this Charge, and evading that, with " all possible Skill and Eloquence: And though he " knew not till he came to the Bar, upon what " parts of his Charge they would proceed against " him, or what Evidence they would produce, he " took very little time to recollect himself, and " left nothing unsaid that might make for his own " Justification.

Trial beto his gins.

The Earl makes a good Defence.

The most terrible (yet malicious and false) Allegation against him, was the Evidence given by Sir Harry Vane Secretary of State, " That upon Dissolution of the last Parliament the King advis'd " with his Cabinet Council what Course he should " now take, since he fail'd of the Assistance he expe" cted by Subsidies. The E. of Strafford answer'd, Sir
 " you have now done your Duty, and your Subjects
 " have fail'd in theirs; and therefore you are absol-
 " ved from the Rules of Government, and may sup" ply your self by extraordinary ways: You have an " Army in Ireland with which you may reduce this Kingdom. The Earl positively deny'd the Words; and the other Privy Counsellors examin'd to them did all upon Oath declare, that they did not hear those Words: Nay, and the Lord Digby in the House of Commons, a sufficient Adversary to the Earl, did afterward, in a pathetic Speech, observe, that those Words upon which the Impeachment was principally grounded, were so far from being prov'd by two Witnesses, that he could not acknowledge it to be by

Malicious Evidence.

1641. by one; since he could not admit Sir Hemy Vane to be a competent Witness, who being first examin'd, denied that the Earl spoke those Words; and at his second Examination remember'd some, and at his third the rest of 'em.

Impeachment chang'd into a Bill of Attainder. Nay, the prosecuting Party were so conscious of the Earl's Innocence, at least of their Defect of Evidence against him, that they were forced to change their Impeachment into a Bill of Attainder, which April 19. was pass'd in the House of Commons, No 59, Leas 204, and carried to the Lords, who agreed to hear the matter of Law pleaded by the Council of Commons, among whom Mr. Solicitor St. Johns offer'd two insufferable Arguments; 1. That tho' Testimony was not so clear, yet in this way of Bill, private Discretion to each Man's Conscience was sufficient, although no Evidence had been given in at all. 2. That the Earl had no Title to plead Law, because he had broke the Law. It's true (says he) we give Law to Hares and Deers, because they be Beasts of Chase; but it was never accounted either Cruelty or foul Play to knock Foxes and Wolves on the Head as they can be found, because these be Beasts of Prey.

King's Speech for the Earl. This Bill was depending and sticking in the House of Lords, when the King came, and tending for the Commons, told both Houses, "That he could not in Conscience condemn the Earl of High Treason; for he must tell them three great Truths, 1. That he never had any Intention of bringing over the Irish Army into England, nor ever was advis'd by any body so to do. 2. That there never was any Debate before him, neither in publick Council, nor at private Committee, of the Disloyalty and Disaffection of his English Subjects, nor had he ever any suspicion of them. 3. That he was never counsell'd by any to alter the least of any of the Laws of England, much less to alter all the Laws. Yet he should be content to have the Earl condemn'd for Misdemeanour, and made incapable to serve in any Place of Trust."

Inflames his Enemies. This Speech did but more inflame the sworn Enemies of the Earl, who pretended to discover Plots for his Escape, and enter into a Protestation taken by the Speaker and most of the Members; and encourag'd Petitions and Clamours for Justice; and a Black List of the Straffordians to be posted up, and cry'd about the Streets; till many of the Lords, for fear of Violence, absented from their own Houses; and the Bishops declined Voting in the Act, as well as Appearing in the Trial: tho' it was not believ'd (says the Historian) now the formal Trial and way of Judicature was wav'd, the Bishops would so stupidly (to say no worse) exclude themselves from Voting in a Law which was to be an Act of Parliament. So that in an Afternoon, when of the Fourscore who had been present at the Trial, there were only Six and forty Lords in the House, (the People crying at the doors for Justice) the Bill pass'd, with the Dissent only of eleven Peers.

R. seems resolv'd to reject it. The King was firmly resolv'd not to give his Consent: but to give all possible Satisfaction in it, he advis'd first with his Privy Council, who most of them press'd him to pass the Bill upon this Argument, That he ought to be more tender of the Safety of the Kingdom, than of any one Person how innocent soever. His Majesty then advis'd with the Bishops, who in general resolv'd him, that he ought not to go against his own Conscience for any Consideration whatsoever. But (says the same Historian) the Archbishop of York told him, that there was a private and a publick Conscience; that his publick Conscience as a King might not only dispense with, but oblige him to do that which was against his private Conscience as a Man. — And by such Imprelatical ignominious Arguments, in plain Terms advis'd him, even for Conscience sake, to pass that Act.

E. desires the R. to pass the Bill. While the King was under infinite Perplexities in his own Mind, and under the most imminent Dangers of Assaults of the Rabble in his own Palace, who were taught the Word Justice, Injustice; 1641. the Earl wrote a Letter May 4. from the Tower to 17 Car. I. his Majesty, to offer up his Life for a Sacrifice to the Publick, — "With much sadness I am come

In an admirable Letter. "to a Resolution of that which I take to be best becoming me, and to look upon it as that which is most principal in it self, which doubtless is the Prosperity of your sacred Person and the Commonwealth, things infinitely before any private Man's Interest. And therefore in few Words, as I put my self wholly upon the Honour and Justice of my Peers, so clearly as to wish your Majesty might please to have spared that Declaration of yours on Saturday last, and entirely to have left me to their Lordships; so now, to set your Majesty's Conscience at liberty, I do most humbly beseech your Majesty, for Prevention of Evils which may happen by your Refusal, to pass this Bill; and by this means to remove (prais'd be God) I cannot say this accursed, but (I confess) this unfortunate thing forth of the way towards that blessed Agreement which God (I trust) shall ever establish between you and your Subjects. Sir, My Consent shall more acquit you herem to God, than all the World can do besides: To a willing Man there is no Injury done: and as by God's Grace I forgive all the World with a Calmness and Meekness of infinite Contentment to my dislodging Soul; so, Sir, to you I can give the Life of this World with all the cheerfulness imaginable in the just Acknowledgment of your exceeding Favours, and only beg that in your Goodness you would vouchsafe to cast your gracious Regard upon my poor Son and his three Sisters, less or more, and no otherwise than as their (in present) unfortunate Father may hereafter appear more or less guilty of this Death. God long preserve your Majesty."

King pass'd the Bill by Commission. On Friday May 7. the Lords pass'd the Bill of Attainder, with the like unreasonable and more fatal Bill for Continuance of the present Parliament. Next day the Commons desired the Lords to join with them to move his Majesty for his Consent. And the day following, being Sunday May 9. the King consulted with his Privy Council, and Judges, and Bishops; and in fine, with the utmost Reluctancy, the King commission'd the Earl of Arundel, the Lord Privy Seal, and two other Peers, to pass the two Bills; which was accordingly done May 10. The King next day betrayed the Affliction of his Conscience by writing a Letter to the Lords, and sending it by the Prince.

My Lords, "I Did yesterday satisfy the Justice of this Kingdom by passing the Bill of Attainder against the Earl of Strafford: but Mercy being as inherent and inseparable to a King as Justice, I desire at this time in some measure to shew That likewise, by suffering that unfortunate Man to fulfill the natural course of his Life in a close Imprisonment: yet so, if ever he make the least Offer to escape, or offer directly or indirectly to meddle in any sort of publick Business, especially with Me either by Message or Letter, it shall cost him his Life without farther Process. This, if it may be done without the Discontentment of my People, will be an unspeakable Contentment to me. To which end, as in the first place, I by this Letter do earnestly desire your Approbation, and to endear it more, have chosen him to carry it that of all your House is most dear to me; so I desire, that by a Conference you will endeavour to give the House of Commons Contentment, assuring you that the exercise of Mercy is no more pleasing to me, than to see both Houses of Parliament consent for my sake, that I should moderate the severity of the Law in so important a Case."

1641. " I will not say that your complying with me in 14 Car. I. " this my intended Mercy, shall make me more wil" ling; but certainly 'twill make me more cheartful
" in granting your just Grievances: But if no less " than his Life can satisfie my People, I must say,
" Fiat Justitia. Thus again recommending the con" sideration of my Intention to you, I rest

Your Unalterable and Affectionate Friend

Charles R.

Brought to the scaffold.

On Wednesday May 12. the Earl was brought to the Scaffold upon Tower-Hill; as he pass'd near the Lodgings of the Archbishop of Canterbury (whom he had desired by a Message to be at the Window and to Bless him as he went to Execution) he look'd up, and bowing said, My Lord, your Prayers and your Blessing. The Archbishop lift up his Hands for the sign of bestowing both, but was so overcome with Grief that he fell back in a swoond; the Earl bowed again, and said, Flourish, my Lord, God protect your Innocency. Many of the Spectators observed, that he walked more like a General, at the Head of an Army, than like a condemn'd Man. The Lieutenant desir'd him to take Coach, for fear the People should rush in upon him and tear him in Pieces: No, (said he) Master Lieutenant, I dare look Death in the Face, and I hope the People too. Have you a care that I do not escape, and I care not how I die, whether by the Hand of the Executioner, or the Madness and Fury of the People, if that may give them better Content; it is all one to me.
Upon the Scaffold attended by the Archbishop of Armagh, the Earl of Cleveland, his Brother Sir George Wentworth, and his own Chaplain, he delivered his Speech with a very compos'd and courageous Air; the chief Parts were as follow.

His dying
Speech.

—— " I speak in the presence of Almighty
" God, before whom I stand, that there is not a dis" pleasing Thought that ariseth in me against any

After this Speech he pray'd out of the Common Prayer Book, laid by his Chaplain before him; and then used some private Devotions, concluding with the Lord s-Prayer; then taking leave of his Brother, he said, Brother, we must part; Remember me to my Sister and to my Wife; and carry my Blessing to my eldest Son, and charge him from me that he fear God, and continue an obedient Son of the Church of England, and that he approve himself a faithful Subject of the King; and tell him, that he should not have any private Grudge or Revenge towards any concerning me; and bid him beware to meddle not with Church-Livings, for that will prove a Moth and Canker to him in his Estate; and wish him to content himself to be a Servant to his Country, as a Justice of Peace in his County, not aiming at higher Preferments, &c.

17 Car. I.

The Executioner struck off his Head at one blow: and so fell this noble Earl, who if his Master could have saved him, might have been able to save his Master: This was indeed the blow that by degrees reach'd up to the King's own Head. Take his Character thus given by the Lord Clarendon. Thus fell the greatest Subject in Power, and little inferiour to any in Fortune, that was at that time in any of the three Kingdoms; who could well remember the time when he led those People who then pursued him to his Grave. He was a Man of great Parts, and extraordinary Endowments of Nature, not unadorn'd with some addition of Art and Learning: But to return to the course of other Affairs. While the two Houses were enter'd upon measures so apparently against the Inclination and the Interest of the King, they had reason to fear, that he might trust to his Armies rather than to his Parliament. Two Armies he yet had, one in Ireland and the other in the North against the Scots. And therefore the Care of the leading Members was to deprive the King of any such last Resort. Hence April 6. the Commons resolv'd, " That during the " Session of this Parliament, neither the King's Ar" my nor any of the Train'd-Bands of Yorkshire, " should march or advance without special Order of " his Majesty, with the Advice and Consent of both " Houses of Parliament, except in case the Scottish Ar" my should pass the Limits appointed by the Treaty.
And for the Irish Army, of which they were more afraid, because the Officers were less at their Devotion; they importun'd the King for a speedy disbanding of it, and prevailed with him so to disable himself, after he had thus spoke to the two Houses on Wednesday Apr. 28.

" FOR the Irish Army, you must understand, I King's " am already upon consultation how to disband Speech.
" it, but I find many Difficulties in it. Therefore " I hold it not only fit to wish it, but to shew the " way how it may be conveniently done. This is " not all I desire; but since you have mentioned the " disbanding of Armies, it is my Duty to my Coun" try to wish for disbanding of all Armies, and to " restore the same Peace to all my three Kingdoms
" that the King, my Father, did leave them in:
" And I conjure you, as you will answer the same
" to God and to the Country, to join with me hear" tily and speedily, for the disbanding of the two " Armies in England; to which end there are two " things requisite, Money and the Conclusion of " the Scotts Treaty. ---

But indeed the Managers in the Parliament inten- For keepded to keep the Scotts Army as in their own Pay and ing up the Service; and therefore from time to time renewed Scotts Ar-the Pacification without concluding the Treaty. And my.
they so applied themselves to the English Army, as if it must now enter into the new Service of the two Houses. For a formal Letter was drawn up by a Committee, and sent by Mr. Rushworth to the Army, with promise of Provision and all suitable Supplies. And to make the Combination perfect, there was a solemn Form of Protestation drawn up, for promising, vowing and protesting to maintain and defend, with Life, Power and Estate, the true Refor-

1641. Reformed Protestant Religion, expressed in the Do-17 *Car. I.*ctrine of the Church of England, against all Popery and Popish Innovation, &c. taken by the House of Commons May 3. and carried up next Day to the Lords with a desire of their Concurrence, who generally took it, and set a President for the Solemn League and Covenant that came soon after.

They had little now to fear, but that the King would exert his Prerogative in proroguing or dissolving the Parliament; they had gained the Point for frequent Sessions, but it would be now better to make this one Session perpetual; and therefore May 7. the Commons sent up to the Lords a Continuance-Bill, or An Act to prevent Inconveniences that may happen by the untimely Adjourning, Proroguing and Dissolving this present Parliament, which was agreed to, and pass'd by Commission the Royal Assent May 10. on which Day Mr. Treasurer brought a kind Message to the Commons and said, By this you may see how ready his Majesty is to satisfy all our just Requests, and is resolv'd to repose himself upon the Affections of his People.

On May 13. the King in Person gave his consent to three other Bills. 1. For the Abbreviation of Mi- chaelmas Term. 2. For the Pressing Mariners for the King's Ships. 3. For the Remainder of the six entire Subsidies.

May 17. Resolved by the Commons, "That this House doth approve of the Affection of their Brethren of Scotland, in their desire of a Conformity in Church-Government between the two Nations, and doth give them Thanks for the same. So as the Conspiracy of the Malecontents in both Kingdoms began now to discover it self against Episcopacy and Monarchy. Hence a Paper, called the Scots Belief, was referred to the Committee for Printing May 18. and next Day the Bill was read to take away the Bishops Votes in Parliament. And upon this prospect of Confusion, Dr. Juxon Bishop of London, resigned his Treasurer's Staff, and that Office was put into Commission.

May 21. Upon a Message from the Lords for disbanding the Armies, Mr. Treasurer reported, that there was in Arrear due to the Scots 120000 l. besides the 300000 l. and it was voted by both Houses, that the two Armies should be disbanded and satisfied next Month. In the Debate upon raising Money for this purpose June 2. it was found that no less than eight hundred thousand Pounds would suffice. And because the King was preparing for another Progress into Scotland, for fear he should in his Passage thither influence the Armies that lay upon his Road, it was resolved June 16. "That both Houses be humble Suitors to his Majesty, that the Armies may be disbanded before the King's going into the North, and all parts of the Kingdom put into a posture of Defence. Upon which the Earl of Hol- land General, was sent down to disband the English Army. And on June 19. it was concluded that the Scots should have three hundred thousand Pounds paid for a condition of their distanding.

June 21. Sir Edward Dering a leading Member, did in a Speech acknowledge, that the King had yet denied them nothing; says he, We are all bound unto the Goodness of his sacred Majesty (God preserve him and his for it) none of all our Bills, none of our Petitions this Parliament, have miscarried in his Royal Hand, but have been all compleated with the Royal Assent. And indeed the Compliance of the King to all the Resolutions of his Parliament did abundantly demonstrate, that he yet thought of no future War with them. If he had meant Fighting, or could have foreseen it, he would never have so disarm'd himself and disabled his Friends.

June 22. the Commons having condemn'd the taking of the old customary Tonnage and Poundage without consent of Parliament, drew up a Bill to settle it as a Gift of the two Houses to the King, who at the passing of it made this Speech.

 " beginning of your dutiful Affections to me: and " I no way doubt but that you will perform that " which you have intimated unto me, and that in " due time you will perform the rest when you have " leisure.

" I doubt not likewise, but that in passing this " Bill, you will see a Testimony of the trust and " confidence I have in your Affections; as also that " I omit no occasion whereby I may shew that Af" fection to my People that I desire my People " would shew to me; as in this Parliament hither" to no Body can say, but that I have sought occa" sions, both to shew my Affections unto them and " to remove Disputes.

" And therefore in this particular Bill I hope you " will know, that I do freely and frankly give over " the Right which my Predecessors have ever chal" lenged unto them (though I confess disputed, but " yet they did never yield it in their Times) there" fore you will understand this but as a mark of my " confidence, to put my self wholly upon the Love
 " and Affection of my People for my Subsistence;
 " and therefore I hope that in prosecution of this you " will go on as you have said. And tho' you have " rumours of Jealousies, and Suspicions by flying " and idle Discourses that have come to my Ears, con" cerning the Extraordinary Way, I confess I never " understood it otherwise than as having relation " to the Scottish Army, and preventing Insurrection,
 " which vanished as soon as they were born.

" And therefore now you see my Clearness, I " will leave that to you, and will not meddle with " it one way or other; for I never had other De" sign, but to win the Affections of my People by " my Justice in my Government.

The two Houses were still afraid of the King's intended Journey to Sotland, and therefore made several Propositions to retard it; which was likely to have created some difference between the English and Scotch Brethren. For June 26. the Scots Commissioners acquaint the Commons, that they having heard as if the Parliament would endeavour to dissuade his Majesty from his Royal Intentions of going into Scotland, they found themselves obliged to say, that the same would be a great Prejudice to them. However on this same Day the Commons thought fit to move the Lords, to join in Petitioning his Majesty, that he would be pleased not to begin his Journey into Scotland till the 12th of August.

But he was not to go in Peace without passing the two Bills prepared for taking away the High-Commis- sion Court and the Star-Chamber, which were ancient Courts that had indeed of late exceeded their original Jurisdiction, and might want to be reformed;
 but nothing would satisfy without abolishing of them.
 And therefore on July 5. the King assented with this Speech.

" I Am come to do the Office which I did defer
 " on Saturday last, to give determination to these " two Bills; but before I do it I must tell you, that " I cannot but be very sensible of those Reports of " Discontent that I hear some have taken, for my " not giving my consent on Saturday. Methinks it " seems strange that any one should think I could " pass two Bills of that importance as these were,
 " without taking some fit time to consider of them:
 " For it is no less than to alter in a great measure

 " vil, which many of my Predecessors have esta-

 But indeed the Condescensions of the King did but elevate the Faction, who thought every Royal Concession to be an Argument of their own Power, rather than of the King's Justice or Mercy. And therefore tho' his Majesty favour'd the two Houses by a Manifesto approv'd by them in the Cause of the Palatinate; yet on July 6. the Commons proceeded in their Charge against the Judges, and carried up Articles of Impeachment against Sir Robert Berkley one of the Justices of the King's-Bench, and against Sir Francis Crawley one of the Justices of the Common-Pleas, and against the Lord Chief Baron Davenport, Baron Weston, and Baron Trevor: and appointed a Committee to receive Complaints against any other Minister of Justice, by which they gain'd this Advantage at least, to keep many of the King's Friends under Dread and Silence.

July 28. the King sent another Message of his intended Journey toward Scotland Aug. 10. which the Commons labour'd to retard, by desiring at a Conference with the Lords, that his Majesty might be requested to appoint a Custos Regni during his Absence, and Commission him to give the Royal Assent to Bills in Parliament. A Proposal extravagant and illegal.

On Aug. 7. at another Conference with the Lords, Mr. Hollis offer'd Reasons to move the King to stay his Journey: which brought the King the same day to the House of Lords; where, in a short Speech, he urg'd the Necessity of his speedy Going. This rais'd greater Heats and Passions, and the Commons resolv'd (and prevail'd with the Lords to do the like) to sit next day, being Sunday, thinking fit to excuse it by a short Declaration, that it should not be drawn into Precedent.

On Monday Aug. 9. the King again told the House of Peers, That his Faith was engaged to be in his Kingdom of Scotland, that he could not but go, that the condition of Affairs in that Kingdom required his Presence, &c. So that on Tuesday Morning the King came again to the House, and gave his Assent to an Act for the Treaty between the two Kingdoms; to a Bill for the prevention of vexatious Proceedings touching the Order of Knighthood; and to a Bill for regulating the Clerks of the Market: and sign'd a limited Commission to some Lords for passing Bills in his Absence: 1641. and so took Leave of the two Houses in a short Speech, and began his Journey about Two that Afternoon.

The leading Members were still afraid to trust the King out of their own Sight; and therefore or-der'd, that a Committee of Lords and Commons should be sent to the Parliament in Scotland, to remain there, and maintain a Correspondence between the two Nations. Accordingly the Lord Howard, Mr. Hampden, and Sir Philip Stapleton, were sent to be as it were Ambassadors from the Parliament, and Spies upon the King.

When his Majesty came to York, he found no part of either Army disbanded, because the Money was not yet return'd. While his Majesty staid at York, the E. of Holland, Lord General, made a Suit to the King for the Favour of making a Baron; which being denied by the King, the Earl turn'd a Malecontent; and as soon as ever the King was gone, he enter'd into a Correspondence with the opposite Party, betray'd the King's Secrets, and became his most ungrateful and unfaithful Adversary.

His Majesty came safe to Edinburgh, and on Auggust 19. made this Speech to the Parliament of Scotland.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

Here hath been nothing so displeasing to me, as those unlucky Differences which have happen'd between Me and my People; and nothing that I have more desired, than to see this Day, wherein I hope not only to settle these unhappy Mistakings, but rightly to know and to be known to my Native Country.

I need not tell you (for I think it is well known to most) what Difficulties I have pass'd through and overcome, to be here at this present.
 Yet this I will say, If Love to my Native Country had not been a chief Motive to this Journey, other Respects might easily have found a shift to do that by a Commission, which I am come to perform my self.

And this considered, I cannot doubt of such real Testimonies of your Affections for the Maintenance of that Royal Power which I enjoy after an hundred and eight Descents, and which you have profess'd to obtain; and to which your own National Oath doth oblige you; that I shall not think any Pains ill bestow'd.

Now the End of my Coming is shortly this;
 To perfect whatsoever I have promised, and with-all to quiet the Distractions which have and may fall out amongst you: And this I mind not superficially but fully and chearfully to perform. For I assure you, that I can do nothing with more Chearfulness, than to give my People a general Satisfaction. Wherefore not offering to endear my self unto you in Words (which indeed is not my Way) I desire in the first place to settle that which concerns the Religion and just Liberties of this my Native Country, before I proceed to any other Act.

These are the most material things done in the Scots Parliament. August 26. Act anent the Ratifications of the Articles of Treaty, &c. Sept. 2. Act anent in-covenanting Patrons. Nov. 6. Act in favour of Prince Elestor Palatine, for ten thousand Foot to be sent into Germany. Novemb. 17. Act appointing the next Parliament to convene the first Tuesday of June 1644.

The English Parliament sitting without their King, were much more uneasie. Aug. 16. the Lords receiving a perfidious Letter from the Earl of Holland Lord General, with obscure Intimation as if there were new Practices and Designs against the Parliament, held a Conference with the Commons upon this Subject-matter: and the Commons to improve 1641. prove the Fears and Jealousies, appointed a Committee to consider of putting the Kingdom into a posture of Defence. And to prepare a way for investing the two Houses with the Legislature, on August 27. they made what they call'd an Ordinance of Parliament for a Day of Publick Thanksgiving, for the Peace between England and Scotland on Tuesday Sept. 7. (And within twenty Days after the King's remove, the House of Peers being reduc'd to not above twenty Lords, and the House of Commons to little more than a hundred Members, and those all Zealots for the new Cause; they made many exorbitant Votes and Declarations, till being weary and almost atham'd, on Sept. 9. the two Houses Adjourn'd to Octob. 20. but not without irregularly (for the like had never been before practis'd) making a Committee of each House to meet twice a Week, and oftner if they saw cause, during the Recess, and to transact such Business as they were authoriz'd to do by their Instructions.

Recess of the two Houses.

Lord Clarendon. Hist. of Rebel. B. iv. p. 233.

Meet again with Guards.

When the two Houses after their Recess met again, they got the Train'd-Bands of Westminster to attend with their Arms in the Palace-yard; and proceeded in Speeches and Votes and Bills against the Bishops, against Ceremonies, against the Liturgy, and to draw up a Remonstrance of the State of the Kingdom.

While in Scotland the King had reason to be weary of the Place, for he found all things propos'd to him as to a vanquish'd Person, without consideration of his Honour or his Interest; having not one Counsellor about him but the Duke of Lenox, and very few Followers who had either Affection to his Person or Respect of his Honour. But whatever Acts they were pleas'd to present to him concerning Church or State, the King confirm'd, and then gratified the Promoters of them. He made the Lord London who had been the principal Manager of the Rebellion, an Earl, and Chancellour of Scotland; he created the Earl of Argyle a Marquis; their General Lesly Earl of Leven, and their Lieutenant-General Earl of Calender; and conferred other Honours and Offices upon his greatest Enemies, in hopes to reconcile and retain them. So that he seem'd to have made that Progress into Scotland, only that he might make a perfect Deed of Gift of that Kingdom, which he could never have done so absolutely without going thither. And so having nothing more to do there, he began his Journey towards England about the middle of November.

King weary of Scotland.

Where in effect he gave away the Kingdom.

Irish Rebellion.

But to compleat the King's Misfortunes, and give him particular Plagues in every one of his three Kingdoms; about the middle of October came the News of the Irish Rebellion: For the Papists and old Natives taking advantage of the King's Necessities, and of the Army disbanding, and of the Earl of Leicester Lord Lieutenant's absence in England, conspired to destroy the English Protestants, and to secure the Kingdom in their own Hands. Their Design upon Dublin was miraculously discovered the Night before it was to be executed, and so the surprisal of that Castle prevented, and the principal Conspirators apprehended. But in other parts they observ'd the Time appointed, and made their Insurrection in such an inhumane and barbarous manner, that there were forty or fifty thousand English Protestants murder'd before they suspected themselves to be in Danger, or could provide for their Defence.

King desires to suppress it.

The King wrote from Scotland to the two Houses, that he was satisfis'd this was no rash Insurrection, but a formed Rebellion, which must be suppress'd by a declared War, the Management of which he would leave to their Care and Wisdom. This occasioned a Committee of both Houses to consider of the Affairs of Ireland, and to provide for suppressing that Rebellion. And this Reference gave the Houses another considerable step to a separate Power; acting in this Matter without the King, and enforcing several Orders with as much effect as if they had been legal Statutes; beside the borrowing Monies and conferring Offices, and doing other Acts that gave them possession of a large Power and Dependence, the Mischiefs whereof, tho' in the beginning little taken notice of, was afterwards felt by the King very sensibly: Nay, and some of the artificial Managers took all occasions to insinuate, "That this Rebellion in Ireland was contrived and fomented by the King, or at least by the Queen, for the advancement of Popery; and that the Rebels publish'd and declar'd, that they had the King's Authority for all they did; which Calumny, though without the least shadow or colour of Truth, made great impression upon the Minds of sober and moderate Men. The Irish Rebels did indeed pretend a Commission under the Great-Seal, dated at Edinburgh Octob. 1. 1641. but the Impudence of this Calumny was protested against by the Lords Justices and Council in Ireland; and the whole Trick was afterward confest, how they forged the Commission, and affix'd a broad Seal to it which they had taken off from an old Patent.

1641. 17 Car. I. Lord Clarendon.

Pretended Commission.

But these and other vain Fears gave a better opportunity to a Committee in the House of Commons, to draw up a Remonstrance of the State of the Kingdom, and report it to the House, in order to prepare it for the King's reception, who was now returning home. "It contained a very bitter Representation of things, with all the sharp Reflections that could be made, and all unreasonable Jealousies, &c. In a Word, they left not any Error or Misfortune in Government, or any passionate exercise of Power unmentioned or unpress'd; with the sharpest and most patheticall Expressions to affect the People, that the general Observation of the Wisest, or the particular Animosity of the most Disobliged, or ill affected Persons could suggest to the disadvantage of the King, from the Death of his Father to the unhappy beginning of the present Parliament. The House seem'd generally to dislike it, and many argued that it was both Unnecessary and Unseasonable; Unnecessary, all those Grievances being already redress'd, and as good Security being given for the future as could possibly be done: And Unseasonable, after the King had gratified them in every thing they desired, and after so long absence in the settling the Disorders in another Kingdom, which he had happily compos'd, to be now well-com'd home with such a volume of Reproaches for what others had done amiss, and which he himself had reformed. Sir Edward Deering spoke bluntly against it, Mr. Palmer and others protested against it. But after all the Opposition, by sitting late and quarreling much, it was at last carried in the Affirmative by nine Voices, and ordered to be printed. 'Tis observable that the greatest stickler for it was Oliver Cromwell, a Member hitherto obscure, who sollicitated the Cause with vehement Applications, and after the passing, told the Lord Falkland with some Asseveration, that If the Remonstrance had been rejected, he would have sold all he had the next Morning, and never have seen England more; and he knew there were many other honest Men of the same Resolution. So near was the poor Kingdom at that time to its Deliverance or to its Destruction.

Erroneous Representation.

Oppos'd in vain.

On Thursday November 25. the King pass'd thro' London, in his Return from Scotland, and was received and entertained by the Lord-Mayor, Sheriffs and Aldermen, with such extraordinary Respect and Joy, that the King in answer to the Recorders Speech thank'd the good Citizens for their hearty Expressions of Love to him, and said, "He could not express the Contentment he received herein, because he now saw that all those Tumults and Disorders had only risen from the meaner sort of People, and that the Affections of the better and main part of the City had been ever Loyal and Affectionate to his Person and Government.

King pleas'd with the City.

The King commanded the Guards that had been attending on the two Houses to be dismissed: This displeas'd those Members who thought it a piece of State,

King dismiss'd the Guards of the two Houses.

1641. State, and pretended it to be a needful Security; 17-Car.I. So the King was petitioned to continue them; to which when the King answered Novemb. 27. that he would order some Train'd-Bands to wait for a few Days, tho' he knew no cause they had of Fears, and it was a great trouble to his Subjects to perform that Service, and gave strange Apprehensions and Jealousies to the People. They appointed a Committee to draw up Reasons for a Guard, and desired such Guard might be under the Command of the Earl of Effix, which indeed foreboded the raising of an Army, and the chusing of their own General.

Remonstrance delivered.

Decemb. 1. a committee of the House of Commons waited on the King at Hampton-Court, and delivered the Petition, and the large Remonstrance, read over to his Majesty by Sir Ralph Hopton, the King was much concerned at the Harshness of it, but promised an Answer, as soon as the weight of the Business would permit; and desired there should be no publishing that Declaration, till they had received his Answer to it. But they did publish it, and that by Order of the House; and the King in his Answer complained of his being sensible of that Disrespect; but however promised and assured them that he would do all that was possible for the Comfort and Happiness of his People.

King's Speech.

Decemb. 2. the King came to the House of Lords and passed the Bill for Tonnage and Poundage with this Speech.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

" I Think it fit after so long absence at this first occasion, to speak a few Words unto you, but no ways in Answer to Mr. Speaker's learned Speech. Albeit I have staid longer than I expected to have done when I went away, yet in this I have kept my Promise with you, that I have made all the haste back again that the settling my Scotch Affairs could any ways permit. In which I have had so good success, that I will confidently affirm to you, that I have left that Nation a most peaceable and contented People; so that although I have a little misreckon'd in Time, yet I was not deceived in my End.

" But if I have deceived your Expectations a little in the time of my Return, I am assured that my Expectation is as much and more deceived in the condition wherein I hoped to have found Business at my Return. For since that before my going, I settled the Liberties of my Subjects, and gave the Laws a free and orderly Course, I expected to have found my People reaping the Fruits of these Benefits by living in quietness and satisfaction of Mind; but instead of this, I find them disturb'd with Jealousies, Frights and Alarms of dangerous Designs and Plots; in consequence of which, Guards have been set to defend both Houses. I say not this as in doubt that my Subjects Affections are any way lessn'd to me in this time of my absence: For I cannot but remember to my great comfort the joyful Reception I had now at my entry into London; but rather, as I hope, that my Presence will easily disperse these Fears: For I being at perfect and true Affections to my People, as ever Prince did, or as good Subjects can possibly desire. And I am so far from Repenting me of any Act done in this Session for the good of my People, that I protest if it were to do again I would do it, and will yet grant what else can be justly desired for satisfaction in point of Liberties, or in maintenance of the true Religion that is here established.

" Now I have but one Particular to recommend unto you at this time; it is Ireland, for which tho' I doubt not your Care, yet methinks the Preparations for it go but slowly on. The occasion is the fitter for me now to mention, because of the arrival of two Lords from Scotland, who came instructed from my Council there (who now by Act of Parliament have full Power for that purpose) to answer that Demand which it pleased both " Houses to make me, by way of Petition, that met 1641. me at Berwick, and which the Duke of Richmond sent back by my Command to my Scotch Council. Therefore my Desire is, that both Houses would appoint a select Committee to end this Business with these Noblemen. I must conclude in telling you, that I seek my People's Happiness; for their flourishing is my greatest Glory, and their Affections my greatest Strength.

On Decemb. 14. the King made another Speech to both Houses, to recommend the dispatch of reducing the Irish Nation to their true and wanted Obedience, and to take notice of the Bill for pressing of Soldiers now depending among them, declaring He would pass it, if it did not infringe or diminish his Prerogative; and offering to avoid Debate, that the Bill might pass with a Salvo Jure both for King and People. But this gave another occasion of quarreling to them who lay catching at occasions: And so a Remonstrance under the name of a Petition of the Lords and Commons in Parliament, was presented to the King setting forth, " That it is their ancient and undoubted Right, that his Majesty ought not to take notice of any Matter in agitation and Debate in either House of Parliament, but by their Information and Agreement, and ought not to propound any Condition, Provision or Limitation to any Bill or Act in Debate or Preparation; and declaring that these their Privileges had been broken to their great Sorrow and Grievance by his Majesty's Speech on Tuesday last Decemb. 14. and finally desiring to know the Names of the Persons who had given that evil Council, that they might receive condign Punishment.

Another Speech

Another Remonstrance.

Decemb. 23. the King removed Sir William Balfore from the Lieutenancy of the Tower, and placed Colonel Lunsford in that important Trust. The Majority of the Commons were afraid of him, and drew up Reasons of his being unfit for that Place, and would recommend Sir John Comiers to it. The Lords refused to join in any such Address, because they conceived it an Intrenchment upon his Majesty's Prerogative. Upon which the Commons make a separate Declaration of Colonel Lunsford's being unfit to be Lieutenant of the Tower, as being a Person whom the Commons of England could not confide in; and enter'd a Protestation against the Lords refusal to join with them; and sent two of their own Members to the Earl of Newport Constable of the Tower, to desire him to reside there and take custody of it, and encouraged and read in their House a Petition of the Apprentices of London for the security of the Tower, and let the Lord Mayor acquaint the King, that the Apprentices would rise if Lunsford were not remov'd; so that the King was forc'd to displace him on Sunday Night Decemb. 26. The Day following came the Mob to Westminster, crying, No Bishops, no Bishops; and made so great a Tumult, that the Lords in a Conference with the Commons insisted upon the speedy suppressing of these tumultuous Assemblies, and required a Declaration to be published for that purpose. The Commons only answered, " That their House would agree to all good and lawful Ways and Means for preventing of Tumults and Routs, that shall be against the safety and privilege of Parliament; but for printing a particular Declaration the same was a matter that would require some time to be considered of. By which Answer they betray'd what was afterward sufficiently known, that the Apprentices and Mob were prepared and managed and invited by some leading Members. So as the King's Proclamation against Tumults, dated Decemb. 23. could have no effect but to increase them, because the King was against them. Nay, and the Commons made this Concourse and Mutinies (which they artfully fomented) to be a new argument of their own Fears; and on Decemb. 31. King's Declaration against them to no purpose.

King prefers Articles of Treason against 5 Members.

His Majesty now finding that there could be no understanding between him and his Parliament, without detecting and prosecuting those whom he thought the prime Leaders of the Faction. He order'd Sir Edward Herbert his Attorney General to prefer Articles, in the House of Lords, of High-Treason and other Misdemeanours against the Lord Kimbolton, Mr. Denzil Hollis, Sir Arthur Haslerig, Mr. John Pym, Mr. John Hampden and Mr. William Stroud. This was accordingly done Jan. 3. and after reading the Articles, the Attorney desired on his Majesty's behalf, that a select Committee, under a command of Secrecy, might be appointed to take the Examination of such Witnesses as the King should produce. Upon this News, the Commons resolv'd to stand by their Member, and order'd that if any Persons whatsoever should seal up their Trunks or Papers, or offer to seize upon their Persons, it should be lawful for such Members to stand upon his Defence and make Resistance. Soon after a Serjeant at Arms delivered this Message at the Bar of the Commons. I am commanded by the King's Majesty my Master, upon my Allegiance, that I should come and repair to the House of Commons, and require of Mr. Speaker five Gentlemen Members of the House of Commons, and those Gentlemen being deliver'd, I am commanded to arrest them in his Majesty's name of High-Treason. To which Demand the House sent Word to the King by some of their Members, that they would take the Matter into serious consideration, and then give an Answer. The next Day Jan. 5. after Noon, the King attended by his own Guard and some few Gentlemen, went to the House of Commons, and leaving his Attendants at the Door, went into the House and took the Speaker's Chair, and said thus.

King goes to the H. of Commons and demands the five Members.

Gentlemen,

I Am sorry for this occasion of coming unto you; yesterday I sent a Serjeant at Arms upon a very important occasion to apprehend some that by my Command were accused of High-Treason; whereunto I did expect Obedience and not a Message. And I must declare unto you here, that albeit no King that ever was in England shall be more careful of your Privileges, to maintain them to the uttermost of his Power than I shall be; yet you must know, that in cases of Treason no Person hath a Privilege: and therefore I am come to know if any of these Persons that were accused are here. For I must tell you, Gentlemen, that so long as these Persons that I have accused (for no slight Crime, but for Treason) are here, I cannot expect that this House will be in the right way that I do heartily wish it. Therefore I am come to tell you, that I must have them wherever I find them.

Well! since I see all the Birds are flown, I do expect from you that you shall send them unto me, as soon as they return hither. But I assure you, in the Word of a King, I never did intend any Force, but shall proceed against them in a legal and fair way, for I never meant any other.

And now since I see I cannot do what I came for, I think this no unfit occasion to repeat what I have said formerly, that whatsoever I have done in Favour and to the good of my Subjects, I do mean to maintain it.

I will trouble you no more, but tell you I do expect as soon as they come to the House, you will send them to me, otherwise I must take my own course to find them.

The five Members had withdrawn by Order of the House. The King, when he had done his Speech, ask'd the Speaker, Where these Persons were? The Speaker excus'd his making any Answer, and the King went out, several of the Members crying out, Privilege, Privilege: The King in this surprizing Visit was no doubt most wellcome to his greatest Enemies, because they knew their advantage in it. His Friends were amazed; and 'tis thought no one Person was apprised of it, but the Lord Digby who gave the Council, whose Integrity in this matter might be as well suspected as his Wisdom: For he let it be betray'd to the House of Commons, and dissembled his knowledge of it in the House of Lords; and under the fatal effects of it deserted the King and went over into Holland.

1641. 17 Car. I. Unhappy step.

Nothing could have been more prejudicial to the King's Interest and Honour than this one imprudent Action, which if it had succeeded would have serv'd no purpose but that of blackening the King for breaking the ordinary course of Law and Justice; and being disappointed was the more popular suggestion to Self-defence and open War. The Commons fell immediately upon remonstrating against this breach of Privilege; and to prevent such farther Assaults at Westminster, they sat in a Committee at Guild-Hall, and so work'd the City, and especially the Apprentices and Rabble, into Disorders and Tumults, that on Jan. 10. the King with his Royal Family were forc'd for their own safety to remove from White-Hall to Hampton-Court, thence to Windsor, and by degrees to York, coming no more to Westminster till he was ingloriously brought thither a Prisoner and as a Malefactor.

Commons make the advantage of it.

This one act of entering the House of Commons would never be forgiven, tho' the good King did all that was possible to atone for this Rashness. For on Jan. 12. his Majesty sent a gracious Message to the House, that He would waive his Proceedings against the five Members, and be as careful of their Privileges as of his own Life or Crown; and gave them fresh Assurances Jan. 14. and offer'd a general Pardon Feb. 2. yet nothing would do, they made a large Declaration against it; they encouraged Petitions out of the Country in abhorrence of it; they impeach'd the Attorney-General for preferring the Articles; and got a Sentence from the Lords to disable him from being Member, Assistant or Pleader in either House, and to commit him to Prison during the Houses pleasure.

King repents of it.

And now in the King's absence the majority of the two Houses thought themselves possess'd both of the Legislature and of the Executive Power. They order'd a Guard to be set about the Tower, and took the Lieutenantcy from Sir John Byron; drew in the Scotch Commissioners to offer a Mediation, or rather to offer their Service for the Parliament against the King; extorted the Militia out of the King's hands into their own; and sent out repeated Declarations that did sufficiently proclaim a War against him. While he acted with great Calmness and Moderation, sending Messages, Answers and Replies, drawn up with admirable Reason and Temper; and making Propositions for the remedy of all Evils on Jan. 20. wherein he concludes, "How ready he will be to exceed the greatest Examples of the most indulgent Princes in their Acts of Grace and Favour to their People. So that if all the present Distractions (which so apparently threaten the Ruin of this Kingdom) do not by the Blessing of Almighty God, end in a happy and blessed Accommodation, his Majesty will be ready to call Heaven and Earth, God and Man to witness, that it hath not failed on his part. And when on March 9. a Committee presented to him at New-Market a Declaration of both Houses, he made a most pathetic Speech to them, — What would you have? Have I violated your Laws? Have I denied to pass any Bill for the Ease and Security of my Subjects? I do not ask you what you have done for me. Have any of my People been transported with Fears and Apprehensions? I have offer'd us free and general a Pardon as your selves can devise. All this me and mine, as all my Thoughts and Intentions are upright for the maintenance of the true Protestant Profession, and for the observation and preservation of the Laws of this Land; and I hope God will bless and assist those Laws for my Preservation.

As to Ecclesiastical Matters in this Year, they ought to have been interwoven with the Civil: for the whole Business of Religion was got within the Parliament; nothing done by the Supremacy of the King, or by the ordinary Jurisdiction of the Bishops.
The House of Commons were the Church Representative, and were busy in destroying the Constitution of it.

March 30. a Bill for the more free Passage of the Gospel, and a Bill to restrain Bishops and others in Holy Orders from intermeddling with Secular Affairs. Soon after, a Bill for repeal of a Statute 1 Eliz. concerning Commissions for Causes Ecclesiastical. And to terrifie the Convocation from daring to assert their Right, they order'd a Bill to be brought in for punishing and fining of the Members of the late Convocation of the Province of Canterbury; putting into the Bill the express Fines set upon each Member, the Archbishop of Canterbury twenty thousand Pounds, the Dean of Canterbury 1000 l. Proctor 1000 l. and so for every Diocese upon each Member of it, at such a very exorbitant rate that the Penalty should have been ten times greater than what the Clergy suffer'd for their Premature under Hen. VIII.

And to take away the Revenues.

When they proceeded to rob the Church as well as the Clergy; they prepared a Bill to take away the Deans and Chapters Lands; and tho' for a shew of Justice they admitted Dr. Hacket to plead against the Bill May 12 and received Petitions of the two Universities against it, yet they would never drop or dismisse it, but kept it in reserve for a Power to enforce it. They declared for Presbytery by Resolving May 17. that this House doth approve of the Affection of their Brethren of Scotland, in their desire of a Conformity in Church Government between the two Nations. So that May 19. they read the Bill to take away the Bishop's Votes in Parliament; and the next Day or-der'd, that no Minister be forc'd hereafter to take any Oath at his Induction but such as shall be warranted by Scripture. And because the Lords after Conference and Debates had resolv'd, that The Bishops ought to retain their Votes in Parliament, therefore they brought in another Bill to abolish Episcopacy, "As a great impediment to the perfect Reformation and growth of Religion, and very prejudicial to the State and Government of this Kingdom.
And that the Bishops persons might make their Order criminal, they carried up Articles of Impeachment July 20. against Bishop Wren of Ely, with a very aggravating Speech deliver'd by Sir Thomas Widdrington.

And to abolish Episcopacy.

But to make a shorter Work, they sent up Ser-jeant Wild to impeach thirteen Bishops at once of Crimes and Misdemeanors for contriving, making and promulging several Constitutions and Canons Ecclesiastical, contrary to the King's Prerogative, to the fundamental Laws and Statutes of the Realm, to the Rights of Parliament, to the Propriety and Liberty of the Subjects, and Matters tending to Sedition, and of dangerous Consequence; and by granting a Benevolence contrary to Law.

And to take away the Liturgy.

On Sept. 1. they had such warm Debates against the Common-Prayer, that the Lords found it necessary to declare, that The Book of Common-Prayer should be observed in all Churches, without any Omission or Alteration; and that none should offer any Contempt at the use of it. But in a return of Zeal the Commons made a Declaration September 9. for suppressing Innovations, by removing the Communion Table from the East end, taking away the Rails, levelling the Chancels, forbidding to bow at the Name of Jes- us, &c. Octob. 23. Sir Edward Deering observ'd in a Speech, that there had long been in some hand within that House, a Bill for a National Synod ready drawn, which he desired might be now read, as the only Remedy for the sad Miseries of our distracted Church. The same Person, in another Speech against the Remonstrance Novemb. 22. excepted with a passionate Repentment against the Passage of Ido- latry introduc'd by command of the Bishops, told them, "They could not prove that any one of all the Bishops had issued forth any one Command for I- dolatry; that the Learned, Pious and Painful Bishop of Durham, had fought in Front against Roman Superstition and Idolatry; that the Bishop of Lincoln was the first of note who gave check to our Papal Misleaders and Altarian Innovators; that the Bishop of Exeter had ever the repute of a good Man and a good Bishop; and that there could be no Superstition proved upon the several Bishops of London, Winchester, Chester, Carlisle and Chichester. But the Commons went on, and their Proceedings gave so much countenance to Separation and Confusion, that the King thought himself obliged to publish his Proclamation Decemb. 10. to require Obedience to the Laws and Statutes ordain'd for establishing the true Religion in this Kingdom; and that Divine Service should be regularly perform'd, &c. but to little purpose, when his Majesty was already depriv'd of his Legal Power to execute any Laws.

The King for Conformity in vain.

The Bishops who had been driven and kept from the House of Peers, by the awe of Impeachments and Popular Tumults, by the Advice of Dr. Williams Archbishop of York, made the following Protestation, delivered into the House of Lords Decemb. 30.

To the King's most excellent Majesty, and the Lords and Peers now assembled in Parliament.

Protestati-
on of the Bishops.

The Humble Petition and Protestation of all the Bishops and Prelates now called by his Majesty's Writs to attend the Parliament, and present about London and Westminster for that Service.

THAT whereas the Petitioners are called up by several and respective Writs, and under great Penalties to attend in Parliament, and have a clear and indubitable Right to Vote in Bills and other Matters whatsoever debateable in Parliament, by the ancient Customs, Laws and Statutes of this Realm, and ought to be protected by your Majesty quietly to attend and prosecute that great Service.

They humbly remonstrate and protest, before God, your Majesty, and the noble Lords and Peers now assembled in Parliament, that as they have an indubitable Right to Sit and Vote in the House of Lords, so are they (if they may be protected from Force and Violence) most ready and willing to perform their Duties accordingly; and that they do abominate all Actions or Opinions tending to Popery and the maintenance thereof; as also all Propension and Inclination to any malignant Party, or any other Side or Party whatsoever, to the which their own Reasons and Conscience shall not move them to adhere.

But whereas they have been at several times violently Menac'd, Affronted and Assaulted by multitudes of People, in their coming to perform their Services in that Honourable House, and lately chas'd away and put in danger of their Lives, and can find no Redress or Protection, upon sin-dry Complaints made to both Houses in these Particulars.

They likewise humbly protest before your Majesty and the noble House of Peers, that saving unto themselves all their Rights and Interests of sitting and voting in that House at other times, they dare not Sit and Vote in the House of Peers, until your Majesty shall farther secure them from all Affronts, Indignities and Dangers in the Pre-misses.

1641. 17 Car. I. " Lastly, whereas their Feats are not built upon Phantasies and Conceits, but upon such Grounds and Objects as may well terrifie Men of good Resolutions and much Constancy. They do in all Duty and Humility Protest, before your Majesty and the Peers of that most Honourable House of Parliament, against all Laws, Orders, Votes, Resolutions and Determinations, as in themselves null and of none effect, which in their Absence, since the 27th of this instant Month December, have already passed; as likewise against all such as shall hereafter pass in that most Honourable House during the time of this their forced and violent Absence from the said most Honourable House; nor denying, but if their absènting themselves were wilful and voluntary, that most Honourable House might proceed in all these Premises, their Absence or this their Protestation notwithstanding.

" And humbly beseeching your most excellent Majesty to command the Clerk of the House of Peers, to enter this their Petition and Protestation amongst his Records,

They will ever pray God to bless and preserve, &c.

Archbishop Williams who drew up the Form, carried it to the King, who delivered it to the Lord-Keeper, who read it in the House of Lords; and they at an immediate Conference did communicate it to the House of Commons, as a Matter concerning the whole Parliament, and intrenching upon the Fundamental Privileges and Being of Parliaments: The Commons were quick in their Resolution, to accuse these twelve Bishops of High-Treason, for endeavouring to subvert the fundamental Laws and Being of Parliaments; and sent Mr. Glyme to make the Charge at the Lord's Bar, and to desire that they might be forthwith sequester'd from Parliament and put into safe Custody. And accordingly the Bishops of Durham and Lichfield were committed to the Usher of the Black Rod, and the other Ten sent directly to the Tower.

On Jan. 15. they were all severally brought to the Lords Bar, and put in their respective Answers; and being remanded into Custody had no farther Trial, because the meaning of all was answer'd, when it was carried in the House of Lords Feb. 6. That the Bishops should have no Votes in Parliament. And this being thought a Satisfaction, the House of Lords released them upon Bail Feb. 16. but the House of Commons had them recommitted to the Tower, to be safe till the Bill of their Exclusion passed, than which nothing could be more severe and arbitrary.

Some hard Reflections are made upon this Act of the Bishops in vindication of their Parliamentary Rights, in the late History of the Rebellion. But whatever Passion there might be in Archbishop Williams the Penner of it, and however improper to purge themselves of Inclination to any malignant Party, and however indiscreet to make the King personally concern'd in the conveyance of it to the Lords, and however conscious they themselves might be, that at this Juncture of Violence it could have no good Effect; yet it was certainly their Duty in Honour and Conscience, to make some such publick Protestation of their lawful Rights; especially when their Lordships had already too much suffered in their Reputation by Silence and Absence, and a voluntary Recess from voting in the Lord Strafford's Bill.

Their Metropolitan, Archbishop Land, was before imprison'd in the Tower, and had no opportunity so much as to advise his Brethren. In tenderness to the University of Oxford (to which he had been an incomparable Benefactor) he resign'd his Office of Chancellor, and the Earl of Pembroke was chosen to succeed him July 1. For this great Prelate saw that the Storms against him were not likely to abate; for on June 2. Information being given to the House of Commons, that the Archbishop of Canterbury did use his Episcopal Power in Ordaining Ministers &c. within the Tower, it was mov'd that there might be an Order to restrain the same: But it was generally thought more fit for Prevention, to hasten the Proceedings for his Tryal. And the House of Lords made an Order Octob. 23. to sequester the Archbishop's Jurisdiction, and to put it into the hands of his interior Officers; and that he should bestow no Benefice without first acquainting the House and taking their Approbation.

The Lords and Commons sent a Petition to the King at York on March 26. 1642. to justify their Declaration which had been delivered at New-Market; and to desire him to return and to close with the Council and Desire of his Parliament. To which his Majesty return'd Answer, that they ought not to look upon him as Gene but Driver from them; that if they could not make his Residence in London safe, he would be content the Parliament should be adjourned to such a Place, where he might be fitly and safely with them. For tho' he was not pleas'd to be at that distance, yet they are not to expect his Presence till they should secure him against his just Apprehensions of tumultuary Insolencies, and likewise give him Satisfaction for those insupportable and intolerant Scandals that were rais'd upon him.

March 28. the Lords and Commons began now to act, as a separate and independent State, with the King, as an Ally, threatening a Rupture with him. For they told him in an express Message, "That the Lords and Commons in this present Parliament assembled, had found it necessary to provide and set to Sea a strong and powerful Navy, the Charge whereof was to be born by the Common-wealth; and taking notice of the Indisposition of the Lord Admiral, they had recommended the Earl of Warwick to supply his room; and desired his Majesty that he would withdraw his Pleasure of giving that Command to Sir John Pennington. Having thus gained possession of the Navy, they were entering upon the Militia; and having drawn up a Bill to put it entirely into the hands of their own Creatures, they sent it to his Majesty for his Royal Assent, which he justly refused, and gave his Reasons in a Message to the two Houses April 28. You have by this Bill now tender'd to us (without taking notice of us) put the Power of the whole Kingdom, the Life and Liberties of the Subjects of all Degrees and Qualities into the hands of particular Men for two Years. Can you imagine we will trust such an absolute Power in the hands of particular Persons, which we refused to commit to both Houses of Parliament? Nay, is not the Power it self too absolute, too unlimited, to be committed to any private Hands? Hath not Sir John Hotham's high Insolence shew'd us what we may expect from an exorbitant legal Power, when he by a Power not warranted by Law, dares venture upon a treasonable Disobedience? — This Repulse that Sir John Hotham gave the King was indeed the first Hostile Act, and was thus occasion'd.

In the late Expedition against the Scots, Hull was made the common Magazine, and had great store of Arms and Ammunition still preserved in it. This Place would be of the greatest importance to his Majesty's Service, and therefore the Parliament sent down Sir John Hotbam to take possession of it, and to be Governour in their Name, not only without the King's Commission but expressly against it; for the King had given the Government of that Garrison to the Earl of Newcastle. Upon this invasion of the Rights of King and Subject, his Majesty with about three hundred Horse on April 23. came to Hull, and having the Gates shut against him, commanded them to be open'd; but Sir John Hotbam answer'd, that He was intrusted by the Parliament to secure that Town

Upon reiterated Demands and Denials, the King was content to proclaim Sir John Hotham a Traitor, and so to retire; and to send a Message to the two Houses on Apr. 23. To demand Justice of his Parliament against the said Sir John Hotham, to be exemplarily inflicted upon him according to the Laws. But this only begat Answers and Replies to no purpose, but to shew the Power of the Parliament, and the Weakness of the King. Had his Majesty, with the Forces of the Gentry and Nobility which he could have then commanded, boldly attack'd the Town, and gain'd a Surrendry of it with a generous Mercy to the Inhabitants and small Garrison, and an exemplary Justice upon Sir John Hotham, it had been the most proper time to begin the War, and might have put a speedy End to it.

The King found it was now time to think of an Army, tho' he had not yet so much as a Guard about him. He summon'd the Gentry of Yorksh'ire to appear before him May 12. and complaining of the Parliament's Commissioners, who staid there to watch him when he had expressly commanded them to return. He told them, You see my Magazine is going to be taken from me (being my own proper Goods) directly against my Will: the Militia, against Law and my Consent, is going to be put in execution: and lastly, Sir John Hotham's Treason is countenanced. All this considered, none can blame me to apprehend Danger. Therefore I have thought fit (upon these real Grounds) to tell you, that I am resolv'd to have a Guard (the Parliament having had one all this while upon imaginary Jealousies) only to secure my Person; in which I desire your Concurrence and Assistance, and that I may be able to protect You, the Laws, and the true Protestant Profession, from any Assault or Injury that may be offer'd: Which I mean to maintain my self, without Charge to the Country, intending no longer to keep them on foot, than I shall be secured from my just Apprehensions by having Satisfaction in the Particulars before mentioned.

But to deprive the King of all manner of Assistance and Protection, on May 19. the Lords and Commons publish'd a Declaration, That it was against the Laws and Liberties of the Kingdom, for any of the Subjects to be commanded by the King to attend him at his pleasure: And that whosoever, upon pretence of his Majesty's Command, shall take Arms, shall be esteemed Disturbers of the publick Peace. And further, to divert him of Arms and Ammunition, they order'd May 20. That the Magazines of the several Counties in England and Wales should be forthwith put into the Power of the Lords Lieutenant of the said Counties respectively, being such as the Parliament doth confide in.

The King soon publish'd a very rational and elegant Answer to the Parliament's Declaration, accounting for all their particular Complaints, and concluding thus, We have been the longer (to our very great pain) in this Answer, that we might give the World Satisfaction, even in the most trivial Particulars which have been objected against us, and that we may not be again reproach'd with any more prudent Omissions. If we have been compelled to sharper Language than we affect, let it be considered how vile, how insufferable, our Treacheries have been: and except to repel Force be to assault, and to give particular and necessary Answer to rough and insolent Demands be to make Invectives, we are confident the World will accuse us of too much Mildness, and all our good Subjects will think we are not well dealt with, and will judge of us, and of their own Happiness and Security in us by our Actions; which we desire may no longer prosper, or have a Blessing of God upon them and us, than they shall be directed to the Glory of God, in the Maintenance of the true Protestant Profession, to the Preservation of the Property and the Liberty of the Subject, in the Observation of the Laws, and to the Maintenance of the Rights and Freedom of Parliament, in the Allowance and Protection of all their just Petitions.

The Parliament, who were now resolv'd upon the War, made it one Stratagem to throw all the Cause and Odium on the King. So on May 20. the Commons vote, 1. "That it appears, that the King, seduced by wicked Counsel, intends to make War against the Parliament. 2. That whensoever the King maketh War upon the Parliament, it is a breach of the Trust reposed in him by his People, contrary to his Oath, and tending to the Dissolution of this Government. 3. That whosoever shall serve or assist him in such Wars, are Traitors by the fundamental Laws of this Kingdom. On May 23. the two Houses sent a Petition to the King, to disband his Guard, and all other Forces, by his Command assembled. And having received his Majesty's Answer, that his raising of a Guard was a legal Action, and was with no other Design than the Safety of his Person: they made one Order to all Sheriffs to suppress the Raising or Meeting of any Soldiers by any Warrant from the King, without the Advice and Consent of the Lords and Commons in Parliament; and another Order to all Civil Officers to make Stay of all Arms and Ammunition carrying toward York. And having thus divested the King of all Aid and Assistance, on June 2. they sent a humble Petition and Advice with Nineteen Propositions, as the most necessary and effectual Means of removing the Jealousies and Differences which had unhappily fallen betwixt him and his People. To which his Majesty answered, That their Profession of Peace joined to such Propositions did but appear a Mockery and a Scorn, the Demands being such, as tho' he were unworthy of the Trust reposed in him by the Law, and of his Descent from so many great and famous Ancestors; and the Contrivers of them could have no Intention of settling any firm Accommodation, but to increase those Jealousies, and widen that Division, which had now fallen (not by his fault) between him and both Houses.

The Breach was now so wide, that several of the Lords, and some few Commons, and even the Lord Keeper Littleton with the Great Seal, found it high time to withdraw from the Parliament, and to attend the King at York. And tho' this Recess of the King's Friends put his Enemies into an absolute Possession of the two Houses, and left no Opposition to the Torrent that was breaking forth; yet it was a mighty Comfort to the distressed King to begin to see himself attended by so many of his Nobility and Gentry: and by their Advice, as the last Resort, he proclaim'd that he would set up his Standard at Nottingham on Monday Aug. 22. which accordingly was done with Sound of Trumpet, and a Proclamation that the Ground and Cause of it was to suppress the Rebellion of the Earl of Essex, to which he required the Aid and Assistance of all his loving Subjects. It appear'd to be a Case of utmost Necessity; therefore we are told, "That melancholly Men observed many ill Presages about that time: There was not one Regiment of Foot yet brought thither, so that the Train'd-Bands, which the Sheriff had drawn together, were all the Strength the King had for his Person, and the Guard of the Standard. There appear'd no Conflict of Men in obedience to the Proclamation: The Arms and Ammunition were not yet come from York, and a general Sadness cover'd the whole Town: The Standard was blown down the same Night it had been set up, by a very strong and unruly Wind, and could not be fix'd again in a day or two, till the Tempest was allay'd. This was the melancholly State of the King's Affairs when the Standard was set up.

Aug. 25. his Majesty sent a Message to both Houses of Parliament by the Earls of Southampton and Dorset, Sir John Culpeper, and Sir William Uvedale, in order to a Treaty for Peace, to be transacted by Commissioners on each side. To which Message the Lords and Commons answer'd, "That they could receive no Proposal till his Majesty should recall those Proclamations and Declarations, whereby the Earl of Essex, and both Houses of Parliament, and their Adherents and Assistants, are declared

To which the King replied, "We never did declare, nor never intended to declare both our Houses of Parliament Traitors, or set up our Standard against them; and much less to put them and this Kingdom out of our Protection: We utterly profess against it before God and the World. And farther, to remove all possible Scruples which may hinder the Treaty so much desired by us, we hereby promise (so that a Day be appointed by you for the revoking of your Declarations against all Persons as Traitors or other ways for assisting us) we shall with all cheerfulness upon the same day recall our Proclamations and Declarations, and take down our Standard. To which the Lords and Commons answer, "That they believed there was no other way to make himself happy, and the Kingdom safe, but by leaving his Forces, and returning to his Parliament, and receiving their faithful Advice. After some other ineffectual Messages, his Majesty published a Declaration to all his loving Subjects Sept. 27, setting forth the good Intention of his late Messages to both Houses of Parliament, and complaining of their Refusal to treat with him for the Peace of the Kingdom. To which the two Houses were disposed to give Answer at the Head of an Army, to be commanded by the Earl of Essex, who Sept. 9. set out of London, attended in great State by several Members of both Houses, toward his Head-Quarters at St. Albans, and thence to Northampton, where the main Body met him, and made up fifteen thousand Men.

Parliam. Army commanded by the Earl of Essex.

The King had march'd from Nottingham to Derby, Stafford, and Leiceſter, and so to Wales; and at Shrewsbury he found his Army encreas'd to a considerable Body. In his Passage through the several Counties, upon Resort of the Gentry and People, the King had his Orders of Military Discipline and this Protestation read to them.

His Majesty's Protestation.

I Do promise in the Presence of Almighty God, and as I hope for his Blessing and Protection, that I will, to the utmost of my Power, defend and maintain the true Reformed Protestant Religion establish'd in the Church of England, and by the Grace of God in the same will live and die.

K's Protestation for Peace, and Governing by Law.

I desire to govern by the known Laws of the Land, and that the Liberty and Property of the Subject may be by them preserv'd with the same care as my own just Rights. And if it please God, by a Blessing upon this Army rais'd for my necessary Defence, to preserve me from this Rebellion; I do solemnly and faithfully promise in the sight of God, to maintain the just Privileges and Freedom of Parliament, and to govern by the known Laws of the Land to my utmost power, and particularly to observe inviolably the Laws consented to by me this Parliament.

In the mean while, if this Time of War, and the great Necessity and Straits I am now driven to, beget any Violation of those, I hope it shall be imputed by God and Man to the Authors of this War, and not to me, who have so earnestly labour'd for the Preservation of the Peace of this Kingdom.

When I willingly fail in these Particulars, I will expect no Aid or Relief from any Man, or Protection from Heaven: But in this Resolution I hope for the cheerful Assistance of all Good Men, and am confident of God's Blessing.

First Rencounter.

The first Rencounter was at Powick-Bridge near Worcester, Sept. 22. The Earl of Essex was on his March with his Army toward Worcester, intending that Place for a Head-Quarter, wherein lay Sir John Byron with some of the King's Forces; and Prince Rupert, with a good Body of Horse, came to secure their Retreat from the Town, before the Parliament Army reach'd to it. When the Prince was advanced within two Miles of Worcester, he was charg'd by a Party of Horse commanded by Colonel Sands, but he and Major Douglas were both slain, four Colours taken, and the Defeat so entirely given, that the Prince opened a clear Passage for the King's Forces to march away from Worcester, before Essex with his Army enter'd.

1642. 18 Car. I.

The King having greatly augmented his Forces, did seem resolv'd to leave Essex behind him, and to march directly for London. This Apprehension put the Parliament into so much Terror, that they sent express Orders to their General the Earl of Essex to hasten after the King, and interrupt his March. Which Orders were so well executed, that while the King was summoning Banbury in Oxfordshire to Surrender to him, he received Advice on Sunday Morning Oct. 23. that the Army of the Rebels was advanced to Keynton in Warwickshire; upon which the King gave immediate Order for his whole Army to march with all Expedition to Edge-hill three Miles from Keynton: When they came about Noon to the Top of the Hill, they could see the other Army drawing into Battalia in Keynton-Field, and so went down the Hill to receive them. The Ordinance play'd some time, beginning from the Parliament Army: The Charge began between the two Wings of Horse; that of the King's broke, and pursued that of the Parliament with great execution for three Miles together. But when the Bodies of Foot engaged, a Reserve of the Parliament Horse charg'd the Flank of the King's Foot; who wanting the Support of the Horse (who had too far pursued the Rebels, and thought the Day their own) was in great Danger, till the Horse rallied and reliev'd them: and the Night coming on, both Armies retreated, and the next Day look'd one upon another, till the Earl of Essex first withdrew to Warwick, and then the King return'd to Banbury, and forced that Garrison to Surrender to him. Two different Relations of this Battle were publish'd, one by his Majesty's Command at Oxford, the other by an Order of the Commons at London, both Sides assuming the Honour of a Victory, when it could not be so call'd on either Side; yet the King was much better intitled to the Credit of it, by killing the greater Numbers, and taking the greater Spoil, and seeing the Enemy break up and retire, while he immediately took a Garrison which had just before refus'd to yield to him.

K. inclin'd to march for London.

Edge-hill Fight.

Yet the King lost the General of his Army, the Earl of Lindsey, of whom the Lord Clarendon gives this good Character, "He was a Man of very noble Extraction, and inherited a great Fortune from his Ancestors; which tho' he did not manage with so great care as if he desired much to improve, yet he left it in a very fair Condition to his Family which more intended the increase of it. He was a Man of great Honour, and spent his Youth and vigour of his Age in Military Actions and Commands abroad; and albeit he indulg'd himself great Liberties of Life, yet he still preserv'd a very good Reputation with all Men, and a very great Interest in his Country, as appeared by the Supplies he and his Son brought to the King's Army; the several Companies of his own Regiment of Foot being commanded by the principal Knights and Gentlemen of Lincolnshire, who engaged themselves in the Service principally out of their personal Affection to him. He was of a very generous Nature, and punctual in what he undertook, and in exacting what was due to him; which made him bear that restriction so heavily which was put upon him by the Commission granted to Prince Rupert, and by the King's preferring the Prince's Opinion in all Matters relating to the War before his. Nor did he conceal his Resentment; the Day before the Battle he said to some Friends, with whom he had us'd freedom, That he did not look upon himself as General, and therefore he was resolv'd, when the Day of Battle should come, that he

He was carried out of the Field to the next Village, and if he could then have procured Surgeons, it was thought his Wound would not have proved Mortal. And as soon as the other Army was compos'd by the coming on of the Night, the Earl of Essex about Midnight sent Sir William Balfour, and some other Officers to see him, and to offer him all Offices, and meant himself to have visited him. They found him upon a little Straw in a poor House, where they had laid him in his Blood, which had run from him in great abundance, no Surgeon having been yet with him, only he had great vivacity in his Looks; and told them, he was sorry to see so many Gentlemen, some whereof were his old Friends, engaged in so foul a Rebellion; and principally directed his Discourse to Sir William Balfour, whom he put in mind of the great Obligations he had to the King; how much his Majesty had oblig'd the whole English Nation by putting him into the Command of the Tower; and that it was the most odious Ingratitude in him to make him that return. He wish'd them to tell my Lord Fifax, that he ought to cast himself at the King's Feet to beg his Pardon; which if he did not speedily do, his Memory would be odious to the Nation; and continued this kind of Discourse with so much vehemence, that the Officers by degrees withdrew themselves, and prevented the Visit the Earl of Essex intended him, who only sent the best Surgeons to him; but in the very opening of his Wounds he died before the Morning, only upon the loss of Blood. He had very many Friends and very few Enemies, and died generally lamented.

His Declaration of Thanksgiving for his Safety.

His Majesty publish'd a Declaration, and commanded it to be read in all Churches and Chapels, To attribute the Preservation of himself and his Children in the late Bloody Battle with the Rebels, to the Mercy and Goodness of Almighty God. — In a Word, as whoever knows what danger our Person was in on Sunday Octob. 23. can never believe that the Army which gave us Battle, was raised for our Defence and Preservation; so when they consider how much the Liberty of the Subject is invaded by their Rapine and Imprisoning; and that few parts at least of five of the Members of both Houses, are by violence driven from being present in that Council; that the Book of Common-Prayer is rejected, and no countenance given but to Anabaptists and Brownists, they will easily find the Pretences of Care of the Protestant Religion, the Liberty of the Subject, and of the Privilege of Parliament to be as vain and pretended as those which refer to the Safety of our Person, and the Preservation of our Posterity.

Nov. 11. The King march'd from Banbury to Oxford, thence to Reading, and so in nearer Approaches toward London. At Colbrook on Nov. 11. he received a Petition of the two Houses for a Treaty, toward which he had granted a safe Conduet to the Earls of Northumberland and Pembroke, to Viscount Wenman, Mr. Pierpoint and Sir John Hippisley. The E. of Essex had been called to London to guard the Parliam. and City, and to that purpose had quarter'd his Army in the adjacent Towns, some at Windsor, some at Kingston, at Aton, at Brainford, &c. The King being inform'd that the Earl of Essex was coming out of London with a Train of Ordnance and great Forces, resolv'd in a Council of War to beat-up the Quarters of Colonel Hollis's Regiment in Brainford, and accordingly Novemb. 12. the King marching slowly surpriz'd Brainford, and beat out the Forces quarter'd in it; and had he march'd resolutely on to London, 'tis probable the Conservation of Essex and the two Houses, had given him advantage to take possession of the City. But the King immediately quitted Brainford and retreated toward Reading, and so back to Oxford, leaving the Parliament at liberty to recruit and augment their Army, and to throw the Action at Brainford as a breach of Honour upon the King, while there was a Treaty in agitation.

Brainford Fight.

King's retreat.

Novemb. 24. the two Houses presented another Petition to the King at Oxford, to return to his Parliament with his Royal not Martial Attendance, to the end that Religion, Laws and Liberties might be settled and secur'd by their Advice. The King took this as a Scorn and Insult upon him, as it really was: And from this time the mutual Mellages were more rare and more sharp.

1642. 18 Car. I. Parliament in-sult the King.

About the end of November the Earl of Newcastle had associat'd the Counties of Northumberland, Cumberland, Westmoreland, the Bishoprick of Durham and Newcastle for the Defence and Assistance of the King, and was marching at the Head of a considerable Army toward York, and at Piercebrig bear a Party of the L. Fairfax's Horse commanded by Capt. Hotham, and enter'd York, and had his Commission enlarg'd to govern that and other Counties. Upon which by a Declaration of the two Houses, the Earl of Essex sent a Commission to the Lord Fairfax to command in chief for the Parliament in the Northern Parts.

Loyalty of the E. of Newcastle.

Decemb. 1. Sir William Waller with a Party of Horse took Farnham Castle, from the possession of Mr. Devnam High-Sheriff, and other Commissioners of Array for the King. And Decemb. 5. the Lord Digby with some Troops of Horse took Marlborough, which had been fortified, and was defended by the Parliament Forces. Decemb. 12. Sir William Waller recovered Winchester for the Parliament, and Decemb. 18. Colonel Ruthin Commander of the Garison of Plymouth for the Parliament, surpriz'd the High-Sheriff of Devonshire and other Commissioners of Array, and sent them Prisoners to London. And in most parts of England, Skirmishes, Assaults and Sallies were so frequent and so fierce, that all People dreaded the sad Effects of a Civil War.

Under this disposition the Mayor, Aldermen and Commons of the City of London, by the hands of some of the chief Citizens, presented a Petition to the King at Oxford, " To wipe off all suspicion of their disloyalty, and to beseech his Majesty to return to his Parliament, that a Peace may be obtained. The King gave Answer, " That he did not entertain any misapprehension of the Love and Loyalty of the City of London, and that no good Citizen could more desire the establishment of the particular Peace and Prosperity of that place by his Majesty's Access thither than he himself doth. But he could have no hope of Safety there whilst Alderman Pennington their pretended Lord Mayor, Ven, Foulke and Mainwaring did commit such Outrages in oppressing, robbing and imprisoning the best of his Majesty's loving Subjects. — He desires the good Citizens to gather up Courage and Resolution to join with his Majesty in defence of that Religion, Law and Liberty which hitherto hath and only can make themselves, his Majesty and his Kingdom happy. This Answer was read at a Common-Hall on Friday Jan. 13. but to prevent the Influence of it, a Committee of the Lords and Commons were order'd to be present at Guild-hall; of whom the Earl of Manchester and Mr. Pym made such artificial Speeches, as secur'd the governing part of the City entirely to the Parliament. His Majesty sent another Letter and Declaration to the Sheriffs and City of London Jan. 17. but the Parliament forbid the Reading of it, and took effectual care to prevent all farther Correspondence between the King and the City.

City of London for Peace.

Feb. 2. the Town of Cirencester, a strong Garison for the Parliament, was taken by Prince Rupert, and the Earl of Stamford's Regiment put to the Sword, and great Numbers of Prisoners brought to Oxford in an ignominious manner: which was made use of to improve the Scandal of Pride and Cruelty on the King's side.

Cirencester Taken.

March 1. Lichfield being held for the King by the Lord Chesterfield, was assaulted by the Lord Brook, who gain'd the Town, but in Storming the Close and Church lost his Life by a Bullet in the Left Eye. Many look'd upon it as Providential, that this

1642. this profess'd Enemy to Cathedrals, Clergy, and 18 Car. I. Liturgy, should be kill'd on the Day of St. Chad Patron of the Cathedral storm'd by him, by the hand of a Clergy-man's Son, with a sudden Death, which Expression in the Litany he had vehemently condemn'd. His Character is thus given by the Lord Clarendon. "There were many Discourses and Observations upon his Death, that it should be upon St. Chad's Day (being the second Day of March:) And it was reported, That in his Prayer that very Morning (for he us'd to pray publickly tho' his Chaplain were in the Presence) he wish'd, That if the Cause he was in were not right and just, he might be presently cut off. They who were acquainted with him believ'd him to be well-natur'd and just, and rather seduc'd and corrupted in his Understanding, than perverse and malicious. Whether his Passions or Conscience sway'd him, he was undoubtedly one of those who could have been with it difficultly reconcil'd to the Government of Church and State:
 And therefore his Death was look'd upon as no ill Omen to Peace, and was exceedingly lamented by his Party, which had scarce a more absolute Confidence in any Man than in him.

March 19. there was a sharp Fight at Salt-Hath near Stafford, between the King's Forces command'd by the Earl of Northampton and Colonel Hastings, and the Parliament's under Conduct of Sir John Gell and Sir William Brouncker. The King's Forces, at first victorious, were in effect defeated by the single Loss of their General the valiant Earl of Northampton; of whom the Earl of Clarendon gives this Account.
 "In the second Charge the Earl of Northampton, being engaged on the Execution, very near or among their Foot, had his Horse killed under him; so that his own Horse (according to their unhappy practice) with too much Fury pursuing the Chase, he was left encompass'd by his Enemies.
 What his Behaviour was afterwards, and their Carriage towards him, can be known only by the Testimony of the Rebels; who confess'd, that after he was on his Feet, he kill'd with his own Hand the Colonel of Foot who made first Haste to him; and that after his Head-piece was stricken off with the Butt-end of a Musket, they offer'd him Quarter, which they say he refus'd, answering, That he scorn'd to take Quarter from such base Rogues and Rebels as they were. After which, he was slain by a Blow with a Halbert on the hinder part of his Head, receiving at the same time another deep Wound in his Face. — He was a Person of great Courage.

The Queen had been some time in Holland solliciting Aid and providing Supplies for the King. The two Houses, to hinder her Endeavours, sent over Walter Strickland Esq; with a Letter and a Declaration to the States, and prevail'd with them to declare for a Neutrality with the King and Parliament.
 But however, the Queen, with great Diligence and Importunity, had procur'd several Ships of Arms and Ammunition, and on Feb. 22. landed at Burlington in the East-Riding of Yorkshire; and being received there by the Earl of Newcastle's Army, was conducted to York, to the great Improvement of his Majesty's Interest in those Parts.

The Action at Brainford had interrupted a Treaty that was then under Agitation, and that was now renew'd by the two Houses, at whose Desire the King granted a safe Conduct to their Commissioners to come to Oxford, and deliver to him Febr. 1. the humble Desires and Propositions of the Lords and Commons in Parliament assembled. I. That your Majesty will be pleas'd to disband your Armies, as we likewise shall be ready to disband all those Forces which we have rais'd: And that you will be pleas'd to return to your Parliament. II. That you will leave Delinquents to a legal Trial and Judgment of Parliament. III. That the Papists not only be disbanded, but disarm'd according to Law. With ten other Propositions of In-dempnity and Reward to themselves, of Exceptions and Penalties to the King's chief Friends, &c. To which his Majesty gave Answer Feb. 3. "That if he had not given up all the Faculties of his Soul to an earnest Endeavour of a Peace and Reconciliation with his People, or if he would suffer himself by any Provocation to be drawn to a Sharpness of Language at a time when there seems somewhat like an Overture of Accommodation, he could not but resent the heavy Charges upon him, &c. But tho' many of their Propositions did appear very derogatory from, and destructive to his just Power and Pretogative, and no way beneficial to his Subjects; yet he was pleas'd that a speedy Time and Place should be agreed upon for meeting of such Persons as his Majesty and both Houses should appoint to discuss their Propositions, and such other as his Majesty now proposed; I. That his Majesty's own Revenue, Magazines, Towns, Forts, and Ships, which have been taken or kept from him by force, be forthwith restored unto him. II. That whatsoever hath been done or published contrary to the known Laws of the Land, or derogatory to his Majesty's legal and known Power and Rights, be renounced and recalled. And after three other Propositions, Lastly, To the intent this Treaty may not suffer Interruption by any intervening Accidents, that a Cessation of Arms, and free Trade for all his Majesty's Subjects, may be first agreed upon. In Prosecution of this Treaty, on Feb. 28. the Lords and Commons sent to his Majesty Articles for a Cessation.

 To which his Majesty return'd a Message March 6. proposing such Articles as he thought more safe and reasonable. To which the Parliament again made Additions and Alterations, and the King further Exceptions. So that all that could be done this Year, was for the Parliament to grant Leave for their Commissioners to treat, though the Cessation was not agreed upon. This on the last Day of this Year, March 24. 1642.

As to Matters of Religion, there was no longer the Face of a Church; for, the Bishops had not only lost their Votes in the House of Lords, but all their ordinary Jurisdiction in their respective Dioceses, and lay imprison'd in the Tower upon a most illegal Commitment by the Commons, till May 5.
 the Peers, without consulting the other House, re-leas'd them upon Bail: But even their Liberty gave them no Property, nor Safety; none of them could find Protection in their own Palaces, but were conceded to fly from Plunder and Seizure; and the Bishop of Ely, who flatter'd himself with a safe Retirement in his House at Downham, was apprehended by a Party of Soldiers, and brought back again to the Tower, where he continued till the End of the Year 1659, without any Charge or Accusation form'd against him.

These sad Confusions in the Church, and Obstruction of all the publick Offices and Service, open'd the Eyes of many good Christians, and put them upon Petitions and Remonstrances against the growing Hypocrisie and Profaneness. Many of these pious Addresses were presented to the King; two from the County of Chester, two from Cornwall, from both Universities, from the Diocese of Exeter, from the six Counties of North-Wales, from the Counties of Nottingham, Huntingdon, Somerset, Rutland, Stafford, Lancaster, Oxford, and Hereford. All which were to the same effect with one from Kent, wherein the Gentry, Clergy, and Freeholders, set forth to the two Houses themselves, "That notwithstanding this Kingdom hath, by the singular Providence of Almighty God, for many Years last past happily flourish'd above all other Nations in the Christian World, under the Religion and Government by Law established; yet hath it been of late most miserably distracted, through the sinister Practices of some private Persons ill-affected to them both: By whose means the present Government is 1642. 18 Car. I. Setting forth the Iniquity of the Times.

“ disgraced and traduced, the Houses of God are profaned and in part defaced, the Ministers of Christ are contemned and despised, the Ornaments and many Utensils of the Church are abused, the Liturgy and Book of Common-Prayer are depraved and neglected, that absolute Model of Prayer (the Lord's Prayer) vilified, the Sacraments of the Gospel in some places unduly administered, in other places omitted, solemn Days of Fasting observed and appointed by private Persons, Marriages illegally solemnized, Burials uncharitably performed, and the very Fundamentals of Religion subverted by the Publication of a new Creed, and teaching the Abrogation of the Moral Law; for which purpose many offensive Sermons are daily preached, and many impious Pamphlets printed. And in contemning of Authority, many do what seemeth good in their own Eyes only, as if there were no King nor Government in this our Israel; whereby God is highly provoked, his sacred Majesty dishonoured, the Peace of the Kingdom endangered, the Consciences of the People disquieted, the Ministry of God's Word dishonoured, and the Enemies of the Church embolden'd in their Enterprize. They therefore pray, That it may please this great and honourable Council speedily to command a due Observation of the Religion and Government by Law established, in such manner as may seem best to the Piety and Wisdom of his Royal Majesty and this Honourable Court.

Rejected by the Parliam.

Answer'd by the King.

But the two Houses well knowing that these Petitions were but loud Reflexions upon them and their Proceedings, not only rejected them, and shew'd their Displeasure to all that presum'd to make them, but they even complain'd to his Majesty for his receiving of them, and pretended 'em to be mutinous and malignant; and this in their solemn Declaration or Remonstrance May 19. To which the King, with a rational Zeal, thus answer'd. “ That Declaration tells you of a present desperate and malicious Plot of the Malignant Party, now acting under the plausible Notions of stirring Men up to a care of preserving the King's Prerogative, maintaining the Discipline of the Church, upholding and continuing the Reverence and Solemnity of God's Service, and encouraging Learning; and that upon these Grounds divers mutinous Petitions have been framed in London, Kent, and other Places. Upon what Grounds would these Men have Petitions framed? Have so many Petitions (even against the Form and Constitution of the Kingdom, and the Laws established) been joyfully received and accepted, and shall Petitions framed upon these Grounds be called Mutinous? Hath a multitude of mean, unknown, inconsiderable, contemptible Persons, about the City and Suburbs of London, had Liberty to Petition against the Government of the Church, against the Book of Common Prayer, against the Freedom and Privilege of Parliament, and been thanked for it; and shall it be called Mutiny in the gravest and best Citizens of London, in the Gentry and Commonalty of Kent, to frame Petitions upon these Grounds, and to desire to be governed by the known Laws of the Land, not by Orders or Votes of either or both Houses? Can this be thought the Wisdom and Justice of both Houses of Parliament? Is it not evidently the Work of a Faction, within or without both Houses, who deceive the Trust reposed in them, and have now told us what Mutiny is? To stir up Men to a Care of preserving our Prerogative, maintaining the Discipline of the Church, upholding and continuing the Reverence and Solemnity of God's Service, encouraging of Learning, is Mutiny. Let Heaven and Earth, God and Man, judge between us and these Men.

This is certain, that not only the disaffected Divines and the moderate Presbyterians went in by 1642. 18 Car. I. Interest and Inclination to the Parliament; but all the most violent Schismaticks and Enthusiasts of every wild Denomination, run into the same Cause. And it must be to tempt over and secure these Men, that the two Houses did now apparently threaten the whole Constitution of the Church. Their first Clamours were only against Popery and Innovation; but to silence all Pretences of this kind, the King offer'd an absolute Satisfaction in his Answer to their Nineteen Propositions deliver'd June 2.

“ For the sixth Demand, concerning the Laws in Force against Jesuits, Priests, and Popish Recusants, We have by many of our Messages to you, by our voluntary Promise to you so solemnly made never to pardon any Popish Priest, by our strict Proclamations lately publish'd in this Point, and by the publick Examples which we have made in that case since our Residence at York, and before at London, sufficiently express'd our Zeal herein. Why do ye then ask that in which our own Inclination hath prevented you? And if you can yet find any more effectual Course to disable them from disturbing the State, or eluding the Law by Trusts or otherwise, we shall willingly give our Consent to it.

“ For the seventh Demand, concerning the Votes of the Popish Lords, We understand that they in Discretion have withdrawn themselves from the Service of the House of Peers: and though we do not conceive that such a positive Law against the Votes of any whole Blood gives them that Right, is so proper in regard of the Privilege of Parliament; yet we are content, that so long as they shall not be conformable to the Doctrine and Discipline of the Church of England, they shall not be admitted to sit in the House of Peers, but only to give their Proxies to such Protestant Lords as they shall chuse, who are to dispose of them as they themselves shall think fit, without any Reference at all to the Giver.

“ As to the Desires for a Bill for the Education of Papists by Protestant Profession, many about us can witness with us, that we have often delivered our Opinion, that such a Course (with God's Blessing upon it) would be the most effectual for the rooting Popery out of this Kingdom. We shall therefore thank you for it, and encourage you in it, and when it comes unto us, do our Duty: And we heartily wish for the publick Good, that the time you have spent in making Ordinances without us, had been employ'd in preparing this and other good Bills for us.

“ For the eighth, touching the Reformation to be made of the Church-Government and Liturgy, We had hoped that what we had formerly declared concerning the same, had been so sufficiently understood by you and all good Subjects, that we should not need to have expressed Ourselves farther in it. We told you in our Answer to your Petition presented to us the first of December, That for any illegal Innovations which may have crept in, we should willingly concur in the Removal of them; That if our Parliament should advise us to call a National Synod which may duly examine such Ceremonies as give just Cause of Offence to any, we should take it into Consideration, and apply Ourselves to give due Satisfaction therein; That we were persuaded in our Conscience, that no Church could be found upon the Earth, that professeth the true Religion with more Purity of Doctrine than the Church of England doth, nor where the Government and Discipline are jointly more beautified and free from Superstition, than as they are here established by Law; which, by the Grace of God, we will constantly maintain (while we live) in their Purity and Glory, not only against all Innovations of Popery, but also from the Irreverence of those many Schismaticks and Separatists wherewith of late this Kingdom and our City of London abounds

1642. " to the great Dishonour and Hazard both of Church 8 Car. I. " and State; for the Suppression of whom we re" quired your timely and active Assistance. We told " you in our first Declaration, printed by the Ad" vice of our Privy Council, that for Differences " amongst Ourselves for Matters indifferent in their " own nature concerning Religion, we should in " Tenderness to any number of our loving Sub" jects, very willingly comply with the Advice of " our Parliament, that some Law might be made " for the Exemption of tender Consciences from " Punishment or Persecution for such Ceremonies " and in such Cases which by the Judgment of most " Men are held to be Matters indifferent, and of " some to be absolutely unlawful: Provided that " this Ease should be attempted and pursued with " that Modesty, Temper, and Submission, that in " the mean time the Peace and Quiet of the King" dom be not disturbed, the Decency and Comeliness
 " of God's Service discountenanced, nor the pious,
 " sober, devout Actions of those Reverend Prelates
 " who were the first Labourers in the blessed Re" formation, or of that time, be scandaliz'd and de-" famed. And we heartily wish, that others whom " it concerned had been as ready as their Duty " bound them, tho' they had not received it from " us, to have pursued this Caution; as we were and " still are willing and ready to make good every " Particular of that Promise. Nor did we only " appear willing to join in so good a Work when " it should be brought us, but press'd and urg'd
 " you to it by our Message of the 14th of Febr. in " these Words: *And because his Majesty observes great " and different Troubles to arise in the Hearts of his Peo" ple concerning the Government and Liturgy of the " Church, his Majesty is willing to declare that he will " refer the whole Consideration to the Wisdom of his Par" liament, which he desires them to enter into speedily,
 " that the present Distractions about the same may be
 " compos'd; but desires not to be press'd to any single Act
 " on his part, till the whole be so digested and settled by " both Houses, that his Majesty may clearly see what is " fit to be left, as well as what is fit to be taken away.*
 " Of which we the more hoped a good Success to " the general Satisfaction of our People, because you " seem in this Proposition to desire but a Reformati" on, and not (as is daily preached for as necessary
 " in those many Conventicles which have within " these 19 Months begun to swarm, and which tho'
 " their Leaders differ from you in this Opinion)
 " yet appear to many as countenanc'd by you, by " not being punish'd by you (few else by reason of " the Order of the House of Commons of the 9th of " September daring to do it) a Destruction of the pre" sent Discipline and Liturgy. And we shall most " cheerfully give our best Assistance for raising suf" ficient Maintenance for Preaching Ministers in such " course as shall be most for the Encouragement
 " and Advancement of Piety and Learning.

And farther (if possible) to take away all the Jealousies of Popery, the King, by Proclamation at York Aug. 10. declared his express Command, that no Popish Recusant, nor any other, who should refuse to take the two Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy, should be list'd or retained in his Service. And in his Declaration of October 22. his Majesty utterly disowns the Slanders cast upon him of encouraging Popery, and says, For that continued dishonest Accusation of our Inclination to the Papists, which the Authors of it in their own Consciences (which will one day be dreadful to them) know to be most unjust and groundless; We can say no more, and We can do no more to the Satisfaction of the World.

But the two Houses desired now to be remember'd by their Brethren in Scotland; and in their Declaration of October 22. they told his Majesty, We expect our Brethren of Scotland, according to the Act of Pacification, whereby the two Kingdoms are mutually bound to suppress all Debates and Differences to the Disturbance of the publick Peace, that they will help and assist us in Defence of the Cause, which 1642.

 if the Popish Party prevail, must either invalid them 18 Car. I.
 in that Alteration of Religion which will be made here, or engage them in a War against this Kingdom to defend their own Religion and Liberty. They had good Grounds to threaten his Majesty with a new Storm from Scotland: for they had entred a Correspondence, and received Assurance of Aid. There had been A Declaration of the Lords and Commons assembled in Parliament sent to the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland; and An Answer of the General Assenby of the Kirk of Scotland to the Declaration sent by the Parliament of England the 27th of August 1642. And farther, A Letter sent by some Brethren of the Ministers of the Church of England to the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, dated at London the 22d of July. And An Answer of the General Assembly to the Letter sent by the Ministers of England, dated the 5th of August 1642.
 And though his Majesty, to hinder the Effects of this Confederacy, sent his Letter to the General Af-sembly of the Church of Scotland, given at Leicester the 22d of July; and had in Return, The hearty Thanksgiving and humble Petition of the General Assenbly met at St. Andrews, to the King's most excellent Majesty, the 27th of July 1642. yet the Vein of these Papers did sufficiently abode, that the Kirk of Scotland would throw forth all her Power to help destroy Episcopacy, Liturgy, and all the establish'd Order in England.

And indeed some of the Presbyterian Divines had by this time got a powerful Influence over the two Houses, and began to pen for them their Publick Ordinances of Religion, in such a canting Stile, and with such a broad Hypocrisie, that the Members of Sense and Sobriety could not but Blush at Reading their own Acts. For Example, on February the 15th there was an Ordinance of the Lords and Commons exhorting to the Duty of Repentance as the only Remedy to present Calamities. And it began thus,
 " That flourishing Kingdoms have been ruin'd by " impenitent going on in a course of Sinning, the " Sacred Story doth plainly tell us: And how near " to such a Ruin our sinful Nation now is, the " present lamentable Face of it doth too apparent" ly shew. And though we should feel the heavy " Strokes of God yet seven times more, it is our " Duty to accept the Punishment of our Iniquity,
 " and to say, *Righteous art thou, O Lord, and just
 " are thy Judgments!* Yet because the Lord who is " just is also merciful, and in his infinite Mercy
 " hath left the excellent and successful Remedy of " Repentance to Nations brought near to the Gates " of Destruction and Despair; O let not England " be negligent in the Application of it! Humble " Addresses of a penitent People to a merciful God,
 " have prevailed with him: They prevailed for Ni" neveh when the Sentence seem'd to be gone out " against her, and may also prevail for England.
 " It is therefore thought most necessary by the Lords " and Commons in Parliament, that all his Maje" sty's Subjects in this Kingdom of England be exci" ted and stirr'd up speedily to lay hold upon this " only and unfailing Remedy of Repentance; free" ly acknowledging, and heartily bewailing, even " with deepest Humiliation, godly Sorrow, and " Detestation, &c.

Then they come to the prescribing a Confession of National Sins; and that the Devotion might be a Libel upon the King and the Church, they chuse out for National Sins, Idolatry and Bloodshed. " That " of Idolatry, as it was the Sin of our Ancestors,
 " so it is the spreading Sin of these latter times,
 " while by a general Connivance and almost Tole" ration it hath been several ways fomented and " encouraged, the grievous Effects whereof this " Kingdom of England now begins to feel, &c.
 " And for the other crying and cruel Sin of Blood" shed, that calls aloud for Vengeance (besides
 " many Murders not expiated, and the Blood-guilty

When once the two Houses could descend to have such fulsome Penitential Forms put upon them, for them to adopt and to obtrude in their Name upon the Nation; it was a sure sign, that All that was found and decent in Faith and Worship, was now to be commanded into Enthusiasm and endless Schism. And to this purpose, their Votes, and Orders, and Bills, by degrees came up to an utter Dissolution of the Church. To recite the Particulars is the less needful, because they are sum'd up into One of their Humble Desires and Propositions tender'd to his Majesty Febr. 1. when the Commissioners carried five Bills along with them, and press'd the Passing of them in this 4th Proposition.

IV. " That your Majesty will be pleas'd to give " your Royal Assent unto the Bill for taking away " Superstitious Innovations; to the Bill for the utter " abolishing and taking away of all Arch" bishops, Bishops, their Chancellors and Commis" saries, Deans, Sub-deans, Deans and Chapters,
" Arch-deacons, Canons, and Prebendaries, and all
" Chantors, Chancellors, Treasurers, Sub-treasurers,
" Succentors, and Sacrists, and all Vicars Choral " and Choiristers, old Vicars and new Vicars of " any Cathedral or Collegiate Church, and all other
" their Under-officers, out of the Church of Eng" land; to the Bill against Scandalous Ministers;
" to the Bill against Pluralities; and to the Bill for " Consultation to be had with Godly, Religious,
" and Learned Divines; that your Majesty will " be pleas'd to promise to pass such other good " Bills for settling of Church-Government, as upon " Consultation with the Assembly of the said Di-" vines shall be resolv'd on by both Houses of Par" liament, and by them be presented to your Majesty.

Said Consultations.

And though they could not hope for the legal passing of these Bills, yet they had already come to the arbitrary Execution of them: For on October 15. it was Resolv'd upon the Question, " That the " Fines, Rents, and Profits of Arch-bishops, Bishops, " Deans and Chapters, and of such notorious De" linquents who have taken up Arms against the " Parliament, or have been active in the Commis" sion of Array, shall be sequestred for the Use and " Service of the Commonwealth. The Organs and " painted Glass, and very Monuments of the Dead, " were defaced; Tithes were denied to them who " read the Common-Prayer; and these old regular " Divines were plunder'd, sequestred, and driven a" way, to make room for all the angry Men, who had " been by Episcopal Authority suspended or deprived;
" and for all the new little Creatures that began now
" to cover the Land.

The Foreign Protestants in England had been too much incens'd by the severe Proceedings of Abp. Laud, and some other Prelates, against them. The Account may be best taken from the late History of the Rebellion. " When the Reformation of Religi" on first begun in England in the time of K. Ed. VI.
" very many out of Germany and France left their " Countries, where the Reformation was severely " prosecuted, and transplanted themselves, their " Families, and Estates, into England, where they " were received very hospitably: And that King,
" with great Piety and Policy, by several Acts of " State granted them many Indempnities, and the " free Use of Churches in London for the exercise of " their Religion; whereby the Number of them en" creas'd, and the Benefit to the Kingdom by such " an Access of Trade and Improvement of Manufa" ctures, was very considerable. Which Q. Eliza" beth finding, and well knowing that other nota" ble Uses of them might be made, enlarg'd their " Privileges by new Concessions; drawing, by all " means, great Numbers over, and suffering them " to erect Churches, and to enjoy the exercise of " their Religion after their own Manner, and ac" cording to their own Ceremonies, in all Places " where, for the Conveniency of their Trade, they " chose to reside. And so they had Churches in " Northwich, Canterbury, and other Places of the King" dom, as well as in London; whereby the Wealth " of those Places marvellously increas'd. And be" sides the Benefit from thence, the Queen made use " of them in her great Transactions of State in " France and the Low Countries; and by the Media" tion and Interposition of those People, kept an " useful Interest in that Party in all the foreign Do" minions where they were tolerated. The same
" Charters of Liberty were continued and granted " to them during the peaceable Reign of K. James,
" and in the Beginning of this King's Reign, altho'
" it may be, the politick Considerations in those " Concessions and Connivances, were neither made " use of, nor understood.

" Some few Years before these Troubles, when " the Power of Church-men grew more transcen" dent, and indeed the Faculties and Understand" ings of the Lay Counsellors more dull, lazy, and " inactive (for without the last, the first could " have done no hurt) the Bishops grew jealous
" that the countenancing another Discipline of the " Church here, by Order of the State (for those " Foreign Congregations were govern'd by a " Presbytery, according to the Custom and Con" stitution of those Parts of which they had " been Natives; the French, Dutch, and Wal-" loons, had the free Use of several Churches
" according to their own Discipline) would at " least diminish the Reputation and Dignity of 1642. " the Episcopal Government, and give some coun-

" England to hope for such a Toleration.

" Then there wanted not some fiery, turbulent,
" and contentious Persons of the Congregations,
" who upon private Difference and Contests, were " ready to inform against their Brethren, and to dis" cover what they thought might prove of most " prejudice to them: so that, upon pretence that " they far exceeded the Liberties which were granted " to them, and that under the Notion of For" eigners many English separated themselves from " the Church, and join'd themselves to those Con" gregations (which possibly was in part true) the " Council-board conniv'd at, or interposed not,
" whilst the Bishops did some Acts of Restraint,
" with which those Congregations grew generally " discontented, and thought the Liberty of their " Consciences to be taken from them; which caus'd " in London much complaining of this kind, but " much more in the Diocese of Norwich, where Dr.
" Wren, the Bishop there, passionately and warmly " proceeded against them: so that many left the " Kingdom, to the lessning the wealthy Manu" facture there of Kerseys and narrow Cloths; and,
" which was worse, transporting that Mystery into " Foreign Parts.

" And that this might be sure to look like more " than what was necessary to the Civil Policy of the " Kingdom; Whereas in all former times the Am" bassadors and all foreign Ministers of State em" ployed from England into any Parts where the " Reform'd Religion was exercised, frequented their " Churches, gave all possible Countenance to their " Profession, and held Correspondence with the most " active and powerful Persons of that relation; and " particularly, the Ambassador Lieger at Paris, had " diligently and constantly frequented the Church " at Charenton, and held a fair Intercourse with " those of that Religion throughout the Kingdom,
" by which they had still received Advantage, That " People being industrious and active to get into " the Secrets of the State, and so deriving all ne" cessary Intelligence to those whom they desired to " gratify: The contrary to this was now with great " Industry practis'd, and some Advertisements, if " not Instructions, given to the Ambassadors there,
" to forbear any extraordinary Commerce with the " Men of that Profession. And the Lord Scudamore, " who was the last Ordinary Ambassador there be" fore the Beginning of this Parliament, whether by " the Inclinations of his own Nature, or by Advice " from others, not only declined going to Charen-
" ton, but furnish'd his own Chapel in his House " with such Ornaments (as Candles upon the Com" munion Table and the like) as gave great Offence
" and Umbrage to those of the Reformation there,
" who had not seen the like: besides that, he was " careful to publish upon all Occasions, by himself,
" and those who had the nearest Relation to him,
" That the Church of England look'd not on the Hugo-
" nots as a part of their Communion: which was like" wise too much, and too industriously, discours'd
" at home.

" They of the Church of England who committed " the greatest Errors this way, had undoubtedly not " the least Thoughts of making Alterations in it " towards the countenancing of Popery, as hath " been uncharitably conceiv'd; but (having too
" just Cause given them to dislike the Passion and " Licence that was taken by some Persons in the " Reformed Churches, under the Notion of Consci" ence and Religion, to the Disturbance of the Peace " of Kingdoms) unskillfully believed, that the total
" declining the Interest of that Party, where it ex" ceeded the necessary Bounds of Reformation,
" would make this Church of England look'd upon
" with more Reverence, and that thereby the com" mon Adversary, the Papist, would abate some" what of his Arrogance and Superciliousness; and 1642. " that both Parties, piously considering the Charity 18 Car. I. " which Religion should beget, might, if not unite, " yet refrain from the Bitterness and Uncharitable-" ness of Contention in Matters of Opinion, and " agree in the practical Duties of Christians and " Subjects. Thus, contracting their Considerations

" in too narrow a compass, these Men contented " themselves with their pious Intentions, without " duly weighing Objections, or the Circumstances of " Policy. And some of our own Communion who " differ'd with them in Opinion in this Point, tho'
" they were in the right, not giving, and it may be " not knowing the right Reasons, rather confirm'd " than reform'd them in their Inclinations: neither " of them discerning the true and substantial " Grounds of that Policy upon which that good " Correspondence had been founded which they " were now about to change. And so the Church " of England, not giving the same Countenance to " those of the Religion in foreign Parts which it " had formerly done, no sooner was discern'd to be " under a Cloud at home, but those of the Religion " abroad were glad of the Occasion to publish their " Malice against her, and to enter into the same " Conspiracy against the Crown, without which " they could have done little Hurt to the Church.

This Year began with the Prosecution of the Treaty lately commenc'd between the Commissioners from the Parliament and the King in Person at Ox- ford, manag'd with several Instructions, Propositions, Answers, Replies, and other Papers, recited at large in the Collections of Mr. Rushworth. The Manner of Treating is thus represented by Mr. Bul- strode Whitlock, who was one of the Parliament's Commissioners. 1642.
Treaty
continu'd at Oxford.

" The King us'd them (i. e. the Parliament's " Commissioners) with great Favour and Civility;
" and his General Rutben, and divers of his Lords
" and Officers, came frequently to their Table, and " they had very friendly Discourses and Treat" ments together. The King himself did them the " Honour sometimes to accept of part of their Wine " and Provisions which the Earl sent to him when " they had any thing extraordinary. The Commis" sioners finding Whitlock's Pen useful in the Ser" vice, did put him upon Drawing of all their Pa" pers, which were Transcribed afterwards by their " Secretaries. Their Instructions were very strict,
" and tied them up to treat with none but the King
" himself, whom they often attended at his Lodg" ings in Christ-Church, and had Access at all times
" when they desired it, and were allow'd by his Ma" jesty a very free Debate with him. He had com" monly waiting on him, when he Treated with " them, Prince Rupert and the Lord Keeper Litt- ton, the Earl of Southampton, the Lord Chief Ju" stice Banks, and several Lords of his Council, " who never debated any Matters with them, but " gave their Opinion to the King in those things " which he demanded of them, and sometimes would " put the King in mind of some particular Things, " but otherwise they did not speak at all. In this " Treaty the King manifested his great Parts and " Abilities, Strength of Reason, and Quickness of " Apprehension, with much Patience hearing what " was objected against him; wherein he allowed all " freedom, and would himself sum up the Argu" ments, and give a most clear Judgment upon " them. His Unhappiness was, that he had a bet" ter Opinion of others Judgments than of his own,
" tho' they were weaker than his own; and of this
" the Parliament's Commissioners had Experience, " to their great Trouble. They were often wait" ing on the King, and debating some Points of the " Treaty with him until Midnight before they came " to a Conclusion. Upon one of the most material
" Points they press'd his Majesty with their Reasons " and best Arguments they could use to grant what " they desired. The King said, He was fully satisf- ied; and promised to give them his Answer in Wri- ting.

1643. 19 Car. I. ting according to their Desire; but because it was then past Midnight, and too late to put it into Writing, he would have it drawn up next Morning (when he commanded them to wait on him again) and then he would give them his Answer in Writing, as it was now agreed upon. They went to their Lodgings full of joytul Hopes to receive this Answer the next Morning; and which being given, would have much conduced to a happy Issue and Success of this Treaty; and they had the King's Word for it; and they waited on him the next Morning at the Hour appointed. But instead of that Answer which they expected and were promised, the King gave them a Paper quite contrary to what was concluded the Night before, and very much tending to the breach of the Treaty. They did humbly expostulate this with his Majesty, and press'd him upon his Royal Word, and the ill consequences which they feared would follow upon this his new Paper: But the King told them, He had alter'd his Mind, and that this Paper which he now gave them was his Answer, which he was now resolv'd to make upon their last Debate. And they could obtain no other from him, which occasioned much Sadness and Trouble to them. Some of his own Friends, of whom the Commissioners enquir'd touching this Passage informed them, that after they were gone from the King, and that his Council also were gone away, some of his Bed-chamber (and they went higher) hearing from him what Answer he had promised, and doubting that it would tend to such an Issue of the Treaty as they did not wish, they being rather for the continuance of the War, they never left pressing and persuading of the King, till they had prevailed with him to change his former Resolutions, and to give Order for his Answer to be drawn as it was now delivered.

Allowing this Relation of one of the Commissioners themselves to be true and candid, we cannot but lament the unhappiness of the good King, that some of his most intimate Confidants were against his concluding a Peace; and some others, or perhaps the same, were against his obtaining an absolute Victory: Afraid he should comply least his Prerogative might be not great enough to protect them; and yet afraid he should conquer, least he might be then tempted to assume an Arbitrary Power.

But indeed in the present Case 'tis possible, that the Friends whom he consulted did really apprehend, that the more he yielded the more burthen was press'd upon him; and therefore might well endeavour to prevail, that he should never recede from an Authority sufficient to restore himself, and defend those who had faithfully adher'd to him. For the Answer to which Mr. Whitlock refers, and which was sent in a Message to both Houses April 12. was only this.

King's final Answer.

" To shew to the whole World how earnestly his Majesty longs for Peace, and that no Success shall make him desire the continuance of his Army to any other End, or for any longer time than that, and until things may be so settled, as that the Law may have a full, free and uninterrupted Course, for the Defence and Preservation of the Rights of his Majesty, both Houses and his good Subjects.

1. " As soon as his Majesty is satisfied in his first Proposition, concerning his own Revenue, Magazines, Ships and Forts, in which he desires nothing, but that the just, known, legal Rights of his Majesty (devolved to him from his Progenitors) and of the Persons trusted by him, which have been violently taken from both, be restored unto him and unto them; unless any just and legal Exceptions against any of the Persons trusted by him (which are yet unknown to his Majesty) can be made appear to him. 1643. 19 Car. I.

" 2. As soon as all the Members of both Houses shall be restored to the same capacity of Sitting and Voting in Parliament, as they had upon the first of January 1641. the same of Right belonging to them by their Birth-rights, and the free Election of those that sent them, and having been voted from them for adhering to his Majesty in these distractions; his Majesty not intending that this should extend either to the Bishops whose Votes have been taken away by Bill, or to such in whose Places, upon new Writs, new Elections have been made.

" As soon as his Majesty and both Houses may be secured from such tumultuous Assemblies, as to the great breach of the Privileges, and the high dishonour of Parliaments, have formerly assembled about both Houses, and aved the Members of the same, and occasioned two several Complaints from the Lords House, and two several Desires of that House to the House of Commons, to join in a Declaration against them; the complying with which Desire might have prevented all these miserable Distractions which have ensued. Which Security his Majesty conceives can be only settled by adjourning the Parliament to some other place, at the least 20 Miles from London, the choice of which his Majesty leaves to both Houses.

" His Majesty will most cheerfully and readily consent, that both Armies be immediately disbanded, and give a present meeting to both his Houses of Parliament, at the Time and Place, at, and to which the Parliament shall be agreed to be Adjourn'd.

As soon as the two Houses had receiv'd this Answer, they immediately recall'd their Commissioners from Oxford; and so the Treaty having continued from the 4th of March to the 15th of April, was broke off without effect; tho' the main Articles seem'd easy enough to be adjusted, and the only Question was, Who should be first and most trusted in the performance of them?

The War was to be now prosecuted with the greater fury; the most active raiser of Forces for the Parliament was Sir William Waller, who on March 19. had advanced from Bristol, and forc'd the Town of Malmesbury (garison'd for the King, and commanded by Colonel Herbert Lunsford) to surrender. After which he defeated a great Body of Welsh near Gloucester, raised and led by the Lord Herbert, Son to the Marquis of Worcester. Thence he march'd and took Chepstow, Monmouth and Hereford, and so victoriously on, till at Round-way-Down in Wiltshire he was shamefully beat, and forc'd to post up to London.

The Earl of Effex with the Parliaments main Army besieged Reading on Apr. 15. commanded by Sir Arthur Aston, who being wounded in the Batteries, was forced to substitute Colonel Fielding; he hung out a Flag, and enter'd upon a Treaty of Surrender; but while it was depending, the King in Person march'd from Wallingford to raise the Siege; but not able to gain the Pass at Caversham-bridge, he retired, and Fielding Surrender'd the Town upon Articles on April 26. for which he was shortly after by a Council of War at Oxford sentenc'd to die; but by his Majesty's Favour was repriev'd.

May 20. his Majesty sent a Message to the two Houses to renew a Treaty of Peace. — " And he requires them as they will answer to God, to himself and all the World, that they will no longer suffer their fellow Subjects to welter in each others Blood; that they would remember by whose Authority, and to what end they met in the Council; and send such an Answer to his Majesty as may open a Door to let in a firm Peace and Security to the whole Kingdom. But the Houses thought they could now depend upon their own Strength: So on April 1. they made an Ordinance for 1643. Sequestering the Estates of notorious Delinquents. And it was but in vain that the King issued his Proclamation April 7. To prohibit the Assessing, Collecting or Paying any weekly Taxes, and Seizing or Sequestering the Rents or Estates of his good Subjects, by colour of any Orders or pretended Ordinances of one or both Houses of Parliament. And the Commons cut off all correspondence between the King and them, by an Order of April 10. to prevent Spies and Intelligencers; and on May 23. they resolv'd to impeach the Queen of High-Treason, and Mr. Pym carried up the Charge to the Bar of the Lords, and died soon after, leaving this Character given by the Lord Charendon. "Mr. Pym was look'd upon as the Man of greatest Experience in Parliament, where he had serv'd very long, and was always a Man of Business, being an Officer in the Exchequer, and of a good Reputation generally; though known to be inclin'd to the Puritan Faction, yet not of those furious Resolutions against the Church as the other leading Men were, and wholly devoted to the Earl of Bedford who had nothing of that Spirit.

Pym's Death and Character.

His Funeral Sermon was Preach'd and Printed by Mr. Stephen Marshall, who compar'd him to John the Baptist, For that he was taken away violently, after but two or three Years work. On occasion of his Death the Character of him was thus continued by the same Noble Peer; "About this time the Councils at Westminster lost a principal Supporter by the Death of John Pym; who died with great Torment and Agony of a Disease unusual, and therefore the more spoken of, Morbis Pediculus, as was reported, which render'd him an Object very loathsome to those who had been most delighted with him. No Man had more to answer for the Miseries of the Kingdom, or had his Hand or Head deeper in their contrivance: And yet, I believe, they grew much higher even in his Life than he design'd. He was a Man of a private Quality and Condition of Life; his Education in the Office of the Exchequer, where he had been a Clerk, and his Parts rather acquir'd by Industry than supplied by Nature, or adorn'd by Art. He had been well known in former Parliaments, and was one of those few who had fate in many; the long intermission of Parliaments having worn out most of those who had been acquainted with the Rules and Orders observ'd in those Conventions: This gave him some Reputation and Reverence amongst those who were but new introduc'd.

"He had been most taken notice of for being concern'd and passionate in the Jealousies of Religion, and much troubled with the Countenance which had been given to those Opinions that had been imputed to Arminius; and this gave him great Authority and Interest with those who were not pleas'd with the Government of the Church, or the growing Power of the Clergy; yet himself industriously took care to be believ'd, and he profess'd to be very entire to the Doctrine and Discipline of the Church of England. In the short Parliament before this, he spoke much, and appeared to be the most leading Man; for besides the exact knowledge of the former, and Orders of that Council, which few Men had, he had a very comely and grave way of expressing himself, with great volubility of Words, natural and proper, and understood the Temper and Affections of the Kingdom as well as any Man; and had observ'd the Errors and Mistakes in Government, and knew well how to make them appear greater than they were. After the unhappy Dissolution of that Parliament, he continued for the most part about London, in Conversation and great Repute amongst those Lords who were most Strangers to the Court, and were believ'd most averse to it; in whom he improv'd all imaginable Jealousies and Discontents towards the State; and as soon as this Parliament was resolv'd to be summon'd, he was as diligent to procure such Persons to be elected as he knew to be most inclin'd to the way he meant to take.

"At the first opening of this Parliament, he appear'd passionate and prepared against the Earl of Strafford; and though in private designing he was much govern'd by Mr. Hambden and Mr. St. John, yet he seem'd to all Men to have the greatest Influence upon the House of Commons of any Man; and, in truth, I think he was at that time, and some Months after, the most popular Man, and the most able to do hurt, that hath lived in any time. Upon the first Design of softning and obliging the powerful Persons in both Houses, when it was resolv'd to make the Earl of Bedford Lord High Treasurer of England, the King likewise intended to make Mr. Pym Chancellor of the Exchequer; for which he received his Majesty's Promise, and made a return of a suitable profession of his Service and Devotion; and thereupon the other being no secret, somewhat declined from that sharpness in the House which was more Popular than any Man's, and made some Overtures to provide for the Glory and Splendor of the Crown; in which he had so ill Success, that his Interest and Reputation there visibly abated, and he found that he was much better able to do hurt than good, which wrought very much upon him to Melancholly, and complaint of the violence and discomposure of the Peoples Affections and Inclinations. In the end, whether upon the Death of the Earl of Bedford, he despaired of that Preferment, or whether he was guilty of any thing, which upon his conversion to the Court, he thought might be discover'd to his damage, or for pure want of Courage, he suffer'd himself to be carried by those who would not follow him, and so continued in the Head of those who made the most desperate Propositions.

"In the prosecution of the Earl of Strafford, his Carriage and Language was such as express'd much personal Animosities; and he was accus'd of having practis'd some Arts in it not worthy a good Man, as an Irish-man of very mean and low Condition afterwards acknowledg'd, that being brought to him as an Evidence of one part of the Charge against the Lord Lieutenant, in a particular of which a Person of so vile Quality would not be reasonably thought a competent Informer; Mr. Pym gave him Money to buy him a Sattin Suit and Cloak, in which Equipage he appeared at the Trial, and gave his Evidence; which, if true, may make many other things which were confidently reported afterwards of him to be believ'd; as that he received a great sum of Money from the French Ambassadour (which hath been before mention'd) to hinder the Transportation of those Regiments of Ireland into Flanders upon the disbanding that Army there, which had been prepared by the Earl of Strafford for the Business of Scotland; in which, if his Majesty's Directions and Commands had not been diverted and contradicted by the Houses, many do believe the Rebellion in Ireland had not happen'd.

"Certain it is, that his power of doing shrewd Turns was extraordinary, and no less in doing good Offices for particular Persons; and that he did preserve many from Censure who were under the severe Displeasure of the Houses, and look'd upon as eminent Delinquents; and the Quality of many of them made it believ'd, that he had sold that Protection for valuable Considerations. From the time of his being accus'd of High Treason by the King, with the Lord Kimbolton, and the other Members, he never entertained Thoughts of Moderation, but always oppos'd all Overtures of Peace and Accommodation; and when the Earl of Effex was dispos'd, the last Summer, by those Lords to an Inclination towards a Treaty, as is before remember'd, Mr. Pym's Power and Dexterity wholly changed him, and wrought him to that 1643. " that Temper which he afterwards swerv'd not 19 Car. I. " from. He was wonderfully sollicitous for the " Scots coming in to their Assistance, tho' his Indif-

" position of Body was so great, that it might well " have made another Impression upon his Mind.
" During his Sickness he was a very sad Spectacle;
" but none being admitted to him who had not " concurr'd with him, it is not known what his last " Thoughts and Considerations were. He died to" wards the end of December, before the Scots en-" ter'd; and was buried with wonderful Pomp and " Magnificence, in that place where the Bones of " our English Kings and Princes are committed to " their Rest.

Soon after died another Leader of the House of Commons, Mr. Hampden, who went out with a Party of the Buckinghamshire Forces to oppose Prince Rupert, who made frequent Incurfions into the Parliament Quarters; and engaging with him in Chal-grave-Field, was routed and wounded June 18. and died of his Wounds June 24. His Character thus given by the same Author. " Mr. Hampden was a " Man of much greater Cunning, and it may be of " the most discerning Spirit, and of the greatest " Address and Insinuation to bring any thing to " pass which he desired, of any Man of that time,
" and who laid the Design deepest. He was a Gen" tleman of a good Extraction and a fair Fortune,
" who from a Life of great Pleasure and Licence,
" had on a sudden retired to extraordinary Sobriety
" and Strictness, and yet retain'd his usual Cheer" fulness and Affability; which, together with the " Opinion of his Wisdom and Justice, and the Cou" rage he had shew'd in opposing the Ship-Money, " rais'd his Reputation to a very great height, not " only in Buckinghamshire where he lived, but gene" rally throughout the Kingdom. He was not a " Man of many Words, and rarely begun the Dis" course, or made the first Entrance upon any Busi" ness that was assu'd; but a very weighty Spea" ker: and after he had heard a full Debate, and " observed how the House was like to be inclined,
" took up the Argument, and shortly, and clearly,
" and craftily so stated it, that he commonly con" ducted it to the Conclusion he desired: and if he " found he could not do that, he was never with" out the Dexterity to divert the Debate to another " time, and to prevent the determining any thing " in the Negative which might prove inconvenient " in the future. He made so great a shew of Civi" lity, and Modesty, and Humility, and always of " misfrustrating his own Judgment, and esteeming his " with whom he conferr'd for the present, that he " seem'd to have no Opinions or Resolutions, but " such as he contracted from the Information and " Instruction he receiv'd upon the Discourses of o" thers, whom he had a wonderful Art of Govern" ing, and leading into his Principles and Inclina" tions, while they believed that he wholly depen" ded upon their Counsel and Advice. No Man " had ever a greater Power over himself, or was less
" the Man that he seem'd to be; which shortly af" ter appear'd to every body, when he cared less " to keep on the Masque. His Death is thus re" ported, and his Character thus farther continued by " the same noble Author: " Mr. Hampden being shot " into the Shoulder with a Brace of Bullets, which " brake the Bone, within three Weeks after died " with extraordinary Pain, to as great a Consterna" tion of all that Party, as if their whole Party had " been defeated or cut off. Many Men observed, " that the Field in which the Skinnish was, and " upon which Mr. Hampden received his Death's " Wound, Chalgrave-Field, was the same place in " which he had first executed the Ordinance of the " Militia, and engaged that County, in which his " Reputation was very great in this Rebellion: and " it was confess'd by the Prisoners that were taken " that Day, and acknowledged by all, that upon " the Alarm that Morning, after their Quarters 1643. " were beaten up, he was exceeding sollicitous to 19 Car. I. " draw Forces together to pursue the Enemy; and " being a Colonel of Foot, put himself among those " Horse as a Volunteer, who were first ready; and " that when the Prince made a Stand, all the Offi" cers were of opinion to stay till their Body came " up, and he alone (being second to none but the " General himself in the Observance and Applicati" on of all Men) perswaded and prevailed with " them to advance; so violently did his Fate carry " him to pay the Mulfct in the place where he had " committed the Transgression about a Year be" fore.

" He was a Gentleman of a good Family in Buckinghamshire, and born to a fair Fortune, and of a " most civil and affable Deportment. In his En" trance into the World, he indulged to himself all " the Licence in Sports and Exercises, and Compan-
" ny, which were used by Men of the most jolly " Conversation. Afterwards he retir'd to a more " reserv'd and melancholly Society, yet preserving " his own natural Cheerfulness and Vivacity, and " above all, a flowing Courtesie to all Men: Tho'
" they who conversed nearly with him found him
" growing into a Dislike of the Ecclesiastical Go" vernment of the Church, yet most believ'd it ra" ther a Dislike of some Church-men, and of some " Introducements of theirs, which he apprehended " might disquiet the publick Peace. He was rather " of Reputation in his own Country, than of pub" lick Discourse or Fame in the Kingdom, before " the business of Ship-money; but then he grew the " Argument of all Tongues, every Man enquiring
" Who and What he was that durst, at his own " Charge, support the Liberty and Property of the " Kingdom, and rescue his Country, as he thought,
" from being made a Prey to the Court. His Car" riage, throughout this Agitation, was with that " rare Temper and Modesty, that they who watch'd " him narrowly to find some Advantage against " his Person, to make him less resolute in his Cause,
" were compell'd to give him a just Testimony:
" And the Judgment that was given against him in" finitely more advanced him than the Service for " which it was given. When this Parliament be" gun (being return'd Knight of the Shire for the " County where he liv'd) the Eyes of all Men were " fixed upon him as their Patria Pater, and the Pi" lot that must steer the Vessel through the Tem"pests and Rocks which threatned it. And I am " perswaded his Power and Interest at that time " was greater to do Good or Hurt than any Man's " in the Kingdom, or than any Man of his Rank
" hath had in any time: for his Reputation of Ho" nesty was universal, and his Affections seem'd so
" publickly guided, that no corrupt or private Ends
" could byass them.

" He was of that rare Affability and Temper in " Debate, and of that seeming Humility and Sub" mission of Judgment, as if he brought no Opini" on of his own with him but a Desire of Informa" tion and Instruction; yet he had so subtle a way " of Interrogating, and, under the Notions of " Doubts, insinuating his Objections, that he infu" sed his own Opinions into those from whom he " pretended to learn, and receive them. And even " with them who were able to preserve themselves " from his Infusions, and discern'd those Opinions
" to be fix'd in him with which they could not com" ply, he always left the Character of an ingenious " and conscientious Person. He was indeed a very " wise Man, and of great Parts, and possess'd with " the most absolute Spirit of Popularity, and the " most absolute Faculties to govern the People, of " any Man I ever knew. For the first Year of the " Parliament, he seem'd rather to moderate and " soften the violent and distemper'd Humours, than " to inflame them. But wise and dispassion'd Men " plainly discern'd, that that Moderation proceeded " from Prudence, and Observation that the Season " was 1643. " was not ripe, rather than that he approv'd of the 19 Car. I. " Moderation, and that he begat many Opinions " and Motions, the Education whereof he committed " to other Men; so far disguising his own Designs, " that he seem'd seldom to wish more than " was concluded; and in many gross Conclusions,

 " which would hereafter contribute to Designs not " yet set on foot, when he found them sufficiently " bark'd by majority of Voices, he would withdraw " himself before the Question, that he might seem " not to consent to so much visible unreasonableness, " which produc'd as great a Doubt in some
 " as it did Approbation in others of his Integrity.
 " What Combination soever had been originally with " the Scots for the Invasion of England, and what " farther was enter'd into afterwards in favour of " them, and to advance any Alteration of the Government " in Parliament, no Man doubts was at least with the " Privity of this Gentleman.

" After he was among those Members accused by " the King of High-Treason he was much alter'd, his " Nature and Carriage seeming fiercer than it did " before: And without question, when he first drew " his Sword he threw away the Scabbard; for he " passionately oppos'd the Overture made by the " King for a Treaty from Nottingham, and as eminently " all Expedients that might have produc'd any " Accommodations in this that was at Oxford; and " was principally reliev'd on to prevent any Intensions
 " which might be made into the Earl of Essex " towards Peace, or to render them ineffectual if " they were made; and was indeed much more " reliev'd on by that Party than the General himself.
 " In the first entrance into the Troubles, he undertook " the Command of a Regiment of Foot, and performed
 " the Duty of a Colonel upon all occasions most " punctually. He was very temperate in Diet, and a " supreme Governour over all his Passions and " Affections, and had thereby a great Power over " other Mens. He was of an Industry and Vigilance
 " not to be tired out or wearied by the most laborious;
 " and of a Force not to be impos'd upon by the most " subtle or Sharp, and of a personal Courage equal " to his best Parts; so that he was an Enemy not " to be with'd wherever he might have been made " a Friend, and as much to be apprehend'd where " he was so as any Man could deserve to be: And " therefore his Death was no less pleasing to the one " Party than it was condoled in the other. In a " Word, what was said of Cinna might well be " applied to him; he had a Head to contrive and " a Tongue to persuade, and a Hand to execute " any Mischief. His Death therefore seem'd to be " a great deliverance to the Nation.

Her Majesty after her arrival from Holland had lain some time at York, sending Arms and Ammunition to Oxford, and resolv'd now to go thither to attend her Royal Consort, by whom she was met at Edgbill July 12. having been absent from him ever since Feb. 23. 1641.

On July 5. there had been a Battle at Lansdown, between the King's Forces commanded by Prince Maurice and the Earl of Carrmarvon, and the Parliament led by Sir Will. Waller. Either Party was sufficiently tired and hatter'd; Waller in the Night march'd away to Bath, and in the Morning the King's Army found themselves possess'd entirely of the Field and the Dead, and all other Ensigns of Victory. The Lord Clarendon observes, " That in this Battle, on the King's " part there were more Officers and Gentlemen " of Quality slain than common Men, and more " hurt than slain. That which would have " clouded any Victory, and made the Loss of " others less spoken of, was the Death of Sir
 " Bevil Greenvil: He was indeed an excellent " Person, whose Activity, Interest and Reputation " was the Foundation of what had been done in " Cornwall, and his Temper and Affections so " publick that no Secret which he could make " any Impression in his own Example kept o-1643. " thers from taking any thing ill, or at least 19 Car. I. " seeming to do so. In a Word, a brighter " Courage and a gentler Disposition were never " mixed together to make the most chearful

 " and innocent Conversation.

Many of those who sided with the Parliament, seeing the sad Effects of Civil War, began now to desert them, and to reconcile themselves to his Majesty's Favour and Service, as Colonel Goring at Portsmouth, Sir Hugh Cholmley Governour of Scarborough, and even Sir John Hotham Governour of Hull, who had been soften'd to the Royal Interest by the Addresses of the Lord Digby; and by degrees he and his Son Captain Hotham were more and more suspected by the Parliament, and were both seized and carried to the Tower, and without Mercy both beheaded. It was thought a Judgment on Sir John Hotham that being the first Man declared Traytor by the King, he was the first Man put to Death for a Traytor to the Parliament. His Character is thus deliver'd. " The Man was of a fearful " Nature and perplexed Understanding, and " could better resolve upon deliberation than " on a suddain; and many were of opinion,
 " that if he had been prepared dexterously
 " before-hand, and in confidence he would " have conform'd to the King's Pleasure; for
 " he was Master of a noble Fortune in Land,
 " and rich in Money; of a very ancient " Family and well allied; his Affections
 " to the Government very good; and no Man " less desired to see the Nation involved in " a Civil War than he; and when he accepted
 " this Employment from the Parliament, he " never imagin'd it would engage him in " Rebellion, but believ'd that the King " would find it necessary to comply with " the Advice of his two Houses, and that " the preserving that Magazine from being " possess'd by him, would likewise prevent " any possible Rupture into Arms. — When " he stood on the Wall of Hull and talk'd " with the King who demand'd Possession,
 " the King telling him, " That this act of " Disobedience in him would probably " bring many Miseries upon the Kingdom " and much loss of Blood, which it should " lie upon his Conscience to prevent. Sir
 " John with much distraction in his Looks " talk'd confusedly of the Trust he had " from the Parliament, then fell on his " Knees and wish'd, That God would " bring Confusion upon Him and His, if " he were not a loyal and faithful Subject " to his Majesty.

Mr. Waller, Tompkins, Challoner and others had enter'd into a more expeditious Design to seize some leading Members, to surprize the City, and bring up the King to dissolve the Parliament. But they were all unhappily discover'd, tried and condemn'd; Tompkins and Challoner were hang'd, but Mr. Waller having been a Member well affected to the Cause, and one of the Commissioners in the Treaty at Oxford, was Repriev'd by General Effex, and after a Year's Imprisonment purchas'd his Pardon for ten thousand Pounds; and travelling into France improv'd himself in good Letters, and for the rest of his Life, which was very long, he chose rather to be admir'd for a Poet, than to be envied for a Politician. And several of the greatest Lords as well as Commons, came over to the King; but many of them thinking themselves to be slighted or suspected, again cool'd in their Loyalty, and return'd to be Enemies or Neuters. The two potent Earls of Holland and Bedford receded from the Parliament about August 25. and waited on the King at Oxford, with great professions of Duty and Allegiance; yet soon after they deserted the King, and took refuge again at Westminster.
 The Earl of Clare did the same.

The two Houses to strengthen themselves against the growing Intereſt of the King, resolv'd to send for Assistance into Scotland, by Commissioners chose out of both Houses, to go and negotiate a Treaty of Alliance, who came to Edinburgh Aug. 7. and brought with them a Declaration of the Lords and Commons of the Parliament of England to the Kingdom and Estates of Scotland, and another to the of it to the two Houses at Westminster, where it was consented to Aug. 28. order'd to be printed and publish'd Sept. 21. and the next Day taken by the House of Commons and Assembly of Divines. And tho' his Majesty published a Proclamation against taking of it, dated Octob. 19. it was by degrees impos'd and rigorously exacted of all People, as they would escape the Brand and the Penalty of Malignants. And upon this Confederacy the Scots Army enter'd England at Berwick Jan. 15. and soon after was publish'd The Declaration of the Kingdoms of England and Scotland joined in Arms for the Vindication and Defence of their Religion, Liberties and Laws against the Popish Prelati-cal and Malignant Party, by the Honourable Houses of Parliament in England, and the Honourable Convention of Estates of the Kingdom of Scotland.

Siege of Bristol.

In the mean time the chief Actions in the Field were the Siege of Bristol by Prince Rupert, who attack'd it with so much Bravery, that he brought the Governour Colonel Fienes to a Parley and a Surrender upon Articles July 22. Upon this encouragement the King besieged Gloucester Aug. 10. which was obstinately defended till on Sept. 5. upon the advance of Essex's recruited Army, the King was forced to raise the Siege with great loss of Time, Men and Honour. And at Newberry Sept. 20. the Earl of Essex fell on the King's Army, who maintained the Fight from seven in the Morning till eight at Night, when the King suffering much the greater Loss, drew off his Forces and marched to Oxford, having lost three excellent Persons of Quality, the Earl of Carnarvon, the Earl of Sunderland and the Lord Viscount Falkland. Their Characters are thus drawn by the admirable Hand of the Lord Clarendon. "Here fell
 "the Earl of Sunderland, a Lord of great Fortune, "tender Years (being not above three and twenty "Years of Age) and an early Judgment; who hav"ing no Command in the Army, attended upon "the King's Person, under the obligation of Ho"nour, and putting himself that Day in the King's "Troop a Volunteer, before they came to Charge
 "was taken away by a Cannon Bullet.

1st. Battle of Newberry.

Character
 of Lord
 Sunder-
 land.

"This Day also fell the Earl of Carnarvon, who "after he had charg'd and routed a Body of the "Enemies Horse, coming carelessly back by some of "the scatter'd Troopers, was by one of them who "knew him, run through the Body with a Sword, "of which he died within an Hour. He was a Per"son with whose great Parts and Virtue the World "was not enough acquainted. Before the War, tho'
 "his Education was adorn'd by Travel, and an ex"act observation of the Manners of more Nations "than our common Travellers use to visit (for he "had, after the View of Spain, France and most "parts of Italy, spent some time in Turkey and those "Eastern Countries) he seem'd to be wholly de"lighted with those looser Exercises of Pleasure, "Hunting, Hawking and the like; in which the "Nobility of that time too much delighted to excel.
 "After the Troubles began, having the Command "of the first or second Regiment of Horse that was "rais'd for the King's Service, he wholly gave him"self up to the Office and Duty of a Soldier, no "Man more diligently Obeying or more dexterous"ly Commanding; for he was not only of a very "keen Courage in the exposing his Person, but an "excellent Discerner and Pursuer of Advantage up"on his Enemy. He had a Mind and Understand"ing very present in the Article of Danger, which "is a rare benefit in that Profession. Those Infr"mities and that Licence which he had formerly in"dulg'd to himself, he put off with Severity, when "others thought them excusable under the Notion "of a Soldier. He was a great lover of Justice, and "prais'd it then most deliberately when he had "Power to do wrong; and so strict in the observa"tion of his Word and Promise, as a Commander, 1643. "that he could not be perswaded to stay in the West,

 "when he found it not in his Power to perform the "Agreement he had made with Dorchester and Wey"mouth. If he had lived, he would have proved a "great Ornament to that Profession, and an excel"lent Soldier, and by his Death the King found a
 "a sensible weakness in his Army.

The Lord Falkland was dissuaded from exposing himself in the Battle, being only a Civil Officer; but he said he was weary of the Times, foresaw they would be worse, and believ'd he should be happily delivered from them. In the Morning he called for a clean Shirt, saying jocosely, that If his Body fell the Rebels should not find it in foul Linen. His Character was thus drawn by the Lord Clarendon. "The Lord

"Falkland was wonderfully belov'd by all that knew "him, as a Man of excellent Parts, of a Wit so sharp "and a Nature so sincere, that nothing could be "more lovely. The King knew him to be of good "Esteem in the House, and good Affections to his "Service and the Quiet of the Kingdom. No Man "could be more surpriz'd than he was, vvhhen the "first Intimation was made to him of the King's "Purpose. (i. e. to make him Secretary of State) He "had never propos'd any such thing to himself, nor "had any veneration for the Court, but only such "a Loyalty to the King as the Law required from "him. And he had naturally a wonderful Reve"rence for Parliaments, as believing them most fol-"licitous for Justice, the violation vvhereof in the "least degree he could not forgive any mortal Po"wer; and it was only his Observation of the Dif-
 "ingenuity and want of Integrity in this Parlia"ment which lessened that Reverence to it, and had
 "dispos'd him to cross and oppose their Designs.
 "He was so totally unacquainted with Business and "the Forms of it, that he did believe really he could "not execute the Office with any sufficiency. But "there were two Considerations that made most "Impression upon him; the one, least the World "should believe, that his own Ambition had pro"cured this Promotion, and that he had therefore "appeared signally in the House to oppose those Pro"ceedings, that he might thereby render himself
 "Gracious to the Court; the other, least the King
 "should expect such a Submission and Resignation "of himself, and his own Reason and Judgment to "his Commands, as he should never give or pretend "to forgive: For he was so severe an Adorer of "Truth, that he could as easily have given himself
 "leave to steal as to dissemble, or to suffer any "Man to think that he would do any thing which "he resolv'd not to do, which he thought a more "mischievous kind of Lying than a positive Aver-"ring what could be most easily contradicted.

Character
 of Lord Falkland.

On the occasion of his Death his Character was thus continued by the same excellent Writer. "In "this unhappy Battle was slain the Lord Viscount "Falkland, a Person of such prodigious Parts of "Learning and Knowledge, of that inimitable "sweetness and delight in Conversation, of so flow"ing and obliging a Humanity and Goodness to "Mankind, and of that primitive Simplicity and "Integrity of Lite, that if there were no other "Brand upon this odious and accursed Civil War "than that single Loss, it must be most infamous "and execrable to all Posterity.

Time mori, post te, solo non posse dolere.

"Before this Parliament, his condition of Life was "so happy, that it was hardly capable of improve"ment. Before he came to be twenty Years of "Age, he was Master of a noble Fortune, which des"cended to him by the Gift of a Grandfather,
 "without passing through his Father or Mother,
 "who were then both alive, and not well enough
 "contented to find themselves pass'd by in the "Deficent. His Education for some Years had been "in Ireland, where his Father was Lord Deputy;

so that when he returned into England, to the possession of his Fortune, he was unintangled with any Acquaintance or Friends which usually grow up by the custom of Conversation, and therefore was to make a pure election of his Company; which he chose by other Rules than were prescribed to the young Nobility of that Time. And it cannot be denied, though he admitted some few to his Friendship for the agreeableness of their Natures, and their undoubted Affection to him, that his Familiarity and Friendship, for the most part, was with Men of the most eminent and sublime Parts, and of untouch'd Reputation in point of Integrity, and such Men had a Title to his Bosom.

He was a great cherisher of Wit, and Fancy, and good Parts in any Man; and if he found them clouded with Poverty or Want, a most liberal and bountiful Patron towards them, even above his Fortune; of which, in those Administrations he was such a Dispenser, as if he had been trusted with it to such Uses, and if there had been the least of Vice in his Expence he might have been thought too prodigal. He was constant and pertinacious in whatsoever he resolv'd to do, and not to be wearied by any pains that were necessary to that end. And therefore having once resolv'd not to see London, which he loved above all places, till he had perfectly learn'd the Greek Tongue, he went to his own House in the Country, and pursued it with that indefatigable Industry, that it will not be believ'd in how short a time he was Master of it, and accurately read all the Greek Historians.

In this time, his House being within little more than ten Miles of Oxford, he contracted familiarity and friendship with the most polite and accurate Men of that University; who found such an immenseness of Wit, and such a solidity of Judgment in him, so infinite a Fancy, bound in by a most Logical Ratiocination, such a vast Knowledge that he was not ignorant in any thing, yet such an excessive Humility as if he had known nothing, that they frequently resorted and dwelt with him as in a College situated in a purer Air; so that his House was a University in a less Volume, whether they came not so much for Repose as Study, and to examine and refine those grosser Propositions which Laziness and Consent made current in vulgar Conversation.

Many Attempts were made upon him by the instigation of his Mother (who was a Lady of another Perswasion in Religion, and of a most masculine Understanding, allay'd with the Passion and Infirmities of her own Sex) to pervert him in his Piety to the Church of England, and to reconcile him to that of Rome; which they prosecuted with the more confidence, because he declin'd no opportunity or occasion of Conference with those of that Religion, whether Priests or Laicks, having diligently studied the Controversies, and exactly read all, or the choicest of the Greek and Latin Fathers, and having a Memory so stupendous that he remember'd on all Occasions whatsoever he read. And he was so great an Enemy to that Passion and Uncharitableness which he saw produced by difference of Opinion, in Matters of Religion, that in all those Disputations with Priests, and others of the Roman Church, he affected to manifest all possible Civility to their Persons and Estimation of their Parts; which made them retain still some hope of his Reduction, even when they had given over offering farther Reasons to him to that purpose. But this Charity towards them was much lessen'd, and any Correspondence with them quite declined, when, by sinister Arts, they had corrupted his two younger Brothers, being both Children, and stolen them from his House, and Transported them beyond Seas, and perverted his Sisters; upon which occasion he writ two large Discourses against the principal Positions of that Religion, with that sharpness of Style, and full weight of Reason, that the Church is deprived of great Jewels in the concealment of them, and that they are not publish'd to the World.

He was superior to all those Passions and Affections which attend vulgar Minds, and was guilty of no other Ambition than of Knowledge, and to be reputed a lover of all good Men, and that made him too much a Contemner of those Arts, which must be indulged in the Transactions of Humane Affairs. In the last short Parliament he was a Burgess in the House of Commons; and from the Debates which were there managed with all imaginable Gravity and Sobriety, he contracted such a Reverence to Parliaments, that he thought it really impossible they could ever produce Mischief or Inconvenience to the Kingdom, or that the Kingdom could be tolerably happy in the intermission of them. And from the unhappy and unseasonable Dissolution of that Convention, he harbour'd, it may be, some jealousy and prejudice to the Court, towards which he was not before immoderately inclin'd; his Father having wasted a full Fortune there, in those Offices and Employments by which other Men use to obtain a greater. He was chosen again this Parliament to serve in the same Place, and in the beginning of it, declared himself very sharply and severely against those Exorbitances which had been most grievous to the State; for he was so rigid an observer of established Laws and Rules, that he could not endure the least breach or deviation from them; and thought no Mischief so intolerable as the Presumption of Ministers of State, to break positive Rules for Reasons of State, or Judges to transgress known Laws upon the Title of Conveniency or Necessity; which made him so severe against the Earl of Strafford and the Lord Finch, contrary to his natural Gentleness and Temper; insomuch, as they who did not know his Composition to be as free from Revenge as it was from Pride, thought that the sharpness to the former, might proceed from the Memory of some Unkindnesses, not without a mixture of Injustice from him towards his Father. But without doubt he was free from those Temptations, and in both Cases was only misled by the Authority of those who he believed understood the Laws perfectly; of which himself was utterly ignorant; and if the assumption, which was then scarce controverted had been true, That an Endeavour to overthrow the Fundamental Laws of the Kingdom was Treason, a strict Understanding might make reasonable Conclusions to satisfy his own Judgment, from the exorbitant parts of their several Charges.

The great Opinion he had of the Uprightness and Integrity of those Persons who appeared most Active, especially of Mr. Hambden, kept him longer from suspecting any Design against the Peace of the Kingdom; and tho' he differ'd from them commonly in Conclusions, he believed long, their Purposes were honest. When he grew better inform'd what was Law, and discern'd in them a desire to controul that Law by a Vote of one or both Houses, no Man more oppos'd those Attempts, and gave the adverse Party more trouble by Reason and Argumentation; insomuch as he was by degrees look'd upon as an Advocate for the Court, to which he contributed so little, that he declined those Addresses, and even those Invitations which he was oblig'd almost by Civility to entertain. And he was so jealous of the least Imagination that he should incline to Prejudgment, that he affected even a Moroseness to the Court and to the Courtiers, and left nothing 1643. 19 Car. I. " undone which might prevent and divert the King's or Queen's Favour towards him, but the deserving it. For when the King sent for him once or twice to speak with him, and to give him Thanks for his excellent Comportment in those Councils, which his Majesty graciously termed Doing him Service, his Answers were more negligent and less Satisfactory than might be expected; as if he car'd only that his Actions should be Just, not that they should be Acceptable, and that his Majesty should think that they proceeded only from the impulsion of Conscience, without any sympathy in his Affections; which from a Stoical and sullen Nature might not have been misinterpreted; yet, from a Person of so perfect a Habit, of generous and obsequious Compliance with all good Men, might very well have been interpreted by the King as more than an ordinary averfeness to his Service; so that he took more Pains, and more forc'd his Nature to Actions unagreeable and unpleasant to it, that he might not be thought to incline to the Court, than most Men have done to procure an Office there. And if any thing but not doing his Duty, could have kept him from receiving a Testimony of the King's Grace and Trust at that time, he had not been called to his Council; not that he was in truth averf from receiving publick Employment, for he had a great devotion to the King's Person, and had before us'd some small Endeavour to be recommended to him for a Foreign Negotiation, and had once a desire to be sent Ambassador into France; but he abhor'd an Imagination or Doubt should sink into the Thoughts of any Man, that in the discharge of his Trust and Duty in Parliament, he had any bias to the Court, or that the King himself should apprehend, that he looked for a Reward for being Honest.

" For this reason, when he heard it first whispered, that the King had a purpose to make him a Privy Counsellor, for which there was in the beginning no other ground, but because he was known sufficient (Haud semper errat fama, aliquando & eligit) he resolv'd to decline it; and at last suffer'd himself only to be over-ruled, by the Advice and Persuasions of his Friends to submit to it. Afterwards when he found that the King intended to make him Secretary of State, he was positive to refuse it; declaring to his Friends, That he was most unfit for it, and that he must either do that which would be great disquiet to his own Nature, or leave that undone which was most necessary to be done by one that was honour'd with that Place: For the most just and honest Men did, every Day, that which he could not give himself leave to do.

" And indeed he was so exact and strict an observer of Justice and Truth, that he believ'd those necessary Condescensions and Applications to the weakness of other Men, and those Arts and Insinuations which are necessary for Discoveries and prevention of ill, would be in him a declension from his own Rules of Life; though he acknowledged them fit, and absolutely necessary to be practiced in those Employments. He was, in truth, so precise in the practick Principles he prescribed himself (to all others he was as indulgent) as if he had lived in Republica Platonis, non in fœce Romuli.

" Two Reasons prevail'd with him to receive the Seals, and but for those he had resolutely avoided them. The first, the Consideration that his refusal might bring some blemish upon the King's Affairs, and that Men would have believ'd, that he had refused so great an Honour and Trust, because he must have been with it oblig'd to do somewhat else not justifiable. And this he made matter of Conscience; since he knew the King made choice of him, before 1643. 19 Car. I. " other Men, especially because he thought him more Honest than other Men. The other was, lest he might be thought to avoid it out of fear to do an ungracious thing to the House of Commons, who were sorely troubled at the displacing Sir Harry Vane, whom they look'd upon as removed for having done them those Offices they stood in need of; and the Disdain of so popular an Incumbrance wrought upon him next to the other.

" For as he had a full Appetite of Fame by just and generous Actions, so he had an equal contempt of it by any servile Expedients; and he so much the more consented to, and approv'd the Justice upon Sir Harry Vane, in his own private Judgment, by how much he surpass'd most Men in the Religious Observation of a Trust, the Violation whereof he would not admit of any Excuse for.

" For these Reasons, he submitted to the King's Command, and became his Secretary, with as humble and devoted an Acknowledgment of the greatness of the Obligation as could be express'd, and as true a sense of it in his Heart. Yet two things he could never bring himself to, whilst he continued in that Office, that was to his Death; for which he was contented to be Reproached, as for omissions in a most necessary part of his place.

" The one, employing of Spies, or giving any Countenance or Entertainment to them. I do not mean such Emisseries as with danger would venture to view the Enemies Camp, and bring intelligence of their Number, or Quartering, or any Particulars that such an Observation can comprehend; but those, who by communication of Guilt, or Dissimulation of Manners, wind themselves into such Trusts and Secrets as enable them to make Discoveries. The other, the Liberty of opening Letters, upon a suspicion that they might contain Matter of dangerous Consequence. For the first he would say, such Instruments must be void of all Ingenuity and common Honesty, before they could be of Use, and afterwards they could never be fit to be credited: And that no single Preservation could be worth so general a Wound and Corruption of Humane Society, as the cherishing such Persons would carry with it. The last he thought such a violation of the Law of Nature, that no Qualification by Office could justify him in the Trespass; and though he was convinc'd by the Necessity and Iniquity of the Time, that those Advantages of Information were not to be declined, and were necessarily to be practiced, he found means to put it off from himself, whilst he confess'd he needed Excuse and Pardon for the Omission; so unwilling he was to resign any part of good Nature to an Obligation in his Office.

" In all other Particulars he fill'd his Place with great Sufficiency, being well vers'd in Languages, to understand any that are used in Business, and to make himself again understood. To speak of his Integrity and his high Disdain of any Bait that might seem to look towards Corruption, in tanto viro, injuria virtutum fuerit. Some sharp Expressions he us'd against the Archbishop of Canterbury, and his concurring in the first Bill to take away the Votes of Bishops in the House of Peers, gave occasion to some to believe, and opportunity to others to conclude and publish, That he was no Friend to the Church and the established Government of it; and troubled his very Friends much, who were more confident of the contrary, than prepar'd to answer the Allegations.

" The Truth is, he had unhappily contracted some prejudice to the Archbishop; and having observ'd his Passion, when, it may be, multiplicity of 1643. 19 Car. I. " Business, or other indisposition had possessed him, did with him less intangled and engaged in the Business of the Court or State: though I speak it knowingly, he had a singular estimation and reverence of his great Learning and confessed Integrity; and really thought his own letting himself loose to those Expressions which imply'd a disesteem of the Archbishop, or at least an acknowledgment of his Infirmities, would enable him to shelter him from part of the Storm he saw raised for his Destruction, which he abominated with his Soul.
" Busi-

" The giving his Consent to the first Bill for the displacing the Bishops, did proceed from two Grounds: The first, his not understanding then the Original of their Right and Suffrage there; the other, an Opinion that the Combination against the whole Government of the Church by Bishops was so violent and furious, that a less Composition than the dispensing with their intermeddling in Secular Affairs, would not preserve the Order. And he was persuaded to this by the profession of many Persons of Honour, who declared, they did desire the one, and would not then press the other; which, in that Particular, misled many Men. But when his Observation and Experience made him discern more of their Intentions than he before suspected, with great frankness he opposed the second Bill that was preferred for that purpose, and had, without scruple, the Order it self in perfect Reverence, and thought too great Encouragement could not possibly be given to Learning, nor too great Rewards to Learned Men. He was never in the least degree sway'd or mov'd by the Objections which were made against that Government in the Church (holding them most ridiculous) or affected to the other, which those Men fancied to themselves.

" He had a Courage of the most clear and keen Temper, and so far from Fear that he seem'd not without some Appetite of Danger, and therefore upon any occasion of Action, he always engaged his Person in those Troops which he thought, by the forwardness of the Commanders to be most like to be farthest engaged; and in such Encounters he had about him an extraordinary Cheerfulness, without at all affecting the execution that usually attended them, in which he took no delight, but took pains to prevent it, where it was not by Resistance made necessary; insomuch, that at Edgehill, when the Enemy was routed, he was like to have incur'd great Peril by interposing to save those who had thrown away their Arms, and against whom, it may be, others were more fierce for their having thrown them away; so that a Man might think, he came into the Field chiefly out of curiosity to see the Face of Danger, and Charity to prevent the shedding of Blood. Yet in his natural Inclination he acknowledged he was addicted to the Profession of a Soldier; and shortly after he came to his Fortune, before he was of Age, he went into the Low Countries, with a Resolution of procuring Command, and to give himself up to it; from which he was diverted by the complete inactivity of that Summer: So he return'd into England, and shortly after enter'd upon that vehement course of Study we mentioned before, till the first alarm from the North; then again he made ready for the Field, and though he received some repulse in the Command of a Troop of Horse, of which he had a Promise, he went a Volunter with the Earl of Essex.

" From the entrance into this unnatural War, his natural Cheerfulness and Vivacity grew clouded, and a kind of Sadness and Dejection of Spirit stole upon him, which he had never been used to: yet being one of those who believed that one Battle would end all Differences, and that there would be so great a Victory on one side, that the other would be compelled to submit to any conditions from the Victor (which Supposition and Conclusion generally sunk into the Minds of most Men, and prevented the looking after many Advantages that might then have been laid hold of) he resisted those Indispositions, Et in luctu, bellorum inter remedia erat. But after the King's return from Brainsford, and the furious Resolution of the two Houses not to admit any Treaty for Peace, those Indispositions which had before touch'd him grew into a perfect habit of uncheerfulness; and he who had been so exactly easy and affable to all Men, that his Face and Countenance was always present and vacant to his Company, and held any cloudiness, and less pleasantness of the Visage, a kind of Rudeness or Incivility, became on a sudden less communicable, and thence very sad, pale, and exceedingly affected with the Spleen. In his Cloaths and Habit, which he had minded before, always with more Neatness, Industry and Expence, than is usual to so great a Soul, he was now only Incurious but too Negligent; and in his Reception of Suitors, and the necessary or casual Addresses to his Place, so quick, and sharp, and severe, that there wanted not some Men (Strangers to his Nature and Disposition) who believed him Proud and Imperious, from which no mortal Man was ever more free.

" It is true, that as he was of a most incomparable Gentleness, Application and even Submission to good, and worthy, and entire Men, so he was naturally (which could not but be more evident in his Place, which objected him to another Conversation and Intermixture than his own Election would have done) adversus malos injucundus, and was so ill a Dissembler of his dislike and disinclination to ill Men, that it was not possible for such nor to discern it. There was once in the House of Commons such a declared Acceptation of the good Service an eminent Member had done to them, and, as they said, to the whole Kingdom, that it was moved, he being present, That the Speaker might in the Name of the whole House give him Thanks; and then that every Member might as a testimony of his particular Acknowledgment, stir or move his Hat towards him; the which (though not order'd) when very many did, the Lord Falkland (who believed the Service it self not to be of that moment, and that an honourable and generous Person could not have stoop'd to it for any Recompence) instead of moving his Hat, stretch'd both his Arms out, and clasped his Hands together upon the Crown of his Hat, and held it close down to his Head, that all Men might see how odious that Flattery was to him, and the very approbation of the Person, though at that time most Popular.

" When there was any Overture or Hope of Peace, he would be more erect and vigorous, and exceedingly solicitous to press any thing which he thought might promote it; and sitting among his Friends, often, after a deep Silence and frequent Sighs, would, with a thrill and sad Accent, ingeminate the Word Peace, Peace; and would passionately profess, That the very Agony of the War, and the View of the Calamities and Desolation of the Kingdom did and must endure, took his Sleep from him, and would shortly break his heart. This made some think, That he was so much enamour'd on Peace, that he would have been glad the King should have bought it at any price: which was a most unreasonable Calumny. As if a Man that was himself the most punctual and precise in every Circumstance that might reflect upon Conscience or Honour, could have wish'd the King to have committed a Trespas against either. And yet this senseless Scandal made some Impression upon him, or at least he used it for an Excuse of the Daringness of his Spirit; for at the Leaguer before Gloucester, when his Friend passionately reprehended him for exposing his Person unnecessarily to Dan-1643. 19 Car. I. "ger (for he delighted to visit the Trenches and nearest Approaches, and to discover what the Enemy did) as being so much beside the Duty of his Place, that it might be understood rather to be against it, he would say merrily, That his Office could not take away the Privilege of his Age; and that a Secretary in War might be present at the greatest Secret of Danger; but withall alledg'd seriously, That it concern'd him to be more active in Enterprises of Hazard than other Men, that all might see that his Impatience for Peace proceeded not from Pusillanimity, or Fear to adventure his own Person.

"In the Morning before the Battle, as always upon Action, he was very chearful, and put himself into the first Rank of the Lord Byron's Regiment then advancing upon the Enemy, who had lined the Hedges on both sides with Musqueteers, from whence he was shot with a Musquet in the lower part of the Belly, and in the instant falling from his Horse, his Body was not found till the next Morning; till when, there was some hope he might have been a Prisoner; tho' his nearest Friends, who knew his Temper, receiv'd small Comfort from that Imagination. Thus fell that incomparable Young-man, in the four and thirtieth Year of his Age, having so much dispatch'd the true Business of Life, that the Eldest rarely attain to that immense Knowledge, and the Youngest enter not into the World with more Innocency: Whosoever leads such a Life, needs be the less anxious upon how short Warning it is taken from him.

Parliament resolve on a new Broad-Seal.

The two Houses wanted nothing so much as the Broad-Seal, that had been carried away by the Lord Keeper Littleton to the King; and without which they could not exercise that supreme Power which they had now assumed to themselves. And the Commons voted July 4. that, 1. The Great-Seal of England ought to attend the Parliament. 2. That the Absence thereof hath been a Cause of great Mischief to the Commonwealth. 3. That a Remedy ought to be provided for these Mischiefs. 4. That the proper Remedy is by making a new Seal. Upon these Resolutions a Conference was had with the Lords, who were prevailed with to join in an Ordinance dated Novemb. 11. That every Act under the old Seal should be void, and that a new Great-Seal of England, already by them made and provided, should only be in force, and be put in the Custody of these following Commissioners; John Earl of Rutland (in whose room was substituted Ruthin Earl of Kent) Oliver Earl of Bolingbrook, Oliver St. Johns Esq; John Wild Serjeant at Law, Samuel Brown and Edmund Prideaux Esquires.

Seize on the King's Revenues. An Ordinance was made Sept. 21. For the due and orderly Receiving and Collecting of the King's, Queen's, and Prince's Revenue, and the Arrearages thereof. And in Return the King issued a Proclamation Sept. 25. forbidding all the Tenants or Debtors of such who are in actual and open Rebellion, or who adhere to, or assist the Rebels, to pay any Rents or Debts to such Persons, or any of them. So that all Property was now put upon the Point of the Sword, and no Law but that of Arms.

Affairs in Ireland.

As to Affairs in Ireland, the King being under a Necessity to recall as many of those Forces as would obey his Orders to assist him nearer home, did grant a Commission Apr. 23. to the Marquis of Ormond, Lieutenant-General of his Majesty's Army and Forces in Ireland, to treat with the Irish Rebels upon a Cessation of Arms for one Year. This was soon objected against the King, by those who brought him into the Necessity of doing it. The Lords and Commons resolv'd to take the Government of Ireland, as they had done that of England, into their own hands. So on June 16. they publish'd a Declaration touching the present lamentable Condition of Ireland, and establish'd the Project of a Company of Adventurers, who for advancing Moneys here should be paid in the Lands of that Kingdom. In the mean time his Majesty pursued the Exigent of a Cessation of Arms, and declared his Resolution in a Letter to the Lords Justices of that Kingdom, dated July 2. And by another of Septemb. 7. he commanded the Lords Justices to agree upon making a Cessation, and after that to send over the Forces which were employed against the Irish to assist his Majesty against his English Rebels. And accordingly the Articles of Cessation of Arms were agreed and concluded on at Siggings-Town in the County of Kildare Sept. 15. Before the News of this Treaty came into England, the Lords and Commons had publish'd a Declaration Sept. 30. against the intended Cessation or Treaty with the Irish. Several of the Forces under Colonel Enley came over to serve the King; but many of them that came over with Vavasour refused to fight against those they were taught to call their Fellow-Protestants, and so joined with the Army under Essex, being assured that they then fought against the Papists: And, in short, this Cessation in Ireland, and the Recruits call'd from thence to the King, were represented by the Artifice of Lying so odious and so Popish, that these Measures, as most others taken up by the King upon Necessity, were safely improved to his greater Disadvantage.

It was so with the Parliament, which his Majesty began now to form at Oxford. The Nobility and Gentry were in such great Numbers attending upon the King, and many of them Members excluded from the two Houses at Westminster, that it was thought proper to assemble them into a Parliament at Oxford; where the King being in Person at the Head of them, might give them a better Title than the two Houses had at Westminster. And therefore the King publish'd his Proclamation, dated Dec. 22. for the assembling of the Members of both Houses at Oxford on Monday Jan. 22. upon occasion of the Invasion by the Scots. And upon their Meeting on that Day, the King made this Speech.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

WHEN I consider your Publick Interests and Concernments in the Happiness and Honour of this Nation, and your continual Sufferings in this Rebellion for your Affection and Loyalty to me, I must look upon you as the most competent Considerers and Counsellors how to manage and improve the Condition we are all in; for sure our Condition is so equal, that the same Violence hath oppress'd us all. I have therefore called you together to be Witnesses of my Actions, and privy to my Intentions; and certainly if I had the least Thought disagreeing with the Happiness and Security of this Kingdom, I would not advise with such Counsellors: And I doubt not but your Concurrence with me will so far prevail over the Hearts and Understandings of this whole Kingdom, who must look upon you as Persons naturally and originally trusted by and for them; that it will be above the Reach and Malice of those who have hitherto had too great an Influence upon the People, to discredit my most entire Actions and sincere Promises. You will be the best Witnesses for the one, and Security for the other. Very many of you can bear me Witness with what Unwillingness I suffer'd my self to take up these defensive Arms; indeed with so great, that I was first almost in the Power of those who in two set Battles have sufficiently inform'd the World how tender they have been of the Safety of my Person. I foresaw not only the Rage and Oppression which would every Day break our upon my Subjects as the Malice of these ill Men increas'd, and their Purposes were detected; but also the great Inconveniences my best Subjects would suffer, even by my own Army rais'd and kept for their Preservation and Protection. For I was not so ill a Soldier, as not to foresee how impossible it was to keep a strict Discipline.

1643. 19 Car. I. " I being to struggle with so many Defects and Necessities. And I assure you, the Sense I have of their Sufferings who deserve well of me, by my Forces, hath been a greater Grief to me than any thing for my own Particular. My Hope was, that either by Success on my part, or Repentance on theirs, God would have put a short End to this great Storm: But Guilt and Despair have made these Men more wicked than I imagin'd they intended to be; for instead of removing and reconciling these bloody Distractions, and restoring Peace to this languishing Country, they have invited a foreign Power to invade this Kingdom, and that in your Names, and challenge this Invasion from them as a Debt to the Commonwealth.

" You, My Lords, have like Yourselfes (as good Patriots) express'd your Dissent, and vindicated Yourselfes from that Imputation: And I doubt not but you, Gentlemen, will let your Countries know, how far you are from desiring such Assistance; and how absolute and peremptory a Breach this Raising of Arms of my Scottish Subjects is of that Pacification which was so lately and solemnly made by you, and can intend nothing but a Conquest of you and your Laws. I shall send you all the Advertisements I have of that Business which is threatned from Scotland, and what is already acted from thence, and shall desire your speedy Advice and Assistance what is to be said or done, both with reference to this and that Kingdom.

" Our Ends being the same, I am sure there will be no other Difference in the way, than what upon Debate and a right Understanding will be easily adjusted. Let our Religion, in which we are all most nearly concerned, and without Care of which we must not look for God's Blessing, be vindicated and preserved: Let my Honour and Rights, which you find to have an inseparable Relation with your own Interest, be vindicated and restored: Let your Liberties, Properties, Privileges, without which I would not be your King, be secured and confirmed: And there is nothing you can advise me to, I will not meet you in, and I doubt not we shall together inform Posterity how much our Trust and Confidence in each other is a better Expedient for the Peace and Preservation of the Kingdom, than Fears and Jealousies.

" I shall keep you no longer from Consulting together, than in telling you, that I have prepared fit Places for your Meeting, to which I desire you to repair this Night, assuring you that I will be always ready to receive any thing from you, admitting you to me, or coming to you myself, whensoever you shall desire it. And so God direct you the best way.

Proceedings of Lords and Commons. The chief Votes and Resolutions of the Lords and Commons were to declare, That all the Subjects of Scotland who had consented to the late Declaration, or had enter'd England in an hostile manner, and all the Subjects of England who were assisting to them, are to be deem'd and taken as Traitors and Enemies to the State. That the Lords and Commons now remaining at Westminster, who had consented to the raising Forces under Command of the Earl of Essex, or to the making a new Seal, or to calling in the Scots, are guilty of High Treason. These last Votes were not till March 12. after many of their Proposals for Peace had been rejected by the other Parliament; and for which reason they at the same time Resolved upon the Question, That all the Endeavours and Offers of Peace and Treaty, made by his Majesty, by the Advice of the Lords and Commons in Parliament assembled at Oxford, have been refused and rejected by the Lords and Commons remaining at Westminster. And soon after they drew up a large Declaration of their Proceedings touching a Treaty of Peace and the Re-1643. 19 Car. I. fusal thereof, with the several Letters and Answers that passed therein, actually subscribed by 50 Peers and 140 Commoners, besides those who were employ'd in his Majesty's Service, or absent with Leave, or by Sicknes; and after their Subscription concluding thus, Whoever now considers, how many have retired themselves into several Counties, and so are absent from Westminster, and yet cannot, through the danger of Travelling, be present at Oxford; how many have withdrawn themselves into the Parts beyond the Seas; how many of their own principal Instruments are voted out of the House by themselves, as Sir John Hotham and his Son, Sir Alexander Carew, Mr. Martin, Mr. Fienes, and many others; and how many now are Imprisoned by them; how many Members from the beginning have been factiously kept from the House, upon Questions of Election; and how many without any colour are kept in, by not suffering their Elections to be reported; and that there are thirty five Members dead, into whose rooms no new Persons are chosen; how many since are become Barons by Descent or Creation, will easily conclude how small the Number is which remains, and of those how few in truth have Right to sit there.

We may indeed reasonably infer, that the Peers and Commoners with the King did exceed those at Westminster in Number and Figure: And one of the Reasons why they did the King and Nation so little Service, must needs be this; They were afraid of War and Victory, and too inclinable to Peace and Treaty. If instead of ineffectual Papers and Proposals they had unanimously took the Field, and exerted all their Strength for one or two decisive Blows, they could not have fail'd, humanely speaking, of bringing the other Parliament and Army to much better Terms of Accommodation, than those which to no Purpose, by idle Letters and Messages, they now offer'd to them.

As to the Affairs of Religion in this Year 1643, they were all agreeable to the Times, changeable and tumultuous. The two Houses for an Act of casting the Odium of Profaneness on the Royal Party, made an Ordinance May 5. for burning, by the Hand of the common Hangman, the Book of Sports, or the Proclamation of K. James reviv'd by K. Charles for tolerating Exercises and some lawful Sports upon Sundays after Divine Service. And they mark'd out all the Clergy of England for Scandalous, who dar'd appear to Write, or Preach, or Talk for the true old legal Constitution of Church and State, Sequestering, Imprisoning, and Depriving by such arbitrary Intimations of their Will and Pleasure, that the King was oblig'd May 15. to publish his Proclamation against the Oppression of the Clergy, by the Intrusion of factious and schismatical Persons into their Cures, and inverting and detaining their Tythes and Possessions, by Orders of one or both Houses of Parliament, contrary to all Law and Justice.

The greatest Noise was about an Assembly of Divines. The regular and legal Convocation called with this Parliament, did not think themselves bound to a continual Attendance on it; and therefore, as the Upper House was effectually dissolved by the Imprisonment and other Persecutions of the Archbishop and Bishops, so the Lower House or inferiour Clergy (knowing themselves incapable to act without the Metropolitan and his Suffragan Brethren) did soon after retire and absent themselves without any Application to the Lay Lords or Commons; who indeed were glad to connive at their Departure, and asked no Question what was become of them: for they intended to substitute an Assembly of themselves, and their own chosen Creatures to be a standing Council to the Parliament in Matters of Religion. This had been long in Agitation, tho' not pass'd into Ordinance till June 12. in this Year; when it was intitled, An Ordinance of the Lords and Commons in Parliament for the calling of an Assembly of learned and godly Divines and others to be consulted with by the Parliament for the settling of the Government and Liturgy of the Church of England,

 Character
 of this As-

 Divines.

The manner of packing this Assembly is thus reported by the great Historian. "They shew what " Consultation they meant to have with Godly and " Learned Divines, and what Reformation they in" tended, by appointing the Knights and Burgeses
 " to bring in the Names of such Divines for the fe" veral Counties, as they thought fit, to constitute " an Assembly for the framing a new Model for " the Government of the Church, which was done
 " accordingly: Those who were true Sons of the " Church, not so much as endeavouring the Nomi" nation of Sober and Learned Men, abhorring
 " such a Reformation, as begun with the Invasion " and Suppression of the Churches Rights in a Sy" nod, as well known as Magna Charta. And if " any well affected Member, not enough consider" ing the Scandal and the Consequence of that Vi" olation, did name an Orthodox and well reputed " Divine to assist in that Assembly, it was argu" ment enough against him, that he was nominated by a " Person in whom they had no confidence. And " they only had Reputation enough to commend to " this Consultation, who were known to desire the " utter demolishing of the whole Fabrick of the " Church: So that of about one hundred and twenty,
 " of which that Assembly was to consist (tho'
 " by the Recommendation of two or three Members " of the Commons, whom they were not willing " to displease, and by the Authority of the Lords,
 " who added a small number to those named by the " House of Commons, a few very reverend and " worthy Men were inserted, yet of the whole " number) they were not above twenty, who were " not declared and avow'd Enemies to the Doctrine " or Discipline of the Church of England; some of 1642. them infamous in their Lives and Conversations, 19 Car. I. and most of them of very mean Parts in Learning, if not of scandalous Ignorance, and of no other Reputation than of Malice to the Church of England; so that that Convention hath not since produced any thing that might not then reasonably have been expected from it.

This Assembly met on Saturday July 1. in the Chapel of King Henry VII. where a Sermon was preach'd by the appointed Prolocutor Dr. Twiss, both Houses of Parliament being present. After which they open'd their Session with reading over the Ordinance for their Convention, and calling over the List of the Clergy appointed for that Assembly, sixty nine then appearing, and the Names of such as appeared not were mark'd, and so they adjourned till Monday, and on Friday following kept a Fast with both Houses; every Member before his Admission to Sit and Vote, took this Oath or solemn Vow:

I A. B. do seriously Promise and Vow, in the presence of Almighty God, that in this Assembly, whereof I am a Member, I will maintain nothing in point of Doctrine, but what I believe to be most agreeable to the Word of God; nor in point of Discipline but what may make most for God's Glory and the Peace and Good of his Church.

On July 19. they delivered a Petition to both Houses of Parliament, humbly shewing, "That up" on the two late, sad and unexpected Defeats of " our Forces in the North and in the West, they pre" sent unto their religious and prudent Considera" tion, First, That they would command a publick " and extraordinary Day of Humiliation. Second" ly, That they would vouchsafe instantly to take " it into their more serious Consideration how they " may most speedily set up Christ more gloriously " in all his Ordinances within this Kingdom, and " reform all things amiss throughout the Land. For " which they humbly lay before them these Parti" culars. 1. The brutish Ignorance and palpable " Darknes of the People. 2. The grievous and " heinous pollution of the Lord's Supper. 3. The " bold venting of corrupt Doctrines. 4. The pro" phanation of any part of the Lord's Day and the " Days of solemn Fasting. 5. A thorough and " speedy Proceeding against blind Guides and scan" dalous Ministers. 6. The Laws to be quicken'd " against Swearing and Drunkenness. 7. Severe " course to be taken against Fornication, Adultery " and Incest. 8. All Monuments of Idolatry and " Superstition to be abolished. 9. Justice to be ex" ecuted against all Delinquents. 10. Relief of our " distressed Brethren Prisoners in Oxford, York and " elsewhere for the cause of God. That so God who " is now by the Sword avenging the quarrel of his " Covenant, beholding your Integrity and Zeal, may " turn from the fierceness of his Wrath, hear our " Prayers, go forth with our Armies, perfect the " Work of Reformation, forgive our Sins, and set" tle Truth and Peace throughout the Kingdom.
 " And your Petitioners shall ever pray, &c.

The Spirit of this Assembly appears much in this Petition, that, impartially speaking, is stufft with Schism, Sedition, Cruelty and Cant: But the two Houses knew it their Interest to gratifie most of these Petitions, therefore in Answer to the 8th. an Ordinance was made 28 Aug. for the utter demolishing and removing all Monuments of Superstition or Idolatry, as Altars and Tables set Altarwise, and all Rails about them, Tapers, Candlesticks, Crosses, Images, Pictures and superstitious Inscriptions. In answer to the 5th. Petition, an Order of the Commons was given Sept. 5. to enquire into and proceed against scandalous Ministers, and such as were assistant to the Forces raised against the Parliament.
 And most of the other Desires were suitably satisfied.

Many additional Members were join'd to the Assembly, and a Committee of Scotch Brethren were taken in with them. When they had been very fer-1643. vile Instruments in promoting the Parliamentary Cause at home, they were to be then employ'd in soliciting the same Cause with foreign Nations. Hence on Novemb. 22. it was order'd by the Commons, That the Assembly of Divines be moved to write Letters unto some Divines, or Churches of Zealand and Holland, and to the Protestant Churches in France, Switzerland and other Reformed Churches, to inform them against the great Artifices and Disguises of his Majesty's Agents in these Parts, &c.

Accordingly they drew up Letters directed to several Pastors and Elders in the Belgick, French, Helvetian and other reformed Churches, running in English thus:

Right Reverend and dearly Beloved in our Lord Jesus Christ,

WE the Assembly of Divines and others — salute you in the Lord. We doubt not but the sad Reports of the Miseries under which the Church and Kingdom of England do bleed, and wherewith we are all ready to be swallowed up (the Cup which the Righteous Lord hath given us to drink) is long since come to your Ears. And it is probable that the same Instruments of Satan and Antichrist, have endeavoured by their Emissaries to present us as black as may be among you; who by Falshood and Lyes endeavour every where to put fair Glosses upon their own bloody Designs, and to Reproach our strugglings after a more thorough Reformation of Religion in the Church of England, according to the Word of God and our just Defence of our Lives, Liberties and Religion, against their cruel and unjust Violencies. And so they proceed to justify the two Houses, and to cast the Odium of the War upon the King and his Friends. And then they desire three things of the dear Brethren they write to: 1. That you would judge aright of our afflicted Condition, and of our Inocency and Integrity in this our just Defence. — 2. That ye will sympathize with us as Brethren who suffer in: and for the same Cause wherein your selves have been oppressed.

— Lastly, That as all the Antichristian Faction owns the Cause of our Adversaries as their own, and contributes what lies in their power every way to their Help and our Ruin; so that you would embrace our Condition as your own common Cause, &c. — And we crave your Prayers, that God who beareth Prayer, now he hath humbled us and broken all our Arms of Flesh, (whereon alas we have been too prone to lean) would himself bring Salvation to us, that the Blessings of Truth and Peace might rest upon us, that these three Nations may be joined as one Stick in the Hand of the Lord, and that we our selves, contemptible Builders, called to repair the House of God in a troublesome time, being ashamed of our former Pollutions, may see the Pattern of this House, and commend such a Platform to our Zorobabels, as may be most agreeing to his own sacred Word, of nearest Conformity to the best Reformed Churches, and greatest Uniformity amongst our selves, that all Mountains may become Plains before them and us, that then all who now see the Plummets in our hands, may also behold the Topstone set upon the Head of the Lord's House amongst us, and may help us with shouting to cry, Grace, Grace, unto it. — The Sense and the very Language of these Letters had been a Reproach to any Divines but such as were singular Enemies to the King and the Church of England. Their Ignorance is exposed by a Friend of their own, Mr. Whitlock, who in his Memoirs does relate, "That divers Members of both Houses were Members of the Assembly of Divines, and had the same Liberty with the Divines to sit and debate, and give their Votes in any Matter which was in consideration amongst them: In which Debates Mr. Selden spake admirably, and confuted divers of them in their own Learning. And sometimes when they had cited a Text of Scripture to prove their Assertion, he would tell them, Perhaps in your little Pocket-bibles with gilt Leaves (which they would often pull out and read) the Translation may be thus, but the Greek or the Hebrew signifies thus and thus: and so would totally silence them. Archbishop Laud gave this Opinion of them: "A great, if not the greater part of them were Brownists, or Independents, or New-England Ministers, if not worse, or at best refractory Persons to the Doctrine or Discipline, or both, of the Church of England establish'd by Law, and now brought together to reform it. An excellent Conclave! but I pray God that befall not them which Tully observes fell upon Epicurus, Si quis corrigere voluit deteriora fecit, He made every thing worse that he went about to mend. — It would become this Synod to remember, that there is a Convocation of the English Prelates and Clergy lawfully chosen and summoned, and by no supreme or legal Authority as yet dissolved. — This, without God's infinite Mercy, will bring forth a Schism fierce enough to rend and tear Religion out of this Kingdom.

Their greatest Duty this Year was to prepare the Hearts of the People for taking the Solemn League and Covenant. When both Houses of Parliament met to take the Covenant at St. Margaret's Church in Westminster, Sept. 25. the Assembly of Divines waited on them. Mr. White, a Member of the Assembly, Prayed a whole Hour that God would sanctifie them for that good Work. Then Mr. Aye, another Member, preach'd it up laboriously from the Pulpit, shew'd the Warrant of it from Scripture, gave Examples of it ever since the Creation, and set forth the Benefits of it to the Church of Christ and to this Kingdom. Mr. Henderson, a Scotch Commissioner in the Assembly, made a long Declaration of the great Mercies the Scots had received by such Covenants, of the Expedience and Necessity of the present taking of this Covenant; and of its being a sure Condition of the States of Scotland assisting the Parliament of England. Then Mr. Nye again from the Pulpit read out the Covenant, and all held up their Hands in Testimony of their Assent to it: Then all the Members of Parliament, and after them all the Members of the Assembly, subscribed their Names: And to conclude the Service of the Day, Dr. Gouge from the Pulpit prayed for a Blessing upon it, and upon all that took it.

Dr. Featley was the almost only Episcopal Divine who remain'd with them; and he grew so uneasy at their zealous Proceedings, that he gave account of them in Letters to Oxford, and promis'd to withdraw from them; but his Letters being intercepted, he was not only expell'd the Assembly, but deprived of all his Ecclesiastical Preferments. And Dr. Usher, Primate of Armagh, was soon after voted out of the Assembly, only because he refused to appear in it, and chose rather to attend his Royal Master at Oxford; who being to receive the Sacrament from his Hands at Christ-Church, rising up from his Knees, and beckoning to the Archbishop for a short Forbearance, made this Protestation.

My Lord,
I Espy here many resolved Protestants, who may declare to the World the Resolution I do now make. I have, to the utmost of my power, prepared my Soul to become a worthy Receiver: And may I so receive Comfort from the blessed Sacrament, as I do intend the Establishment of the true Reformed Protestant Religion, as it stood in its beauty in the happy days of Queen Elizabeth, without any connivance at Popery. I bless God that in the midst of these publick Distractions, I have still Liberty to communicate: And may this Sacrament be my Dominion, if my Heart do not join with my Lips in this Protestation.

A farther Account and Character of these Presbyters Assembling, and Acting without their Bishops, is thus given by the Lord Clarendon. "The Assembly, besides that it was constituted of Members who had all renounced their Obedience to their King, and Submission to the Church of England, by their Appearance and Presence in that Convention, had been lately taught how dangerous it was

 " ches in the Assembly in the behalf of the Order of " Bishops and their Function, and against the Ali" enation of Church Lands, as Sacrilege, and espe" cially inveigh'd against The Liberty that was taken

 " so far incur'd their Displeasure, and provoked their " Jealousie, that an ordinary fellow (so well con" firmed in Spirit that they feared not his failing " to him in cases of Conscience, and after he had " gotten sufficient Credit with him (which was no " hard matter) to intimate to him, That he had a

 " sure and unquestionable Conveyance to Oxford, or that " he was to go thither himself, and if he had any oc- " casions to use his Service thither, he would faithfully

 " Archbishop of Armagh Primate of Ireland, who " same Instrument receiv'd two or three Letters from " him, pretending they were still sent by infallible

 " Hands, and brought them always to those Persons " Imposture.

 " for the Service of the King and Church, in hope that " he might be able to prevent many Extravagancies, and
 " to contain those unruly Spirits within some Bounds of " Regularity and Moderation; of his Endeavours that " way he gave many Instances, and sent Copies of " what he had said in justification of Episcopacy,
 " the Liturgy, and the establish'd Government, and " concluded with a Desire to his Grace, To procure
 " a good Opinion from the King towards him, and some " Bishoprick or Deanery for his recompence. About the " time that this Agitation was in Scotland, and very " little before this Covenant was transmitted, these " Letters were produc'd, and a Charge against that " Doctor, For betraying the Trust reposed in him, and
 " adhering to the Enemy; and thereupon the poor " Man was expelled the Assembly of Divines, both " his Livings (for he had two within a very small " distance of London) sequester'd; his Study of " Books and Estate seiz'd, and himself committed to " a common Goal, where he continued to his Death;
 " which befel him the sooner through the extreme
 " wants he underwent, so solicitous was that Party
 " to remove any impediment that troubled them,
 " and so implacable to any who were weary of their " Journey, though they had accompanied them very " far in their way.

" This fresh Example the Assembly of godly and " Learned Divines, had before their Eyes when this " Covenant was sent to them for their Consideration " and speedy Resolution; and according to the " haste it requir'd, that Clergy return'd within two " Days their full approbation of it, there having " been but two Ministers who made any pause or " scruple of it, and they again soon confessing They " had received full satisfaction to their Doubts in the " Debate, and that they were fully convinc'd of the Law-

 " lute an Approbation and Concurrence, and the " Battle of Newbury being in that time likewise o" ver (which cleared and removed more Doubts " than the Assembly had done) it stuck very few " Hours with both Houses; but being at once judg'd " convenient and lawful, the Lords and Commons " and their Assembly of Divines, met together at " the Church, with great Solemnity to take it, on " September 27. a double Holiday, by the Earl of Es- sex's return to London and this Religious Exer" cise.

" There two or three of their Divines went up

 " Pray; others, according to their several Gifts, to " make Orations upon the Work of the Day. They " were by them told, That this Oath was such, and in

Archbishop Laud in the Tower had long expected Sufferings his threaten'd Tryal, but before his Tryal he was of Abp. of Laud.

On May 16. an Ordinance was made to deprive him of the Right of Presenting or Collating to any Ecclesiastical Benefice, and to oblige him to accept of such Persons as should be nominated by both Houses of Parliament. And on June 10. another Ordinance was made to suspend the Archbishop Ab Officio & Beneficio & omni & omnimoda Jurisdictione Archiepiscopali, and that all his Temporalities be sequester'd by and unto the Parliament. Nay, and April 25. it was moved in the House of Commons to send him to New England, a Plot laid by Peters, Wells and others, but it was rejected, May 1. his Chapel Windows at Lambeth were defaced, and the Steps torn up. May 9. his Goods and Books were seiz'd, and his Person put under closer Restraint. On May 23.
 he was forced to send a humble Petition to the Lords for Maintenance, the Prayer of the Petition running thus, Humbly prayeth that your Lordships will take his Condition into your Honourable Consideration, that somewhat may be allowed him out of his Estate to supply the Necessities of Life, assuring himself that in Honour and Justice you will not suffer him either to beg or starve.
 Which Petition was sent down from the Lords to the Commons and by them rejected. On May 31. his implacable Enemy Mr. Prynne came with a Warrant from the close Committee, and forced into the Archbishop's Chamber before he was out of Bed, and fell immediately upon searching his Pockets, and then ransacking all his Trunks and Boxes, and took from him twenty and one Bundles of Papers, which he had prepared for his Defence, Letters from the King, the Scottish Service-Book, the Diary of his own Life, and his Book of private Devotions, and carried all away with him. On October 23. additional Articles were carried up to the Lords against him. On November 13. he was brought to the Bar; That (says he) which I spoke to the Lords was this, " That I had no
 " skill to judge of the Streights into which I might

My long Imprisonment, wanting very little of three whole Years, and this last Year little better than close Imprisonment; my want of Skill and Knowledge in the Laws to defend my self; the generality and incertainty of almost all the Articles, so that I cannot see any Particulars against which I may provide my self, &c. On Jan. 22. he put in an Answer to the first Article and additional Article, and March 12. was at last the Day appointed for his Trial, which will be related under the next Year.

Oxford Parliament Petition the King. The Lords and Commons at Oxford seeing no hopes of Peace, advised the King to take the Field, as the only visible Means now left, and to give them a Recess from their Parliamentary Attendance till the next Winter; In order to this, they presented a Petition the Day before their rising, wherein To satisfy all the World, or to leave them inexcusable who will not be satisfied, they humbly desire; 1. " That his Majesty will give Direction for the Reprinting his Protestation made in the Head of his Army, and his other Declarations for maintaining the Protestant Religion. 2. That when there may be a full and free Convention of Parliament, a national Synod may be lawfully called, with a Care for the Ease of tender Consciences. 3. To satisfy his Subjects against the false and malicious Aspersions, that if his Majesty prevail, he intends not to use the frequent Council of Parliaments. 4. To declare that the present Contributions, Loans and Taxes, shall not be drawn into Example. 5. That the Contracts for Contribution may be justly observ'd, without free Quarter or other Grievance. And lastly, that his Majesty will retain his pious Endeavours to procure the Peace of this languishing Kingdom, not to be removed or alter'd by any Advantages or prosperous Success. To which his Majesty gave in Writing a most gracious Answer, and promised them fully to grant and observe their several Petitions, concluding thus, " Lastly, as the support and maintenance of the Religion, Laws and Privileges of Parliament, is (as you well know) the only Argument of our defensive Arms; so those being secured, we shall with all imaginable Joy lay down those Arms; and as you have been our Witnesses and our Assistants in our earnest Desires of Peace, so we promise you we shall not only with the same earnestness always embrace it, if it shall be offer'd, but pursue and press it upon the least likelihood or opportunity: And this our Resolution, by God's blessing, shall never be alter'd by any Advantages or prosperous Success.

The Kings Answer. King's Speech. And the next Day being April 16. the King dismissed them with a Speech; wherein he told them, that he could not so soon have parted with them, if they had not themselves desired it, out of Zeal and Affection to him and to their Country. He heartily thanked them for what they had done, and fully approved of what they desired. And because most of them were engaged in his Service, either in a Civil or a Martial way, he gave them directions how to be most serviceable to him in their respective ways; ending thus: " To conclude, my Lords and Gentlemen, I do now again (yet never enough) thank you for your great and unanimous Expressions of your Affections to me, which hath laid an inexpressible Obligation upon me: And be assured, that there is no Profession which I have made for the defence and maintenance of our Religion, Laws and Liberties, which I will not inviolably observe. Now God who hath blessed this meeting with an unexpected Unanimity (which I esteem as one not of his least Blessings) will I hope bring us all safe together again the eighth Day of October next. In the mean time I shall be ready to receive any thing from your Committees that shall be desired.

1644. 20 Car. I. And now to look into the Field, that which ruin'd the King was the March of the Scots Army into England, to answer the Invitation and come in to the brotherly assistance of the two Houses at Westminster, who sent a Committee of their own to meet them on the Borders, and conduct them, and supply them in the most friendly, faithful manner. This English Committee was join'd to another select Company of Scots, and they were the Committee of both Kingdoms, and in effect a united Camp Parliament. By their Advice the Scots Army under General Leven had advanc'd from Berwick on Jan. 19. and without opposition came before New-Castle Feb. 3. but not being able to take that Town, they passed the Tyne on Feb. 28. and enter'd Sunderland March 4. the Marquis of New-castle, General for the King in those northern Parts, having reinforc'd his Army to about 14 thousand Horse and Foot, attended so near upon the Scots Army, and so intercepted their Supply, that sometimes they had neither Meat nor Drink, and never above twenty four Hours Provision before hand: But they colour'd over this Necessity by keeping a Solemn Fast, and by pressing on toward Dunham for better Quarters. To stop their Advance, the Marquis drew up his Army on March 23. at Hilton, on the North of the River Wear, the Scots being drawn up on a Hill East from them towards the Sea. So the Armies fac'd each other, and skirmish in Parties; the Field-Word given by the Marquis being Prophetically enough, Now or never, and by the Scots in their way of profaning Religion, The Lord of Hosts is with us. The Marquis not able to force the Scots to a Battle, retreated toward his Quarters at Dunham, and the Scots slowly followed. The two Houses at Westminster knowing that a defeat of the Scots would be a ruin to their whole Cause, were extremely solicitous for their safe Progress; and by their Advice the Committee of both Kingdoms on March 5. wrote a Letter to the Lord Fairfax to join with his Son Sir Thomas Fairfax (who was to leave the Siege of Lathom House in Derbyshire, and to hasten with two thousand Horse into the Westriding of Yorkshire) and so with joint Forces to keep Intelligence with the Scottish Army, and give them the best Accommodation and Assistance. Colonel Bellasis Governor of York drew his Forces to Selby to hinder if possible, the conjunction of the two Fairfax's; but they notwithstanding join'd, and fell upon Bellasis and his inferior Forces at Selby, and obtained a compleat Victory over them on April 11. taking Prisoners the Colonel, many Officers, and 1600 Soldiers; for which the two Houses appointed a Solemn Thanksgiving on April 22.

The Marquis of New-castle now finding that he should be between two Armies, was resolv'd to prevent that Danger by marching back to York to make the better Defence for that important place; the Scots followed with the double joy of seeming to pursue their Enemies, and hastening to join their Friends. And accordingly on April 20. they join'd with the English Army under Lord Fairfax and Sir Thomas Fairfax, and immediately marched to York and shut up the Marquis of Newcastle, who had just enter'd that City, and defended it with great Bravery for several Months against the united Armies, that were farther reinforc'd on June 3. by a considerable Body under the Earl of Manchester, who had took Lincoln May 6. and marched on to the Leaguer at York without opposition.

Under this Pressure the Marquis and his Garrison of York depended on no hopes of Relief but from Prince Rupert, who had relieved Newark, and then marching into Shropshire had took in the Garrisons of Longford near Newport, and of Stropworth in Cheshire; and then relieving the brave Countess of Derby in her House at Lathom, he took the Town of Bolton May 28. and Liverpool June 11. and then directed his March with all expedition toward York, where the Marquis was brought to Treaty and to Propositions of Surrender; but on the News of Prince Ru-

Here the Marquis would have perswaded the Prince to have repos'd himself, till they recruited their Forces and could then pursue the Enemy. But the Prince, who was by Nature alway forward and impatient, drew out the Forces from the City, and finding them to make up an Army of 14000 Foot, and 9000 Horse, he led them directly to Marston-Moor, and on Tuesday July 2. offer'd Battle to the three conjoin'd Armies, whose Right-wing of Horse was commanded by Sir Thomas Fairfax, the main Battalia of Foot by the Lord Fairfax towards the Right-wing, and towards the Left General Leven with the rest of the Scotish Foot; the Left-wing of Horse by the Earl of Manchester and his Lieutenant-General Cromwel. The Field-Word given by the Prince was God and the King, by the other Party God with Us. By Cromwel's breaking through the Right-wing of the Princes, and coming back from the chase of them to the timely Relief of Sir Thomas Fairfax, beat and pursued by Colonel Harry, who commanded the Prince's Left-wing, the Victory fell to the Parliament Army, and the Generals gave this Account of it in a Letter to the Committee of both Kingdoms. — “ Before

Marquis of Newcastle leaves the Kingdom.

The next Morning after the Battle, the Marquis of Newcastle resolv'd to leave the Kingdom, and with his two Sons and Brother, and Dr. Bramhall Bishop of Londonderry, Lord Falconbridge, Lord Widdrington and others, took Ship at Scarborough, and arrived at Hamburg on July 8. the Marquis not returning into England till the Restauration of King Charles the Second.

York sur-render'd.

Prince Rupert with some rallied Forces drew off into Lancashire, and left Sir Thomas Glemham Governour of York to surrender that City upon Articles on July 16. After which, upon consultation between the Generals and Parliament Commissioners it was agreed, 1. That the Lord Fairfax should remain Governour of York, and send a thousand Horse into Lancashire, to join the Forces in those Parts, and to attend the Motions of Prince Rupert. 2. That the Scotish Army should march Northward, to join with the Earl of Calendar, who was advancing with additional Forces, and to reduce Newcastle. 3. That the Earl of Manchester should march towards Lincolnshire, and recruit his Army from his own Association.

All unfortunate on the King's side.

After this disposition, the Earl of Manchester took in Tickhill Castle July 26. and Sheffield Castle Aug. 10. and Colonel Fretchwell's House Aug. 12. and Balsford Castle Aug. 14. and Wingfield Manour Aug. 21. and the next Day Welbeck House. General Leven join'd the Earl of Calendar in the Siege of Newcastle, and took the Town by Storm October 19. so that all things in the North went most unhappily against the King. 1644. 20 Car. I.

The Earl of Effex by an Ordinance of the Lords and Commons March 26. was to have an Army consisting of seven thousand five hundred Foot and three thousand Horse, with which he kept his head Quarters sometimes at Windsor and sometimes at St. Albans. Sir William Waller by help of the Associated Counties of Southampton, Suffex, Sury and Kent, had another Army for the Parliament of ten thousand Men, with which he fought the Lord Hopton and Earl of Forth at Cheverton-Down in Hampshire March 29. and though the King's Forces for a while seem'd to have the better of it, they were afterwards defeated with very considerable Loss. The two Houses made an Ordinance for a Thanksgiving for this Victory on April 9. and took advantage of that Joy to send a Committee of Lords and Commons the same Day to Guild-hall, who in set Speeches drew in the Citizens to advance Men and Money for the Cause, which, they said, God had prosper'd.

Waller's
cessful.

The King providing now in Person to open the Campaign, issued a Proclamation dated March 22. commanding all his Subjects and Servants that have any Office, Place, or Fees of his Gift or Grant, to attend his Person before April 20. and another dated April 15. requiring the County to bring in their Corn and other Provisions to Oxford, for ready Money at reasonable Prizes, under pain of having it fetch'd away, or burnt upon approach of the Rebels. Against which the two Houses at Westminster made a Declaration April 22. promising Defence and Protection to those Parts, if they would refuse to carry in their Provisions as the Proclamation requir'd.

King prepares to go to the Army.

The King's Affairs by the coming in of the Scots, and the defeat of Bellasis at Selby April 11. were under an ill Aspect in the North; and the great blow given to the Lord Hopton by Waller March 29. was a great damp to the King's Interest in the South; and the Eastern Counties were all associated against him. His only Hopes were in the West, where Prince Mamie lay with a considerable Army before Lyme: And therefore those Parts were thought to be the safest Retreat for the Queen, who left Oxford April 17. and came safe to Exeter, where on June 16. she was deliver'd of the Princess Henrietta, and was forc'd to take shipping at Falmouth July 14. and to take Refuge in France, never more seeing her Royal most Affectionate Consort.

Queen forc'd to leave the Kingdom.

May 14. his Majesty in Person at Reading drew out his Forces there Quarter'd, and demolished the Works, and marched away to Oxford. On the same Day Effex set out from London, and came to his Army at Beaconsfield, and marched them slowly to Abington May 26. to Sanford May 28. and next Morning drew up his Army on Bullington-Green, within a Mile of Oxford, and marched that Night to Ifflip; from whence May 21. he sent out a Party that gain'd the Pass at Ainslow Bridge, in the way to Woodstock, where the Body of the King's Army lay. And Waller had brought up his Army to Newbridge, so as the King must have been besieged in Oxford, or must have fought with two superiour Armies, he himself drawing up his Army at North-lye, finding them no more than three thousand Foot and four thousand Horse marched away to Evesham, and on June 6. to Worcester.

Upon which the two Houses determined, that Effex should march down into the West for relief of Lyme and Plymouth, &c. and Waller should attend the Motions of the King; and Major General Brown with considerable Forces should be employ'd for reducing Oxford, Wallingford, Bambury and parts adjacent. Waller in pursuit of the King marched to Stow in the Wold June 5. took Sindeley Castle June 9. and made his Approaches so fast toward Worcester, that the King was oblig'd to leave that City on June 12. and marched his Army to Bardley, and finding his advanc'd to Buckingham. Waller follow'd after augmenting his Forces all the way, and quartered at Hanwel near Banbury June 26. and came up to face the King's Army June 28. on the foot of Crouch-Hill, the River Charwel between them. The King drew off toward Daventry, leaving a Guard of Dragoons at Cropredry Bridge, the only Pass between the two Armies. Waller order'd two Regiments of Horse, and some Companies of Foot to make their way over the Bridge and fall on the King's Rear; but though they got over, they were driven back again with great loss, and left the King to pursue his intended Retreat.

Essex marching Westward, received Orders May 30. to relieve Lyme a Port Town in Dorsetshire, which had been besieg'd from April 20. by Prince Maurice with a considerable Army, and had made a very wonderful Defence, till the Earl of Warwick riding before it with the Navy, and the Earl of Essex drawing his Army near it, the Prince rais'd his Siege June 15. and went to Exeter, sending part of his Army toward Bristol. Upon which Essex took in Weymouth June 19. and held there a consult with the Admiral Earl of Warwick. The King himself had intended to march Northward, but hearing of the Defeat of Prince Rupert at Marston-Moor, he resolv'd to march into the West, and upon that Design came to Evesham, whence July 4. he sent a Message for Peace to the Lords and Commons at Westminster. We being deeply sensible of the Miseries and Calamities of this our Kingdom, and of the grievous Sufferings of our poor Subjects, do most earnestly desire that some Expedient may be found out which by the Blessing of God may prevent the farther effusion of Blood, and restore the Nation to Peace, &c. To which the two Houses would return no Answer. His Majesty came to Bath and summoning the Inhabitants of Somersetshire to King's-more July 23. he made an affectionate Speech to them, to join with him in Defence of their Religion, Liberty and Property; hence by their Aid and a Conjunction of the Lord Hopton's Forces, he advanced to Ilchester, and had now formed a very confiderable Army.

Essex in a Council of War concluded to relieve Plymouth, besieged by Sir Richard Grenvil, and so march into Cornwall. Upon his advance Sir Richard was obliged to draw off his Forces, and to quit his small Garisons of Mount-Stampford, Plympton, Salt-Ash, and his own Grenvil House at Tavestock; and disputing the Passage at Newbridge to no effect, saw the Parliament Army take an easy possession of the Shire-Town Lanceson. The King came to Exeter
 June 26. and being join'd by Prince Maurice follow'd Essex into Cornwall, and quarter'd his Army at Liskerd, while the other Army was at Lestithiel, and wrote a Letter to General Essex, To lay hold on this opportunity of effecting the happy Settlement of this miserable Kingdom, it being now in his Power to redeem his Country and the Crown, and to oblige his King in the highest degree. And a Day or two after, other Letters were sent him by Prince Maurice, the Earl of Brain-ford and the Lord Hopton, to all which he did at last return Answer to the Earl of Brainford, that "He had received the several Letters, but it was not in his Commission to be concern'd in any Treaty, nor could he betray the Trust reposed in him by the Parliament. Upon this Denial the King drew his Army from Liskerd, and pressed on upon the Rebels in their Quarters at Lestithiel, and being join'd by Sir Richard Grenvil, he so encompassed and in a manner besieged them for several Days, and upon their attempting to retreat, he fell upon them to so great advantage, that Essex, reduc'd to the utmost Difficulties, deserted his Army, and shifted away in a small Vessel to Plymouth Sept. 1. leaving his Horse entirely routed and dispers'd, and his Foot hemm'd up under Major General Skippon; to whom the King allowed Articles of laying down their Arms, and being convey'd to Parliament Quarters, when their Liberties and Lives were absolutely in his Royal Power and Mercy. 1644.

Upon this glorious Success the King return'd to Tavestock, and sent thence a Message for Peace dated Sept. 8. with a Duplicate of his former Message from Evesham: but being directed To the Lords and Commons of Parliament assembled at Westminster, the two Houses Voted, "That these Directions and the Matter in them, did not sufficiently acknowledge them to be the two Houses of Parliament of England, and therefore would send no Answer. His Majesty not discourag'd with their scornful rejecting of all Correspondence with him, declin'd to spend time in besieging Plymouth, and taking in Barnstaple Sept. 17.
 He marched Eastward to Chard, and publish'd there a Proclamation, declaring his Royal Resolutions to draw toward London, in order to obtain a Treaty for Peace and a good Accommodation, inviting all his Loyal Subjects to join in his Assistance for that necessary End. Upon which the Gentry and Freeholders of that County of Somerset Address the King at Sturminster Octob. 9. for liberty to wait in Person upon his Majesty nearer London, to become Petitioners to the Lords and Commons at Westminster, to embrace his Majesty's offers of Peace, and in case of refusal to spend their Lives in assisting his Majesty to compass that by the Sword which by fair and just ways could not be effected. The King accepted their Service, and came to Salisbury Oct. 15.
 But the Parliament resolv'd to have a new Army to meet him; and therefore enabled Essex to take the Field from Portsmouth Octob. 17. and to join with two other great Bodies under the Earl of Manchester and Sir William Waller at Basing Octob. 21. and thence to Newberry where the King was encamp'd, and cast up some Works to avoid fighting, the Parliament Armies being very much superiour in Numbers. The General Essex was indisposed and absent from the Battle, which was forc'd upon the King on Octob. 27. wherein (by Account of the Committee attending the Army) for three Hours the Fight was maintained with as much Resolution, Bravery and Desperateness on both Sides, as had been since the commencement of the War; but in conclusion, the Parliament's Forces beat the King's from their Works at Speen, and took nine pieces of Canon, among which six were those they lost in Cornwall, which the Foot that had been there disarm'd, and in Mercy dismiss'd by the King, ventur'd desperately to regain, and when they had got them embraced them for Joy, and said they must give them a Cornish-Hug.
 The King sensible of his Disadvantage, marched from Newberry in the Night, and securing his Canon, Carriages and Baggage in Denington Castle, he went off to Walingford, and so to Oxford. And being soon reinforc'd by the accession of Prince Rupert, and the Earl of Northampton, he came back and reliev'd Denington Castle, took out his Train, drew out his Army in the Field, and offer'd the Rebels another Battle; but they in a Council of War declined fighting, and left the King to march leisurely away toward Walingford; and when the bare Report of his going to relieve Basing House had rais'd the Siege of it, the two Armies retreated both to their Winter Quarters, the King's to Oxford, Marlborough, Basing, Odham, Newberry, &c. the Parliament's to Reading, Henley, Abington, Faruham, &c.

And now the two Houses at Westminster, who had rejected several Messages of Peace from the King, thought fit to send him their own Terms by Commissioners; Earl of Denbigh and Lord Maynard for the Peers, Mr. Pierpoint, Mr. Hollis, Mr. Whitlock, and Lord Wenman of the Commons; the Lord Maitland, Sir Charles Erskins, and Mr. Barclay, for Scotland: who came to Oxford Nov. 23. and were very obligingly received by the King, who heard the Propositions read by the Earl of Denbigh with much Patience, and then ask'd the Commissioners, If they had Power to Treat? They answered No: but they Commission was to receive his Majesty's Answer in Writing.

 an opportunity of private Discourse with two of the Commissioners, Hollis and Whitlock, and had such Confidence in them and in his own Integrity, that he left it to them two to draw up in Writing what they apprehended might be fit to return in Answer appointed a Place of Treaty, and Commissioners were nominated, with Instructions and safe Conduct on either side.

 by Mr.

This Treaty of Uxbridge began Jan. 30. Thursday, which being Market-day, a Sermon was Preach'd in the Parish-Church by Mr. Christopher Love; so full of Railing and Seditious, that on the next Day the King's Commissioners thought themselves obliged to give in a Paper of Complaint, "That there was "Yesterday a Sermon preach'd by one Mr. Love,
 "in which were many Passages very scandalous to "his Majesty's Person, and derogatory to his Ho"nour, stirring up the People against this Treaty,
 "and incensing them against us, telling them,
 "that we come with Hearts full of Blood, and that "there is as great distance between this Treaty and "Peace as between Heaven and Hell. The Parliament Commissioners answered, That Mr. Love was none of their Retinue, nor came thither by any Privity of theirs. And upon the Reply of the King's Commissioners, that they must insist on their former Desire concerning the Sermon preach'd by Mr. Love, and must refer the way of doing Justice to their Lordships; they made farther Answer, that they would represent it to the Lords and Commons at Westminster, who would proceed therein according to Justice: But no Justice was done in it.

 and the Model of Presbyterian Government annex'd, be enacted as a Part of Reformation and Uniformity.
- IV. "That his Majesty take the solemn League and Covenant, and enjoin it to all his Subjects.

As to the first, the King's Commissioners offer'd many Arguments to shew the Injustice and Incon-veniency which would follow upon Passing the Bill for abolishing Episcopacy, from Conscience, Law, and Reason. To the second, That they need not insist on Confirmation of the Calling and Sitting of the Assembly of Divines, till the Alterations of Church-Government were agreed or not. To the third, That they could not conceive the Directory for publick Worship was so likely to procure and preserve the Peace of the Kingdom, as the Liturgy already by Law established. And as for the Covenant, they could not advise his Majesty to swear and sign the same, nor consent that an Act of Parliament should pass for enjoining the taking thereof by his Majesty's Subjects.

Propositions concerning the Militia

Febr. 4. the Propositions concerning the Militia were propos'd by the Parliament Commissioners, to this effect: That all Forces by Sea and Land should be sett'd in Commissioners nominat'd by both Houses of Parliament, to be removed and fill'd up from time to time as the said Houses should think fit:
 and that it should be High-Treason to levy Forces without such Authority and Consent: and the Militia of London, and Tower of London, to be in the Government of the said City. To which the King's Commissioners answer'd, that they could not consent to such great Alterations in the main Foundation of the Frame of the Government, as by express Words or necessary Consequence took the whole Military and Civil Power out of the Crown, without any Limitation in Time, or Reparation propos'd.

Febr. 7. the Parliament Commissioners present'd the Propositions concerning Ireland, that an Act should pass to make void the Cessation of Ireland, and all Treaties with the Rebels, without Consent of both Houses of Parliament, and to settle the Prosecution of that War in the two Houses, his Majesty to assist, and to do no Act to discountenance or molest them therein. All Persons who had any hand in Plotting, Designing, or Assisting that Rebellion, to expect no Pardon: and the successive Deputies and Judges, &c. of that Kingdom to be nominat'd by the two Houses, &c. To which the King's Commissioners answer'd, That his Majesty had full Power and just Grounds to consent to that Cessation, and it could not be declared void without a breach of Faith and Honour in his Majesty; but it would of it self expire in March next. Nor could it be agreeable to his Majesty's Honour, or the Justice and Protection which he owes to his Subjects of the Kingdom of Ireland, to put the Nomination of his Lieutenant and Judges out of himself, and to commit the whole Power of that Kingdom unto others.

Febr. 20. Eighteen Days having been spent in the said Propositions concerning Religion, Militia, and Ireland, and the Treaty being limited to twenty Days; the King's Commissioners desired to spend the two remaining Days in giving better Satisfaction upon those three Heads, and in Treating for an Expedient of Peace by disbanding all Armies, and by his Majesty's coming to Westminster: and for this purpose desired the time of Treaty to be prolonged.
 To which the Parliament Commissioners answer'd, That till they had Satisfaction in their Demands concerning Religion, Militia, and Ireland, they could receive no Propositions from his Majesty, nor give any Addition of Time. By the Papers in this Treaty it plainly appears, That the King's Commissioners, though they could not go in to the literal Demands on the other side; yet they made as many Concessions toward granting some Equivalent, or other Expedient, as it was possible to do. But the Parliament Commissioners were tied up to rigid Rules, and seem'd to have no Power of receding from the very Letter of the Propositions brought along with them: as if only Messengers to report the Sense and very Words of those who sent them, rather than Commissioners to argue and determine upon others Arguments, and their own Judgment of 'em.

Parl. Commis. but meer Messengers.

A late Writer of Memoirs tells it as a Secret in History, that the Occasion of breaking off this Treaty was a Letter from the Marquis of Montrose in Scotland, who had entirely defeated the Earl of Argyle Feb. 2. and next Day sent an Express of it in a Letter to the King; wherein he declares his utter Aversion to all Treaties with his Rebel Parliament in England; and is heartily sorry to hear, that his Majesty had consented to Treat, and hopes it is not true; advises him not to enter into any Terms with his rebellious Subjects; and assures him, that he should be able within a few Months to march into England to his Majesty's Assistance with a brave Army. Supposing such a Letter was written; though this Relator pretends to have seen nothing but a Copy under another Hand: and supposing the Difficulty remov'd, which the Relator himself can hardly imagine, "That a "Letter writ February 2. in the farthest North "Corner of Britain, should come so soon to Oxford, "considering the Length of the Journey, the Bad"ness of the Roads at that time of the Year, espe"cially through the mountainous Parts of Scotland, "together with the Parliament's and Scotch Armies
 "and Garisons that were post'd all along the Road: Supposing these hard things to be true; yet it seems to be no Inference that the King himself was the Cause of it.

vindicated of the Cause.

1644. Cause of breaking off this Treaty, when a Denial of 20 Car. I. any the least Concessions, and even of a few farther Days, was the sole Act of the Parliament Commissioners. And yet had the Rupture been made solely at the King's Command, he would have stood justifified by all the Laws of Conscience and Honour: For, to have yielded to all their Propositions, as they insisted, without the least Mitigation of them, would as effectually have divested him of his Crown and Dignity, as they did afterward deprive him of his Liberty and Life. It had been more glorious in him to resolve, That Monarchy should not be murder'd before the King.

The Dutch Ambassadors interpose.

After the Treaty was dissolv'd, the Ambassadors of the States of Holland, who had been at Oxford to solicit the Success of it, being now in London, obtained Leave of Admission first to the House of Lords, and then of Commons; where they represented the great Desires and Endeavours of their Masters for an Accommodation between the King and Parliament, which concerned all Protestants, and particularly their Lords and Masters: and own'd, That his Majesty, whilst they were at Oxford, had honoured them, by communicating to them what pass'd at the Treaty in Uxbridge; and declared to them, That if the Parliament be not satisfied with what he offer'd concerning Church-Government, his Majesty is contented that a General Synod be called of Divines from all the Protestant Churches in Europe, for their Advice herein. This perhaps was thought to be a Message from the King, and therefore no Answer was return'd to it.

Parliam. seem well pleas'd.

For the Parliament found themselves every Day more and more superiour to the King: and therefore approving what was done by their Commissioners, and thanking them for having discharged their Duties with singular Judgment and Fidelity; and solemnly acquainting the City with their Proceedings, and possessing them with the Aversness of the King's Party to a Peace; they made very diligent Preparations for continuing the War: And finding their General Effect to be too much inclined to Moderation, and the Defensive side; they modell'd a new Army, to be Commanded by Sir Thomas Fairfax:
To whom, by an Ordinance, they gave an ample Commission, to exercise all Martial Jurisdiction, to fight with and to slay all such as should oppose him; and, to suppress all Forces not rais'd by Authority of both Houses of Parliament.

State of Religion.

As to the Ecclesiastical State in this Year 1644.
The long-imprison'd Archbishop of Canterbury had been brought upon his Tryal before the Peers on Tuesday March 12. and Arraign'd in a long Speech by Mr. Serjeant Wild; concluding thus: This Man, my Lords, is like Naaman the Syrian, a Great Man, but a Leper. Upon which the Archbishop spoke as follows:

Tryal of Abp. Laud

His Speech

My Lords,
MY being in this Place, and in this Condition, recalls to my Memory that which I long since read in Seneca, Tormentum est, etiam si absolutus quis fuerit, causam dixisse; 'Tis not a Grief only, no, 'tis no less than a Torment, for an ingenuous Man to plead criminally, much more capitally, at such a Bar as this; yea though it should so fall out, that he be absolv'd. The great Truth of this I find at present in myself; and so much the more, because I am a Christian, and not that only, but in holy Orders; and not so only, but by God's Grace and Goodness preferred to the greatest Place this Church affords; and yet now brought causam dicere to Plead, and for no less than Life, at this great Bar. And whatsoever the World thinks of me (and they have been taught to think more ill than, I humbly thank Christ for it, I was ever acquainted with) yet, my Lords, this I find tormentum est; 'tis no less than Torment to me to appear in this Place to such an Accusation. Nay, my Lords, give me Leave, I beseech you, to speak plain Truth: No 1644. Sentence that can justly pass upon me (and other I will never fear from your Lordships) can go so near me as causam dixisse to have pleaded for myself upon this Occasion, and in this Place. For as for the Sentence (I thank God for it) I am at St. Paul's Word, If I have committed any thing worthy of Death, I refuse not to die: For, I bless God, I have so spent my time, as that I am neither a-sham'd to Live, nor afraid to Die. Nor can the World be more weary of me than I am of it: for seeing the Malignity which hath been rais'd against me by some Men, I have carried my Life in my Hands these divers Years past.

1644.
20 Car. I.

But yet, my Lords, if none of these things whereof these Men accuse me, merit Death by Law; though I may not in this Case, and from this Bar, appeal unto Cesar, yet to your Lordships Justice and Integrity I both may and do appeal; not doubting, but that God of his Goodness will preserve my Innocency. And as Job, in the midst of his Affliction, said to his mistaken Friends, so shall I to my Accusers, God forbid I should justifie you: till I die I will not remove my Integrity from me: I will hold it fast, and not let it go: my Heart shall not reproach me, as long as I live.

My Lords, I see by the Articles, and have now heard from this Gentleman, that the Charge against me is divided into two main Heads; the Laws of the Land, and the Religion by thoe Laws established.

And so with great Eloquence and Courage he went on, to shew himself a strict Observer of the Laws, and a true Professor of the Religion establish'd in the Church of England; and wiped off all the Aspersions of Popery; concluding with the Names of 21 eminent Popish Recufants, whom he by personal Conference had reduced to the Protestant Communion.

He had 20 several Days of Hearing, which ended July 29. wherein he had such a heap of Accusations, and made such an admirable Defence against them, that the Innocence of this Prelate, and the Malice of his Enemies, are hardly to be match'd in any Account of the Primitive Persecutions. On the last Day of his Tryal he made a Recapitulation of all that had been charg'd upon him, and of all that he had answer'd in his own Defence, and then concluded.

And now, My Lords, I do in all Humility lay myself low at God's Mercy-Seat, to do with me as he pleases: and under God, I shall rely upon your Lordship's Justice, Honour, and Clemency, of which I cannot doubt. And, without being farther tedious unto your Lordships (who have with very honourable Patience heard me through this long and tedious Trial) I shall conclude with that which St. Augustin said to Romanianus, a Man that had tried both Fortunes as well as I; If the Providence of God reaches down to us (as most certain it doth) Sic tecum agi oportet, sicut agitur.
It must so be done with thee (and so with me also) as it is done. And under that Providence which will, I doubt not, work to the best to my Soul, that loves God, I repose myself.

Speech at Conclusion of his Tryal.

When all the Articles and utmost Proof of them by the most prejudic'd Parties were not likely to prevail with the Lords (though but a few, and those Adversaries to the Archbishop's Person and Character, and to the Church and King) to find him Guilty of the Impeachment; the Commons (at the Instigation of the Scots) took the Judicature in the most illegal manner to themselves, had him brought to their Bar on several Days, and on Novemb. 16. pass'd an Ordinance to make him Guilty of High-Treason: Which being transmitted to the Lords, they referred themselves to the Judges, who acquitted by the Lords.

1644. unanimously answered, "That nothing charged against him was Treason by any known and established Law of the Land. Upon which the Lords in a Conference with the Commons Decemb. 24. declared, "That they had diligently weigh'd all things that were charged against him, but could not by any one of them, or all, find him Guilty of Treason. And yet by the over-ruling of all Honour and Conscience, the Bill of Attainder pass'd the House of Lords Jan. 4. and a Scaffold being prepared on Tower-hill, he was brought to it Jan. 10. where he made his own Funeral Sermon, beginning thus:

Good People,

His dying Speech. "This is an uncomfortable time to Preach, yet I shall begin with a Text of Scripture, Heb. 12. 2. Let us run with Patience the Race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus the Author and Finisher of our Faith; who for the Joy that was set before him, endured the Cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the Right-hand of the Throne of God.

"I have been long in my Race, and how I have looked unto Jesus the Author and Finisher of my Faith, he best knows. I am now come to the end of my Race, and here I find the Cross; a Death of Shame, but the Shame must be despised or no coming to the Right-hand of God. Jesus despised the Shame for me, and God forbid but that I should despise the Shame for him. I am going apace (as you see) towards the Red Sea, and my Feet are now upon the very brink of it, an Argument, I hope, that God is bringing me into the Land of Promise; for that was the way thro' which he led his People: But before they came to it, he instituted a Passover for them, a Lamb it was, but must be eaten with four Herbs. I shall obey, and labour to digest the four Herbs as well as the Lamb; and I shall remember it is the Lord's Passover: I shall not think of the Herbs, nor be angry with the Hand that gathereth them, but look up only unto him who instituted that and governs these. For Men can have no more power over me, than what is given from above. I am not in love with this Passage through the Red Sea, for I have the weakness and Infirmities of Flesh and Blood plentifully in me; and I have pray'd with my Saviour, ut transiret calix iste, that this Cup of red Wine might pass from me; but if not, God's Will not mine be done. And I shall most willingly drink of this Cup as deep as he pleases, and enter into this Sea, yea and pass through it in the way that he shall lead me.

"But I would have it remember'd (good People) that when God's Servants were in this boisterous Sea, and Aaron amongst them, the Egyptians which persecuted them (and did in a manner drive them into the Sea) were drowned in the same Waters while they were in pursuit of them. --- And as for this People, they are at this Day miserably misled (God of his Mercy open their Eyes that they may see the right way) for at this Day the Blind lead the Blind, and if they go on both will certainly fall into the Ditch. ---

"Though the weight of my Sentence be heavy upon me, I am as quiet within as ever I was in my Life. And though I am not only the first Archbishop but the first Man that ever died by an Ordinance in Parliament; yet some of my Predecessors have gone this way, though not by this means. --- Here is a great clamour that I would have brought in Popery: I shall answer that more fully by and by. In the mean time, you know what the Pharisees said against Christ himself, If we let him alone All Men will believe in him, & we vent Romani, and the Romans will come and take away our Place and Nation. Here was a causeless Cry against Christ, that the Romans would come: and see how just the Judgment was; they crucified Christ for fear the Romans should come, and his Death was it that brought in the Romans upon 1644. them: God punishing them with that which they most feared. And I pray God this Clamour of venient Romani (of which I have given no cause) help not to bring them in: For the Pope never had such an Harvest in England since the Reformation, as he hath now upon the Sects and Divisions that are among us. --- This I shall be bold to speak of the King our Gracious Sovereign: He hath been much traduc'd also for bringing in of Popery; but in my Conscience (of which I shall give God a very present Account) I know him to be as free from this Charge as any Man living; and I hold him to be as sound a Protestant (according to the Religion by Law established) as any Man in this Kingdom; and that he will venture his Life as far and as freely for it. And I think I do, or should know both his Affection to Religion, and his Grounds for it, as fully as any Man in England. --- I have been accused as an Enemy to Parliaments: No! I understand them, and the Benefit that comes by them too well to be so: But I did dislike the Misgovernments of some Parliaments many ways, and I had good Reason for it. For Corruptio Optimi est Pessima, there is no Corruption in the World so bad as that which is of the Best thing within it self: For the better the thing is in Nature, the worse it is corrupted. And that being the highest Court, over which no other hath Jurisdiction, when it is misinformed or misgoverned, the Subject is left without all Remedy: But I have done. I forgive all the World, All and Every of those bitter Enemies which have persecuted me; and humbly desire to be forgiven of God first, and then of every Man, whether I have offended him or not, if he do but conceive that I have. Lord do thou forgive me, and I beg forgiveness of him. And so I heartily desire you to join in Prayers with me.

O Eternal God! and Merciful Father, look down upon me in Mercy, &c.

His Speech and Prayer ended, he gave the Prayer which he read into the Hands of his Chaplain Mr Stern; and seeing one Hind had been writing his Speech as it came from his Mouth, he desired him Not to do him wrong in publishing a false or imperfect Copy. Finding many People upon the Scaffold, he desired he might have room to dye, beseeching them to let him "Have an end of his Miseries, which he had endured very long. Coming near the Block, he said, "God's Will be done, I am willing to go out of this World; none can be more willing to send me. Seeing some Chinks through the Boards with People under them, he called to the Officer for some Dust to stop them, or to remove the People, saying, "It was no part of his Desires, that his Blood should fall upon the Heads of the People. Sir John Clotworthy did rudely interrupt him with impertinent Questions, which he answer'd with all Christian Meekness. The first Question was, "What was the most comfortable Saying which a dying Man would have in his Mouth? He answer'd, Cupio dissolvi & esse cum Christo. The other asked again, "What was the fittest Speech a Man would use to express his Confidence and Assurance? He answer'd, Such Assurance is to be found within, and no Words are able to express it rightly. The busie man demanding "a place of Scripture, whereupon such Assurance might be grounded. He used some Words to this effect, that It was the Word of God concerning Christ and his dying for us. Then he turned away to the Executioner, gave him Money, and said, "Here, honest Friend, God Forgive thee and I do, and do thy Office upon me with Mercy. Then giving him a sign when the Blow should come, he kneeled down and made another short Prayer; then laying his Head on the Block, and praying silently to himself, he said aloud, Lord receive my Soul! which being the Signal given, his Head was cut off at a blow. and his Body decently interred in the Church 1644. of Allhallows Berking, by the Office of the Liturgy, 20 Car. I. which on that very Day was, by an Ordinance of Parliament, abolish'd, and the Directory establish'd His Burial. in room of it. On his Coffin was nail'd a little brass Plate, with his Arms and this Inscription: In hac Cistula conduntur Exuvie Gulielmi Laud Archiepiscopi Cantuariensis qui secum percussus immortalitatem adiit die x. Januarii, Etatis sue LXXIII. Archiepiscopatus xii. His last Character is thus given by the Lord Clarendon. "He underwent his Sentence with all "Christian Courage and Magnanimity, to the Ad- "miration of the Beholders, and Confusion of his "Enemies. Much hath been said of the Person of "this great Prelate before, of his great Endow- "ments and natural Infirmities; to which shall be "added no more in this Place (his Memory defer- "ving a particular Celebration) than that his "Learning, Piety, and Vertue, have been attain'd "by very few, and the greatest of his Infirmities "are common to all, even to the best Men.

King's Latin Declaration to Foreign Churches.

The King being in Arms could have no other Care for the Church, but to fight for the Restitution of it. But however, to take off as far as possible the Prejudice of Foreign Protestants, which had been industriously rais'd and fomented by Letters from the Assemblies of Divines in England and Scotland; the King drew up a Declaration to all foreign Reformed Churches, in Latin, dat. in Academia & Civitate nostra Oxoniensi pridie Idus Maii 1644. protesting against the false Rumours and scandalous Letters spread among the Reformed Churches in foreign Parts, as if his Majesty had an Inclination to recede from the Religion wherein he was born, baptized, and bred: and solemnly professing, that he will keep entire and inviolable the most holy Religion of the Anglican Church, ordained by many Convocations of learned Divines, confirmed by many Acts of Parliament, and strengthen'd by many Royal Proclamations; with a Liturgy and Discipline approved and applauded by the most eminent of Protestant Writers.

His Majesty endeavours to reform his Army.

And to keep up, if possible, the Honour of Religion in his Army, and wipe away the popular Objection, that the Malignants were lewd and profane Men; the King issued his Proclamation, dated Apr. 18. for the farther Restraint of profane Swearing and Cursing, and the better observing of Prayer and Preaching in his Majesty's Armies, and in the City of Oxford, and all other Parts. When it was agreed upon to hold a Treaty at Uxbridge, the King published a Proclamation, dated at Oxford January 27. commanding that Wednesday Febr. 5. should be kept as a solemn Fast, that both Prince and People might then join together in a true Humiliation, and devout and earnest Prayers unto God, that he would be pleas'd to bless and prosper the intended Treaty, that it might produce a happy Peace for his Honour, the Good of his Church, and of the King and all his Subjects. And for a constant Prayer during the Treaty, the King himself dictat'd this Form: O most merciful Father, Lord God of Peace and Truth, We a People sorely afflicted by the Scourge of an unnatural War, do here earnestly beseech thee to command a Blessing from Heaven upon this present Treaty, begun for the Establishment of a happy Peace. Soften the most obdurate Hearts with a true Christian Desire of saving those Mens Blood for whom Christ himself hath shed his. Or if the Guilt of our great Sins cause this Treaty to break off in vain, Lord let the Truth clearly appear, who those Men are, which under pretence of the publick Good do pursue their own private Ends, and that this People may be no longer so blindly miserable as not to see at least in this their Day, the things that belong unto their Peace. Grant this, gracious God, for his sake who is our Peace it self, even Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen. Which shews the Piety of this Prince, and the Sincerity of his Heart, in desiring the Success of this Treaty upon any Terms consistent with the Being of a Church and Monarchy.

The King's own Form of Prayer for Peace

The two Houses at Westminster made the Assembly of Divines and the City Clergy their Instruments of the Cause to be called Good. On April 8. they made an Ordinance, that the Ministers within the City and Bills of Mortality, should on the Morrow, being Thanksgiving-Day for the Victory over Sir Ralph Hopton's Forces, publish in their several Churches, the Resolution taken by the Parliament to draw all their Forces together, and put a speedy Issue to these lingering Miseries; and that therefore they should exhort the People to contribute to the uttermost for sending forth what possible Strength can be had. April 17. it was ordered, That the Candlesticks, Crucifixes, and other Plate, that stood heretofore upon the Altar in St. Paul's Church, be sold by the Committee at Grocer's-Hall, and the Money employ'd for the publick Safety. On May 9. there was another Ordinance for the farther demolishing all Monuments of Idolatry and Superstition, and taking away all Organs, Surplices, superstitious Vestments, &c. And the Price of Sacrilege to serve the Cause. This way of Reformation gave Rise to so many Heresies and Divisions, that the Ministers of the City of London, in a Petition to the Commons House, Sept. 18. beg leave to sign out their Sorrows, and confess, Through many erroneous Opinions, ruining Schisms, and damnable Heresies (unhappily fomented in City and Country) the Orthodox Ministry is neglected; the People seduced; Congregations torn asunder; Families distracted; Rights and Duties of Relations, National, Civil, and Spiritual, scandalously violated; the Power of Godliness decayed; Parliamentary Authority undermined; fearful Confusion introduced; imminent Destruction threatened, &c.

1644. 20 Car I. Proceedings of Parl. in Matters of Religion.

As to the Proceedings of the Assembly of Divines, they procur'd in May an Order of Parliament to suppress an erroneous Edition of the English Bible at Amsterdam. When the Earl of Essex march'd into the West, it was at the Motion of this Assembly that a Day of publick Humiliation was appointed, to implore the Assistance of God for the prosperous Undertaking of the Lord General. Soon after they communicated to the Parliament a Letter sent to them from the Kirk of Scotland, lamenting that Church-Government was not yet settled. Upon which they had Leave to debate the whole matter of an Ordinance made for the Ordination of Ministers, and for settling the Government of the Church. In which Debate it was propounded to put the Question, that the Government by Presbytery is Jure Divino. But the putting it to the Question was diverted by a Speech of one of the Lay-Members, who among other Arguments used this Dilemma; If this Government be not Jure Divino, no Opinion of any Council can make it to be what it is not; and if it be Jure Divino, it continues so still, although you do not declare it to be so. The Opposition between the Presbyterians and Independents, and other Sectaries, began to interrupt every Scheme of Settlement; so that in September a Committee of Lords and Commons was appointed to confer with the Assembly, and to endeavour to reconcile some Differences amongst them, and to find out a way how tender Consciences may be borne withall, so far as may stand with the Peace of the Kingdom, and the Word of God. Octob. 2. an Ordinance was pass'd for the Ordination of Ministers; whereby twenty three Presbyters (of which the Assembly named ten of themselves, and thirteen of the City) or any seven of them, were to ordain successive Ministers, and none to Preach, or exercise the Ministerial Function, without their Allowance. Just before Newberry second Fight, October, the Commons being inform'd that in probability the Armies were now engag'd, they sent to the Assembly of Divines to spend some time in Prayer for the good Success of the Parliament's Forces; which was done accordingly. In November, by Desire from the Scots Commissioners, both Houses sent to the Assembly, to bring in the Proceedings of the Assembly of Divines.

Could not get Presbytery declar'd to be Jure Divino.

1644. Particulars of what they had finished for the Government of the Church, that it might be approved and confirmed by the Parliament; and to hasten the Dispatch of what farther lay before them. Soon after the chief Members of the Assembly came to the House of Commons, and presented their Draught of humble Advice for settling the Presbyterian Government; in which they had an Expression that did assert it to be Jure Divino. This gave Offence, and Mr. Glyme, Recorder of London, stood up and spoke against determining a Jus Divinum: wherein he was seconded by Mr. Whitlock; till, upon the Question, it was carried to lay aside all Assertion of Divine Right; and Glyme and Whitlock had many Thanks for preventing the Surprisal of the House upon this great Question. Upon Desire of some Members in the Assembly who dissented from the Form of Presbyterian Government, a Day was appointed to hear their Arguments against it; and the other part had liberty to answer in Writing the Reasons of their Dissenting Brethren; and the Arguments on each side were to be presented to the House of Commons. In November the Assembly sent to the Commons their Directory for Prayer, Preaching, and all other parts of Publick Worship; and toward the end of December presented some farther Additions to their first Form: all which were Debated and Resolved by the Commons. And to shew the Spirit of Contradiction that was now to prevail, an Ordinance was made Decemb. 19. to turn Christmas-day into a solemn Fast and Humiliation, because it may call to remembrance our Sins, and the Sins of our Forefathers, who have turned this Feast, pretending the Memory of Christ, into an extreme Forgetfulness of him, by giving Liberty to carnal and sensual Delights. In January the Directory of Worship was fully agreed upon by both Houses, and order'd to be Printed, and two of the Assembly to take care thereof. The Commons order'd, that the Divines of the Assembly should write a congratulatory Letter to the General Assembly in Scotland, and acquaint them what they had done, and how the Parliament had agreed with them. In the Debate of these Matters in the House of Commons, it was voted, that to have a Presbytery in the Church, is according to the Word of God; and that many Congregations may be under one Presbyterian Government; and that Pastors, Doctors, Teachers, Elders, and Deacons, are the Officers of the Church, in the Government of it; and that several Congregations should be under one Classis, and the Church governed by Congregational, Classis, Synodical Assemblies; and that there should be one at least in every Congregation to labour in the Word and Doctrine. In the Uxbridge Treaty, Mr. Vines and Mr. Marshall of the English, and Mr. Henderson of the Scots, were sent from the Assembly to attend the Parliament Commissioners, and dispute for the Divine Right of Presbytery; against Dr. Steward who was named by the King to be one of his Commissioners on the Propositions of Religion only, and Dr. Sheldon. During this Treaty, a Petition was directed to the Commissioners of both Sides from many thousand Inhabitants in the County of Bucks, to this effect; That Religion might be established as it was in the purest times of Queen Elizabeth. A Copy being transmitted to the Commons at Westminster, they condemn'd it, and sent for Sir John Lawrence, the chief Promoter, into Custody. After the End of the Treaty, by Consent of the Assembly and House of Commons, there was a Day of Thanksgiving order'd for the Successes which God gave the Parliament since the Breach of the Treaty. And then the last Act of the Assembly this Year, was to send a Message to the Parliament touching the Title to the Directory, and the Ordinance for taking away the Common Prayer Book, and for settling an Able Ministry, and for keeping Profane and Ignorant Persons from the Sacrament: all which the Commons debated in a grand Committee, and referred some things back to the Assembly, and order'd them to nominate some Ministers to go with the Armies into the Field this next Summer.

The Death of Mr. Chillingworth is thus remembered 1644. by the Lord Clarendon, upon Waller's forcing Arundel Castle to Surrender to the Parliament. Here
 “ the Learned and Eminent Mr. Chillingworth was taken Prisoner, who out of Kindness and Respect to the Lord Hepton had accompanied him in that March; and being indisposed by the terrible Coldness of that Season, chose to repose himself in that Garrison till the Weather should mend. As soon as his Person was known, which would have drawn Reverence from any noble Enemy, the Clergy that attended that Army prosecuted him with all the Inhumanity imaginable; so that by their barbarous Usage he died within few days, to the Grief of all that knew him, and of many who knew him not but by his Book, and the Reputation he had with learned Men. They proceeded to insult his Body and his Works in the very Grave; for when his Body was carried to the Cloyster of the Church of Chichester, to be there interr'd; Mr. Francis Cheynel, Rector of Petworth, stood at the Grave ready to receive it, with the Author's Book of The Religion of Protestants in his hand: and when the Company were all settled, he made a ridiculous Speech, and in conclusion, throwing the Book insultingly on the Corps in the Grave, said thus; Get thee gone then, thou cursed Book! which hast seduced so many precious Souls; Get thee gone, thou corrupt rotten Book, Earth to Earth, and Dust to Dust; Get thee gone into the place of Rottenness, that thou may'st rot with thy Author, and see Corruption.

This Year began with an Ordinance for the new Model of an Army, constituting Sir Thomas Fairfax General, Col. Skippon Major-General, giving Commission Apr. 1. to lead an Army against all Rebels, Traitors, and other common Enemies, and them to kill and slay; and to exercise Martial Law; and to execute the Laws and Ordinances confirm'd this present Parliament, to be read at the Head of his Army. After which, April 3. the Ordinance pass'd for the discharging of the Members of both Houses from all Offices both Military and Civil; called the Self-denying Ordinance. The Lord General Essex, the Earl of Manchester, and the Earl of Denbigh, having resign'd their Commissions the Day before, Fairfax appointed his general Rendezvous at Windfor, and soon modell'd an Army of one and twenty thousand Men; who by Order of Parliament, pass'd Apr. 28. were to march Westward for the Relief of Taunton. Cromwel came to Windfor under pretence of taking his Leave of the new General, as if he now look'd on himself as discharged from all Military Employment by the late Ordinance. But he had made such Interest in the Committee of both Kingdoms at Westminster, that they had sent Orders to their General Sir Tho. Fairfax to send a Party of Horse to lie between Oxford and Worcester to intercept the Correspondence between the King and Prince Rupert, and particularly recommended Lieutenant-General Cromwel for that Service; who went away with a good Party of Horse and Dragoons, and engaged a Brigade of the King's Horse at Ipslip Bridge Apr. 24. and routed them; and pursued them to Blechington-House garison'd for the King, and commanded by Col. Windbank, who in a Surprize surrender'd it upon Articles the same Day; for which he was condemn'd in a Council of War at Oxford, and shot to Death.

The Lord General Fairfax began his March April 20. toward Reading, in order to relieve Taunton: but the Committee of both Kingdoms hearing of the Prince's Advance toward Oxford, order'd him May 4. to stop his March; and May 6. an Ordinance pass'd, that Sir Thomas Fairfax should only send a Party of about 3000 Foot and 1500 Horse to Taunton; and he, with the rest of his Army, should march back to joyn Cromwel and Brown, and attend the King's Motions with their united Force. Upon coming up of this Detachment near Taunton, the King's Forces rais'd the Siege; and the Parliament sent a Letter

The King took the Field from Oxford on May 7. and being join'd by Prince Rupert, march'd into Worcestershire, designing the Relief of Chester, which had been long Besieg'd by the Parliament Forces under Sir William Ewereton; who, by that time his Majesty came within twenty Miles of Chester, rais'd his Siege, and retreated into Lancashire. Whereupon his Majesty diverted his Course toward Leicester, and coming before that City May 29. took it by Storm.

Cromwel made Lie. Gen. of the Horse.

Fatal Battle at Naseby.

In the mean time the Lords and Commons agreed with the Committee of both Kingdoms, that General Fairfax should lay Siege to Oxford, and speedily reduce that important Head-Quarters of the King. Accordingly Fairfax march'd up his Army near Oxford, and began to beleaguer it May 22. having his own Quarters at Marston, Cromwel at Wileham, and Brown at Wolvercot. Fifteen Days were spent without much Action, when the two Houses being startled with the Loss of Leicester, sent positive Orders to General Fairfax to bring away his Army; who accordingly June 9. drew off all his Forces, and next Day came before Bovstal-House, Garrison'd for the King, and Commanded by Sir William Campian, Besieged by Major-General Skippon. Fairfax sent a Summons, and Sir William Campian return'd a stout Answer. Skippon that Night made a general Assault upon it, but was beaten off with great Loss, and next Day rais'd the Siege, and followed after the main Army to Great-Brickhill.

The King had march'd from Leicester toward Daventry, with intention to relieve Oxford; but hearing that Siege was rais'd, he turned to Northampton, and put the Associated Parts into great dread of being call'd to account for their Confederacy against their Prince. Cromwel had been call'd from the Siege of Oxford to the Isle of Ely, to support the Association, and was shortly to attend his Place in the House of Commons; but being much more disposed for the Camp, he prevailed with a Council of War to resolve, that General Fairfax should write to the Parliament to dispense with Cromwel's Absence from the House, and to appoint him Lieutenant-General of the Horse, which was accordingly done. Upon this new Commission, Cromwel came out of the Associated Parts with six hundred Horse and Dragoons, and join'd with General Fairfax and his main Army at Gilsborough, four Miles from Northampton, on June 12. the King having his Camp at Borough-hill, and thence moving toward Hurborough.

Fairfax followed the Motions of the King, and came up to the Rear of the King's Army, near Naseby, early in the Morning June the 14th. Upon which, both Armies were drawn into Battalia. On the King's side, Prince Rupert and Prince Maurice commanded the Right Wing, Sir Marmaduke Langdale the Left, and his Majesty himself in Person the main Body; the Earl of Lindsey and Jacob Lord Ashley the Right-hand Reserve, and the Lord Bard and Sir George Lisle the Left Reserve. On the Parliament Side, the Right Wing was led by Cromwel, the Left Wing by Colonel Ireton, the main Body by General Fairfax and Major-General Skippon; With Reserves to be brought up by Rainborough, Hammond, and Pride.

Prince Rupert, with his Majesty's Right Wing, first began the Charge on that side against Ireton, who was soon disorder'd, and dismounted, and run through the Thigh with a Pike, and into the Face with a Halbert, and taken Prisoner; till afterward, upon a Turn of the Battle, he gain'd his Liberty. Prince Rupert pursued the Advantage, and chas'd the Enemy almost to Naseby Town; and in his Return summoned the Train, and was offering Quarter, not imagining that he should come back too late to succour his Friends: 1645. for Cromwel had charg'd Sir Marmaduke Langdale 21 Car. I.

with great Success; and though he met with gallant Resistance, he broke through all the Divisions, and forced them to fly beyond all their Foot. The Encounter between the two main Bodies were fierce and doubtful, the Success seeming at first to incline to his Majesty, all the Front Divisions of Fairfax, except his own Regiment of Foot, giving ground, and in Disorder falling behind the Reserves: But the Colonels and Officers advancing with Colours and all their Men whom they could possibly make to rally and stand, by degrees repell'd the King's Forces, and at last put them to a disorderly Retreat; yet one Division of the King's Foot stood like a Rock, and tho' twice desperately charg'd, would not move an inch: till Fairfax commanded a Captain to charge them once more in the Front, while he himself, with his own Regiment and a commanded Party, fell on them in the Rear, to meet together in the middle; which was done accordingly, and that last Body of the King's Foot put into Confusion, and broken. The King, with undaunted Courage, rallied his Horse, and put them into tolerable Order, and was join'd by Prince Rupert return'd from his fatal Success: Fairfax presently brought up a good Battalia of Horse, Foot, and Artillery, to charge the King's Troops, who were unwilling to venture another Shock upon such great Disadvantages; the King with bravest Magnanimity endeavour'd all that was possible to encourage them, crying out, One Charge more, and we recover the Day: But he could not prevail; for they retreated in Disorder, and Fairfax's Horse pursued them within two Miles of Leicester. The King gain'd nothing but the Characters of Courage and Conduct from all his Enemies. He lost, in a manner, his entire Army, his Artillery, Ammunition, Coaches, and what went nearest to his Heart, his Cabinet of Papers and Letters; and with some scatter'd Horse he was forced to fly from Leicester to Ashby de la Zouch, thence to Lichfield, and so for a safer Retreat into Wales. General Fairfax following to Leicester, and regaining that Town upon Articles June 18. and thence marching his Army to the Relief of Taunton.

Courage and Conduct of the King's General Goring, who besieg'd Taunton, upon News of the Advance of Fairfax, march'd away his Army and march'd toward Langport; and being Master of the several Passes on the River, thought he could decline Fighting, and secure his Retreat toward Bridgwater: But Fairfax drew down his Ordnance to such Places of Advantage, that they did great execution on Goring's Army, while his Foot resolutely gain'd the Pass, and his Horse advanced over; and after some Disadvantage being reliev'd by Major Bethel and Major Desborough, they gave such an effectual Charge as put Goring's Horse to a Retreat, and his Foot into such Confusion, that Fairfax chas'd them almost to Bridgwater, and with the Slaughter of three hundred, took about fourteen hundred Prisoners and twelve hundred Horses. After this Victory, General Fairfax, in a Council of War, resolv'd to storm the strong Garrison of Bridgwater, and began the Assault the 22d of July, and forc'd a Surrendry the very next Day. The Taking of this Place was of most considerable Advantage to the Parliament; for, by it a Line of Garrisons was drawn over that Isthmus of Ground between the South-Sea and Severn, by Bridgwater, Taunton, Lime, and Langport; by which the Counties of Devon and Cornwall, then wholly at the King's Devotion, except Plimouth, were in a manner block'd up from all Intercourse with the Eastern Parts.

K.'s Interest declines in the West

July the 25th it was determined in a Council of War, that Fairfax, with his Army, should advance farther to the West, to hinder Goring from rallying his Forces: and the March was accordingly made as far as Marlock; but there the General took his own

1645. Resolution to march back, and attempt the Taking 21 Car. I. of Bath and Sherborn, in order to the straitning of Bristol, and hindring Prince Rupert from raising any Recruits in those Parts. With this Intention the General came to Wells; and Colonel Rich, with a Party of Horse and Dragoons surprized Bath, by a desperate Stratagem of the Dragoons creeping over the Bridge on their Bellies, and seizing the small End of the Guard's Muskets, frighted them into taking Quarter, and then firing the Gate, put the Town into such a Consternation, that they yielded upon Articles to leave the common Soldiers Prisoners, and to suffer the Officers to march away to what Garison they pleas'd. The Wall of the City, and the Works, were very strong and tenable; and Prince Rupert was advanced with a Party of fifteen hundred Horse and Foot, from Bristol, within four Miles, to relieve it: but coming too late, Retreated.

After this, Fairfax advanced to Sherborn-Castle, a strong Garison, Commanded by Sir Lewis Dives; and laying close Siege to it August the 2d, entred a Breach August the 15th, and giving Quarter for Life only, took very great Plunder, and above four hundred Prisoners. The next Resolution was, to Invest Bristol, where Prince Rupert then was with a considerable Garison. This Siege was began Friday August the 22d by Land, and Vice-Admiral Moulton riding about Milford-haven, sent Ships into King's-Road to block it up by Sea. So that after a brave Defence, the Prince offer'd to Surrender upon Honourable Articles on the 8th of September. But Fairfax insisting upon his own Propositions, Stormed the City in several Places September the 10th, and obliged the Prince to a Surrendry upon hard Conditions September the 11th. For which being tax'd by some who knew not to what Extremities he was reduc'd; his Highness drew up a Narrative of the State and Condition of the City and Garison of Bristol when his Highness Prince Rupert came thither, and of the Actions during the Siege, and of the Treaties and Rendition thereof: which he laid before the King and his Council of War at Newark October the 18th, who unanimously declared, That he had not been guilty of the least want of Courage or Fidelity in that Action.

The King

his Army.

We return to the King; who, after the fatal Battle of Naseby, had been driven into Wales to recruit his Army: from whence, about the Beginning of August, he advanced with a Body of three thousand Horse toward Lichfield. On August the 15th he came to Welbeck-House, and was there reinforced with Horse and Dragoons from Newark; with which he was moving Northward, with a Design (as generally believ'd) to join with Montros, who was by this time Master of the Field in Scotland.
But to prevent that Motion, Major-General Poyntz was post'd with above two thousand Horse about Doncaster and Rotberham; with whom Colonel Roffiter and the Staffordshire and Derbyshire Horse were hastning to join.
So that his Majesty finding his Passage that way intercepted, turn'd back Southwards, and fell into the Associated Counties; and having lain one Night at Belvoir-Castle, made his next Head-Quarters at Stamford, and took Huntingdon after some Opposition August the 24th, thence to Woburn and Dunstable, and thence to Oxford August the 28th, the Day after the Death of the Lord Keeper Littleton.

Marches

Thence toward Hereford.

His Majesty taking out what Forces could be spared August 31. march'd from Oxford to Cambden, with Design, as the Parliament suppos'd, to raise the Siege of Hereford, then invested by General Leven and the Scots; or Bristol, then beleagu'r'd by General Fairfax. The Scots, upon the King's Advance, rais'd their Siege before Hereford, and began to march homewards: and soon after his Majesty received the unwelcome News of the Loss of Bristol; upon which he visited Hereford, Worcester, and Lud-

low, and advanced to relieve Chester. Major-General Poyntz (who with Colonel Roffiter was commanded by the Parliament to attend the King in his Motions from Oxford) followed the King with great Expedition, and on Routon-Heath, within two Miles of Chester, began to engage his Majesty's Forces, who receiv'd them so bravely, that they routed the Major, and were in pursuit of him; till Colonel Jones and Adjutant Louthian having drawn out five hundred Horse and three hundred Foot from their Leaguer before Chester, came to his Assistance, and charging the King's Troops on the other side, gave Poyntz's Men an opportunity to rally, whereby the King's Forces being obliged to fight in Front and Rear, were defeated, near six hundred slain upon the Place, among whom Bertue Stuart Earl of Lichfield, and many Officers and Persons of Quality, and above a thousand Soldiers taken, his Majesty not without difficulty retiring with the Remainder into Wales; where he once more recruited, and brought back an Army of about three thousand fighting Men October 2. to Lichfield, next Day to Melburn, and on the 4th to Newark: From whence October 12. he march'd to Welbeck, and drew out twelve hundred Horse commanded by Lord Digby and Sir Marmaduke Langdale, with Orders to march into Scotland and join Montros. They speedily advanced to Doncaster, took there many Parliament Soldiers, and beat up their Quarters in several other Towns;
so proceeded to Sherborn, where they routed Colonel Wren's Regiment of Horse, and took almost a thousand Foot Prisoners.
But Colonel
Copley, with a Party of about 1300, came up to them; upon whose Approach, the Lord Digby and Sir Marmaduke
drew out to meet them, and both sides charged with extraordinary Gallantry, but Copley prevail'd, and recovered all the Foot and Arms, and took about 300 Prisoners, with the Lord Digby's Coach, and his Letters and Papers, which with little Honour were Printed by Order of the two Houses. After this Misfortune, they still attempted to find a way into Scotland, and got very near the Borders, when Sir
John Brown,
Governour of Carlisle, with a Party met them about Carlisle-Sands, and broke their whole Body, and took many Prisoners, and above 200 Horse and Arms.
After this second Defeat, they still press'd on toward Dunfrezze, but finding their Passage intercepted by Lestey, they were glad to

Vessels to themselves into the Isle of Man, and thence to Ireland.

Unfortunate

The King's Interest was now sinking into Ruin and Despair in all Parts: After the Taking of Bristol nothing could stand before the Army of Fairfax.
The Castle of Devizes, commanded by Sir Charles Lloyd, was taken by Cromwel Septemb. 23. and Lacock-House the same Day by Colonel Pickering, and Berkley-Castle by Colonel Rainsborough September 26. and Winchester by Cromwel October 5. and Basing-House October 15. Again Tiverton-Castle
October 19. by General Fairfax, who after an Attempt upon Exeter, help'd to raise the Siege of Plimouth, and took Dartmouth by Storm January 18. and then closely block'd up Exeter, leaving the Command of that Siege to Sir Hardress Waller, while he himself, with the rest of his Army, march'd off to watch the Motions of the Lord Hopton, who being Commander in chief under the Prince, had march'd to Torington with near four thousand Horse and three thousand Foot, expecting there some more Recruits from Barnstaple. Here
Fairfax engaged them, and gave them an absolute Defeat; and then pursued the only Remains of a Royal Army into Cornwall, where the Prince had his own Regiment and other Cornish Troops, that made a Body of about five thousand Horse and one thousand Foot:
but, not able to make a the Multitudes that Fairfax was pouring on upon him, he embark'd with several Lords and

1645. pres'd upon by Fairfax, that he was glad to enter 21 Car. I. in a Treaty, and accept of Articles for disbanding all his Forces March 14.

The Royal Cause was equally suffering and expiring in all other parts of England. The City of Hereford that had bore and escaped a Siege from the Scots, was surpriz'd by a Stratagem under the Conduct of Colonel Morgan and Colonel Birch Decemb. 8. Beefton Castle had been surrender'd Novemb. 16. and the strong City of Chester delivered up by the Lord Byron into the Parliament's Hands Feb. 3. Newark (to which the King had retreated at the beginning of October) was commanded by the Parliament to be soon after besieg'd by the Scots Army; and the King was forced to leave the Town by Night, and to get privately to Oxford, where he had leisure to reflect how fatal the whole Year had been to him: and it concluded with one blow that seem'd to cut off all hopes of Recovery; this was the Defeat of the Lord Aspley, who had the only Forces in the Field for the King, about 3000 the greater part Horse, with whom he was advancing from Worcester toward Oxford to join with his Majesty for helping to make up an Army for the next Campaign; on these Troops the poor Royalists in Oxford built all their Hopes, and therefore sent out a good Party to meet them and conduct them; but all Intelligence and Passages were so intercepted by the Enemy, that this Party from Oxford could hear nothing of my Lord Aspley's Motions, till they heard he was utterly defeated Mar. 22. near Stow in Gloucestershire, by Colonel Morgan, Sir William Brereton, Colonel Birch, &c. very few escap'd towards Faringdon and Oxford, and many of them taken in the way by Colonel Fleetwood. The Lord Aspley himself being taken Prisoner, was so sensible of the Consequences of this Defeat, that he told one of Brereton's Officers, You have now done your Work, and may go to Play, unless you will fall out among your selves.

In the midst of these Victories, the Commons at Westminster amus'd the World with Peace, and August 7. took into consideration the sending of Propositions to the King, but took care to preclude all Accommodation by these two Votes. 1. That in regard they had met with so many Delusions in the way of Treaty they would henceforth admit of no Treaty nor Debate by Commissioners. 2. That such Propositions as shall be sent shall be drawn up into Bills, that so the Royal Assent being desired and had thereunto, they may become Acts of Parliament. Which in effect was to hold no Correspondence, and to give no Terms but what should be absolutely impos'd upon a vanquish'd Prince. However the King sent a Message to both Houses December 5. to shew The constant Application of his earnest Endeavours to find some Expedient for the speedy ending of these unhappy Distractions; and for that purpose desires a safe Conduct for the Duke of Richmond, the Earl of Southampton, John Ashburnham and Jessy Palmer Esquires, with such Propositions as his Majesty is confident will be the Foundation of a happy and well-grounded Peace. His Majesty sent another Message in pursuance of the former Decemb. 15. and again a third Message with Propositions for committing the Militia into other Hands, and for having a personal Treaty with the two Houses at Westminster. At last the Lords and Commons sent Answer Decemb. 25. to the two first Messages, denying safe Conduct and Treaty, and saying, They had now under their Consideration Propositions and Bills for the settling of a safe and well-grounded Peace, to be presented with all speed to his Majesty. Many other Messages, Answers and Replies, pass'd between the King and the two Houses, to no effect but to shew the insolence of prevailing Power. In the King's last Message of this Year March 23. his Majesty propos'd, that if he may have the Faith of both Houses of Parliament for the Preservation of his Honour, Person and Estate; and that Liberty be given to his Adherents to go home and live quietly, enjoying their Estates without Oaths impos'd upon them, he will immediately disband all his Forces and disantle all his Garisons, 1645.

 and return to his two Houses of Parliament, and pass 21 Car. I. an Act of Oblivion, and will farther do whatever they will advise him for the Good and Peace of this Kingdom. But these offers of the utmost Condescension, serv'd only to animate the prevailing Party in Parliament, who now look'd upon the King as their Prisoner, tho' in his own Garison at Oxford.

As to the Confusions in Religion, the Assembly of Divines on March 27. came with a farther Address to the House of Commons, touching the Non-Admission of vicious and ignorant Persons to the Sacrament. This occasion'd several Debates in the House of Commons, who order'd April 1. That the Assembly should set down in Particular, what measure of Understanding Persons ought to have of the Trinity, and other Points debated, before they be admitted to the Sacrament. In these Debates Mr. Selden and Mr. Whitlock in set speeches deliver'd their Opinion against all Power of Excommunication and Suspension from the Sacrament. the first beginning with this Assertion, That for ten thousand Years there was no sign of any Law to suspend Persons from Religious Exercises; and concluding thus: It appears Excommunication is but Humane Invention that was taken from the Heathen.

April 7. the aged excellent Bishop Morton was brought before the Commons, for Christning a Child in the old way, and signing it with the Sign of the Cross; and refusing to deliver up his Seal of the County Palatine of Durham, he was committed to the Tower.

April 26. an Ordinance pass'd, that no Person be admitted to Preach, who is not ordain'd a Minister, either in this or some other Reformed Church, except such as intending the Ministry shall be allowed for the Trial of their Gifts, by those who shall be appointed by both Houses of Parliament. The great Business of the Assembly was an Ecclesiastical Union with their Brethren in Scotland; and therefore May 6. a Preamble to the Proceedings in Church-Affairs to be sent into Scotland, was presented by the Assembly to the Commons, and assented to; and it was farther Order'd, That all the Proceedings of the Parliament and Assembly, in the Business of the Church, should be drawn up and sent into Scotland. We hear no more of the Assembly till July 14. when they presented to the Commons a Book which they had examined and found to be full of Blasphemies and Heresies, and though the Author was dead, they desire the House to put some publick Example of Justice upon the Book. The House referred it to the Committee of Examinations to find out the Printer, and order'd that all the Books should be brought in by the Bookellers, and burnt by the Hangman, and gave Thanks to the Assembly for their care in this Business, or rather for their fordid Submission of Heretical Books to the better Judgment of the Lay Commons.

August 1. some Divines of the Assembly presented a Petition to the Commons in the Name of the Assembly, desiring speedy course might be taken to keep from the Sacrament Ignorant, Scandalous and Profane People. The Speaker in the Name of the House gave answer, That the House was in Debate of the same Business long before their coming, and that they would expedite it with as much conveniency as could be. It was debated by the Commons Aug. 5. whether Chapels of Ease and those in private Houses should not be exempted from the Church in the Presbyterian way, upon occasion of the Ordinance sent up to the Lords for settling the Form of Presbytery. Aug. 8. the Assembly sent another Petition to the Commons, insisting upon their Claim of Jure Divino Power to suspend from the Sacrament all such as they should judge to be Scandalous or Ignorant. And a new Petition August 11. for punishing such as derogated from the Directory, or used the Common-Prayer Book, which by Aug. 27. procured a new Ordinance of the Lords and Commons for the "More effectual putting in execution the Directory for publick Worship, and for bringing in all Common-Prayer Books to the Committees of the respective Counties, to be disposed of as the Parliament shall direct. His Majesty at Oxford by Proclamation dated Novemb. 13. required and commanded the "Common-Prayer to be kept and used in all Churches and Chapels according to the Statute of 1 Q. Eliz. and that the Directory be in no sort admitted, received or used, being introduc'd by colour of Ordinance of Parliament, made without and against our Consent, and against an express Act of Parliament still in force. But, alas, the Proclamation was rather Protesting for a Right than Asserting of it. The Force of the King's Orders could go no farther than that of his Arms, confined to Oxford, and a very few other small Garrisons.

Aug. 20. it was order'd by the Commons, that no Foreign Impression of English Bibles should be vend'd here without perusal and allowance of the Assembly. And upon occasion of the Penalties that were to attend a suspension from the Sacrament, it was voted Sept. 6. That the Presbytery should not meddle with any thing of Meum and Tuum, till it were determined by the Civil Magistrate. And they began now to be so jealous of a Presbyterian Discipline, that the House being inform'd of an intended Petition for establishing Presbytery, they voted it Scandalous even before they received it. And October 15. they resolv'd, That the Presbytery should not suspend from the Sacrament at their own Discretion, but for such Offences only as should be particularly expressed in an Ordinance made for that purpose; which Ordinance was pass'd by the two Houses October 20. giving power to the several Elderships to suspend from the Sacrament of the Lord's-Supper all Ignorant and Scandalous Persons, according to the Rules and Directions hereafter following, and not otherwise. So that the Presbyterians who had often objected to the Episcopal Clergy their want of Power to suspend unworthy Communicants, were now themselves under greater restraint; for more Authority was left by the Rubrick of the Liturgy to every private Minister, than was reserv'd by this Ordinance to the Clallical Assemblies.

Ordinance for Ordaining Ministers.

Novemb. 8. an Ordinance long depending was pass'd for the Ordination of Ministers, declaring, That the Word Presbyter and the Word Bishop in Scripture signifie one and the same Function, and therefore Presbyters being lawfully thereunto appointed and authorized may ordain other Presbyters, according to the Rules of Examination and Fasting and Praying and Imposition of Hands in this Ordinance prescribed. Provided that this Ordinance shall stand in force for twelve Months and no longer: And indeed one twelve Months space was the utmost Reign of Presbytery and all the Parts of it.

Parliament aw'd by the Scots into a settlement of Presbytery.

The Model of this Presbyterian Government was not yet establish'd, nor were the Lords or Commons much Friends to it, though to hold fair with the Scots, and to humour the Assembly, they now had it under consideration, and fram'd it into an Ordinance before the end of the Year. But in the mean time they often betray'd their Fears and Jealousies of it. For when Novemb. 19. the Common-Council of London petition'd the House of Commons, that the Government of the Church might be speedily settled and observ'd, and greater Power might be given to the Ministers and Elders than was established by the Parliament, according to the Word of God. The House order'd a sharp Answer to be penn'd to this effect, that the House had taken much pains in debating and settling of Church Government, and they conceived the City and Common-Council were inform'd falsely of their Proceedings, or else they would not have precipitated the Judgement of the Parliament. And when another Petition of the same import was deliver'd from divers Ministers of London, they refer'd it to a Committee to find out the Design of the Petition, and who were the advancers thereof; and then sent out two of their Members to the Petitioners to tell them, They need not attend for any Answer, but should go home and look to the Charges of their several Congregations.

1645: 21 Car. I. Parliament re-ward the Assembly.

However to please the Assembly, the Commons order'd Decemb. 4. that one hundred Pounds should be given to the Prolocutor Dr. Twiss for a Gratuity, and that the Members should have all due Encouragement to meet daily, and proceed upon the Catechism. But the Faction within the Assembly it self between the Presbyterians and Independents, was now growing into such a ferment, that Decemb. 11. the Presbyterian Divines came to the House of Commons to inform them, that a printed Paper in the nature of a Remonstrance was publish'd by the dissenting Brethren of their Assembly, which they conceiv'd to be scandalous to them, and therefore desired they might make an Answer to it. The House nam'd a Committee to peruse the Remonstrance, and consider of the scandal of it, and to enquire by what Authority it was publish'd. Decemb. 21. the Commons order'd Mr. Strong one of the Preachers that Day before them, to be added to the Assembly, and gave one hundred pounds to Mr. Reynolds; and on Feb. 16. they appointed a Day to consider of the Petition of the Assembly for settling the Presbyterian Government; wherein they were quicken'd with a Letter from the Parliament of Scotland, read Feb. 26. desiring the speedy settling of Religion, according to the Judgment and Request of the Assembly of Divines. Upon which the Commons proceeded in this Church Business de die in diem, and sent up to the Lords an Ordinance March 5. which was pass'd March 14. wherein they declare, that by the merciful Assistance of God having removed the Book of Common-Prayer, and established the Directory; and having abolished the Prelatical Hierarchy, and instead thereof laid the Foundation of a Presbyterian Government; they come now to supply the Defects of some former Ordinances and Directions of Parliament; and do ordain, 1. That there be a choice made of Elders throughout the Kingdom of England, according to the Directions of Aug. 19. 2. That notice of such Election be given by the Minister in the publick Assembly. 3. That such Elections be made by the major part of the Congregation, being such as have taken the Covenant. 4. That there shall be Triers of Elections to hear and determine all Controversies thence arising. And so on to three and twenty several Articles of Provision, that after all the Pretensions and Title of Presbytery, made it rather a Scheme of Erastian Government, at the pleasure of the Magistrate, and under the administration of the People.

But one good Motion and that defeated.

One little Attempt was made by the Assembly for the promoting of Letters and the study of the Scriptures. They sent a Petition by some of their Brethren to the Commons March 13. that Mr. Patrick Young might be encouraged in the printing of the Greek Testament, much expected and desired by the Learned, especially beyond the Seas: And seem'd to prevail for having an Ordinance read that Day, "for Printing and Publishing the old Testament of the Septuagint Translation, wherein Mr. Young had formerly taken pains, having in his hands as Library-keeper of S. James's an Original Tecla Bible of that Translation. But though under the prospect of this Encouragement Mr. Young made some progress in these Works, yet Religion and Learning were so little countenanc'd by the Parliament and Assembly, that they never more called for the performance of them, and they were left unfinish'd by Mr. Young at his death in 1652.

The Conscience and Honour of the King in charging the Prince to be constant in his Religion, does appear in several Letters written by his Majesty under his greatest Misfortunes and Distresses. In a Letter to the Lord Colepepper about the beginning of October, the King wrote thus: — But that which is of more necessity, indeed absolute, is, that with the best conveniency, the most secrecy and greatest expedition, Prince Charles be transported into France, where his Mother is to have the sole care of him in all things but one, which is his Religion, and that must still be under the care

After which, the Prince being in Jersey, the King thought him to be in France; and being much afraid he might be tamper'd with to change his Religion, he sent him this Letter, dated at Oxford Mar. 22. 1645.

Charles,

" Hoping that this will find you safe with your " Mother, I think fit to write this short, but " necessary, Letter to you. Then know, that your 1646. The King's Interest was now reduc'd to so low an ebb, that it was impossible for him to take the Field. The two Houses therefore had no apprehension of Danger, but from his coming in Person to Westminster, and pressing them to Peace and Reconciliation; which they had the greater reason to expect, because he had sent them repeated Offers of a personal Treaty with them. But not daring to trust themselves and the People with the Sight of the King, they pass'd several Votes Mar. 31. to this effect: " That in case the K. should, contrary to the Advice " of both Houses of Parliament, come or attempt " to come within the Lines of Communication, that then the Committee of the Militia and Guards about the City should conduct him to St. James's, and prevent all Resort to him, and Imprison all " that should presume to come with him. So as the King found he could not go to the Parliament without being their Prisoner, nor could he long continue safe in his Garrison at Oxford, for his strong Castle of Dennington was Surrendered to the Parliament Forces April 1. and Woodstock was by necessity given up Apr. 26. and Exeter, Besieg'd by the Army of Fairfax, was glad to yield upon Articles Apr. 9. and Barnstable Apr. 12. And Fairfax, flush'd with irresistible Success, was now marching to Besiege Oxford. Under these Extremities his Majesty resolv'd to throw himself into the Hands of the Scots Army that lay before Newark, communicating his Design to the Marquis of Ormond in a Letter dated Apr. 13. in these Words; Having lately received very good Security that We, and all that do or shall adhere to us, shall be safe in our Persons, Honours, and Consciences, in the Scottish Army; and that they shall really and effectually join with us, and shall employ their Armies and Forces to assist us to the procuring of an happy and well grounded Peace, for the Good of us and our Kingdoms, in the Recovery of our just Right; we have resolv'd to put Ourselves to the hazard of passing into the Scots Army now lying before Newark. The King had greater reason to trust to this Security that he says was given to him; because the Antipathies between the English Parliament and the Scots Commissioners and Army were very high. The Scots had in a manner protest'd against the Propositions which the two Houses were sending to the King and had as it were ap-peal'd to the People, by Printing their Papers. At which the Houses were so incens'd, that they concurr'd in a joint Vote, That the Matter contained in the said Papers was false and scandalous against the Parliament of England; That they should be burnt by the common Hangman; That a Declaration should be drawn up to hold forth to the whole World the Untruths therein contained, and the Innocency and Integrity of the Parliament; and that the Author or Publisher was an incendiary between the two Kingdoms. Which harsh Proceeding was such a Breach of the Union between the two Covenanted Nations, that, like Herod and Pilate, nothing but trading for the Person of their Master could have made them Friends.

Upon the Approach of Fairfax toward Newberry, The King his Majesty, on Monday Apr. 27. about Midnight left Oxford in Disguise, in Company only of Dr. Hudson a Divine, and Mr. John Ashburnham, riding as a Servant to the latter with a Cloak-bag behind him. They went to Henley, Brentford, and Harrow on the Hill, thence toward St. Albans, making their way to Harborough in Leicestershire, where they expected Monsieur Montrill the French Agent; who failing in his Appointment, his Majesty went to Stamford, thence to Downham in Norfolk, where he lay from Thursday Apr. 30. to Monday May 4. then to Southam, where meeting with the French Agent, he sent to General Leven, and was conducted by a Troop of Horse to Lieutenant-General David Leslie's Quarters on Tuesday May 5. A Design manag'd with so much Secrecy, that those at Oxford, though they soon knew his Majesty was gone, could not guess whither he intended his Course; but it was generally reported he was gone for London. This so alarm'd the two Houses, that they published an Order, May 4. that what Person soever should harbour and conceal, or know of the harbouring or concealing of the King's Person, and should not immediately reveal it to the Speakers of both Houses, should be proceeded against as a Traitor to the Commonwealth, forfeit his whole Estate, and die with it at Mercy.

The King carried to Newcastle.

Sends a Message of Peace.

On the 6th of May the two Houses received Intelligence from Colonel Payntz and their Commissioners before Newark, that the King was in the Scots Army. Upon which the Commons voted, That the Commissioners and General of the Scots Army be desired, that his Majesty's Person be disposed of as both Houses shall desire and direct; and that his Majesty be thence disposed of and sent to Warwick Castle. General Leven immediately prevail'd with the King to send Order to the Lord Bellasis Governour of Newark to surrender it to the Commissioners of the Parliament; which was done by Articles signed the 6th of May. And the same Day the Scotch General sent Letters to the Committee of both Kingdoms at Westminster to inform them of the strange Providence with which they are now surprized, the King coming into their Army yesterday in so private a way, that after they had made search for him, they could not find him out in sundry Houses: a matter of much Astonishment to them, seeing they did not expect he would have come in any Place under their Power. May 7. the Scots Army, with their unexpected Prize, took their March Northward, his Majesty being with Lieutenant-General Lesley in the Van of them; and on May 13. came to Newcastle, where his Majesty took up his Residence in the General's Quarters. On May 25. the Committee of Estates with the Scots Army sent the two Houses a Paper of Reasons for not delivering up Colonel Ashburnham and Dr. Hudson the King's Guides. His Majesty on May 18. sent a Message to the two Houses, offering all possible Concessions, and desiring to return to his Parliament for his and their mutual Comfort; and next Day a Letter to the City of London, expressing his Integrity and full Resolution to comply with his Parliaments in every thing for settling Truth and Peace, that his Return to that his ancient City may be to the Satisfaction of his Parliament, the good liking of his Citizens, and all his good People, and to his own greater Joy and 1646. Comfort. And again June 10. another Message to both Houses, proposing that He may come to London with Safety, Freedom, and Honour, where he resolves to comply with his Houses of Parliament in every thing which may be most for the Good of his Subjects. But this unfortunate Prince was now in such a helpless state, that neither would the Scots Army deliver him, nor the English Parliament receive him, but for a Victim to their mutual Designs of Avarice and Empire.

His unhappy Condition

Of first Surrendered.

And all other Garisons.

English Earl, weary of the Scots Army.

Desirous of the King's Person.

Notes against the Scots.

Propositions of Peace.

Hard and unreasonable.

General Fairfax came a second time before Oxford with his victorious Army May 1. and prepared for the close Siege of it, and sent to Sir Thomas Glenham the Governour, to demand the Surrendry of it; who entred on a Treaty May 18. and receiving his Majesty's Warrant dated at Newcastle June 10. did Surrender upon honourable Articles June 29. Prince Rupert and Prince Maurice taking Ship at Dover and going over into France, where the Prince of Wales was also retired from the Isle of Fersey, the Duke of York being brought up to St. James's.

The few remaining Garisons for the King made the like Terms of Surrendry; Worcester on July 19. Wallingford July 22. Pendennis Castle Aug. 16. and Rozland Castle Aug. 17. So that there was not now one Garison in England or Wales remaining, but what was reduced to the Power of the two Houses, save only those in the North, which remained in the Hands of the Scots.

And therefore the two Houses at Westminster thought their only Business was now to get Possession of the King's Person, and to get a fair Riddance of the Scots Army. In order to this, they enter'd into many Conferences with the Commissioners for the Kingdom of Scotland, and agreed with them upon what they called Propositions for Peace June 27. Gen. Leven and his Officers the same Day presenting a mock Petition to the King, Praying his Majesty to compassionate the distressed Condition of his Kingdoms groaning under the heavy Pressures of manifold Calamities occasioned by the Continuance of this unnatural War; and to comply with the Counsels of his Parliaments. The King returned Answer, that He came into the Scottish Army with full intent of settling a happy Peace, and to satisfy the just Desires of his good Subjects, and to comply with his Parliaments in all things which shall be for the Good of Religion, and the Happiness of his People.

The Commons were more and more afraid of the good Meaning of the Scots, and therefore boldly voted July 6. that this Kingdom hath no farther need of the Scotch Army, and that the Kingdom is unable to pay them longer; and that therefore a Letter should be sent from both Houses to the Commissioners of Scotland, to desire them to withdraw their Army into Scotland.

On Monday July 13. the Propositions for Peace were sent to his Majesty at Newcastle by the E. of Pembroke, the E. of Suffolk, Peers, and Sir Walter Erle, Sir John Hipplesley, Kts, Rob. Goodwin, Luke Robinson Esqs. Commoners; Mr. Marshal attending them as Chaplain. These Propositions were, 1. By Act of Parliament to make null all Oaths, Declarations, and Proclamations, against both or either of the Houses of Parliament, who have been necessitated to undertake a War in their just and lawful Defence. 2. That his Majesty swear and sign the late Solemn League and Covenant. 3. That a Bill be passed for the utter abolishing of Episcopacy. 4. That the Ordinances for the Assembly of Divines be confirmed. 5. That Reformation of Religion be settled according to the Covenant. 6. That both Kingdoms be brought to Uniformity of Religion, according to the Covenant. 7. That an Oath be administered to all Papists to renounce the Doctrines of Supremacy, Transubstantiation, &c. 8. An Act for the Education of Children of Papists in the Protestant Religion. 9. An Act for the true Levy of all Penalties against Papists. 10. An Act to prevent saying Mass in the Court. — That such Persons (to a very great number) shall expect no Pardon: That the King should part with the Power of the Militia, and the Custody of the Tower of London: And, in short, an entire Change of the ancient Government in Church and State.

The Commissioners brought these Propositions to Newcastle on Thursday July 23. and on the Day after were admitted to his Majesty's Presence, and kiss'd his Hand. The King first demanded, If they had any power to Treat? To which they answering No; his Majesty replied, Then saving the Honour of the Business, an honest Trumpeter might be done as much. Then Mr. Goodwin read the Propositions, to which his Majesty hearkned attentively, and at the end of Reading said, Gentlemen, I hope you will expect a very speedy Answer, because the Business is of high Concernment. The Earl of Pembroke answered, That they were limited not to stay above ten days after their coming to that Town, and must then return. His Majesty replied, that he would dispatch them in convenient time: and so for the present dismiss'd them.

Aug. 1. his Majesty deliver'd his Answer in Writing to the Commissioners, directed to the Speaker of the House of Peers pro tempore to be communicated: wherein he told them, "That the Propositions tendred to him did import so great Alterations in Government, both in the Church and Kingdom, that it was difficult to return a particular and positive Answer before a full Debate: to which end his Majesty desireth and proposeth to come to London, or any of his Houses thereabouts; where by his personal Presence he may not only raise a mutual Confidence betwixt him and his People, but also have these Doubts cleared, and these Difficulties explained unto him, which he now conceives to be destructive to his just Regal Power, if he shall give a full Consent to these Propositions as they now stand.

This Answer was Reported to the House of Commons Aug. 12. and the Counsels to be now taken were how to bring up the King into safer Custody, and how to send the Scots into their own Country. And therefore the Day following, the House of Commons, upon consideration of a Paper delivered to the Lords by the Scotch Commissioners, voted, that the Sum of a hundred thousand Pounds should be provided for the Advance of the Scots Army into Scotland. And did resolve, that this House do well and thankfully approve of their good Affections and Zeal to this Kingdom, and their Offer to deliver up our Garisons and depart the Kingdom. That their Arrears shall be audited, and in convenient time paid. So they began to reckon with them: The Scots demanded two Millions from the 18th of Jan. 1643. to the 18th of Septemb. 1646. The Parliament accounted for one Million four hundred thousand Pounds already paid; but the Scots excepted to several Particulars in the Account, and offer'd to accept of a Sum in gross for a full Discharge of their Arrears, to be agreed on by Commissioners; who concluded on four hundred thousand Pounds; of which one Moiety to be paid before their going home, and the other within stated terms.

The delivering up the King was a tacit Condition of this Agreement: therefore Sept. 18. the Commons took into consideration how his Majesty's Person should be disposed of; and voted, 1. That whatsoever Consultation and Debate the Scots Commissioners should have concerning his Majesty's Person, it should not impede the March of the Scots Armies out of this Kingdom, nor violate or trench upon the Treaties between both Nations. 2. That his Majesty shall be disposed of as both Houses of the Parliament of England should think fit. Upon this, the Scots Commissioners put in their Claim to a joint Right of disposing of his Majesty's Person; and several Conferences were held upon this matter, and many long Papers pass'd upon it: the Scots insisting upon a Right in his Person who was King of Scotland as well as of England; and the English keeping to this Assertion, We do affirm, that the Kingdom of Scotland hath no Right of joint Exercise of Interest 1646. in disposing the Person of the King, in the Kingdom of England. The Parliament of England trusted to this Argument, that the Scots Army would not carry away the King to loose their Contract of four hundred thousand Pounds; and that they should receive no part of it without delivering up their Security the King's Person.

King sends another Message in vain.

By Loan from the City, upon the Credit of a Sale of Church-Lands, the sum of two hundred thousand Pounds was ready at Goldsmith's-Hall by Novemb. 27. and being soon after sent into the North, it was very well known that the Person of the King was to be given for a Scotch Receipt to the English. The King sensible of the Price set upon him, sent one more Message Decemb. 20. to the Lords and Commons at Westminster, and the Scots Commissioners at London, for a Personal Treaty; concluding thus, 'Tis your King who desires to be heard, (the which if refused to a Subject by a King, he would be thought a Tyrant for it) and for that End which all Men profess to desire. Wherefore his Majesty conjures you, as you desire to shew your selves really what you profess, even as you are good Christians and Subjects, that you will accept this his offer, which he is confident God will so bless, that it will be the readiest Means by which these Kingdoms may again become a Comfort to their Friends and a Terror to their Enemies. And his Majesty discovering the Intrigues carried on, gave in several Queries to the Scots Commissioners then attending upon him; who declined all Answer, till they received a Letter and Declaration from the Parliament of Scotland to the Parliament of England, expressing their Content and Resolution to concur with them in disposal of the King's Person.

Lords and Commons differ about custody of the King's Person.

There was some Dispute between the Lords and Commons as well as between the two Nations, about the Custody of the King. The Lords voted Decemb. 22. that the King may come to Newmarket, there to remain with such Attendants as both Houses shall appoint. But the Commons voted, that Holmby-House in Northamptonshire would be a place most fit for his Majesty to abide with such Attendants; to which the Lords agreed, pretending to provide, that his coming thither should be with respect to the Safety and Preservation of his Majesty's Person, and in Preservation and Defence of the true Religion, the Commons adding this Explication, According to the Covenant. So Commissioners of both Houses were named to go down to receive the King from the Scots, and to bring him to Holmby; of the Lords the Earl of Pembroke, Earl of Denbigh and Lord Mountague; of the Commons Sir John Holland, Sir Walter Earl, Sir James Harrington, Sir John Cook, Mr. John Crew and Major-General Brown, who set out from London Jan. 13. and came to Newcastle Jan. 23. and having all kiss'd the King's Hand, the Earl of Pembroke told his Majesty, They were commanded by both Houses of Parliament to attend him to Holmby. The King betray'd no ill Resentment nor any Surprise, but only enquired of the Goodness of the Ways: Yet he could not but take to Heart the base Dealing of the Scots, and took occasion to tell their chief Leaders Jan. 28. that he had often desired to go into Scotland, that he came into their Army for Protection, but now perceived they were not willing he should go with them; he desired to know how they would dispose of him, and to whom they would deliver him? After withdrawing they came back and told his Majesty, They had consider'd of his Speech, and since his Majesty had refused to take the Covenant and sign the Propositions, they were to deliver him to the Commissioners of both Houses of the Parliament of England, who were come to attend him to Holmby.

The King delivered up to the Parliament.

Carried to Holmby.

On Saturday Jan. 30. (a Day of Imprisonment that within two Years became the Day of his Martyrdom) the Scots marched out of Newcastle, and the Parliament Commissioners received the King into their Charge, and conducted him to Holmby, where he arrived on Tuesday Feb. 15.

The Parliament's first General the Earl of Essex, 1646. who had chose rather to decline their Service than to desert it; and was in his own Judgment too delirious of Peace to be made the prime Instrument of War, was reserv'd and melancholly at the present posture of Affairs, and so in a visible Discontent departed this Life at Essex House in the Strand Sept. 14. of which the two Houses having notice the next Day, they both immediately adjourn'd to the morrow, and then order'd that each House should accompany the Corps to the Grave, and assist at the Celebration of his Funeral Rites, towards which they appointed 5000*l.* to be paid to his Executors for defraying the Charges thereof; which was celebrated with extraordinary State on October 22. His Body was interr'd by Mr. Vines; his Character better drawn by the Lord Clarendon. "The Earl of Essex died without being sensible of Sickness, in a time when he might have been able to have undone much of the mischief he had formerly wrought, to which he had great Inclinations, and had Indignation enough for the Indignities himself had received from the ungrateful Parliament, and wonderful Apprehension and Detestation of the Ruin he saw likely to befall the King and the Kingdom. And it is very probable, considering the present temper of the City at that time, and of the two Houses, he might, if he had lived, have given some check to the Rage and Fury that then prevail'd. But God would not suffer a Man, who out of the Pride and Vanity of his Nature, rather than the Wickedness of his Heart, had been made an Instrument of so much Mischief, to have any share in so glorious a Work; though his Constitution and Temper might very well incline him to the Lethargick Indisposition of which he died, yet it was loudly said by many of his Friends that he was Poisoned. Sure it is, that Cromwell and his Party (for he was now declared Head of the Army, tho' Fairfax continued General in Name) were wonderfully exalted with his Death, he being the only Person whose Credit and Interest they feared without any esteem of his Person.

Death of the Earl of Essex.

His Character by Lord Clarendon.

As to the distractions in Religion within this Year 1646. the majority of Divines in the Assembly were often petitioning the Commons for a full and perfect Settlement of Church Government. Which being debated in the House April 21. they began more freely to assert the Power of Parliaments in Spiritual Matters, which they would not suffer to be impeached by such Petitions; and therefore April 30. they sent these Questions to the Assembly and desired satisfaction in them.

Parliament jealous of the Assembly of Divines

- I. "Whether the Parochial and Congregational Elderships, appointed by Ordinance of Parliament, are Jure Divino? And, Whether any particular Church-Government be Jure Divino?"
- II. "Whether all the Members of the said Elderships as such are Jure Divino?"
- III. "Whether the superior Assemblies, Classical, Provincial and National, are Jure Divino? Whether All or Any of them?"
- IV. "Whether Appeals from Congregational Elderships, to the Classical, Provincial and National Assemblies be Jure Divino?"
- V. "Whether Oecumenical Assemblies and Appeals to them be Jure Divino?"
- VI. "Whether by the Word of God the Power of judging and declaring the Offences for which Persons are to be kept from the Lord's Supper, is in the Eldership or Presbytery Jure Divino?"
- VII. "Whether there be any certain and particular Rules expressed in the Word of God to direct in the Exercise of such Power?"
- VIII. "Whether there be any thing contained in the Word of God, that the Supreme Magistracy in a Christian State, may not judge and determine of Offences and Suspension for 'em from the Sacrament?"
- IX. "Whether

"authoriz'd by the Ordinance of Parliament) be
"contrary to that way of Government which Christ
"hath appointed in his Church?"

In answer to these Particulars, the House of Commons desired farther of the Assembly of Divines, their Proofs from Scripture, and to set down the several Texts of Scripture in the express Words of the same. And it is order'd, "That every particular Minister of the Assembly, that is or shall be present, at the Debate of any of these Questions, do upon every Resolution which shall be presented to this House concerning the same, subscribe his respective Name, either with the Affirmative or Negative, as he gives his Vote. And that those that do dissent from the major part, shall set down their positive Opinions, with the express Texts of Scripture upon which their Opinions are grounded.

These were such hard Questions, that we do not find the Assembly could ever resolve them: And indeed the Presbyterian majority were so confounded at the opposition in their own House from their warm dissenting Brethren, and at the Checks and Repulses they frequently met with from the House of Commons, that they grew very weary of their attendance on them, and began to fall off and retire home privately and by degrees, without any formalities of Proroguing and Dissolving. And the wisest of them were at last a little sensible of their own fatal Errors, in breaking off a Synodical Union with their Spiritual Governours, and submitting to be made an independent Body of Presbyters, to quarrel eternally among themselves; and to be made a Property to the Lay-powers, who meant no more than to serve a Turn by them, and then to despise them.

So that Presbytery now languishing within its own Assembly, was glad to call in the assistance of the Common-people. Hence a Remonstrance was procured from the Lord Mayor, Aldermen and Common-Council of London to both Houses, desiring a strict and speedy Course for suppressing all private and separate Congregations, and that all Hereticks and Sectaries who conformed not to the publick Discipline may be proceeded against; and that none disaffected to the Presbyterian Government be employ'd in any place of publick Trust. The Lords gave a kind Answer, acknowledging the great Services and Merit of the City, and giving them Thanks for this testimony of their Duty and good Affections: But the Commons expressed great Offence, that the City should thus prescribe to the Parliament what to do; and gave a short Answer, That they would take their Remonstrance and Petition into consideration within convenient time. Amidst these Party Squabbles it was observed, that General Fairfax was much inclined to the Presbyterians, Comwel and a strong Party of the deepest Reach for the Independents, or rather for a Religion alway to depend upon the Supreme, Civil and Military Power. And therefore by their subtily a Counter-Petition was presented from the City of London to the House of Commons June 2. who now perceived they should have strength enough to abolish Presbytery as well as Episcopacy.

The General-Assembly of the Kirk of Scotland began to be very jealous that their Covenant would not have its due effect in England; and therefore they resolv'd to Expostulate this matter with their dear Brethren at London and Westminster. Accordingly they in the Name of their whole Assembly sent a Letter to both Houses of Parliament dated June 18. to complain of the slow progress of the Work of God, and of the Generation of Men who retarded the Work of Uniformity, and fomented Jealousies betwixt the Nations, studying if it were possible to break our Bands asunder; desiring them to hold fast the Band of their Covenant as Sacred and Inviolable. They sent at the same time another Letter to the Lord Mayor, Aldermen and Common-Council of the City of London, thanking them for their late and seasonable Testimony given to the Truth of the Gospel, manifested in their humble Remonstrance and Petition to the Honourable Houses of Parliament, which revives the remembrance of their former Faith and Zeal, and makes them precious in the Lord's sight. And after these, a third Letter to the Assembly of Divines at Westminster dated June 27. telling them, If any here hath seem'd to be more jealous than godly Jealousie would allow, it can be imputed to nothing else but to the vehemency of ardent Affection, and impatient Desire to have our Brethren there and us join'd nearer to Christ, and to one another, in all his Ordinances, and especially in Presbyterian Government.— No doubt Mountains of Oppositions arise, and Gulfs of Difficulties open up themselves in this your way, but you have found it is God who girdeth you with Strength, and maketh your way plain and perfect before you.— We exhort you to continue and abound, knowing that your Labours shall not be in vain in the Lord. But their Army being now ready to be gone, these Exhortations were to little other purpose than to shew their Zeal and their Mistake.

July 22. Mr. Herle was voted to be Moderator of the Assembly, in the room of Dr. Twiss deceased; and the Divines were now busying themselves in drawing up a large Confession of Faith, and on Sept. 25. brought to the House of Commons such Heads of the Articles as they had already perfected; which Articles were debated by the Commons October 5. who received a Complaint October 25. of an Indictment in the County of Bucks, against a Minister for not reading the Common-Prayer according to Statute; upon which they resolv'd, that an Ordinance should be brought in to take away that Statute of Uniformity, and to disable malignant Ministers from Preaching October 28. Mr. Sympsen formerly silenced from Preaching, because he differed in Judgment from the Assembly in their beloved Points was restored to his Liberty. On Novemb. 19. a Petition of the inferior People of Kent to the House of Commons, that the Ministers may no longer receive Tyths, but be provided for some other way. The House took it, and gave them Thanks for their good Affections. On Decemb. 3. the Assembly presented to the Commons the last part of their Confession of Faith. Which being debated Decemb. 7. the Commons order'd five hundred Copies to be printed for the Members of both Houses; and that the Assembly should bring in their Marginal Notes to prove every part of it by Scripture; and should likewise prepare their Answer to those Queries touching the Point of Jus Divinum, which they had received from this House.

At the King's first coming to Newcastle, Mr. Henderson a Scotch Presbyterian came as an Agent for the Kirk, and much importun'd his Majesty to pass the Propositions. His Majesty ascribed to him, that he could not in conscience consent to several things therein contained; especially as to the change of Church-Government from the primitive Order of Episcopacy; and condescended to have several Conferences with him, and to let several Papers pass between them upon this Subject; which being faithfully printed do demonstrate the King's great Abilities, and his incomparable Knowledge in these Controversies; being at a time when he had few or no Books, and could not have the assistance of any Chaplain. Mr. Henderson returned from Newcastle to Edinburgh with a serious conviction of his Majesty's Integrity and Learning, and died about the end of August, much lamented by those of his Party, who themselves suspected that his Death was owing to his dissatisfaction in his late trial of Skill with his Majesty. The Lord Clarendon expresses it thus. "The King was so much too hard for Mr. Henderson in the Argumentation, that the old Man himself was so far convinc'd and converted, that he had a very deep sense of the Mischief he had himself been the Author of, or too much contributed to, and lamented it to his nearest Friends and Confidants, and died of Grief and Heart-broken within Rudeness of a Scotch Presbyterian. It is very observable, that another Scotch Presbyterian of much less Moderation and Learning, preach'd very bold stuff before the King in the same Garrison, and after Sermon call'd for the fifty second Psalm, beginning thus:

Why dost thou Tyrant boast thy self, Thy wicked Works to praise?

His Majesty stood up, and without any Reflection on the Insolence of the Man, with great presence of Mind called for the fifty sixth Psalm, which begins;

Have Mercy Lord on me I pray, For Men would me devour.

And the Congregation were so well pleas'd with the happy turn, that they wav'd the Preachers Psalm and fell in with that which the King call'd for.

When the King was first brought to Holmby House, he sent a Letter to the Lords and Commons, desiring, That in regard he was not satisfied with the Presbyterian Government, and could not be content that those Ministers should officiate to him, Dr. Sheldon and some other of his Chaplains, or any two of them might be permitted to come to him, by whom he might receive the proper Comforts to his Soul. And hearing of no return to this Request, he sent another Letter to the Parliament at the beginning of March, to desire that Favour of his Chaplains; and told the Commissioners then with him, that indeed he had not now Power to command them or any Man; but he must needs importune them to be instrumental in satisfying this his Reasonable Desire. But still no Answer was return'd till after March 29. when it was formed into a Denial, that they cannot consent to his Majesty's Desire in sending any of his Chaplains named in his Letter; because they are disaffected to the present Government of the Church; but for others of his Chaplains who have taken the Covenant, if his Majesty please they will send them to him.

After this Answer, says the Ld Chawdenon, " His Majesty thought it to no purpose to importune 'em farther in that particular: but next to the having his own Chaplains, he would have been best pleas'd to have been without any. They who were sent by them being Men of mean Parts, and of most impertinent and troublesome Confidence. --- Cromwell and his Officers took upon them to Preach and Pray publickly to their Troops, and admitted few or no Chaplains in the Army, but such as bitterly inveighed against the Presbyterian-Government as more Tyrannical than Episcopacy; and the Common Soldiers as well as the Officers did not only Pray and Preach among themselves, but went up into the Pulpits in all Churches, and preached to the People, who quickly became inspir'd with the same Spirit: Women as well as Men taking upon them to Pray and Preach, which made us great a noise and confusion in all Opinions concerning Religion, as there was in the Civil Government of the State; scarce any Man being suffered to be called in question for delivering any Opinion in Religion, by speaking or writing how Prophane, Heretical or Blasphemous soever it was, which they said was to restrain the Spirit. The same Author well observes, " That it was an observation in that time, that the first publishing of extraordinary News was from the Pulpit.

1647. We left the King a Prisoner to the Parliament, and under a Guard of their Commissioners at Holmby or Holmby in Northamptonshire; a very stately House built by the Lord Chancellor Hutton; and in K. James's Reign purchased by the Queen for this her second Son then Duke of York, not then foreseeing that he should make it a Royal Palace and Prison. This House had been prepared for the King's reception by Mr. Clement Kimerley of the Wardrobe, with all suitable Accommodation. The two Divines Mr. Marshall and Mr. Carrel (who came along with the Commissioners) attended the King at Dinner and Supper, as ready and willing to crave a Blessing; but the King always said Grace himself. And upon Sundays, when those Ministers preached in the Chapel, Forenoon and Afternoon by turns, the King allowed his Servants to go if they pleas'd; but sequester'd himself to his own private Devotions. On Week Days the King spent two or three Hours daily in Prayer and Reading; would after Meals play a Game at Chesse, and walk often in the Garden; and there being no Bowling-green at Holmby, would sometimes under sufficient Guard ride to Harrowden and to Althrop, where good Greens were well kept. In going once to Harrowden Major Bosville standing on a Bridge disguis'd like a labouring Man, gave his Majesty a Packet from the Queen. The King told the Commissioners it was to obtain his leave for the Prince to accompany Monsieur that Campaign in the French Army. Upon which the Commissioners seem'd content to dismiss the Person in disguise; but he was sent up to the Parliament and committed to Newgate. This Accident being reported to the two Houses, they sent down Instructions to have a stricter Eye upon his Majesty's Person, and to discharge those Servants who had waited upon him at Oxford. The Commissioners soon acquainted the King with these Orders, who with great Expostulation for the severity of them, was forced to dismiss all his old Attendants except Mr. James Maxwell and Mr. Patrick Mowl Grooms of his Bed-Chamber, to whom the King was willing to join Mr. Thomas Herbert and Mr. Harrington.

It is worth observation, that in all the time of his Majesty's Restraint and Solitude, he was never Sick, nor took any thing to prevent Sickness, which (under God) was attributed to his quiet Disposition, and moderate Exercise and regular Diet; eating but of few Dishes, and drinking but twice at Dinner and Supper, once of small Beer and once of Wine and Water mix'd, or after Fifth of pure Wine; seldom or never eating or drinking before Dinner or between Meals.

Apr. 21. Letters came from the Parliament's Commissioners at Holmby, acquainting the House of Commons with the great resort of People to his Majesty, to be touch'd for the King's-Evil: Upon which the House ordered a Declaration to be drawn up, to inform the People of the fond Superstition of being touch'd by the King for the Evil; and renewed their Orders for the stricter Custody of him. At the beginning of May, his Majesty told the Commissioners about him, that he had long waited for Propositions to be sent him from London, but not receiving them, he had now prepared an Answer to those Propositions deliver'd at Newcastle, which (not being allowed a Secretary) he must scribe over himself. His Majesty sent this Answer in a Letter read in the Houses May 18. wherein the King consented to some of the Propositions in whole, to others in part; and gave his Reasons for whatever he dissent'd from. " He was willing to have the Presbyterian Government settled for three Years; and consented to ratifie the Assembly of Divines, proposing some other Ministers to be join'd with them; the King and his Household only having liberty to use the Common-Prayer Book. As to the Militia he would yield it up for ten Years, provided it might then be restor'd to him and his Heirs. As to the Covenant he could not be satisfied, but desired some of his own Divines might be sent to resolve his Scruples therein. The Great Seal he will ratifie, if put into his own disposal. " the City of London he will grant the Tower and all that is desired. He will consent to the Bills against Popery; and will pass a general Act of Oblivion and free Pardon on all sides. 23 Car. I. liament, and confer and agree with them. On May 20. the Lords voted for his Majesty's coming from Holmby, and removing to Oatlands; but the Commons did not concur in it.

Factions in The two Houses began now to be afraid of their the Army. own Armies, and therefore disbanded some Forces, and would have sent others into Ireland. This improved into Jealousies and Factions between the Parliament and Army. The General Fairfax was disposed to comply with the Orders he received from above; but Lieutenant-General Cromwel made a strong Party for Military Power, and resolv'd to rob the Parliament of the Person of the King; for which Expedient he sent out a Party of Horse under Colonel Joyce, to bring away the King to the Army. So on Friday June 4. about Midnight, Joyce drew up his Horse in order before Holmby House, and demanded entrance. Colonel Graves and Major-General Brown who upon Alarm had doubled the Guards, ask'd him his Name and Business. He said his Name was Joyce a Cornet in Colonel Whaley's Regiment, and his Business was to speak with the King. Being ask'd from whom, he said from my self, my Errand is to the King, I must and I will speak with him. Graves and Brown bid their Soldiers within stand to their Arms, and be ready to fire at the Word given; but they finding them to be their Fellow-Soldiers of the same Army, opened the Gates, and shook Hands with them as old Friends. Joyce set his Centinels at the Chamber-Doors of the Commissioners; and by the Back-Stairs went himself directly to the King's Bed-chamber, and knocked at the Door with a Pistol cock'd in his Hand. The four Grooms were much amaz'd at this rudeness, and desired Joyce to lay aside his Arms, and to forbear giving disturbance, assuring him, that the next Morning he should have his Majesty's Answer to his Errand. The Cornet with Sword and Pistol insisted to have the Door open'd with so much noise that it wak'd the King, who mildly sent him out Word, that he would not rise nor speak with him till Morning; upon which the Cornet hufft and retired. The King rose early in the Morning, and after his Devotions sent for Joyce, who came with great confidence, and told his Majesty he had Commands to remove him. The King desired the Commissioners might be sent for; Joyce told him the Commissioners had nothing to do but to return back to the Parliament.
The King then ask'd for a sight of his Instructions.
Joyce said he should see them presently, and so drawing up his Troop in the Inner-Court: These, Sir, (said he) are my Instructions. The King took a good view of them, and finding them proper Men, well mounred and armed, smilingly told the Cornet, his Instructions were in fair Characters, legible without Spelling. The Cornet then press'd the King to go along with him; the King said, He would not stir unless the Commissioners might attend him. The Cornet reply'd, He was very indifferent, they might go if they would. So at the King's desire the Keepers of his Person being now themselves made Prisoners, went along with his Majesty, and were by Joyce conducted that Night to Colonel Mountague's House at Hinchingbrook, and next Night to the House of Sir John Cuts at Childersly near Cambridge. Here Fairfax, Cromwel, Ire- ton, Skippon, and many other Officers, came to wait upon the King and kiss'd his Hand. The King took General Fairfax aside and discours'd with him about half an Hour; he disavow'd his Majesty's seizure at Holmby, as done without his Order or Approbation.

From Childersly the King was removed to his House at Newmarket, and suffered to divert himself upon the Heath sometimes in his Coach, but most part Riding. His Presence-Chamber was constantly throng'd with People, especially at Dinner and Supper; and when he withdrew their Acclamations and Prayers always followed him. He was now to make his involuntary Progress according to the Motion of the Army; and so by some short Stages he was brought to his House at Royton; and after a stay of two Days, was carried June 26. to Hatfield, a House of the E. of Salisbury in Hertfordshire, where he staid till the first of July, then hurried to Windsor, two Days after to Caversham; where the Prince Elector Palatine, many of the Nobility, General Fairfax, and several of the chief Officers waited on him. Hence July 15. to Maidenhead, the 20th to Woburne; away again to Latimers, hence to New-Park, so to Stoke, and Aug. 14. to Oatlands, a large and beautiful Palace of the Queen's upon the River Thames; and from thence in a Day or two to Hampton-Court, where the King was allowed to appear in State and Lustre; Settled at his Nobility about him; his Chaplains in waiting, Hampton- and all Servants permitted to attend in their respective Places; the Intercourse free between King and Court.

Parliament, and the Army seeming to endeavour a right understanding between them. His Majesty had the Favour to visit his Children then at Sion And bet- House, under the Government of the Earl of Nor- thumberland, who received the King and his Followers ter trea- with a very noble Treat. Here the King met the ted.
young Duke of Gloucester and the Princess Elizabeth, who on their Knees begg'd a Blessing from their Royal Father, who heartily gave it, and was overjoy'd to see them so well in Health, and so honou-rably regarded.

We leave the King a Prisoner at large in Hampton- Court, and look back on some Proceedings in the Parliament and Army. The two Houses were wise enough to apprehend, that their assumed Legislature would not possibly consist with a Standing Army.
And the leading Heads in the Army were as apprehensive, that if they parted with their Arms, they should have little share in the Prizes they had won.
Hence a mighty Inclination in the Parliament to disband the Army, for which Petitions were brought out of the Country. And on the other side, a fierce Resolution in the Soldiery not to be dismiss'd without full Pay and Reward; for which, bold and tumultuous Papers were often read in the Field. The Commons order'd six Months Pay to the Army for their encouragement to be quietly disbanded; and May 14. resolv'd that the addition of a Fortnights Pay more should be given to them, and six Weeks Pay advance to those who would go into Ireland; and pass'd an Ordinance for Indemnity of the Soldiers in whatever they had done by Virtue of the Power committed to them by the Parliament. But the Soldiers thought it better to do themselves Justice; and therefore at Siffon-Walden their head Quarters on May 15. they chose a Committee of Troopers out of every Regiment, to consider of their Grievances and the Remedy of them; and they referred it to another Committee of General Officers, who drew up a Draught of all Complaints, and delivered it to Skip- pon, desiring him to present it to the Parliament.
This so alarm'd the Commons, that on May 18. they voted, that all the Forces of this Kingdom not subscribing for the Service of Ireland shall be disbanded, excepting those for the Garisons; and that the General be desired forthwith to repair to the Army.
And on May 21. they order'd, that the Soldiers Arrears should be speedily Audited, and visible Security given them upon disbanding; and that provision should be made for the maimed Soldiers, and for the Widows and Orphans of those who had died in the Parliaments Service. On Friday May 21. General Fairfax came to the head Quarters at Walden, and put the Army into so much Joy and Quiet, that the Commons proceeded May 25. to the Time and Manner of disbanding; ordering that his Excellencies Regiment should first be disbanded on Tuesd. next at Chelmsford, Colonel Hewson's Regiment to be disbanded at Bishop's-Stratford on June 3. and so on; the General to issue out his Orders to the several Regiments to be at the Times and Places appointed,

 23 Car I. Committee of Lords and Commons to go down and give the Thanks of the Houses in the Head of each Regiment for their faithful Service to the Kingdom, and to be assistant to the General in disbanding the Army.
 But still the Army were unsatisfied with these Votes, and challeng'd a better Reward for their Pains and Hazards in the Cause of the Parliament and City.
 And in a Council of War May 29. it was resolv'd, that the said Votes were not satisfactory; and the common Soldiers seem'd all to declare, that they would not be disbanded till their Grievances were redress'd. Upon which, the Commons order'd the Money sent down for disbanding, to be recall'd:
 and the Committee at Derby-house, who sat upon this Affair, sent Letters to General Fairfax, to inform him, that the Parliament expected Obedience in disbanding the Army, and sending the Train immediately to London. In Answer to which, the General desir'd to be excus'd; but promis'd he would do all that was possible to execute the Pleasure of the Parliament. And on June 4. at the Rendezvous at Kentford, the General went to every Regiment, and assured the Soldiers, that the Parliament took notice of their civil and fair Carriage, and had taken a course for satisfying their Arrears; and doubted not but they would answer all their other Grievances; and therefore advis'd them to behave themselves with Moderation and a due Submission. But next Day there was put into his hands, A humble Representation of the Dissatisfactions of the Army, in relation to the late Resolutions for so sudden disbanding; shewing the Particulars of their former Grievances.
Wherein they did remain unsatisfied, and the Reasons thereof. Unanimously agreed upon, and subscribed by the Officers and Soldiers of the several Regiments at the Rendezvous near New-Market on Friday and Saturday June the 4th and 5th. Presented to the General, to be by him humbly represented to the Parliament. And the same Day they drew up and subscribed a Solemn En- gagement, That without Satisfaction and Security they would not willingly disband or divide, nor suffer themselves to be disbanded or divided. Nay, and the common People of Essex were grown so much fonder of the Army than they were of the Parliament, that they presented a Petition to the General, That he would in no case admit of disbanding, till the just and legal Requests of the Kingdom were embraced and satisfied by the Parliament. And the like Petitions were soon after presented by the Inhabitants of Norfolk and Suffolk. On June 7. the Commons agreed, that new Commissioners should be sent down to the Army, to acquaint them what the Houses had done farther in satisfaction of their Grievances, and to persuade them to a Compliance with the Orders of the Parliament. And beginning now to be in some fears, that the Army would be for dissolving the Parliament, as well as the Parliament for disbanding the Army, they accepted of a good Guard from the City, and were putting themselves into a posture of Defence; making an Ordinance Jun.
11. for enabling the Committee of the Militia of the City of London to make Searches, and raise Horfes.
 And hearing the Army was advancing toward Lon- don, they revived the Committee of Safety, and sent a Committee of Parliament to sit all Night with a Committee of the City Militia; and order'd Letters to his Excellency from both Houses, that he should by no means suffer the Army to come within twenty five Miles of the City: and then offer'd large Gratuities and Rewards to those Officers and Soldiers who should come off from the Army, and submit to the Parliament. The General, in the mean time, made his Head-Quarters at St. Albans, and kept the Army in tolerable Order; where June 22.
 he received the Votes of the two Houses for the Army's removing forty Miles from London: to which his Excellency only answered, That he would hold a Council of War, and then return a positive Answer. At which Council, held June 23. the Officers all sign'd A humble Remonstrance from his Ex- cellency Sir Thomas Fairfax and the Army under his Command, expressing the present state of Affairs, in relation to themselves and the Kingdom; with their Desires and present Resolutions thereupon. Presented to the Commissioners at St. Albans, to be by them humbly represented to the Parliament. The General remov'd his Head-Quarters from St. Albans to Barkhamstead, and sent word to the Houses, that the Army would there expect the Result of their Debates concerning their Desires; and accordingly either remove, or approach nearer to London. Which gave such a new Alarm, that June 25. the Militia of London were desired to send four full Companies for the Guard of the Houses to morrow. On which Day other Letters came from the General, with account of the Army's nearer Advance toward London, renewing their Desires, that the eleven Members charged by them may be suspended the House. Upon which the said Members craved liberty to absent from the House; and a Treaty with the Army was voted to be carried on with Expedition. And to silence and soften them the more, the Commons declared June 27. that they do own this Army as their Army, and will make Provision for their Maintenance. But the Army sent up their Impeachment of the eleven Members, and insisted for Justice upon them; sending up their particular Charge by a Committee of Officers, of whom Colonel Scroope deliver'd in the Charge to the Commons, with this Speech: That by the Appointment of the General, and Army under his Command, and in their Names, they came there to present a particular Charge or Impeachment against the eleven Members: These were, Denzil Hollis Esq; Sir Philip Stapleton, Sir William Waller, Sir John Maynard, Major-General Maffy, John Glynn Esq; Recorder of London, Walter Long Esq; Colonel Edward Horley, Anthony Nicol Esq; Sir William Lewis, Sir John Clotworthy; who on Jul.

19. put in their Answer in Demurrer to the said Charge and Impeachment, and at their own Desire had leave given them to be absent from the House for the space of six Months. Soon after there was a solemn Engagement by Oath and Vow entred into by very many Citizens and others in and about London, for opposing and disbanding the Army, and for the King's present coming to the Parliament.
This was heinously resent'd by the General and chief Officers, and very many Papers of Expostulation and Excuse pass'd between the Army and the two Houses upon this matter. And Jealousies mutually improving, the Army began to advance, and the Cities of London and Westminster began to be fortified; and the two Speakers were so struck with terrible Apprehensions, that July 30. they both run away from their attendance on their several Houses; and the Lords were forced to choose the Lord Willoughby of Passham their Speaker, in room of the Earl of Manchester; and the Commons chose Mr. Pelham, a Counsellor of Lincolns-Inn, to take the Chair in room of Mr. Lenthall: after which the Commons voted, 1. That the King should come to London. 2. That the Militia of the City should have full Power to raise such Forces as they shall think fit for Defence thereof. And 3. That they make Choice of a Commander in chief to be approved by the House. Then they resolv'd to receive the eleven Members impeach'd by the Army, to sit and vote in their Places. And both Houses pass'd several Votes and Orders for bringing the King's Majesty to some of his Houses near London, to receive Propositions from both Kingdoms for Peace and Safety: and August 2.
 they sent this Message to the King.

The Army refuse to be disbanded,

And draw up a Remonstrance,

And an Engagement.

 bled in the Parliament of England, have agreed Vol. III. X 2 upon

1647. " upon these inclosed Votes; and do humbly pre-23 Car. I. sent them to your Majesty: Remaining

W^{estm.} Aug. 2. Your Majesty's most humble 1647. and loyal Subjects,

Humfdon, Speaker of the House of Peers pro tempore.

H. Pellam, Speaker of the House of Commons.

The Votes are as follow: viz.

" WHereas the King hath been seiz'd upon, and carried away from Holmby without his consent, or the consent of the Houses of Parliament, by a Party, into the Army, where his Majesty yet remaineth; the Lords and Commons in Parliament assembled, do desire that his Majesty will be pleas'd immediately to come to such Places as both Houses of Parliament shall appoint. And they do declare, " That he shall there be with Honour, Freedom, and Safety; and that They, with the Commissioners of the Kingdom of Scotland, will make their Addresses unto his Majesty for a safe and well-grounded Peace.

" Resolved upon the Question, by the Lords and Commons assembled in Parliament; that London be the Place whither the King shall be desired to come: where both Houses of Parliament, and the Commissioners of the Kingdom of Scotland, may make their Addresses to him for a safe and well-grounded Peace.

It is a matter of Wonder, that these great Jealousies between the Parliament and Army could not be turn'd into any Advantage to the King's Interest or Liberty. On August 5. the whole Army advanced nearer London: the General removing his Head-Quarters from Thistleworth, came to Hammersmith; and at the End of the Town was met by the Commissioners of the City, who assured him, that the City were well satisfied with his Excellency's Advance: and next Morning several Members of Parliament, driven away by Tumults from Westminster, met the General at the Earl of Holland's House at Kensington, and subscribed the Declaration of the Army, and a farther Declaration of their approving and joining with the Army in their last Proceedings, making null all Acts passed by the Members at Westminster since July 26. Then the General march'd in great state to the House of Sir Abraham Williams in New-Palace-Yard; and both Houses being sat with their old Speakers, the Earl of Manchester and William Lenthall Esq; they invited the General into each House, and gave him solemn Thanks for his faithful Services to them and the Kingdom, and order'd Thursday next for a Day of Thanksgiving, for the great Mercies of God in restoring the Members of both Houses to their just Privileges without the Effusion of Blood, and for the Settlement of Peace. On the same Day they constituted the General Constable of the Tower of London, and order'd the Gratuity of a Month's Pay to the Officers and private Soldiers. So fatally did things conspire for a Peace and Union between all Parties except the King and his People.

The Scots began now to repent of Selling the King, and on August 13. published a Declaration and Remonstrance of the present Engagement of the Kingdom of Scotland, with their Resolutions and Intentions (according to their solemn League and Covenant) to redeem his Majesty from the hands of Schismatics, and to place him in his Parliament with Honour and Safety, to procure the Peace of the three Kingdoms, to vindicate the worthy Members of Parliament falsely impeached by the Army, with the true Privileges of Parliament and Liberty of the Subject: all which are not only endangered, but by likelihood ready to be destroyed by the Power of an over-awing, tyrannical Army, under the Conduct of Sir Thomas Fairfax. With an Oath taken by the Parliament of Scotland, and by them prescribed to be taken by all his Majesty's loyal Subjects. But this was now too late: Major-General Lambert collected all the Forces in the North, and was preparing to march to the Borders of Scotland; while the Scots, hearing of the Agreement between the Army, Parliament, and City, were aw'd into Silence and Quiet.

The two Houses began now to be at leisure to reassume their Pretence of a well-grounded Peace between the King and his Subjects. And having made some few Amendments to the Propositions sent to Newcastle, on Sept. 2. it was resolv'd by the Lords and Commons, that a Day be appointed for the delivering of the Propositions of both Kingdoms to the King's Majesty for a safe and well-grounded Peace: and that on Tuesday next the Commissioners of both Houses should attend his Majesty to deliver the said Propositions; with six Days to be limited for receiving his Majesty's Answer. They delivered them accordingly, and were only told by his Majesty, That he would return Answer with all conveniency. The Commissioners reported to the Houses on Sept. 13.

" That to several of the Propositions his Majesty is willing to assent: To settle Presbytery in this Kingdom for three Years; and the Militia as he before offer'd: That he cannot assent to some others, but desires to put himself upon the Propositions of the Army, and that they may be taken into consideration by the Houses, professing his Resolution to whatsoever shall concern the settling the Protestant Religion, with Liberty to tender Consciences, and the securing the Laws, Liberties, and Properties of all his Subjects, and just Privileges of Parliament, for the future. On Sept. 14. his Majesty's full Answer in Writing was read to both Houses to that effect; That he could not consent to all their Propositions, but desires them to take into consideration the Propositions of the Army, and to have a personal Treaty upon them. His Majesty therefore conjures his two Houses of Parliament, by the Duty they owe to God, and his Majesty their King, and by the bowels of compassion they have to their Fellow-Subjects, both for Relief of their present Sufferings and to prevent future Miseries; that they will forthwith accept of his Majesty's Offer, whereby the joyful News of Peace may be restored to this distressed Kingdom.

Sept. 21. the two Houses resumed the Debate of the King's Answer, and voted it to be a flat Denial: and on Septemb. 23. the Commons voted, That they would once more make application to his Majesty for his Assent to such things in the Propositions as they conceive will most make for the Good of this Kingdom: and then ordered several of the Propositions to be turned into Bills, and sent to his Majesty for his positive Assent. This took up long Debates, and occasioned several Alterations, and many additional Propositions. But in a Conference of the two Houses Nov. 8. the Scheme was dispatch'd, with a Preface to persuade his Majesty to give his Royal Assent; declaring that he ought not to deny to pass whatever is presented to him from the two Houses of Parliament.

The Army had still their Head-Quarters at Putney; where a General Council of Officers, and then a Cabal of Agitators, were continually sending Petitions, and Demands, and Cases, to the Parliament. The King finding he could have no honourable Terms of Peace, and hoping that in his Absence the Dissentions between the Houses and the Army might in time recall him to be the only Centre of Unity, resolv'd to break from his Confinement at Hampton-Court: and so on Thursday Night Nov. 11. between the hours of Eight and Nine, the King in Disguise went from his privy Lodgings through a Door into the Park, and taking a Boat there laid for him, he cross'd over to Thames-Ditton, where Sir John Berkeley, Mr. Ashburnham, and Mr. Leg, were plac'd with Horses ready for Escape. His Majesty left a Letter

Liberty being that which in all times hath been, but especially now is the Condition, the Aim, and the Desire of all Men; common Reason shews, that Kings less than any should endure Captivity. Yet I call God to witness, with what Patience I have endured a tedious Restraint, which so long as I had any hope that this sort of my Sufferings might conduce to the Peace of my Kingdoms, or the hindring more effusion of Blood, I did willingly undergo: but now finding by two certain Proofs, that this my continued Patience would not only turn to my personal Ruin, but likewise be of much more prejudice than furtherance to the publick Good; I thought I was bound, as well by natural as political Obligations, to seek my Safety by retiring myself for some time from the publick view both of my Friends and Enemies. And ending thus: To conclude, Let me be heard with Freedom, Honour, and Safety, and I shall instantly break through this cloud of Retirement, and shall shew my self ready to be Pater Patriæ.

Charles Rex.

The King, when escaped, knew not where to fly.

The King had seem'd rather solicitous how to escape, than where to fly. We are told, that Mr. Ashburnham dissuaded him from going to London, and led him into Hampshire, and then propos'd the Isle of Wight, where he had a Confidence in Colonel Hammond the Governour. His Majesty said, He would not adventure himself, without Assurance under the Governour's hand for his Security; and therefore sent Mr. Ashburnham and Sir John Berkley into the Isle to treat with Hammond, staying himself with Colonel Leg at Titchfield-House; charging them not to let Hammond know where he was, without assurance under his hand of Protection and Freedom. But, contrary to these Directions, they came back, and brought Hammond with them: The King, in some amaze, ask'd them if they had a Promise under Hammond's Hand for his Security; they replying No, but they could trust him as a Man of Honour; the King said, Then you have betray'd me, and I am his Prisoner. Which sharp Resentment touch'd them so near, that they offer'd to kill Hammond, and take some other course for his Majesty's Safety. But the King utterly rejected the Proposal, and committing himself to Colonel Hammond, was on Nov. 13. carried cross to Comes, and thence through Newport to Carisbrook-Castle, where he had for some Weeks the Attendance of his Servants, and the Liberty of the Island. The King immediately wrote a Letter to the two Houses, Novemb. 16. signifying, "That he was confident before this time they had received the Message which he left behind at Hampton-Court the 11th of this Month; that he would still have the same Endeavours for settling a safe and well-grounded Peace. And because Religion would be the greatest Foundation of Peace, he would begin with that Particular: And tho' he could not, as a Christian and a King, assent to abolishing Episcopacy; yet he would be content that the Presbyterian Government, as now in practice, should continue for three Years. As to the Militia, tho' by Right it was inseparably inherent to the Crown by the Laws of the Nation; yet he would agree, that during his whole Reign, it should be order'd and dispos'd by the two Houses of Parliament. That he would concur in any thing for Payment of the Army and other publick Debts. And for the farther securing all Fears, he will consent to an Act, That all the great Offices of State, and Naming of Privy Counsellors for his whole Reign, shall be dispos'd by the two Houses of Parliament. And to wipe away the Memory of all Distractions, there should be an Act to suppress and annul all Declarations against the Parliament; and an Act of Oblivion to ex"tend to all Subjects. To which purposes, his Majesty earnestly desires a personal Treaty at London with his two Houses in Honour, Freedom, and Safety, as the only Means to a firm and settled Peace.

But the Power being now lodg'd in two several Bodies the Parliament and the Army, they were both so jealous of one another, that this obstructed the King's making any Terms with either of them. On Novemb. 27. the Commons concurr'd with the Lord's to admit of a Personal Treaty with his Majesty, upon his first consenting to these four Propositions.

- I. "That a Bill be drawn up by consent of both Houses for his Majesty to pass into an Act for the settling of the Militia of the Kingdom.
- II. "That a Bill be pass'd for his Majesty's calling in of all Declarations, Oaths and Proclamations, against that Parliament and those who have adhered to him.
- III. "For passing an Act that those Lords who were made after the Great-Seal was carried to Oxford, may be made incapable of sitting in the House of Peers thereby.
- IV. "That Power may be given to the two Houses of Parliament to adjourn as the two Houses of Parliament shall think fit.

The King had applied to Sir Tho. Fairfax as General, for the use of his Chaplains, and he sent over Dr. Sheldon, Dr. Holdsworth and Dr. Heywood, for which good respect the King thanked him by Letter Nov. 27. and on Decemb. 6. the King sent a Message to the two Houses, to lay before them with what Patience he had expected their leisure in acknowledging the receipt of his Message of Novemb. 16. that he could not bear the vehement Prosecution of a personal Treaty; and expostulates with them, whether he had not done his part by divesting himself of so much Power and Authority, and whether he had met with that Acknowledgment from his two Houses, which his great Grace and Favour justly deserved? The Houses took no notice at all of these Messages, but having pass'd the four Bills to be sent to his Majesty, and drawn their Instructions for the Commissioners who were to carry them; the Lords named the Earls of Northampton, Leicester, Rutland, Pembroke, Salisbury, Warwick, and Mulgrave; the Commons Mr. Bulkeley, Mr. Liste, Mr. Goodwin and Mr. Kemp, and these were order'd Decemb. 15. to go to the Isle of Wight with the said Bills and Propositions, and there for a certain time to attend his Majesty's Answer; Mr. Manchal and Mr. Aye being three Days after voted to go Chaplains with them.

The Scots Commissioners being not included in this Treaty, sent a large Declaration in very high Language to the Parliament, protesting against the sending of the four Bills, and pressing for a personal Treaty with his Majesty at London, upon such Propositions as shall be agreed upon by the Advice and Consent of the two Kingdoms. But the two Houses were to be frighted by nothing but the Army, and therefore they order'd the Printer of the Scots Declaration to be committed; and then returned them an Answer full enough of Contempt and Correction.

The Parliament Commissioners coming safe to the Isle of Wight, presented the Bills and the Proposition on them to his Majesty Decemb. 24. and he was pleas'd to say, that he was assured they could not expect a present Answer; but he would take the same into Consideration, and give his Answer within few Days. The Scots Commissioners came the next Day to the King, and put in their Protestation to this effect; "That they had endeavour'd by all Ways and Means to the Parliament of England for farthering a happy Peace; having seen the Propositions and Bills brought to his Majesty, which they apprehended prejudicial to Religion, the Crown and the Union between the Kingdoms, and therefore in the name of the Kingdom of Scotland declare their dissent.

The King receives the Commissioners

1647. General Fairfax wrote to the House of Commons 23 Car. I. Decemb. 31. that there had been some meeting in the Ile of Wight and a design to carry away the King, for which reason he had given order to Colonel Hammond to have a stricter Guard upon his Majesty's Person. Upon which both Houses agreed, that his Excellency be required to take special care for securing the Person of his Majesty in Carisbrook Castle, and that the Governour should obey his farther Orders and Directions. On the same Day their Commissioners came back from the King, and brought but little Satisfaction with them, reporting, that his Majesty shewed little Inclination to pass the Bills, or to make a Compofure in that way, but had barely offer'd a personal Treaty. Upon which, after long Debate Jan. 2. the Commons upon the Question, Whether any Addresses should be made hereafter to his Majesty? Did resolve, That no more Addresses be made from the Parliament to the King; nor any Letters or Messages received from him; and at the same time certified a good Agreement between the General and the Parliament.
And immediately Orders were sent to Colonel Hammond to dismiss the King's Servants, and to confine him close within the Bounds of the Castle.

Mr. Harrington and Mr. Herbert were the only Persons allowed to wait upon his Majesty in his Bed-Chamber. The latter gives this account of the King's Studies in that Confinement: *The sacred Scripture was the Book he most delighted in. He read often in Bishop Andrew's Sermons, Hooker's Ecclesiastical Policy, Dr.
Hammond's Works, Villalpandus upon Ezekiel, Sandy's Paraphrase upon King David's Psalms, Herbert's Divine Poems, and also Godfrey of Boloign, writ in Italian by Torquato Tasso, and done into English Heroick Verse by Mr. Fairfax, a Poem his Majesty much commended; as he did also Ariosto, by Sir John Harrington, a factious Poet, much esteemed of by Prince Henry his Master, Spencer's Fairy Queen, and the like, for alleviating his Spirits after serious Studies. And at this time it was (as is presumed) he compos'd his Book called Suspiria Regalia, published soon after his Death, and entitled The King's Pourtraicture in his Solitudes and Sufferings, which Manuscript Mr. Herbert found amongst those Books his Majesty was pleas'd to give him.
And though he did not see the King write that Book, his Majesty being always private when he writ, and those his Servants never coming into the Bed-Chamber when the King was private until he called; yet comparing it with his hand writing in other things, found it so very like as induces his Belief that it was his own hand writing, having seen so much of the King's writing before: and to instance Particulars, in that his Majesty's Translation of Dr. Saunderson, the late Bishop of Lincoln's Book De Juramentis, or like Title, concerning Oaths; all of it Translated into English, and writ with his own Hand, and which in his Bed-Chamber he was pleas'd to shew to his Servants Mr. Harrington and Mr. Herbert, and commanded them to examine it with the Original, they found it accurately Translated.*

As to this observation of Sir Tho. Herbert, in pre-facing the King while a Prisoner in the Ile of Wight compos'd his Book, it can be meant only of some part of it. For indeed it was not a compofure under any one Confinement, or with any one train of Thoughts; but it was rather an occasional common place of his Reflections and Meditations, as this and that Juncture and Season did suggest. Some Chapters were finish'd before the fatal Battle of Naseby, as among many other Authorities is expressly affirm'd by an Eye witness, Major Huntingdon, who gave this Account to Sir William Dugdale. — "And as to 'ΕΙΚΩΝ ΒΑΣΙΛΙΚΗ', he saith, "That after the " King was brought to Hampton-Court, his Majesty
" there acquainting him with the loss of that Book
" at Naseby Fight, and desiring him to use his Inte" rest to regain it, he did apply himself to General
" Fairfax, and by his means obtained it, it being " bound up in a white Vellum Cover, and (as he " well remembers) all the Chapters in it were writ" ten by the Hand of Sir Edward Walker, but much corrected with Interlineations by the King's own " Hand (the Prayers being all written with the " King's own Hand) which, he says, he very well

" knew so to be.

It is not the business of a Historian to collect Authorities for a matter of Fact thought to be evident and granted by Mankind, till there arose a Set of Men who delighted once more to Judge and Execute this Royal Martyr. And therefore to murder his Name, when they could reach no farther, they pretended his ΕΙΚΩΝ ΒΑΣΙΛΙΚΗ was a thum put upon the World in his Name by another Hand. But after all the confidence with which this Story has been told, it stands apparently convicted of Falshood by a cloud of Witnesses. And it really has its Self-conviction; for to say, that not King Charles but Dr. Gauden was the Author of it, carries along two of the most improbable things in the World; since the private Letters and other uncontested Writings of the King shew the Capacity and the Vein of writing that Book; while the protest Works of Dr. Gauden are a demonstration that he did not, that he could not write it. It may be confess'd, that Dr. Gauden might be employ'd to convey the Sheets to the Press; and it was not unlikely that such a forward Man might suggest some things, and might presume to add some others: But that he was the sole or prime Author of it, can never be believed by the rational part of Mankind. The most unhappy Objections against the King's Honour in this Case, were the known prejudice of his two Sons, and the more remarkable Silence of the Earl of Clarendon.

To return to the severe Resolution of no longer Addressing to the King, the Lords concurred with the Commons in their Votes to that unmerciful purpose, and drew up this Preamble which was order'd Jan. 17. to be publish'd with the Votes. The Lords and Commons assembled in Parliament, after many Addresses to his Majesty, for the preventing and ending this unnatural War raised by him against his Parliament and Kingdom, having lately sent four Bills to his Majesty, which did contain only matter of Safety and Security to the Parliament and Kingdom, referring the compofure of all other Differences to a personal Treaty with his Majesty, and having received an absolute Negative, do hold themselves obliged to use their utmost Endeavours speedily to settle the present Government in such a way as may bring the greatest security to this Kingdom, in the enjoyment of the Laws and Liberties thereof; and in order thereunto, and that the Houses may receive no Delays and Interruptions in so great and necessary a Work, they have taken these Resolutions, &c.

Feb. 4. the House of Commons was certified by Letters from the Ile of Wight, "That the King was " in good Health in Carisbrook Castle, but is obser" ved to be more melancholy than usual. His Ma" jesty had some discourse lately with the Gover-" nour Col. Hammond about his Restraint, and the " strict Guard upon him; and in short his Majesty " told the Governour, that that should be the last " Argumentation he would hold with him about it,
" and that he might yet e'er long be beholden to one " of his Sons for his Life. The Expressions seem as " strange as the Reports now also spread, that Prince
" Charles is gone into Holland, and that the King " hath made a Resignation unto the Prince of the " Crown of Scotland, that he should engage all In" terests for restoring the King in this Kingdom.
And by Express dated Feb. 5. it was farther certified " That his Majesty takes usually every Morning a " walk about the Castle Wall, and the like in the " Afternoon if fair; much time spent every Day in " private; he speaks most to us at Dinner, asks
" News, particularly concerning Ireland, Scotland,
" the City of London, and the Army; the Death of " Gapt. Burley quarter'd at Winchester is little spoken " of. His Majesty is as merry as formerly; all " quiet and fair between his Majesty and Colonel " Hammond the Governour.

1647. The Parliament, to satisfy the People and the Army why they had proceeded to such strange Resolutions as to suffer no farther Addresses to the King; drew up a solemn Declaration for the Reasons of it, published on Febr. 15. wherein they load the King with every thing that was odious: "With making all their Addresses fruitless; with Cruelties done at Brentford, and a bloody Massacre intended upon London; with laying a Foundation of all Tyranny, in saying he ow'd an Account of his Actions only to God; with a Guilt in the Death of his Father King James; with betraying Rochel, and the English Fleet, into the hands of the French King; with a Design of bringing over German Horse to enslave this Nation; with grinding his People by Loans, Privy-seals, Coar and Conduct Money, Patents, Monopolies, and that one Compendium of Slavery, Ship-Money; with torturing the Bodies of Men by Whipping, flitting Noses, cutting off Ears, branding Checks, Racks, Pillories, and close Imprisonment, with Lording it over Souls by Oaths ex officio, Excommunications, Ceremonies, Articles, new Canons, and Canon Oaths; with a scandalous Declaration for Dissolving the Parliament in 1640; with a Cabal for bringing up the Northern Army to awe the Parliament; with sealing a Commission to the Irish Rebels; with an Unwillingness to disband the Popish Irish Army; with writing Letters to the Pope, and to the Duke of Lorraine; with charging Members of Parliament with Treason, and coming to the House in that unparalell'd way, as a designed Prologue to a bloody Tragedy; with the Preparation of a Fleet from Denmark, and expecting another from Holland; with signing the most illegal Commission of Array, a Commission for ten thousand Rebels to conquer the Parliament and London: And at last they conclude, that they could give many Reasons more why they will make no more Addresses, but use their utmost Endeavours to settle the present Government, as may best stand with the Peace and Happiness of this Kingdom. A Declaration so extremely virulent and false, that the Framers of it seem'd already to erect the High Court of Justice, and to draw up the very Form of Impeachment against the King.

This Proceeding was of such infinite Scandal to all indifferent People, who had yet a Reason and a Conscience left within them; that Discontents and Murmurs grew very high, and many Pamphlets were now published that shew'd the Parliament to be the great Grievance of the Nation; such as, The Parliament's Ten Commandments, &c. another intitled, The New Testament of our Lords and Saviours the House of Commons sitting at Westminster; and several others; the Parliament in vain burning the Books, and bidding Money for Discovery of the Authors of them.

Monday March 12. Ferdinand Lord Fairfax, Father of Sir Thomas Fairfax General, died at York, upon a Sickness occasioned by a Bruise on his Foot, where he had a Corn growing, which fester'd and turn'd to a Gangreen; and with the pain of this he fell into a Fever that took away his Life. Upon Information of his Death, the Commons, on March 16. order'd, That his Excellency the now Lord Fairfax should be Keeper of Pontefract Castle, Custos Rotulorum for Yorkshire, and chief Ranger, &c. the Places before held by his deceased Father.

Religion was to be shew in all these Proceedings: and therefore April 9. the Commons order'd, that on Thursday Fortnight they would debate the Business of the Church for fourteen Days together, and no private Business to intervene. And farther order'd, that such Ministers as are recommended from the Lords to be put into Livings, be referred to the Assembly to be examined concerning their Abilities for the Ministry. According to the foresaid Order, on April 20. the Business of the Church was taken into consideration; and the Obstructions to the Government of the Church in Presbytery, and the Amendments to the Remedies thereof were reported to the House, and assented to. They referred it to a Committee to draw up an Ordinance for the abolishing of all Festival and accustomed Holidays; and to appoint the second Tuesday in every Month for a Day of Recreation to all Apprentices, Scholars, and Servants. Next Day they proceeded to order, that the Assembly should be requested to return to the House the Articles of the Church of England, and the several places of Scripture thereunto; and that a Declaration should be drawn up to inform the People of the fond Superstition of being Touch'd by the King for the Evil.

April 29. the Assembly of Divines attended the Commons, and being call'd in acquainted the House, That according to their Orders, they had attended them with their Advice upon the Thirty Nine Articles of the Church of England, and the Texts of Scripture thereunto; and upon the Confession of Faith, with the Texts of Scripture likewise to it. Upon which the House order'd six hundred Copies of the Assembly's Advice herein should be Printed for the Services of the Houses and the Assembly; and gave the Divines Thanks for their Pains therein.

May 2. the Provincial Assembly of London met in the Convocation-house at St. Paul's Church, according to an Ordinance in Parliament of the 29th of April last past, for the further settling Presbytery; and Dr. Gouge was chosen Prolocutor. The Ordinance directing that Assembly was to this purpose, That the Elders of the Classis of the Province of London should hold this Provincial Assembly in the Convocation-house at Paul's Church in London, upon the first Monday in May next ensuing; and may adjourn their Meeting de die in diem, and conclude their Meeting with Adjournments unto the next Opportunity. And that no Act shall pass or be valid in the said Province of London, but what shall be done by the number of 36 present, or the major part of them, whereof 12 to be Ministers, and 24 to be Ruling Elders. On this same Day an Ordinance passed both Houses for regulating the University of Oxford by certain Visitors, who should examine upon Oath concerning Neglect of the Covenant, Directory, or Discipline, or such as write false Doctrine, or have been Enemies to the Parliament.

May 11. Mr. Byfield (by appointment of the Assembly of Divines) delivered the printed Books of the Confession of Faith, with Scripture Notes, to the Members of the Houses of Parliament. And no more being to be dispersed, every Member subscribed his Name to a Paper at the Receipt thereof. After the Members have well perused and examined them, the Houses are to consider, whether they shall approve the Publication of them. On May 19. the Commons debated the Confession of Faith, and spent the whole Day therein, passing particularly from the first Paragraph to the eleventh of the first Chapter.

The Faction between Presbyterians and Independents was now grown so near the Level, that June 29. a Committee was appointed in the House of Commons to propose godly and able Persons to consider of the Matters of Accommodation in Religion, and to present their Names to the House. And on July 1. they order'd, that the said Committee of Accommodation should meet, and report their Opinion with all convenient speed.

These Divisions gave Encrease to all sorts of Heresie, with which the Press and very Pulpits now swarm'd. Among others, Complaint was made to the House of Commons Sept. 6. against a dangerous Pamphlet wrote by Mr. John Biddle, and called his Twelve Arguments upon the Deity, expressly denying the Divinity of the Holy Ghost, and running out into other absurd and blasphemous Tenets. Upon Debate it was order'd, That this Pamphlet should be called in, and burnt by the Hangman; and the Author should be referred to the Examination of the Committee for plunder'd Ministers. And for a

The Ordinance for settling the Government of the Church in a Presbyterial way was reported to the House of Commons Octob. 6. and after the Debate upon it had took up the whole Day, it was order'd to be committed, and to be brought in again with a Clause for giving ease to tender Consciences of such as are godly and make a Conscience of their ways. On the same Day a strong Petition was presented to both Houses, that able and gifted Men might have liberty to preach without Ordination, being approved by the Parliament. To which perfection of Enthusiasm, the Lords were forc'd to answer, that they took well this good Affection of the Petitioners to the advancement of the Gospel. And the Commons thought fit to give them a yet greater encouragement, by thanking them for their good Affection to the Kingdom, and by assuring them that their Petition was referred to a Committee, to consider of a way for examining such as should be so allowed. Thus the care of Religion was transferred from a Convocation to a new Assembly of Divines, from them to a House of Commons, and thence to the Mob.

Octob. 12. both Houses sat upon the Business of Religion, the Lords were for an Act to be passed by the King for settling the Presbyterial Government for three Years; with liberty to Dissenters for the Service and Worship of God in any other way, provided such liberty should not extend to any Toleration of the Popish Religion, nor to tolerating the practice of any thing contrary to the practice of the Christian Religion, contained in the Apostle's Creed as expounded in the first fifteen Articles of the Church of England, according to the true sense and meaning of them cleared and vindicated by the Assembly of Divines. The Commons agreed with them except in these Particulars; They would have the time of establishing Presbytery to be until the end of the next Sessions of Parliament after this, or the end of the second Sessions: And of doing nothing contrary to the first fifteen Articles, they would except the eighth which mentions the three Creeds, made, say they, many Years after the Apostles: And that the Indulgence to tender Consciences should not extend to the use of the Common-Prayer in any place whatsoever.

Octob. 21. the Prolocutor attended with many of the Assembly, came to the House of Commons, and presented to their Consideration a Catechism, which they have drawn up according to the Order of that House. The Commons it seems, thought this Catechism too prolix and superfluous, and therefore sent back their holy Work-men to bring it into a less compass. So they set themselves to abridging of it, and upon Novemb. 25. the House being informed that the Assembly of Divines were at the Door, they were called in and presented a Catechism, which they called A shorter Catechism. The House ordered that four hundred Copies of them should be printed for the Service of the House, with the several places of Scripture in the Margin. Then the Assembly were called in again, and Mr. Speaker by command of the House gave them Thanks; and to'd them that House did expect, that the Assembly should give a speedy Answer to the Queries formerly sent unto them; and desired them to go on in perfecting those things which the House had referred to them.

Decemb. 20. a great Debate in the House of Commons, Whether Dr. Usher (Primate of Armagh) should continue Preaching at Lincoln's-Inn, he having formerly adhered to the Enemy (the King) against the Parliament? The House divided, and it was carried in the Affirmative, on condition he take 1647. the Negative Oath. But least delinquent Ministers 23 Car. I. should be encouraged by this Vote, they order'd immediately, that it should be referred to a Committee for plunder'd Ministers, to send for and examine such Ministers as have adhered to the Enemy, and preach now in the Kingdom, and such as have of late, or now do cause the Book of Common-Prayer to be read, and to take care for silencing of them. And Decemb. 24. the House order'd that the Militia should take strict course to put out of the late Lines of Communication all Delinquent Ministers.

And next Day, being Christmas-Day, the Houses Severity fitting (though without a Fast) complaint was made against malignant Ministers. to the Commons that some malignant Ministers had preached that Morning in honour of the Day. Upon which it was order'd, that the Committee for plunder'd Ministers have Power given them to examine and punish Church-wardens, Sequestrators and others, that do countenance delinquent Ministers to Preach, and to commit them if they see cause; and upon which some were taken into Custody.

Jan. 31. an Ordinance passed the two Houses for the speedy dividing and settling the several Counties of this Kingdom into distinct Clastical Presbyteries and Congregational Elderships, according to a former Ordinance of Aug. 19. 1645. and that a Committee of Lords and Commons shall have power to bound the Provincial Assemblies in this Kingdom; and to constitute Triers within the Province of London where need shall require.

Feb. 8. the Commons spent much time in Debate of the Advice of the Assembly concerning the Confession of Faith. The next Day an Ordinance passed both Houses for Repair of Churches, and paying of Church Rates, to be approved by two Justices of Peace; Collectors to be chosen Monday and Tuesday in Easter-Week, to give in their Accounts within four Days after the Year is ended, the Goods of Defaulters to be distressed, and Opposers to be committed to the Jail without Bail or Mainprize. This Ordinance to be read in all Churches and Chapels.

March 1. the Commons taking into consideration the Business of the Church, order'd, that a return should be made for the Classes of the several Counties of the Kingdom by the first of May next; and that the said Returns should be printed, to the end they may the better know what Counties have failed of their Returns. On March 22. the Commons at a Conference presented the Lords with the Confession of Faith passed by them with some Alterations, viz. That they do agree with their Lordships, and so with the Assembly in the Doctrinal part, and desire the same may be made publick, that this Kingdom and all the Reformed Churches of Christendom may see the Parliament of England differ not in Doctrine. In some Particulars they would have some Phrases alter'd, as in that of Tributes to the Magistrate, they would have it Dues; to the Degrees of Marriage they refer to the Law establish'd; Particulars in Discipline they will have recommitted; and for the Title they would not have it A Confession of Faith, because not so running, I confess, at the beginning of every Section; but rather Articles of Faith agreed upon by both Houses of Parliament, as most suitable to the former Title of the Thirty nine Articles.

On the first Day of this new Year March 25. 1648. Letters from the Ile of Wight informed the Commons of a new Design to carry away the King, which had been discovered before it came to perfection. Upon which, some in Attendance upon his Majesty were discharged. On April 13. other Letters from the Ile gave account, that the King was in good Health and Pleasant; had bowled several times upon the new Bowling-Ally with the Governour, Colonel Herbert, and others; and had talked merrily in relation to this Army and the Scots. Indeed the Scots began now to threaten a new War, for recovering the King out of those Hands into which they had sold him; and some Counties in England brought up such bold Petitions tions to the Parliament, to condescend to the Royal Intimations of his Majesty for a Personal Treaty; that the House of Commons began to think it their Interest to recede from their former Resolutions of Non-Addressing: And on May 5. they fell to consider of making some farther Application to the King, and pass a Declaration, "That they will be ready to join with the Kingdom of Scotland in the Propositions agreed upon by the two Kingdoms, and formerly presented to his Majesty at Hampton-Court. On May 24. the Commons voted, that after his Majesty had signed the Bills to be tender'd to him by Parliament, for settling the Militia of the Kingdom, and the Presbyterian Government. and had recalled all his Declarations, Proclamations, &c. against both or either Houses of Parliament; that then a Treaty should be had with his Majesty upon the rest of the Propositions presented to his Majesty at Hampton-Court. On May 30. the three Bills to be presented to his Majesty in relation to a Treaty were assented to by the Commons, and sent to the Lords for their concurrence; and then to be forthwith sent to the Parliament of Scotland. This good disposition of the Members was owing to their Danger from several Insurrections in most Counties of England in great Bodies declaring for the King; especially in Kent and Essex. On June 22. the Commons were in long debate concerning his Majesty's Person, and put the Question, whether he should be removed from Carisbrook-Castle to Windsor-Castle, in order to a Personal Treaty upon such things as both Kingdoms shall conclude to be proper? But they could come to no Resolution. June 28. the Lord Mayor, Aldermen and Common-Council of London, presented an earnest Petition to both Houses, that a Personal Treaty might be obtained between his Majesty and the Parliament in the City of London, or some other convenient place. This was so much the Voice of the Nation, that in a Committee of both Houses June 30. it was agreed; first, That the Vote of the third of January 1647. forbidding any Additions to be made to, or received from his Majesty, should be made null. Secondly, That the three Propositions sent into the Kingdom of Scotland, and to be presented to his Majesty before a Personal Treaty to be had, should not be insisted upon. And thirdly, That his Majesty be removed to some of his Houses within ten Miles of London. And yet on Monday July 2. thinking their Affairs more hopeful, they resolv'd, that the three Bills should be drawn up and sent as Propositions; to which his Majesty is to give his Approbation by subscribing his Hand before a Personal Treaty, and to give assurance to pass them into Acts, so soon as he shall come to London and sit in Parliament; but would not yet conclude on the Time or Place of Treaty. On the contrary, the Lords were for a Treaty without any preceding Terms; and July 8. desired a Conference with the Commons about the three Propositions, that they should not be insisted on before the Treaty; and gave their Reasons in the said Conference July 10. 1. That so there may be no delay in the thing, a speedy Personal Treaty being so much desired and petitioned for. 2. It is the desire of the Parliament of Scotland. 3. The Agreement upon the Treaty will be the more Authentick. 4. It is probable, having no Army in being, his Majesty will condescend to that which at Uxbridge and Oxford he refused. 5. It is not the way of Treaties to confirm any before all is agreed, especially those of most concernment, and that which chiefly will be insisted upon. But the Success of Cromwel in Wales, of Lambert in the North, and of the Forces before Colchester, gave new Spirits to the irreconcilable Members of the House of Commons, who declared July 15. that they would adhere to their former Vote, That his Majesty should sign the three Propositions before any Personal Treaty be had with his Majesty. And soon after made a Declaration of their calling to mind the great Victories that God hath pleased to give the Parliament's Forces within these few late Months over the Enemy, and how God had owned the great Cause of the Parliament and Army; appointing a Day of 1648. Thanksgiving for it. But after all, the Citizens of London were so importunate and positive for an immediate Treaty; and Duke Hamilton had made such Advances with an Army out of Scotland for the King, that the Commons were forced to give back and agree with the Lords for a Treaty without the King's signing any Propositions. And it was then resolv'd July 28. that his Majesty in Person should be treated with by Commissioners of both Houses of Parliament in the Isle of Wight, upon the whole matter of the Propositions at Hampton-Court, for settling the Peace of this Kingdom. And both Houses concurr'd in these Votes Aug. 2. First, "That a Message be sent to the King to acquaint him that the Houses desire a Treaty with his Majesty's Person, in what place of the Isle of Wight he shall appoint, upon the Propositions tender'd to his Majesty at Hampton-Court, and concerning Wards and Liveries, and to treat with Honour and Freedom and Safety to his Majesty's Person. Secondly, To receive such other Propositions to be treated on, as shall be presented by his Majesty. Thirdly, That Commissioners be dispatch'd away to his Majesty by Friday next with the said Votes, and return within ten Days.

These Commissioners were the Earl of Middlesex, Sir John Hippeley and Mr. Colley, who on Monday Aug. 7. had Access and Audience of the King at Carisbrook-Castle; at which time the Earl of Middlesex read the Votes of the Houses concerning a Personal Treaty, and delivered them to his Majesty, who received them with much cheerfulness, and spoke to this effect, that no Man desired Peace so much as he (look on him in his several Relations, as a King, a Husband, a Father, a Master) and that he would give ear to any Motion or Overture which might conduce to a good Accommodation. For (said he) whoever they be that gain by these Troubles, I must needs be a loser. His Majesty demanded of the Commissioners, How long they were to stay in the Island? To which it was answer'd by my Lord of Middlesex, that they were confin'd by the two Houses to ten Days from the time they set forth from London. His Majesty replied, "That the Time was short, and that he had no Clerk to write for him; but he would nevertheless dispatch them within the time limited.

His Majesty sent back his Answer in this Letter to the two Houses. Carisbrook-Castle Aug. 10. 1648. If the Peace of my Dominions were not much dearer to me than any particular Interest whatsoever, I had too much Reason to take notice of the several Votes which passed against me, and the sad Condition I have been in now above these seven Months. But since you, my two Houses of Parliament have opened, as it seems to me, a fair Beginning to a happy Peace, I shall heartily apply myself thereto. And to that end I will as clearly and shortly as I may, set you down those things which I conceive necessary to this blessed Work: so that we together may remove all Impediments that may hinder a happy Conclusion of this Treaty, which with all cheerfulness I do embrace. The King proceeds to demand first, That they will recall all such Votes and Orders by which People are frighted from Coming, Writing, or Speaking freely to him. Next, That Men of necessary use to him in this Treaty may be admitted to wait upon him. Then, That the Scots may be invited to send some Persons authorized by them to treat upon such Propositions as they shall make. As to the Place, He will name Newport in this Isle, though he cannot but think it a great loss of Time, to treat so far from the Body of the two Houses. Concluding, I have now no more to say, but to conjure you by all that is dear to Christians, honest Men, or good Patriots, that you will make all the Expedition possible to begin this happy Work, by hastening down your Commissioners fully Authorized and well Instructed; and by enabling me (as I have shew'd you) to Treat. Praying the God of Peace so to bless our Endeavours, that all my Dominions may enjoy a safe and well-grounded Peace.

Sir Peter Killigrew being sent from the two Houses, return'd with this Answer from his Majesty, dated Aug. 28. My Lord and Mr. Speaker, I have Answer " Votes that you sent me; which though they are not so full appointed, be speedily sent, fully authorized and instructed, to treat with me; not doubting but what is requiring, will at our Meeting, upon Debate, be fully sup-to the Confirmation of a safe and well-grounded Peace.

 So I rest your good Friend, Charles R.

The same Day this Letter was read in the Houses, Aug. 29. News came, that the Town of Colche- ster was surrender'd Yesterday according to Articles,

 Plunder paying Fourteen thousand Pounds. That Afternoon a Council of War was call'd; at which it was resolv'd, that Sir Charles Lucas, Sir George Life, and Sir Bernard Gostaigne, should be shot to Death. The two first were barbarously so executed, the latter, being the only Papist, was repriev'd and sav'd by the General. The Characters of the two Gentlemen that suffer'd, are thus drawn by the Lord Clarendon: " The two who were thus murder'd,
 " were Men of great Name and Esteem in the War;
 " the one being held as good a Commander of Horse,
 " and the other of Foot, as the Nation had, but of " very different Tempers and Humours. Lucas

 " his Person, and, in a Day of Battle, a gallant " Man to look upon, and follow; but at all other " Times and Places, of a Nature scarce to be liv'd " alacrity, that no Man was ever better followed;

 " merciful and bloody Nature.

Sept. 7. Sir Peter Killigrew returned again from The King the Ile of Wight, with an Answer from his Majesty, hastens on That he desires the Treaty may be hastned; that he could the Treaty have wish'd all those he desires might have been admitted to him, but will not let that hinder the Treaty; and now desires, that Dr. Duck and Dr. Reeves, two Civil Lawyers, may be admitted for his Service in the Treaty.
 Sir Peter farther reported, That his Majesty ask'd a Gentleman, who wore Black Ribbon, and was there with him, Who he moun'd for? He answer'd, for Sir Charles Lucas: and being told of his Death, his Majesty wept. Letters came from the Island September 11. with Advice, that his Majesty had his Liberty out of Carisbrook-Castle Wednesday last: that after he had din'd, the Gentlemen about him rid with him to Newport, and his Majesty was now at Sir William Hodges's, the Place appointed for the Treaty: that some of his new Attendants were come, others expected; and the Book of Common Prayer was used again. September 14. Intelligence was given, that the Duke of Richmond, and most of the Lords, Ministers, Lawyers, and Gentlemen, nominated in the List to attend the King upon the Treaty, were now with him, and had kiss'd his Hand; and that the King told them, He was glad they were admitted to be with him in the Treaty: That his Majesty had given them Instructions, and daily expected the Commissioners from the Parliament. Other Letters from thence, read September 16. said, the Parliament Commissioners were come, a good Correspondence on both sides, and the Treaty to begin on Monday Morning. Saturday Sept. 16. the Commissioners waited on the King, kiss'd his Hand, and acquainted him with their Message from the Parliament. His Majesty made a short Speech in Answer to them; That he was glad they were come to Treat The Com- " with him, for the settling of his poor bleeding Kingmissioners " dom in Peace; and desired God to perfect this blessed attend the " Work; professing, that he was in Charity with all of King. " them, and not willing to seek Revenge against any, nor give occasion of Delays: desiring that there may be no procrastinating of Time; but that being only a broken piece of a Day, and the last Day of the Week too, he desired the Treaty might begin at Nine a Clock on Monday Morning; and from thence the Treaty to commence.
 Accordingly on Monday Sept. 18. the King and Commissioners met at the House of Sir William Hodges, and began the Treaty. The Commissioners first presented the three Bills, for Religion, the Militia, and the Recalling his Majesty's Proclamations and Declarations against the Parliament. Then the two first Days were spent in laying down the Method that was to be observed: viz. That nothing should be binding on either side, but what should be express'd in Writing; and not that, till the Conclusion of the Treaty.
 His Majesty desired that the Preamble to the Propositions might be laid aside, because it charg'd all the Blood shed in the three Kingdoms upon himself and Those who adher'd to him. The Commissioners insisted on the Preamble to be made part of the Act of Parliament, till the King, against Judgment, yielded to it. Upon which Concession, the Commissioners wrote to the Parliament, that on September 25. the King had declared, he would consent to pass the Preamble as was desired: which being done, great Hope is given to all Hearts, that this is the Forerunner of a happy Peace and Establishment; the King having farther declared, That nothing of his particular Interest shall hinder the Progress of this Treaty.

October 2. a Letter from his Majesty was brought Proposals to both Houses by Captain Titus, with Proposals, of the K.

1648. that as to Religion, his Majesty will consent, that 24 Car. I. the Calling and Sitting of the Assembly of Divines, and the Directory, and Presbyterian Government, shall be confirmed for three Years; provided his Majesty, and those of his Judgment, be not obliged to comply with the same. Concerning the Bishops Lands and Revenue, his Majesty will consent to an Act whereby legal Estates for Lives or for Years, not exceeding 99, shall be made for those Lands towards the Satisfaction of the Purchasers; provided the Propriety and Inheritance of those Lands may still remain to the Church. His Majesty will give his Royal Assent for the better Observation of the Lord's-day; for suppressing of Innovations in Churches and Chapels; for Acts against Plurality and Non-Residence; for Regulating and Reforming Universities and Colleges; for the better Discovery and speedy Conviction of Popish Recusants; for the Education of their Children by Protestants; and for preventing the Hearing or Saying of Mass; and for putting the Militia into the Parliament's hands for ten Years, &c. But the Commons, upon Debate of this Message, voted the same to be unsatisfactory.

Voted not satisfactory.

Debates of Religion.

Consent and Compliance of the King.

Cromwell's Victory exalts the Commons

October 7. Letters were sent to the Parliament from their own Party, that the great Business insisted on was the Proposition for settling Religion, which was like to take up some time: That his Majesty had given a Paper to the Commissioners, of the Reasons wherefore he could not consent to take away Bishops, and the Government by Bishops, which he conceived to be of Apostolical Institution, and alleged several Scriptures to that purpose: He also propounded some Queries concerning Presbyterian Government, which were referred to the Parliament Ministers who waited on the Commissioners, Mr. Marshal, Mr. Vines, Mr. Caryl, and Mr. Seaman. A Day or two after, his Majesty had said, that He was bred and instructed in the way he stands for, by his Father the wisest King and best in the World, and therefore could not easily yield; and yet he had already yielded far, having denied in effect nothing but the absolute Sale of Bishops Lands, which he thought to be Sacrilege, and to be against his Coronation-Oath. That in a Debate about the Directory the King had asked, What fault they found in the Common Prayer Book? It was replied, That the Liturgy was taken out of the Mass-Book, only spoiled in the Translation; and that his Majesty's Father, King James, had so confessed it to be: to which his Majesty had said, That if it were good in itself, that did not make it ill. As to the abolishing of Bishops, his Majesty would by no means consent to it; but had since made Offer of a limited and regulated Episcopacy. The Form of this Offer (which shall be recited among the Affairs of Religion) was read and debated in the House of Commons, who voted that his Majesty's Paper concerning Religion was not satisfactory. And then order'd their Commissioners not to proceed to the Debate of any new Proposition, till this concerning the Church were first signed by his Majesty. This was on October 11. on which very Day the King had given his Consent to the Proposition concerning Ireland; and presently after to another Proposition for taking away all Honours conferred since May 20. 1642. and to great part of the Proposition concerning Delinquents; subjecting them to any Penalties except the loss of Life. October 23. his Majesty farther consented to these other Propositions: 1. To that of the Nomination of the great Officers of the Kingdom, as desired. 2. To that concerning the City of London, as desired. 3. To that concerning the Great Seal, as desired. 4. And to that concerning the Court of Wards, as desired; a Recompence being assured to his Majesty of one hundred thousand Pounds per annum to him and his Heirs in lieu of it.

But such now was the Misery of this vanquish'd Prince, and such the Insults of the conquering Party, that ninety and nine Concessions would not have satisfied, if any single one of a hundred had been denied. And therefore, upon the Returning of Cromwell with Victory out of Scotland, the Commons voted October 27. that his Majesty's Answer concerning the taking of the Covenant was Unsatisfactory; and that his other Answers concerning the taking away Archbishops, Bishops, Deans, &c. concerning the abolishing of Popery, and concerning the alienating of Bishops-Lands, were all Unsatisfactory: and within few Days after, that his Message as to Delinquents, his Answer concerning the Church, and concerning Ireland, were likewise Unsatisfactory.

Upon this, the Army, instructed by their Leaders, presented to the House of Commons a large Remonstrance; wherein they declare, that the Parliament hath abundant cause to lay aside any farther Proceeding in this Treaty, and to return to their Votes of Non-Addresses, that the King may come no more to Government, but be brought to Justice, as the capital Cause of all Evils. In this was the hand of Cromwell; who, being at the Leaguer before Pentraeth in his Return from Scotland, induced all the Regiments under him to petition against the Treaty, and for Justice on the King. The Remonstrance not being immediately considered in the House of Commons, another Declaration of the General and his Council of Officers was agreed upon November 20. in farther prosecution of the Ends of their late Remonstrance, and to shew the Grounds of the Army's Advance toward London.

The Army breaks off the Treaty.

This Cabal in the Army resolved once more to seize upon the Person of the King, the manner of which is thus related by Colonel Edward Cook, who drew up the Narrative next Morning, by Assistance of the Duke of Richmond and the Earl of Lindsey, at the King's Command.

“ Upon rumour of such an Attempt upon the King — the Duke of Richmond and Earl of Lindsey, upon Advice of Colonel Cook agreed for the King's attempting an immediate Escape, as the readiest way to procure a personal Treaty with the Parliament — But before they could proceed to debate the Manner of this Escape, the King prevented it, arguing against the Escape it self. First, he urged the great Difficulty, if not Impossibility, of accomplishing it. Next, that in case he should miscarry in the Attempt, it would exasperate the Army, and dishearten his Friends. And Lastly, if the Army should seize him, they must preserve him for their own sakes; he being convinced, that no Party could secure their own Interest without joining his to it, his Son being out of their Reach. — After some Consult, the King commanded Colonel Cook to give his Advice; who did it thus: Suppose I should not only tell your Majesty that the Army design'd suddenly to seize your Majesty, but by concurring Circumstances should fully convince you that it would be so: Also, that I have the Word, and Horses ready at hand (they being not far off in a readiness under the Penthouse;) That I had also a Vessel attending me by the Cows, may hourly expecting me; Myself likewise both ready and desirous to attend your Majesty; and the Darknes of the Night as it were suited to the purpose; so that I can foresee no visible Difficulty in the thing; which I suppose in all its Particulars to be the true state of this present Case: The only now remaining Question is, If so, what will your Majesty resolve to do? The King, after a small Pause, delivered this positive Answer, They have promised Me, and I have promised Them, and I will not break first. The Duke of Richmond pressing the Colonel to speak, he craved Leave to argue the Point with the King: His Majesty replied, With all my heart. I presume Sir (then said the Colonel) your Majesty intends by these Words They and Them the Parliament, to whom your Majesty made that Promise you mention. If so, the Scene is now quite changed, the present Apprehension arising from the Army, who have already so far violated the Votes and Promises of the Parliament, as to invade your Majesty's Freedom and Safety,

" and so had him and the Earl of Lindsey good

" ing, the King commanded the Duke to let them

" before the King could get from his Bed, those Of" ficers rushed into his Bed-Chamber and abruptly

" From whom, said the King; they reply'd, from the

" the Castle, said they. The King demanded, To " what Castle? Again they answer'd, to the Castle.
" The Castle, said the King, is no Castle: And added,
" he was well enough prepared for any Castle, requiring

The two Houses made Prisoners as well as the king.

The next Day after this perfidious Exploit, the General Fairfax with several Regiments of Horse and Foot marched to London, and took up their Quarters in White-hall, St. James's, the News, York-House, and other parts of Westminster and the adjacent Villages. By which means the Parliament who had so long kept their King a Prisoner, were themselves made Prisoners of War to the Army; and had only leisure to repent, that this Treaty was in this manner dissolved, which they might have concluded with so much Honour and Interest at least to themselves. While all that the Commons could now do was to Vote Decemb. 4. That the seizing upon the Person of the King, and carrying him Prisoner to Hurst Castle, was without the Advice or Consent of the House.
A forty Confession, that they would not prevent it, and could not now help it.

Excellent Sayings of
the King.

And here, because the private Conversation and occasional Sayings of a Prince (especially in times of Trial) represent him better than any other Marks and Characters whatever. Take this Account of some Passages given by an Ear-Witness, Sir Philip Warwick. In the Treaty at Newport, two Replies which the King made to two Gentlemen that Day were observable; the one to a Gentlem. who is now a Lord, who press'd somewhat upon him hardly:

A good Nature, Sir, (says he) would not offer this you say, nor is it true Logick: And then made another kind of ingenious Reply unto Mr. Buckley (who was a Gentleman of that Island, and now a Commissioner) when he prayed the King to make right use of this Treaty. — Consider (says he) Air. Buckley, if you call this a Treaty, whether it be not like the fray in the Comedy; where the Man comes out and says there has been a fray and no fray. And being asked, how that could be? Why, saith he, there have been three Blows given and I had them all. Look therefore whether this be not a parallel Case, observe whether I have not granted absolutely most of your Propositions, and with great moderation limited only some few of them; may consider, whether you have made me any Concession, and whether at this present Moment you have not confess'd to me, that tho' upon any Proposition you were all concurrently satisfied, yet till you had remitted them up to your Superiors, you had not Authority to concur with me in any one thing. — About the latter end of the Treaty, finding it was like to be ineffectual: I wish (says he) I had consulted no body but my own self; for then where in Honour or Conscience I could not have comply'd, I could early have been positive: For with Job I would have willingly chosen Misery than sin. When he was press'd by the Parliament Ministers to give way for a final Catechism for Children, I will not (says he) take upon me to determine all these Texts you quote are rightly apply'd, and have their true sense given them: And I assure you, Gentlemen, I would license a Catechism at a venture sooner for Men than I would for Children, because they can judge for themselves: And I make a great Conscience to permit that Children should be corrupted in their first Principles. — I remember one Evening, when I waited on the King with the Notes that pass'd that Day (and then sometimes he would ease himself by some Discourse on the
by) his Majesty told me, That he should be like a Captain that had defended a Place well, and his Superiors not being able to relieve him, he had leave to surrender it; but, he reply'd, tho' they cannot relieve me in the time I demand it, let them relieve me when they can; else I will hold it out till I make some Stone in this Building my Tomb-stone: And so will I do (says he) by the Church of England. Another time talking of the unreasonableness of the two Houses Propositions about the Civil Government, Well, (says he) they will ask so much, and use it so ill, that the People of England will be one Day glad to relodge the Power they had taken from the Crown where it is due; and I have offended against them more in the things I have granted them, than in any thing I ever designed against them. — These were the most material things my Memory will serve me to recollect — Things of a lesser Nature were these; That observing him drink two parts Water and one Sack, I presumed to ask, how he came to leave French Wine, he told me, They afforded him not good, and then he thought this the better brewage. Nay, (says he) whilst I have been here among them, I have wanted Linnen, which tho' I took notice of I never complain'd of. Another time he looking out of his Presence-Chamber Window at Newport, I being in the Room, he beckoned me, and shewed me in the Street an old little crumpling Man, and ask'd whether I knew him; No, Sir, (said I) I never saw him before. I shew him you (says he) because that was the best Companion I had for three Months together in Carisbrook Castle, where he made my Fires. Methinks, because it shews his disesteem of a common Court-Vice; it is 1648. " is not unworthy the relating of him, that one E-24 Car. I. " vening his Dog scraping at his Door, he comman" ded me to let in Gipsy; whereupon I took the " boldness to say, Sir, I perceive you love a Greyhound

" better than a Spaniel. 'Tis (says he) for they equally
" love their Masters, and do not flatter them so much.

We ought not to leave the Ile of Wight without observing, that the King drew up a full account of the Treaty in a Letter to the Prince, which he began before the first forty Days were expired, and continued it as the Treaty was lengthen'd, even to the Hour it was concluded, and finished it the 29th of Nov. after the Commissioners were departed, and with it sent a very exact Copy of all the Papers which had passed in the Treaty; the perfect Copies whereof are lately printed in the Historical Discourses of Sir Ed. Walker, who was the chief Clerk employ'd by his Majesty during that Treaty. The Lord Clarendon relates, that the Letter to the Prince was all in the King's own hand, and contained above six Sheets of Paper; in which he made a very particular Relation of all the Motives and Reasons which had prevailed with him, or over him, to make those Concessions. The conclusion of the Letter, as it was dated the 25th of November (what was added to it after till the 29th, was but the additional Passages upon the enlargement of Time) deserves to be preserved in Letters of Gold, and gives the best Character of that excellent Prince, and was in these Words.

" By what hath been said, you see how long we " have labour'd in the search of Peace: do not you " be dishearten'd to tread in the same steps. Use " all worthy ways to restore your self to your Right, " but prefer the way of Peace. Shew the greatness " of your Mind, if God bless you (and let us com" fort you with that which is our own Comfort, " that though Affliction may make us pass under the " Censures of Men, yet we look upon it so, as if it " procure not, by God's Mercy, to us a Deliverance
" it will to you a Blessing) rather to conquer your " Enemies by pardoning than punishing. If you " saw how unmanly and unchristian the implacable " Disposition is in our ill Withers, you would avoid " that Spirit. Censure us not for having parted " with so much of our own Right; the Price was " great, but the Commodity was security to us,
" Peace to our People; and we were confident ano" ther Parliament would remember how useful a " King's Power is to a People's Liberty: of how " much thereof we divested our self, that We and " They might meet once again in a due Parliamen" tary way, to agree the Bounds of Prince and Peo" ple. And in this give belief to our Experi" ence, never to affect more Greatness or Preroga" tive than that which is really and intrinsically for " the Good of Subjects, not the Satisfaction of Fa" vourites. If you thus use it, you will never want
" means to be a Father to all, and a bountiful Prince
" to any you would be extraordinary gracious to.
" You may perceive all Men entrust their Treasure
" where it returns them Interest; and if Princes,
" like the Sea, receive and repay all the fresh Streams
" the River intrusts with them, they will not grudge
" but pride themselves to make them up an Ocean.
" These Considerations may make you as great a " Prince as your Father is now a low one; and your " state may be so much the more establish'd as " mine hath been shaken. For our Subjects have " learned, we dare say, that Victories over their " Princes are but Triumphs over themselves, and so " will be more unwilling to hearken to Changes
" hereafter: The English Nation are a sober People
" however at present infatuated.

" We know not but this may be the last time we " may speak to you or the World publickly; we " are sensible into what hands we are fallen, and " yet, we bless God, we have those inward refresh" ments the malice of our Enemies cannot perturb.

" We have learned to busie our self by retiring 1648.
" into our self, and therefore can the better digest 24 Car. I.
" what befalls us; not doubting but God's Provi" dence will restrain our Enemies Power, and turn " their fierceness to his praise.

" To conclude, if God gives you success, use it " humbly and far from Revenge. If he restore you " to your Right upon hard Conditions, whatever " you promise keep. These Men, who have forc'd " Laws, which they were bound to preserve, will " find their Triumphs full of Troubles. Do not " think any thing in this World worth the obtain" ing by foul and unjust means.

" You are the Son of our Love, and as we direct
" you to weigh what we here recommend to you,
" so we assure you we do not more affectionately " pray for you (to whom we are a Natural Pa" rent) than we do, that the ancient Glory and " Renown of this Nation be not buried in Irreligion
" and Phanatick Humour; and that all our Subjects
" (to whom we are a Politick Parent) may have " such sober Thoughts as to seek their Peace in the " Orthodox Profession of the Christian Religion, as " was established since the Reformation in this King" dom, and not in new Revelations; and that the " ancient Laws, with the Interpretation according " to the known practice, may once again be a Hedge " about them; that you may in due time govern,
" and they be govern'd as in the feat of God, which " is the Prayer of

Your very loving Father,

To return to the King's Sufferings and Trial, on Members Dec. 6. several Members of the House of Commons, excluded. who were thought less inclinable to the Wickedness in agitation were excluded, seiz'd upon, and kept in Custody by special Order from the General and Council of Army. And when the House was thus purged, Lieutenant Colonel Astel came in, and presented the Proposals of the Army, setting forth, " That The Army
" they had for a long while sadly beheld and tasted governed
" in their Proceedings the miserable Fruits of Coun- under

" nal Interest; that all faithful Members must ac" quit themselves by a Protestation of their not con-" curring in the late Proceedings; and must then " speedily and vigorously proceed to take order for " the execution of Justice. Next Day Lieutenant General Cromwel came into the House, and received their hearty Thanks for his great and faithful Services. On Dec. 13. the remnant of the Commons voted, that they will make no farther Addresses or Applications to the King; and that the late Treaty with him was highly dishonourable and destructive to the good of the Kingdom. On Dec. 16. a Party of Horse was sent over to Hurst-Castle to bring the King from thence to Windsor, where Cromwel was now ready to receive him: He lay at Farnham December 22. and was delivered up at Windsor Castle The King on Saturday Night Dec. 23. Colonel Thomlinson com- brought to manding the Guards of Horse and Foot about him. Windsor.
The Council of War order'd Dec. 27. that all Ceremonies of State used to the King should be left off, and his Attendance should be with fewer Persons and at less Charges. Next Day a Committee of the Commons appointed to draw up a Charge against the King, reported an Ordinance for Attainting Ordinance Charles Stuart of High-Treason, and for trying him for Attain-by Commissioners to be nominated in the said Or- ding the dinance, which was tumultuously agreed to, and King.
carried up to the Lords Jan. 2. their Lordships with Rejected just Indignation threw out the Bill, and adjourn'd by the to Thursday Seven-night. Upon which the Commons Lords. were made to declare, that they had a Power to proceed without the concurrence of the Lords, having in themselves the supreme Authority of the Nation; and so pass the Ordinance in the new name of the Commons of England only.

Committees for Trial of their
King,

Jan. 10. The Commissioners appointed to try the King met in the Painted Chamber, and nominated Serjeant Bradshaw to be President of their Court, Mr. Steel to be Attorney-General, Mr. Cook Solicitor, Dr. Derijlan and Mr. Ask to be Pleaders against him. On Jan. 13. they agreed, that Westminster-Hall should be the Place of Trial; and that, in order thereto, the King should be brought up from Windſor on Monday next. On Wednesday Jan. 17. they order'd that the King should be brought to the House of Sir Robert Cotton, for the better Convenience of his Trial in the Hall adjoining.

Call'd a High Court of Justice.

Jan. 20. This execrable High Court of Justice met in Westminster-Hall; and after reading the Ordinance, the Names of the Commiſſioners, as Judges, were call'd over: Every Man answering to his Name as he was call'd, and the President being first call'd and making Answer, the next who was call'd being the General, Lord Fairfax, and no Answer being made, the Officer call'd him the second time, when there was a Voice heard that said, He had more Wit than to be there, which put the Court into some Disorder; and ſomebody asking who it was? there was no other Answer but a little Murrmuting. But presently when the Impeachment was read, and that Expreſſion us'd, Of all the good People of England, the same Voice, in a louder Tone, answered, No, nor the hundredth part of them: upon which one of the Officers bid the Soldiers give Fire into that Box from whence those presumptuous Words were utter'd. But it was quickly discern'd that it was the General's Wife, the Lady Fairfax, who had utter'd both those sharp Sayings; who was presently perswaded or forced to leave the Place to prevent any new Disorder. Sixty seven Commiſſioners answer'd to their Names; and then the Court commanded the Serjeant at Arms to send for the Prisoner, who was brought up in the Face of the Court by Colonel Thomlinſon, under a strong Guard, and deliver'd to the Serjeant at Arms, who conducted him to the Bar, where a Crimſon Velvet Chair was set before him. After a stern looking upon the Court, and the People in the Galleries on each side of him, he placed himself in the Chair, not at all moving his Hat; all the impudent Judges sitting cover'd, and fixing their Eyes upon him without the least Shew of Respect. The King presently rose up again, and turn'd about, looking downwards on the Guards and Multitude of Spectators. Being again placed in his Chair, and Silence proclaimed, the President acquainted him, "That the Commons of England assembled in Parliament being deeply sensible of the Evils and Calamities that had been brought upon this Nation, and of the innocent Blood that had been spilt in it, which was fixed upon him as the principal Author, had resolv'd to make Inquisition for this Blood, and according to the Debt they did owe to God, to Justice, to the Kingdom, and Themselves, and according to that fundamental Power and Trust repos'd in them by the People, other means failing through his Default, had resolv'd to bring him to Trial and Judgment, and had therefore constituted that Court of Justice before which he was then brought, where he was to hear his Charge, upon which the Court would proceed according to Justice. Upon which Mr. Cook, Solicitor, offer'd to speak: but the King having a Scaff in his Hand, held it up, and softly laid it upon Cook's Shoulder two or three times, bidding him Hold: But, at Command of the President, Cook went on, and in the Name and on the Behalf of the People of England, exhibited a Charge of High Treason and other high Crimes, and did therewith accuse the said Charles Stuart King of England; praying that the said Charge might be received and read, and due Proceedings had thereupon. The King interrupted the Reading of it; but the Clerk, at Command of the Court, read the Charge, concluding, That he the said Charles Stuart hath been and is the Occasioner, Author, and Conti- ner of the said unnatural, cruel, and bloody Wars; 1648. and therein guilty of all the Treasons, Murders, Ra- 24 Car. I. pines, Burnings, Spoils, Desolations, Damages, and Mischiefs to this Nation acted and committed in the said Wars, or occasioned thereby.

Bradshaw, after he had insolently reprehended the King for not having shew'd more Respect to that high Tribunal, told him, "That the Parliament of England had appointed that Court to Try him for the several Treasons and Misdemeanours which he had committed against the Kingdom during the evil Administration of his Government; and that, upon the Examination thereof, Justice might be done. And after a great Sawciness and Impudence of Talk, he asked the King, "What Answer he had to make to that Impeachment?"

The King, without any Alteration in his Countenance by all that insolent Provocation, told them, "He would first know of them, by what Authority they presumed by Force to bring him before them, and who gave them Power to judge of his Actions, for which he was accountable to none but God, though they had been always such as he need not be ashamed to own them before all the World. He told them, That He was their King. They his Subjects, who owed him Duty and Obedience: That no Parliament had Authority to call him before them; but, that they were not the Parliament, nor had any Authority from the Parliament to sit in that manner: That of all the Persons who sat there, and took upon them to judge him, (except those Persons who being Officers of the Army, he could not but know whilst he was forced to be amongst them) there were only two Faces which he had ever seen before, or whose Names were known to him. And after urging their Duty that was due to him, and his Superiority over them, by such lively Reasons and Arguments as were not capable of any Answer, he concluded, "That he would not so much betray himself, and his Royal Dignity, as to answer any thing they objected against him, which were to acknowledge their Authority; though he believed that every one of themselves, as well as the Spectators, did in their own Consciences absolve him from all the material things which were objected against him.

Bradshaw advis'd him, in a very arrogant manner, "Not to deceive himself with an Opinion that any thing he had said would do him any Good: That the Parliament knew their own Authority, and would not suffer it to be call'd in question or debated: therefore requir'd him, To think better of it against he should be next brought thither, and that he would answer directly to his Charge; otherwise, he could not be so ignorant as not to know what Judgment the Law pronounced against those who stood mute, and obstinately refused to plead. So the Guard carried his Majesty back to St. James's, where they treated him as before.

Monday Jan. 22. The Court being sat, and the Sollicitor requiring that the Prisoner might make a positive Answer to his Charge, the Lord President said,

Sir, You may remember, at the last Court you were told the Occasion of your being brought hither, and you heard a Charge read against you, containing a Charge of High-Treason, and other high Crimes against this Realm of England: and instead of answering, you interrogated the Court's Authority and Jurisdiction. Sir, The Authority is the Commons of England in Parliament assembled, who require you to answer to the Charge, either by Confessing or Denying.

King. "When I was last here, 'tis very true I made that Question; and truly, if it were only my own particular case, I would have satisfied Myself with the Protestation I made the last time

I was

The King
brought before this exe-cutable Court.

Day.

1648. 24 Car. I. " I was here, against the Legality of this Court; and that a King cannot be tried by any superiour Jurisdiction on Earth. But it is not my Case alone; it is the Freedom and the Liberty of the People of England; and, do you pretend what you will, I stand more for their Liberties: For, if Power without Law may make Laws, may alter the fundamental Laws of the Kingdom; I do not know what Subject he is in England that can be sure of his Life, or any thing he calls his own. Therefore when that I came here, I did expect particular Reasons by what Law, what Authority you did proceed against me here: and therefore I am a little to seek what to say to you in this Particular; because the Affirmative is to be proved; the Negative often is very hard to do. But since I cannot persuade you to it, I shall tell you my Reasons as short as I can. My Reasons why, in Conscience and Duty I owe to God first, and my People next, for the Preservation of their Lives, Liberties, and Estates. I conceive I cannot answer this, till I be satisfied of the Legality of it. All Proceedings against any Man whatsoever —

L. President. Sir, I must interrupt you; which I would not do, but that what you do is not agreeable to the Proceedings of any Court of Justice. You are about to enter into Argument and Dispute concerning the Authority of this Court; before whom you appear as a Prisoner, and are charged as a high Delinquent. If you take upon you to dispute the Authority of the Court, we may not do it, nor will any Court give way unto it. You are to submit to it: You are to give a punctual and direct Answer, whether you will answer your Charge or no, and what your Answer is.

King. " Sir, by your Favour, I do not know the Forms of Law: I do know Law and Reason, tho' I am no Lawyer professed. But I know as much Law as any Gentleman in England: and therefore, under favour, I do plead for the Liberties of the People of England more than you do: and therefore if I should impose a Belief upon any without Reasons given for it, it were unreasonable. But I must tell you, that by that Reason I have as thus informed, I cannot yield unto it.

L. President. Sir, I must interrupt you, you may not be permitted: You speak of Law and Reason; it is fit there should be Law and Reason, and there is both against you. Sir, the Vote of the Commons of England assembled in Parliament, it is the Reason of the Kingdom; and they are these two that have given Being to that Law according to which you should have Ruled and Reigned. Sir, You are not to dispute our Authority; you are told it again by the Court. Sir, It will be taken notice of, that you stand in Contempt of the Court, and your Contempt will be recorded accordingly.

King. " I do not know how a King may be a Delinquent, by any Law that ever I heard of. All Men, (Delinquents or what you will) let me tell you, they may put in Demurrers against any Proceeding as Legal; and I do demand That, and demand to be heard with my Reasons. If you deny That, you deny Reason.

L. President. Sir, You have offer'd something to the Court, I shall speak something to you the Sense of the Court. Sir, Neither you nor any Man are permitted to dispute that Point: You are concluded, you may not demur to the Jurisdiction of the Court. If you do, I must let you know they over-rule your Demurrer: They sit here by the Authority of the Commons of England, and all your Predecessors, and you, are responsible to them.

King. " I deny that: shew me one Precedent.

L. President. Sir, You ought not to interrupt while the Court is speaking to you. This Point is not to be debated by you, neither will the Court permit you to do it. If you offer it by way of De-1648. 24 Car. I. murr to the Jurisdiction of the Court, they have concluded of their Jurisdiction: They do affirm their own Jurisdiction.

King. " I say Sir, by your favour, that the Commons of England was never a Court of Judicature: I would know how they came to be so.

L. President. Sir, You are not to be permitted to go on in that Speech, and these Discourses.

[Then the Clerk of the Crown read as follows:]
Charles Stuart, King of England, you have been accused, on the behalf of the People of England, of High-Treason and other high Crimes; and the Court have determined, that you ought to answer the same.

King. " I will answer the same, so soon as I know by what Authority you do this.

L. President. If this be all that you will say, then Gentlemen, you that brought the Prisoner hither, take Charge of him back again.

King. " I do require, that I may give in my Reasons why I do not Answer, and give me time for that.

L. President. Sir, it is not for Prisoners to Require.

King. " Prisoners! Sir, I am not an ordinary Prisoner.

L. President. The Court has considered of their Jurisdiction, and they have already affirmed their Jurisdiction: If you will not answer, we will give Order to record your Default.

King. " You never heard my Reasons yet.

L. President. Sir, your Reasons are not to be heard against the highest Jurisdiction.

King. " Shew me that Jurisdiction where Reason is not to be heard.

L. President. Sir, We shew it you here, the Commons of England: And the next time you are brought you will know more of the Pleasure of the Court, and it may be their final Determination.

King. " Shew me where ever the House of Commons were a Court of Judicature of that kind.

L. President. Serjeant, Take away the Prisoner.

King. " Well Sir, remember that the King is not suffer'd to give in his Reasons for the Liberty and Freedom of all his Subjects.

L. President. " Sir, You are not to have Liberty to use this Language. How great a Friend you have been to the Laws and Liberties of the People, let all England and the World judge.

King. " Sir, under favour, it was the Liberty, Freedom, and Laws of the Subject, that I ever took to defend Myself with Arms: I never took up Arms against the People, but for the Laws.

L. President. The Command of the Court must be obey'd, no Answer will be given to the Charge.

King. " Well, Sir.

[And so he was guarded forth to Sir Robert Cotton's House: and the Court adjourn'd till to Morrow.]

Tuesday Jun. 23. Mr. Solicitor Cook moved the Court, that the Charge against the Prisoner may be taken pro confesso, and speedy Judgment pronounced against him. And the Lord President requiring him to give a positive and final Answer in plain English; the King, after a little Pause, said:

King. " When I was here Yesterday, I did desire to speak for the Liberties of the People of England; I was interrupted, and desire to know yet, whether I may speak freely or no.

L. President. ——— Sir, I must let you know from the Court, as their Commands, that you are not permitted to issue out into any other Discourses, till such time as you have given a positive Answer concerning the Matter that is charg'd upon you.

King. " For the Charge I value it not of a Rush: it is the Liberty of the People of England I stand for. For me to acknowledge a new Court that I never heard of before, I that am your King, that should be an example to all the People of England

1648. " to uphold Justice, to maintain the old Laws, in-24 Car. I. " deed I do not know how to do it. You spoke " very well the first Day that I came here (on Sat- " turday) of the Obligations that I had laid upon " me by God, to the maintenance of the Liberties " of my People: The same Obligation you spake of
 " I do acknowledge to God that I owe to him and " to my People, to defend, as much as in me lies,
 " the ancient Laws of the Kingdom. Therefore " until that I may know that this is not against the " fundamental Laws of the Kingdom, by your fa" vour, I can put in no particular Answer. If you " will give me time, I will shew you my Reasons, " why I cannot do it. And thus. —

[Here being interrupted, he said,]

" By your Favour, you ought not to interrupt me;
 " how I came here I know not; there is no Law for " it to make your King your Prisoner. I was in a " Treaty upon the publick Faith of the Kingdom,
 " that was the known — two Houses of Parliam" ent, that was the Representative of the " Kingdom. And when that I had almost made an " end of the Treaty, then I was hurried away and " brought hither: And therefore — " Lord President. Sir you must know the pleasure of " the Court.

King. By your favour, Sir.

Lord President. Nay, Sir, by your favour, you may not be permitted to fall into those Discourses.
 You appear as a Delinquent; you have not acknowledged the Authority of the Court, the Court craves it not of you, but once more they command you to give your positive Answer. — Clerk, do your Duty.

King. Duty, Sir!

[The Clerk reads a Paper, requiring the King to give a positive and final Answer, by way of Confession or Denial of the Charge.]

King. Sir, I say again to you, so that I might " give satisfaction to the People of England of the " clearness of my Proceedings, not by way of An" swer, not in this way; but to satisfy them that I " have done nothing against that Trust that hath " been committed to me, I would do it: but to ac" knowledge a new Court against their Privilege, to " alter the fundamental Laws of the Kingdom, Sir,
 " you must excuse me.

Lord President. Sir, this is the third time that you have publicly disowned this Court, and put an Affront upon it. How far you have preserved the Privileges of the People, your Actions have spoke it; and truly, Sir, Men's Intentions ought to be known by their Actions. You have written your meaning in Bloody Characters throughout the whole Kingdom.
 But, Sir, you understand the pleasure of the Court.
 — Clerk, record the Default. — And Gentlemen, you that took charge of the Prisoner take him back again.

King. I will say this one Word more to you.
 " If it were my own particular, I would not say " any more, nor interrupt you. —

Lord President. Sir, you have heard the pleasure of the Court, and you are (notwithstanding you will not understand it) to find that you are before a Court of Justice.

[Then the King was guarded back to Sir Robert Cotton's House, where he lay last Night and this, and the Court adjourned till the next Day.

[Thursday and Friday the Court sat in private, to resolve upon the Condemnation and Last-Day Execution of the King.]

Saturday Jan. 27. the Court being sat, the King was brought into Westminster-Hall, some of the Soldiers calling for Justice, Justice and Execution. Silence being commanded, his Majesty began.

King. I desire to be heard a little, and I hope I " shall give no occasion of Interruption.

President. You may answer in your time, hear the Court first.

King. " If it please you, Sir, I desire to be heard,
 " and I shall not give any occasion of Interrup" tion, and 'tis only in a Word; a sudden Judg" ment. —

President. Sir, you shall be heard in due time, but you are to hear the Court first.

King. " Sir, I desire it, it will be in order to what " I believe the Court will say; and therefore, Sir,
 " — a hasty Judgment is not so soon recalled.

President. Sir, you shall be heard before the Judgment be given, and in the mean time you may forbear.

King. " Well, Sir, shall I be heard before the " Judgment be given?

[Then the President gave account how the Prisoner had been charged, and how he refused to answer; and told him he should not be heard in any thing against the Jurisdiction of the Court; but if he had any thing to say in defence of himself, concerning the matter charged they would hear him.

King. " Since I see that you will not hear any " thing of Debate concerning that, which I confess
 " I thought most material for the Peace of the King" dom, and Liberty of the Subject, I shall waive it;
 " I shall speak nothing to it. But only I must tell " you, that this many a Day all things have been " taken away from me, but that that I call dearer
 " to me than my Life, which is my Conscience and " my Honour. And if I had a respect to my Life " more than the Peace of the Kingdom, and the Li" berty of the Subject, certainly I should have made " a particular defence for myself; for by that, at " leastwise, I might have delayed an ugly Sentence " which I believe will pass upon me. Therefore,
 " certainly Sir, as a Man that hath some Under" standing, some knowledge of the World, if that " my 1648. " my true Zeal to my Country had not overborn 24 Car. I. " the care that I have for my own Preservation, I " should have gone another way to work than that " I have done.

" Now, Sir, I conceive then an haſty Sentence
" once paſſed may ſooner be repented of than re" called: And truly the ſelf-ſame deſire that I have " for the peace of the Kingdom and the Liberty of " the Subject, more than my own particular Ends,
" makes me now at laſt deſire, that I have ſome-
" thing to ſay that concerns both, before Sentence
" be given, that I may be heard in the Painted-" Chamber before the Lords and Commons. This " delay cannot be prejudicial to you, whatſoever I
" ſay. If that I ſay be not Reaſon, thoſe that hear " me muſt be Judges; if it be Reaſon, and really " for the Welfare of the Kingdom, and the Liberty " of the Subject, I am ſure of it, it is very well worth " the hearing. Therefore I do conjure you, as you " love that that you pretend (I hope it is real) the " Liberty of the Subject, the Peace of the Kingdom,
" that you will grant me this Hearing before any " Sentence be paſt. I only deſire this, that you will " take this into your conſideration; it may be you " have not heard of it before-hand. If you will, I " will retire, and you may think of it. But if I " cannot get this liberty, I do proteſt, that theſe
" fair ſhews of Liberty and Peace are pure ſhews,
" and that you will not hear your King.

[The Preſident made this to be a farther declining the Jurisdiction of the Court; but for a pretence, the Court withdrew for half an Hour into the Court of Wards, and then returning and calling for the Priſoner, the Preſident ſaid,

Sir, you were pleaſed to make a motion here to the Court, to offer a Deſire of yours, touching the propounding of ſomewhat to the Lords and Commons in the Painted-Chamber for the Peace of the Kingdom. Sir, you did in effect receive an Answer before the Court adjourned. Truly, Sir, their withdrawing and adjournment was pro forma tantum, for it did not ſeem to them that there was any difficulty in the thing. — And notwithstanding what you have offer'd, they are reſolved to proceed to Sentence and to Judgment, and that is their unanimous conſent.

King. " Sir, I know it is in vain for me to diſ-" pute; I am no Sceptick for to deny the Power that " you have, I know that you have Power enough.
" Sir, I muſt confeſs, I think it would have been " for the Kingdom's Peace, if you would have tak" en the pains to have ſhewn the lawfulness of " your Power. For this Delay that I have deſired,
" I confeſs it is a Delay, but it is a delay very im" portant for the Peace of the Kingdom: For it is " not my Perſon that I look at alone, it is the King" dom's welfare and the Kingdom's Peace.

" It is an old Sentence, that We ſhould think long " before we reſolve on great Matters ſuddenly. Therefore,
" Sir, I do ſay again, that I do put at your Doors
" all the Inconveniency of a haſty Sentence. —
" A little delay of a Day or two farther may give " Peace; whereas a haſty Judgment may bring on " that trouble and perpetual inconveniency to the " Kingdom, that the Child that is unborn may re" pent it. And therefore again, out of the Duty I " owe to God and to my Country, I do deſire that " I may be heard by the Lords and Commons in the " Painted-Chamber, or any other Chamber that you " will appoint me.

Preſident. You have been already answer'd to what " you even now moved, being the ſame you moved " before, ſince the Reſolution and the Judgment of " the Court in it. And the Court now requires to " know, whether you have any more to ſay for your " ſelf than you have ſaid, before they proceed to Sen" tence.

King. " I ſay this, Sir, that if you hear me, if " you will give me but this delay, I doubt not but " I ſhall give ſome ſatisfaction to you all here, and " to my People after that. And therefore I do re- 1648.

" quire you, as you will answer it at the dreadful 24 Car. I.
" Day of Judgment, that you will conſider it once " again.

Preſident. Sir, I have received Directions from the Court.

King. " Well, Sir!

Preſident. If this muſt be reinforced, or any thing of this Nature, your Answer muſt be the ſame, and they will proceed to Sentence, if you have nothing more to ſay.

King. " I have nothing more to ſay, but I ſhall
" deſire that this may be enter'd what I have ſaid.

Preſident. The Court then, Sir, hath ſomething to ſay unto you, which I know will be very unacceptable, yet notwithstanding they are willing and reſolved to diſcharge their Duty.

King. " I will deſire only one Word before you " give Sentence, and that is, that you would hear " me concerning thoſe great Imputations that you " have laid to my charge.

Preſident. Sir, you muſt give me now leave to go on: For I am not far from your Sentence, and your time is now paſt.

King. " But I ſhall deſire you will hear me a few " Words to you; for truly whatever Sentence you " will put upon me, in reſpect of thoſe heavy Im" putations that I ſee by your Speech you have put " upon me. Sir, it is very true that. —

[Then the Preſident interrupted him, and told him, he had not owned them as a Court, and therefore they would admit of no farther delay; concluding,]

Preſ. We are not here Jus dare, but Jus dicere, to do that which the Law preſcribes; we cannot be unmindful of what the Scripture tells us; For to acquit the Guilty is of equal Abomination as to condemn the Innocent: We may not acquit the Guilty. What Sentence the Law affirms to a Traitor, Murderer and a publick Enemy to the Country, that Sentence you are now to hear read unto you.

[The Clerk read the Sentence, concluding,]

Clerk. For all which Treasons and Crimes, this Court doth adjudge, that he the ſaid Charles Stuart as a Tyrant, Traitor, Murderer and a publick Enemy, ſhall be put to Death by the ſevering of his Head from his Body.

[The Preſident added,]

Preſ. The Sentence now read and publiſhed is the Act, Sentence, Judgment and Reſolution of the whole Court.

To which they all expreſſed their Aſſent by ſtan-ding up, as was before agreed and order'd, and let the World know, that tho' moſt of their Names are clean put out, and the Families in Exinction or Ruin; yet the Names of thoſe Subjects who adjudged their King to a criminal Death were theſe,

After Sentence, his Majesty said, Will you bear me a Word, Sir?

President. Sir, You are not to be heard after the Sentence.

King. "No Sir!"

President. No Sir; by your Favour, Sir. Guard, withdraw your Prisoner.

King. "I may speak after Sentence, by your Favour, Sir. I may speak after Sentence ever. By your Favour hold — the Sentence Sir. — I say Sir, I do — I am not suffer'd to speak, expect what Justice other People will have."

His Majesty being taken away by the Guard, as he pass'd down the Stairs the Soldiers scoffed at him, blowing the Smoak of their Tobacco in his Face, and throwing their Pipes in his way; and even one spit in his Face, his Majesty taking no more notice of that barbarous Indignity, than to wipe it off with his Handkerchief. As he pass'd along, hearing the Rabble of Soldiers crying out, Justice, Justice; he said, Poor Souls! for a piece of Money they would do so for their Commanders.

In the Evening, a Member of the Army acquainted the Committee with his Majesty's Desire, That seeing they had pass'd a Sentence of Death upon him, and his time might be nigh, he might see his Children: and Dr. Juxon Bishop of London might be admitted to assist him in his private Devotions, and receiving the Sacrament. Both which at length were granted.

The King prepares for Death.

Sunday Jan. 28. the King was attended by a Guard from Whitehall to St. James's; where the Bishop of London, after Prayers, Preach'd before him on these Words, Rom. 2. 18. In the Day when God shall judge the secrets of all men by Jesus Christ according to my Gospel. Upon which he explain'd the Doctrine of a future Judgment, and made an Application suited to the said Occasion, and after that administer'd the Sacrament. The King spent the Remainder of the Day in Prayer and Meditation, and pious Conference with the good Bishop, avoiding all Interruption, and for that reason refusing to admit the Prince Elector, the Duke of Richmond, Marquis of Hereford, Earls of Southampton and Lindsey, and some others, who came to offer their last Duties to him; but, said the King, My Time is short and precious, and I am desirous to improve it the best I may in Preparation: I hope they will not take it ill that none have Access to me, but my Children: The best Office they can do now, is to pray for me.

King takes leave of his Children.

Monday Jan. 29. the King's Children being brought to take their Leave of him, he first gave his Blessing to the Lady Elizabeth, and bid her remember to tell her Brother James, whenever she should see him, that it was his Father's last Desire, that he should no more look upon Charles as his eldest Brother only, but be obedient unto him as his Sovereign; and that they should love one another, and forgive their Father's Enemies. Then said the King to her, Sweet-heart, you will forget this. No, said she, I shall never forget it whilst I live. He wish'd her not to grieve and torment herself for him; for it would be a glorious Death that he should die, it being for the Laws and Liberties of this Land, and for maintaining the true Protestant Religion. He bid her read Bishop Andrew's Sermons, Hooker's Ecclesiastical Policy, and Bishop Laund's Book against Fisher, which would ground her against Popery. He told her, He had forgiven all his En- mies, and hoped God would forgive them. He bid her tell her Mother, that his Thoughts had never strayed from her, and that his Love should be the same to the last.

Then taking the Duke of Gloucester on his Knees, he said, Sweet-heart, now they will cut off thy Father's Head, (upon which Words the Child look'd very stedfastly upon him) Mark Child what I say; They will cut off my Head, and perhaps make thee a King: but mark what I say, You must not be a King so long as your Brothers Charles and James do live; for they will cut off your Brothers Heads (when they can catch them) and cut off thy Head too at last; and therefore I charge you do not be made a King by them. At which the Child sighing, said, I will be torn in pieces first: which falling so unexpectedly from one so young, it made the King rejoyce exceedingly. At parting, the King commanded them both to be obedient to their Mother, and bid the Lady Elizabeth send his Blessing to the rest of her Brothers and Sisters, with Commendation to all his Friends.

The Prince, then in Holland, had convey'd a Letter to his Majesty by Mr. Seamour, and by the States Ambassadors had interceded with the Parliament, and used all possible Means with the Army, to prevent, or at least to defer, the Execution. But all in vain; for a Warrant was this Day sign'd and seal'd by 59 of those execrable Judges, directed to Colonel Francis Hacker, Colonel Huncks, and Lieutenant-Colonel Phray, and to every of them, Willing and requiring them to see the said Sentence executed in the open Street before Whitehall, upon the Morrow, being the 30th Day of this instant Month of January, between the Hours of Ten in the Morning and Five in the Afternoon of the same Day, with full effect. Which original Warrant has been lately discovered, and now remains a Record of Infamy to this Nation.

A Warrant for Execution.

Tuesday Jan. 30. the King having slept soundly for about four Hours, awak'd near two Hours before Day; and calling to Mr. Herbert, who lay by his Bed-side, bid him rise; For (says the King) I will get up, having a great Work to do this Day. Herbert, This is my second Marriage-Day: I would be as trim to Day as may be, for before Night I hope to be espoused to my blessed Jesus. He then appointed what Cloaths he would wear; and, says he, Let me have a Shirt on more than ordinary, by reason the Season is so sharp as probably may make me shake: which some Observers will imagine proceeds from Fear: I would have no such Imputation; I fear not Death; Death is not terrible to me: I bless my God, I am prepared. Soon after the King was dress'd, came Dr. Juxon Bishop of London, precisely at the time his Majesty had the Night before appointed; and being first an Hour in private with him, call'd in Mr. Herbert, and pray'd in the Prayers of the Church, reading the 27th Chapter of St. Matthew, which relates the Passion of our Saviour. After Service, the King thank'd the Bishop for making choice of that Chapter, being so applicable to his present Condition: The Bishop reply'd, May it please your gracious Majesty, it is the proper Lesson for the Day, as appears by the Calender. At which the King was much affected, and thought it a providential Preparation for his Death.

About Ten a clock Colonel Hacker knock'd easily at the King's Chamber-door; and knocking louder a second time, the King commanded Mr. Herbert to go to the Door, who demanding why he knock'd? Hacker said, He would speak with the King: The King said, Let him come in. He came in trembling, and told his Majesty, It was time to go to Whitehall, where he might have some farther time to rest. Well (says the King) Go forth, I will come presently. Soon after, the King took the Bishop by the hand, and said, Come, let us go; and spoke thus to Mr. Herbert, Open the Door, Hacker has given us a second Warning. The King pass'd through the Garden into the Park, where several Companies of Foot were drawn up, and made a Guard on each side, the Bishop walking on the King's Right-hand, and Colonel

1648. nel Thomlinson on his Left, both bare-headed: the King walk'd very fast, and calling on them to walk faster, said, He now went before them to strive for a heavenly Crown, with less solicitude than he had often encouraged his Soldiers to fight for an earthly Diadem. At the end of the Park the King went up the Stairs leading to the Long Gallery, and so into the Cabinet-Chamber, where, after several Prayers and pious Discourse, about Twelve he eat a bit of Bread, and drank a Glass of Claret. Soon after Colonel Hacker came to the Chamber-door, and gave his last Signal. The Bishop and Mr. Herbert weeping fell upon their Knees, and the King gave them his Hand to kiss, and help'd up the aged Bishop, and said, Open the Door; and bidding Hacker go on, said I'll follow. So he was conducted through the Banqueting-house to the Scaffold by a Passage made through a Window. Many Companies of Foot and Troops of Horse were placed to keep off the Spectators, whereby his Majesty was disappointed of speaking to the People: and therefore directing himself chiefly to Colonel Thomlinson, he said, King's last Speech. "I shall be very little heard of any body here, I shall therefore speak a Word unto you here. Indeed I could hold my Peace very well, if I did not think, that holding my Peace would make some Men think, that I did submit to the Guilt as well as to the Punishment. But I think it is my Duty to God first, and to my Country, for to clear my self, both as an honest Man, a good King, and a good Christian.

"I shall begin first with my Innocence. In troth, I think it not very needful for me to insilt long upon this; for, all the World knows, that I never did begin a War first with the two Houses of Parliament: And I call God to witness, to whom I must shortly make an Account, that I never did intend for to encroach upon their Privileges: they began upon me. It is the Militia they began upon: They confess'd that the Militia was mine, but they thought it fit for to have it from me. And, to be short, if any body will look to the Dates of Commissions, of their Commissions and mine, and likewise to the Declarations, they will see clearly, that they began these unhappy Troubles, not I. So that as to the Guilt of these enormous Crimes that are laid against me, I hope in God that God will clear me of it. I will not, I'm in Charity, God forbid that I should lay it on the two Houses of Parliament; there is no Necessity of either: I hope they are free of this Guilt; for I do believe that ill Instruments between them and me have been the chief Cause of all this Bloodshed: so that by way of speaking, as I find my self clear of this, I hope and pray God that they may too. Yet for all this, God forbid that I should be so ill a Christian, as not to say, that God's Judgments are just upon me: Many times he does pay Justice by an unjust Sentence; that is ordinary. I only say this, that an unjust Sentence that I suffer'd to take effect, is punish'd now by an unjust Sentence upon me. That is ——— So far I have said to shew you that I am an innocent Man.

Meaning the Earl of Strafford. "Now to shew you that I am a good Christian, I hope there is a good Man that will bear me witness, that I have forgiven all the World; and even those in particular that have been the chief Causes of my Death. Who they are, God knows; I do not desire to know: I pray God forgive them. But this is not all; my Charity must go farther: I wish that they may repent; for indeed they have committed a great Sin in that Particular. I pray God, with St. Stephen, that this be not laid to their Charge; nay, not only so, but that they may take the right way to the Peace of the Kingdom: For, my Charity commands me not only to forgive particular Men, but my Charity commands me to endeavour to the last Gasp the Peace of the Kingdom. So Sirs, I do wish with all my Soul (and I do hope there is some here will carry it farther) that they may endeavour the Peace of the Kingdom.

"Now, Sirs, I must shew you both how you are out of the Way, and will put you in a way.

"First, You are out of the Way: For certainly all the Way you have ever had yet, as I could find by any thing, is in the Way of Conquest. Certainly this is an ill way; for Conquest, Sirs, in my Opinion is never just, except there be a good just cause, either for matter of wrong or just Title; and then if you go beyond it, the first quarrel you have to it, that makes it unjust at the end, that was just at the first. But if it be only matter of Conquest, then it is a great Robbery; as a Pirate said to Alexander the Great, that he was the great Robber, himself was but a petty Robber. And so, Sirs, I do think the way that you are in is much out of the way.

"Now, Sirs, for to put you in the way, believe it, you will never do right, nor will God ever prosper you, until you give God his due, the King his due (that is, my Successors) and the People their due: I am as much for them as any of you.

"You must give God his due by regulating rightly his Church (according to his Scripture) which is now out of order. For to set you in a way particularly, now I cannot, but only this, a National Synod freely called, freely debating amongst themselves must settle this, when that every Opinion is freely and clearly heard.

"For the King, indeed I will not [then turning to a Gentleman who touch'd the Axe, he said, Hurt not the Axe, that may hurt me.] "For the King, the Laws of the Land will clearly instruct you for that. Therefore because it concerns my own particular, I only give you a touch of it. For the People: and truly I desire their Liberty and Freedom as much as any body whomsoever; but I must tell you that their Liberty and Freedom consists in having of Government, those Laws by which their Life and their Goods may be most their own. It is not for having a share in Government, Sirs, that is nothing pertaining to them; a Subject and a Sovereign are clear different things. And therefore until they do that I mean, that you do put the People in that Liberty as I say, certainly they will never enjoy themselves. Sirs, it was for this that now I am come here: If I would have given way to an arbitrary way, for to have all Laws changed according to the Power of the Sword, I needed not to have come here: And therefore I tell you (and I pray God it be not laid to your charge) that I am the Martyr of the People.

"In troth, Sirs, I shall not hold you much longer, for I will only say this to you, that in truth I could have desired some little time longer, because that I would put this that I have said in little more Order, and a little better digested than I have done, and therefore I hope you will excuse me. I have delivered my Conscience, I pray God that you do take those courses that are best for the good of the Kingdom and your own Salvation.

Then the Bishop said, Tho' it be very well known what your Majesty's Affections are to the Protestant Religion, yet it may be expected, that you should say somewhat for the World's satisfaction in that particular.

Whereupon the King reply'd, "I thank you heartily, my Lord, for that, I had almost forgotten it. In troth, Sirs, my Conscience in Religion, I think is very well known to all the World; and therefore I do declare before you all, that I die a Christian, according to the Profession of the Church of England, as I found it left me by my 1648. "Father; and this honest Man, I think, will witness it.

24 Car. I. Then turning to the Officers, he said, Sirs, excuse me for this sake, I have a good Cause, and I have a gracious God, I will say no more. Then to Colonel Hacker, he said, Take care that they do not put me to Pain, and, Sir, this and please you. — But here a Gentleman coming near the Axe, he said, Take heed of the Axe, pray take heed of the Axe. Then he spoke to the Executioner, I shall say but very short Prayers, and when I thrust out my Hands. — Then he called to the Bishop for his Cap, and having put it on, he ask'd the Executioner, Does my Hair trouble you? Who desired him to put it all under his Cap; and as he was doing this, by the help of the Bishop and Executioner, he said, turning to the Bishop, I have a good Cause and a gracious God on my side. The Bishop said, "There is but one Stage more, which tho' turbulent and troublesome, yet it is a very short one; you may consider, it will soon carry you a very great way: It will carry you from Earth to Heaven, and there you shall find to your great Joy the Prize you hasten to, a Crown of Glory. The King adjoin'd, I go from a corruptible to an incorruptible Crown, where no disturbance can be, no disturbance in the World. The Bishop added, "You are exchanged from a temporal to an eternal Crown, a good exchange. Then the King ask'd the Executioner, Is my Hair well? And taking off his Cloak and George, he delivered his George to the Bishop, saying, Remember. Then putting off his Doublet, and being in his Wastcoat, he put on his Cloak again, and looking upon the Block, said to the Executioner, You must set it fast. The Executioner saying, it was fast; the King said, It might have been a little higher. Being told by him it could be now no higher, the King said, When I put out my Hands this way, then. — And saying a few Words to himself as he stood, with Hands and Eyes lift up, immediately stooping down, he laid his Neck upon the Block, and the Executioner again putting his Hair under his Cap, his Majesty thinking he had been going to strike, bad him stay for the sign; to which the Executioner said, "Yes I will" and it please your Majesty. So after a short pause, his Majesty stretching forth his Hands, the Executioner (who was all the while in a Mask) at one blow severed his Head from his Body, which being held up and shewed to the astonish'd People, was with his Body put into a Coffin covered with black Velvet, and carried into his Lodging Chamber in Whitehall.

It must be dreadfully remember'd, that the then cruel Powers did suspect, that the King would not submit his Head to the Block; and therefore to bring him down by violence to it, they had prepared Hooks and Staples (made by a Smith in Aldgate) to haul him as a Victim to the Slaughter. But by the Example of his Saviour, he resisted not, he disappointed their Wit, and yielded to their Malice.

Apology for General Fairfax. There be grounds for the Charity of thinking, that General Fairfax was not consenting to the King's Murder, but was abused by Crommel to the very Day of Execution, and even then drawn by him into seeking God by Prayer, till the blow was over. Sir Thomas Herbert assures us, That while the Bishop and he were going with the King's Body to be embalm'd, he step'd into the Long-Gallery, and the General there meeting him, ask'd him, How the King did? Which he at first thought strange; but he afterward perceiv'd, that the General knew not what had pass'd, being all that Morning using his Power and Interest to have the Execution deferred for some Days, forbearing to come among the Officers, and fully resolving with his own Regiment to prevent the Blow, or to defer it till he could make a Party in the Army to second his Design: but being with the Officers of the Army then at Prayer in Colonel Herbert's Apartment, he came from thence without knowledge of the matter, and was much surprized when Mr. Herbert told him of it.

Application was made to the Men in Power, for leave to bury the Royal Corps in King Henry VII.'s Chaple; but the Request was denied upon this Reason, that it might attract great Numbers of People to that place, which might be inconvenient and unsafe. And therefore upon a second Address to the Committee of Parliament, an Order was given dated Feb. 6. to authorize Mr. Herbert and Mr. Mildmay to bury the King's Body in the Royal Chapel of St. George within the Castle of Windsor. Hence the Body being embalm'd and laid in a Coffin of Lead, to be seen for some Days by the People, was on Feb. 7. carried from St. James's in a Hearse covered with black Velvet, and drawn by six Horses, with four Coaches following, and so brought to Windsor Castle, where the Order for Interment was shewn to the Governor Colonel Whichecot. Next Day came the Duke of Richmond, the Marquis of Hartford, the Earls of Southampton and Lindsey, and the Bishop of London, with two Votes pass'd that Morning, whereby the ordering of the King's Burial was committed to the Duke, provided the Expences thereof exceeded not five hundred Pounds. These Lords agreed, that the King's Body should be interr'd in a Vault about the middle of the Choir, over against the eleventh Stall upon the Sovereign's side, in which Vault were laid the Bodies of King Henry VIII. and Queen Jane Seymour. This Vault being open'd, the King's Body was brought from his Bed-Chamber into St. George's-Hall, and thence with a slow and solemn Pace carried by Gentlemen, the Lords following, and set down in the Choir near the place of Burial, where the Bishop of London stood ready with the Service-Book in his Hands to have performed that last Duty by the publick Form of Burial; but the rude Colonel would not suffer it to be done; and tho' the Lords earnestly desired it, and insisted on the Parliaments leave for it, yet still he denied, and said, it was improbable the Parliament would permit the use of what they had so solemnly abolished, and therein destroy their own Act. So the Body was silently deposited with this Circumscription in capital Letters upon Lead

It has been made a Question and a Wonder by some Persons, why a Monument was not erected for him after the Restauration of his Son, when the Commons were well inclined to have given a Sum of Money for that grateful Purpose. We are afraid, the true Reason was, that the Royal Body could not be found; those who murder'd it had disturb'd it in the very Grave, and had carried it away to some other place, and God alone knows whether they gave it any second Interment. The Lord Clarendon speaks softly of this matter, when he says, "Upon the Return of King Charles II. with so much Congratulation and universal Joy of the People, a Love ten Years after the Murder of his Father, it was generally expected that the Body should be removed from that obscure Burial, and with such Ceremony as should be thought fit, should be solemnly deposited with his Royal Ancestors in King Henry VII.'s Chapel in the Collegiate Church of Westminster. And the King himself intended nothing more, and spoke often of it, as if it were only defer'd till some Circumstances and Ceremonies in the doing it might be adjust'd. But, by degrees, the discourse of it was diminished, as if it were totally laid aside upon some Reasons of State, the ground whereof several Men gues'd at according to their Fancies; and thereupon cast those Reproaches upon the States-men as they thought reasonable, when the Reasons which were suggested by their own Imaginations, did not satisfy their understanding. For the satisfaction and information of all Men, I chuse in this place to explain that matter, which, it may be, is not known 1648. " known to many, and at that time was not, for 24 Car. 1. " many Reasons thought fit to be published.

 " The Duke of Richmond was dead before the " King return'd; the Marquis of Hertford died in a " short time after, and was seldom out of his Lod" ging after his Majesty came to Whitehall; the Earl " of Southampton and the Earl of Lindsey went to " Windsor, and took with them such of their own " Servants as had attended them in that Service,
 " and as many others as they remember'd had been
 " then present, and were still alive; who all amount" ed to a small number, there being at the time of " the Interment great strictness used in admitting " any to be present, whose Names were not inclu" ded in the Order which the Lords had brought.
 " In a Word, the confusion they had at that time
 " observed to be in that Church, and the small Al" terations which were begun to be made towards de" cency, so totally perplexed their Memories that " they could not satisfie themselves in what place or " part of the Church the Royal Body was interr'd;
 " yet where any concurr'd upon this or that place,
 " they caus'd the Ground to be open'd at a good " distance, and upon such Enquiries found no cause " to believe that they were near the place; and up" on their giving this Account to the King, the " thought of that remove was laid aside, and the " Reason communicated to very few, for the better
 " discourtenancing farther Enquiry.

Character of King Charles. His Character is thus drawn by the masterly Hand of the Lord Clarendon. " It will not be unnecessary to add a short Character of his Person,
 " that Posterity may know the inestimable loss
 " which the Nation then underwent, in being depriv" ed of a Prince whose Example would have had a " greater influence upon the Manners and Piety of " the Nation than the most strict Laws can have.
 " To speak first of his private Qualifications as a " Man, before the mention of his Princely and " Royal Virtues; he was, if ever any, the most " worthy of the title of an honest Man; so great " a lover of Justice, that no Temptation could dis" pose him to a wrongful Action, except it was so " disguised to him that he believed it to be just. He " had a tenderness and compassion of Nature, which " restrained him from ever doing a hard-hearted
 " thing; and therefore he was so apt to grant Pardon
 " to Malefactors, that the Judges of the Land " represented to him the damage and insecurity to " the Publick that flow'd from such his Indulgence.
 " And then he restrain'd himself from pardoning ei" ther Murders or High-way Robberies, and quick" ly discern'd the Fruits of his Severity by a won" derful Reformation of those Enormities. He was " very punctual and regular in his Devotions;
 " he was never known to enter upon his Recreati-" ons or Sports, though never so early in the Morn" ing before he had been at publick Prayers; so " that on hunting Days his Chaplains were bound " to a very early Attendance. He was likewise ve" ry strict in observing the Hours of his private Ca" binet Devotions; and was so severe an exacter of " Gravity and Reverence in all mention of Religion,
 " that he could never endure any light or profane " Word, with what sharpness of Wit soever it was " cover'd: And though he was well pleased and " delighted with reading Verses made upon any oc" casion, no Man durst bring before him any thing
 " that was profane or unclean; that kind of Wit
 " had never any countenance then. He was so great " an Example of Conjugal Affection, that they who " did not imitate him in that particular durst not " brag of their Liberty: And he did not only per" mit, but directed his Bishops, to prosecute those " scandalous Vices in the Ecclesiastical Courts, a" gainst Persons of Eminence and near Relation to " his Service.

" His Kingly Vertues had some mixture and alloy
 " that hinder'd them from shining in full Lustre, and " from producing those Fruits they should have been 1648. " attended with. He was not in his Nature very 24 Car. 1. " bountiful though he gave very much. This ap" peared more after the Duke of Buckingham's Death,

 " after which those showers fell very rarely; and he " paused too long in giving, which made those to " whom he gave less sensible of the Benefit. He kept " State to the full, which made his Court very or" derly; no Man presuming to be seen in a Place " where he had no pretence to be. He saw, and ob" served Men long before he received them about " his Person; and did not love Strangers nor very " confident Men. He was a patient hearer of Causes " which he frequently accustom'd himself to at the " Council-Board, and judg'd very well, and was " dexterous in the mediating part; so that he of" ten put an end to Causes by Perswasion which " the stubbornness of Men's Humours made dilatory
 " in Courts of Justice.

" He was very fearless in his Person; but, in his " riper Years not very enterprizing. He had an ex" cellent Understanding, but was not confident " enough of it, which made him often times change
 " his own Opinion for a worse, and follow the Ad" vice of Men that did not judge so well as himself.
 " This made him more irresolute than the conjun-" cture of his Affairs would admit: If he had " been of a rougher and more imperious Nature, he " would have found more Respect and Duty. And " his not applying some severe Cures to approaching " Evils proceeded from the Lenity of his Nature, " and the Tenderness of his Conscience, which in " all cases of Blood made him chuse the softer way,
 " and not hearken to severe Counsels how reason" ably soever urged. This only restrained him from " pursuing his Advantage in the first Scottish Expedi" tion, when humanly speaking, he might have re" duced that Nation to the most entire Obedience " that could have been wish'd. But no Man can " say he had then many who advis'd him to it, but " the contrary, by a wonderful indisposition all his " Council had to the War or any other Fatigue. He " was always a great lover of the Scottish Nation, ha" ving not only been born there but educated by that " People, and besieged by them always, having few
 " English about him till he was King, and the ma" jor number of his Servants being still of that Na" tion, who he thought could never fail him: And " among these no Man had such an ascendant over " him, by the humblest Insinuations as Duke Ham-" milton had.

" As he excelled in all other Virtues, so in Tem" perance he was so strict that he abhor'd all De" bauchery to that Degree, that, at a great Festival " Solemnity where he once was, when very many " of the Nobility of the English and Scots were en" tertain'd, being told by one who withdrew from " thence, what vast draughts of Wine they drank,
 " and *That there was one Earl who had drank most of
 " the rest down, and was not himself moved or alter'd,*
 " the King said, That he deserved to be hanged; and " that Earl coming shortly after into the Room where " his Majesty was, in some gaiety, to shew how " unhurt he was from that Battle, the King sent " one to bid him withdraw from his Majesty's Pre" sence; nor did he in some Days after appear be" fore him.

" So many miraculous Circumstances contributed " to his Ruin, that Men might well think that Hea" ven and Earth conspir'd it. Though he was from " the first declension of his Power so much betray'd
 " by his own Servants, that there were very few " who remained faithful to him; yet that treachery
 " proceeded not always from any treasonable pur" pose to do him any harm, but from particular and " personal Animosities against other Men. And,
 " afterwards the terror all Men were under of the " Parliament, and the guilt they were conscious of " themselves, made them watch all opportunities to " make themselves gracious to those who could do " them good; and so they became Spies upon their " Master,

1648. " Master, and from one piece of Knavery were harden'd and confirm'd to undertake another, till at last they had no hope of Preservation, but by the Destruction of their Master. And after all this, when a Man might reasonably believe that less than a universal Defection of three Nations could not have reduced a great King to so ugly a Fate; it is most certain, that, in that very hour when he was thus wickedly murder'd in the sight of the Sun, he had as great a share in the Hearts and Affections of his Subjects in general, was as much belov'd, esteem'd, and long'd for by the People in general of the three Nations, as any of his Predecessors had ever been. To conclude, He was the worthiest Gentleman, the best Master, the best Friend, the best Husband, the best Father, and the best Christian, that the Age in which he liv'd produced. And if he were not the greatest King, if he were without some Parts and Qualities which have made some Kings great and happy, no other Prince was ever unhappy who was possess'd of half his Virtues and Endowments, and so much without any kind of Vice.

Religion
a Refresh to the Saints.

It seems a Scandal to think of the Name of Religion in this Land within the Year wherein a most lawful, most religious, most condescending King was murder'd in state by his own Subjects before his own Palace. But to keep on the Method of separating Ecclesiastical Affairs from Civil, we must give some short Account of them; which Account will hardly be capable of any Order or Method; for indeed Fanaticism was in this one Year at the very height of Perfection or Confusion: it improv'd from the Beginning of the Civil Wars to the Effusion of the King's Blood; and then, as if it had attain'd its utmost Glory, it declin'd by sensible degrees, till being weaker and weaker, it did at last suffer the Restoration of Monarchy and an establish'd Church.

Assembly's Catechism

Apr. 14. some of the Assembly of Divines waiting at the Door of the House of Commons, were called in, and did acquaint the House, that they had perfected the Catechism, according to the former Order of the Houses, and had inserted the Places of Scripture in the Margin. Upon which the House order'd, that six hundred Copies of the said Catechism should be Printed for the Service of the Members of both Houses, and no more; and gave Thanks to the Assembly for their Pains and Endeavours in perfecting this Catechism.

Reformation of Oxford.

Such a Spirit of Loyalty and Uniformity was still left in the University of Oxford, that it was found necessary to send down the Chancellour, the Earl of Pembroke, to execute the Visitation, or rather the Inquisition, that had been lately made in that Place. He came thither Apr. 11. and by Power of Parliament and Arms put Mr. Reynolds into Possession of the Deanry of Christ-Church in the room of Dr. Fell ejected. Dr. Palmer into the Wardenship of All-Souls, in room of Dr. Sheldon. Mr. Harris into the Presidentship of Trinity College, in room of Dr. Potter. Dr. John Wilkinjon into the Presidentship of Magdalen College, in room of Dr. Oliver. Mr. John Wilkins into the Wardenship of Wadham, in room of Dr. Pitts. Mr. Cheynell into the Presidentship of St. John's, in room of Dr. Bayly. Mr. Greenwood into the Principality of Brazen-Nose College, in room of Mr. Radcliff. And several others were thrust into the Places of ejected Heads and Members. For which, on April 21. the Commons gave the Thanks of their House to the Right Honorable the Earl of Pembroke, Chancellour, for his great Care and Pains in settling and reforming the University of Oxford.

May 1. the House of Commons took into Consideration the Business of the Church, for settling the Government and Discipline thereof; and voted that all Ordinances referred to Committees concerning Church-Government and Discipline, be brought in and determin'd; and that the Ordinance against Blasphemy and Herefy be immediately brought in and debat'd

June 7. the House of Commons being informed that many of the Assembly were at the Door, they were called in, and presented to the House the Draught of a Letter to be sent from the Assembly here to the Assembly in Scotland, in order to strengthen the Amity and Union of both Kingdoms; and desired the Approbation of the House thereunto. The House debated on the Letter, and approv'd it.

June 21. the Ordinance for the more effectual settling the Presbyterian Government throughout the Kingdom, was read the second time by the Commons, and committed. After which, the Articles of Faith and Texts of Scripture to them, brought in by the Assembly, were order'd to be Printed, with this Title; Articles of Christian Religion approved and pass'd by both Houses of Parliament, after Advice had with the Assembly of Divines, by Authority of Parliament sitting at Westminster, June 27. 1648.

On July 24. the Commons spent much time upon a Paragraph of the large Catechism, which was committed, and the Assembly were desired to explain some Words therein.

At opening the Treaty of the Ile of Wight, the King kept a Fast on Saturday Septemb. 16. with his Household and Attendance, for a Blessing on that Treaty, and had a particular Prayer, drawn by his own special Direction and Dictates, to be used with the Form of Common Prayer. By the Papers now remaining which pass'd between his Majesty and the Divines which attended the Commissioners of the two Houses concerning Episcopacy and Church-Government, the Learning, Judgment, and Conscience of this Prince appeared great, beyond the Denial or Doubt of his Enemies. It was near this time that Mr. Alexander Henderson, principal Minister of the Word of God at Edinburgh, and chief Commissioner from the Kirk of Scotland to the Parliament and Synod of England, made a solemn Declaration upon his Death-bed, grounded on the Experience he had in conversing and disputing in Matters of Religion with the King; wherein he prays for the good King's being restored to his just Rights: and, among other things, says thus: " I do declare before God and the World, that since I had the Honour and Happiness to converse and confer with his Majesty, with all sorts of Freedom, especially in Matters of Religion, whether in relation to the Kirk or State, that I found him the most intelligent Man that ever I spoke with; as far beyond my Expression as Expectation. I profess, that I was oft-times astonish'd with the Solidity and Quickness of his Reasons and Replies, wonder'd how he, spending his time so much in Sports and Recreations, could have attained to so great Knowledge; and must confess ingenuously, that I was convinc'd in Conscience, and knew not how to give him any reasonable Satisfaction; yet the Sweetness of his Disposition is such, that whatsoever I said was well taken. I must say, that I never met with any Disputant of that mild and calm Temper; which convinc'd me the more, and made me think, that such Wisdom and Moderation could not be without an extraordinary measure of Divine Grace. I had heard much of his Carriage towards the Priests in Spain, and that King James told the Duke of Buckingham, upon his going thither, that he durst venture his Son Charles with all the Jesuits in the World, he knew him to be so well grounded in the Protestant Religion; but could never believe it before. I observed all his Actions, more particularly those of Devotion, which I must truly say are more than ordinary. — If I should speak of his Justice, Magnanimity, Charity, Sobriety, Chastity, Patience, Humility, and of all his both Christian and moral Virtues, I should run myself into a Panegyrick, and seem to flatter him to such as do not know; if the present Condition that I lie in did not exempt me from any Suspicion of worldly End, when I expect every hour to be call'd 1648. " led from all transitory Vanities to eternal Felicity, and the discharging of my Conscience before God and Man, did not oblige me to declare the Truth simply and nakedly, in satisfaction of that which I have done ignorantly, tho' not altogether innocently.

Repentance of Mr. Henderson.

And with this Character of King Charles, given by a Scot, a Presbyterian, an Opponent, we might conclude this fatal Year, unwilling to reveal the farther Iniquities of it. Though in Justice to the greater part of the Presbyterian Ministers, it must be acknowledg'd, that when they saw too late the sad Issues of Separation and Rebellion, they did then repent of them; and they did then labour to prevent the execrable Fact of putting the King to Death: They drew up and publish'd, A serious and faithful Representation of the Judgments of the Ministers of the Gospel within the Province of London, in a Letter to the General and Council of War, Jan. 18. 1648. delivered by some of the Subscribers. But alas (which was more, we hope, than they knew) it was all to no purpose.

On the Day of the Father's Murder, an Act was pass'd to disinheret the Son; ordaining, That no Person whatsoever do presume to proclaim, declare, publish, or any ways to promote Charles Stuart, Son of the said Charles late King of England, commonly called Prince of Wales, or any other Person, to be King or chief Magistrate of England or Ireland, or of any Dominions belonging to them, under pain of being adjudged a Traitor. Soon after a Committee was appointed to restrain the Preaching and Printing any thing against the Proceedings of the House, and of the High Court of Justice. They presently after voted, That the House of Peers in Parliament was useles and dangerous, and ought to be abolished, and that an Act should be brought in to that purpose. Then they resolv'd upon the Question, "That it hath been found by Experience, and this House doth declare, That the Office of a King in this Nation, and to have the Power thereof in any single Person, is unnecessary, burthensome, and dangerous to the Liberty, Safety, and Publick Interest of the People of this Nation, and therefore ought to be abolished; and that an Act be brought in to that purpose. Then the Form of Government was declared to be a Commonwealth, and the executive Power was put into the hands of a Council of State, consisting of thirty eight Persons, to act with full Powers for one Year: The Qualification of every Member of this Council of State, or Committee of Estates, was, to subscribe unto approving the King's Execution. After this, another High Court of Justice was erected for Trial of Delinquents; before whom the Marquis of Hamilton, under the Title of Earl of Cambridge, the Earl of Holland, the Lord Capel, the Lord Goring, and Sir John Owen, were condemn'd to Death for adhering to the King. After Sentence, their Reprieve, or their Execution, was put to the Vote of the Commons, who voted, by great Majority, that the Earl of Cambridge and the Ld. Capel should not be Reprieved, and Sir John Owen should be Reprieved: and on the like Question of Life or Death to the Earl of Holland and the Lord Goring, the first was sacrific'd, and this latter saved by one single Vote, which was that of the Speaker. Upon which, the Earl of Cambridge, the Earl of Holland, and the Lord Capel, were all Beheaded in the Palace-Yard at Westminster Mar. 9.

The Characters and Sufferings of these three Noblemen, are thus deliver'd by the Lord Clarendon. " A Scaffold was erected before Westminster-Hall, and all the Prisoners condemn'd were brought from St. James's (as well the two who were Reprieved, as the three who were to suffer) upon the 9th of March that was at the end of the Year 1648. a little more than a Month after the Murder of the King, to Sir Thomas Cotton's House, at the upper end of Westminster-Hall; where they were suffer'd to repose themselves about the space of an hour, and then were led successively through the Hall to the Scaffold, Duke Hamilton being first, who seem'd yet to have some hope of a Reprieve, and made some stay in the Hall, till the Earl of Denbigh came to him; and after a short Whisper, in which he found there was no hope, he ascended the Scaffold. He complain'd much of the Injustice that was done him; and that he was put to Death for obeying the Laws of his Country; which if he had not done, he must have been put to Death there. He acknowledged the Obligations he had to the King, and seem'd not sorry for the Gratitude he had expressed, how dear soever it cost him. His natural Darkeness and Reservation in his Discourse, made him to be thought a Wise-man; and his having been in Command under the King of Sweden, and his continual Discourses of Battles and Fortifications, made him be thought a great Soldier: and both these Mistakes were the Cause that made him be looked upon as a worse and a more dangerous Man than in truth he deserv'd to be.

The Earl of Holland was brought next, who, by his long Sickness, was so spent, that his Spirits serv'd not to entertain the People with long Discourse. He spoke of his Religion, as a matter unquestionable, by the Education he had had in the religious Family of which he was a Branch: which was thought a strange Discourse for a dying Man; who, tho' a Son, knew enough of the Iniquity of his Father's House; which should rather have been buried in silence, than by such an unseasonable Testimony have been revived in the Memory and Discourse of Men. He took more care to be thought a good Friend to Parliaments, than a good Servant to his Master, and was thought to say too little of his having failed so much in his Duty to him, which most good Men believed to be the Source from whence his present Calamity sprung. He was a very well-bred Man, and a fine Gentleman in good times; but too much desir'd to enjoy Ease and Plenty when the King could have neither; and did think Poverty the most insupportable Evil that could befall any Man in this World. He was then so weak, that he could not have liv'd long; and when his Head was cut off, very little Blood follow'd.

The Lord Capel was then called; who walked through Westminster-Hall, saluting such of his Friends and Acquaintance as he saw there, with a very serene Countenance, accompanied with his Friend Dr. Morley, who had been with him from the time of his Sentence; but at the Foot of the Scaffold the Soldiers stopping the Doctor, his Lordship took his Leave of him, and embracing him thank'd him, and said he should go no further, having some Apprehension that he might receive some Affront by that rude People after his Death, the Chaplains who attended the two other Lords being Men of the Time, and the Doctor being well known to be most contrary.

As soon as his Lordship had ascended the Scaffold, he look'd very vigorously about, and ask'd, Whether the other Lords had spoken to the People with their Hats on? And being told that they were bare, he gave his Hat to his Servant, and then with a clear and strong Voice he said, That he was brought thither to die for doing that which he could not repent of: That he had been born and bred under the Government of a King whom he was bound in Conscience to obey; under Laws, to which he had been always obedient; and in the Bosom of a Church, which he thought the best in the World: That he had never violated his Faith to either of those, and was now condemn'd to die against all the Laws of the Land; to which Sentence he did submit. He enlarg'd himself in commending the great Virtue and Piety of the King, whom they had put

After this an Act was made, declaring and constituting the People of England to be a Commonwealth and Free-state; and an Oath was enjoin'd, called an Engagement to be faithful to the Commonwealth without King or House of Lords.

Lieutenant-General Cromwel was now appointed to be Commander in chief of all the Forces in Ireland, and the Lord Fairfax was continued General of all the Forces in England; Whitlock and Lisle were made Commissioners of the new Republican Broad-Seal.
 An Act was made to remove all malignant and disaffected Magistrates, and to make them incapable of bearing any Office in the Common-wealth.

 liers, one of them saying, Thus dies one of the King's Judges. Murmurs and Complaints were so very high that the Powers in being made an Act May 14. to dedeclare it Treason to affirm the present Government to June 1. Upon a Report of fit and trusty Persons to be Judges in Westminster-Hall, it was voted by the Commons, that Serjeant Nicholas and Mr. Ask be Judges of the Upper-Bench, that Serjeant Puleston and Peter Warburton, Esq; be Judges of the Common-Pleas, that Serjeant Thorp and Mr. Rigby be Barons of the Exchequer. To make a firm Union between the three Principles of Power, the Parliament, the Army and the City of London, it was contrived that the Speaker with the House of Commons, the General with the chief Officers, and the Council of State, should after hearing two Sermons, be feasted at Grocer's-Hall without drinking of Healths, by the Lord Mayor, Aldermen and Common-Council on June 7.

 upon the City for their great Affection. And the City presented to the Lord General a large Basin and Ewer of beaten Gold, and to Lieutenant General Cromwel Plate to the value of 300 l. and 200 pieces in Gold.

By this and other Arts of Policy and Popularity, Cromwel began to make the first Figure in the Nation, Cromwel
 having more and more obliged the House by reduascend:
 cing of the Levellers, by accepting the difficult Post of Ireland, and by suppressing the Mutinies of the Soldiers who refused to go upon that Service, so that June 22. he had a pompous Commission in Latin and English to command all Forces to be sent into Ireland, and to have all the Civil and Military Power of that Kingdom for three Years; and July 10.
 he went out of Town with a very noble Equipage and Life-guard; and on the morrow, being a Day of publick Humiliation, he himself and some of his chief Officers fell upon the work of the Day, and prayed and expounded the Scriptures.

 who had kept possession of Dublin till it was in a manner block'd up by the Marquis of Ormond, sallied out and fell upon Ormond's Army with that advantage that he put them to an entire Rout, and the Marquis himself very narrowly escaped. So that Cromwel landed and enter'd Dublin without any opposition, with a mighty concourse of People, to whom he made a long Speech with his Hat in his Hand, and they all cryed out that they would live and die with him. He immediately published a Proclamation for Thanksgiving for the late Defeat given to the Rebels, and commanded the Magistrates to execute the Laws against Swearing and Drunkenness, the Sins that he would have to be thought peculiar to his Enemies. Soon after with his Army of fifteen thousand Horse and Foot, he marched toward Tredagh, the strongest Garison of the Enemy, and after Alarms in Scotland. In January the Parliament alarm'd with the Preparations for the King in Scotland, resolv'd to send an Army thither to divert the War from England, and offer'd the Command to General Fairfax, but he declined the Service, and was the more suspected because his Lady was a zealous Presbyterian, and a Friend to the Kirk. Upon this juncture the Parliament and Council of State found it necessary to employ Crommel in this other Expedition, and gave him the Honour of reducing Scotland as well as Ireland. The Ambition of doing such double Service inflamed Crommel into a quicker dispatch; so that before the end of March he had made the Lord Inche-quin desert his remains of an Army, and had forced the Marquis of Ormond to fly into France, and had little to do but to sail home in triumph; yet he had one sore Mortification in the death of his Son-in-Law Ireton, who died at the Siege of Limerick in a pestilential Feaver; and (says Sir Philip Warwick) being a Man of Blood (for he had deeply dy'd himself in the King's) expired with that Word in his Mouth (for in his raving as I was told by one that was then there, he cried out) I will have more Blood, Blood, Blood.

Condition of King Charles II. Prince Charles at the Death of his Father justly took his Titles, and alas nothing but his Titles, on him; yet he kept up a sort of Court at the Hague, and received Commissioners from Scotland, who were sent from the Kirk not to submit to him as their King, but to treat with him as an Enemy coming into Alliance with them. The Swedish Ambassador address'd him as a crown'd Head, and he and the Danish Minister invited the States to join with them in assisting his Britannick Majesty to regain his Birth-right.
 But the States were for no rupture with their young Sister the Common-wealth of England. The distressed King had no prospect but toward Scotland; and yet the Commissioners were so imposing in their Terms, that he was forced to Remonstrate against them, and to give Reasons why he could not comply with their high Demands. However with the little Supplies he had from a few of his faithful Subjects, and from some few generous Princes, he made some Preparations for an Army in Scotland, and sent Mont-roses before with some Men and Money, intending to follow in his Royal Person; but the States refused him necessary shipping, and Montroses was so hated and persecuted by the Kirk, that his Majesty thought fit to decline the Expedition; and instead of going to Scotland he was content to take some Refuge in the Isle of Jersey, where he was invited and loyally received by the Governor George Carteret. In his way thither he had been nobly entertained by the Archduke and the Magistrates at Antwerp, and thence to the Court of France, where the Queen his Mother sent to him Jermyn and Piercy, to let him know, It was the Advice of the Council of France and Hers, that he agree with the Scots upon any terms. Which Advice indeed was false and fatal; for the longer the King had reserv'd himself, the more Honour and Interest it would have been to him. The Hearts of the People of England seem'd to be kept from him by nothing but the Sword. At Preston in Lancashire he was proclaimed Charles the second, King of England, &c. at the Market-Cross, without the offer of any opposition. And the Levellers, who made up formidable Bodies in several Counties, though their demands for taking away Tithes, and Englishing Proceedings at Law, &c. were extravagant, yet their last Article was always this, That Prince Charles should be brought in.

The King came into Jersey with a Retinue of not above three hundred, and when he left the Court of France had brought away no more than three hundred Piltoles to defray the Expences of his Journey and Voyage. The truth is, Cardinal Mazarine seems alway to have thought, that the extirpation of Monarchy in England would raise the Grandeur of it in France; and therefore he always obstructed and retarded the King's Restauration; and when his Royal Brother the Duke of York was at this time solliciting and humbly beseeching the King, Queen and Cardinal, to have compassion upon the King his Brother, and to give him all Assistance possible for the regaining of his Estate and Kingdom, the Cardinal coldly answer'd, that they might be hereafter in a capacity to serve him, but it could not now be.

As soon as it was known in Scotland that the King was arrived at Jersey, Mr. Windram Layds of Lib-erton was dispatch'd away with a Messige to him; who being admitted to the King's Presence, presented these Desires and Offers of the States of Scotland, 1. "That he would sign the Covenant, and pass " an Act for all Persons to take it. 2. That he " would pass the Acts of Parliament in Scotland,
 " which were ratified by their two last Sessions.
 " 3. That he would withdraw his Commission to " Montroses. 4. That he would put away all Pa" pists from about him. 5. That he would appoint
 " some place in Holland to treat with Commissioners " from the Estates of Scotland. And 6thly. That " he would give a speedy Answer. Some of the King's Council were for rejecting these Propositions as hard and dishonourable; others were for accepting of them as in a case of Necessity; of this latter Opinion was the Queen Mother, who by her Letters urged a compliance to the present exigency of Affairs; and even Montroses advis'd the King to yield to their Desires, and to make his perpetual Banishment one Condition of Agreement. But the King at present had too great a sense of Honour, however his Necessities did afterward extort a more unreasonable Submission. In the mean time, the King sent his Ambassadors to the Emperor, the Duke of Muscovy, the States of Venice, the Grand Signior, and the King of Spain, who all returned

In their following Debates for a sufficient maintenance of Ministers, it was proposed to be by an Assessment of twelve pence in the Pound upon Lands, and some allowance out of Deans and Chapters Lands and Impropriations; but they never formed their Project into an Act.

April 20. it was enacted to abolish and take away the Name and Office of Dean, Subdean, Dean and Chapter, Archdeacon, Chancellor, Chantor, Treasurer, Canon, Prebend, Choirister, and all other Titles and Offices belonging to any College or Collegiate Church or Chapel, excepting the Universities, the Deanary of Christ Church in Oxford, and the Foundations of Westminster, Winchester and Eaton, and to settle the Lands and Hereditaments of them in the hands of Trustees called Contractors, to sell and dispose of them for the Benefit of the Publick. To make this Alienation more plausible, they enacted June 8. that out of the Tythes Impropriate belonging to the late Estates of Archbishops, Bishops, Deans and Chapters, there should be Augmentations made to the Incumbents of small Livings, so as to make up the Maintenance of every Minister to be one hundred Pounds a Year.

For another specious shew of Zeal, they enacted in July following, that there should be a Corporation for the promoting and propagating the Gospel of Jesus Christ in New England, to be called by the name of The President and Society for the propagation of the Gospel in New-England; and for their stock of Charity, a Collection should be made in all the Parish Churches of England, and they should be enabled to receive or purchase any Estate to the value of two thousand Pounds per Ann.

But the State of Religion was to be new modell'd by the Army rather than by any other Power; and therefore in August the General and his Council of Officers petition'd the House, that all Penal Statutes, formerly made, and late Ordinances, whereby many conscientious People were molested, and the propagation of the Gospel hinder'd might be removed; to which the House were bound to assent, and to order the bringing the Matter of the Petition into an Act for ease of tender Consciences; which was but a stratagem of the Independents to overthrow the Presbyterian Government and Discipline. There was little more of Religion in Acts or Votes till March 12. when it was resolved, that a late Book asserting the Observation of the Jewish Sabbath, and condemning the observation of the Lord's-Day as the Christian Sabbath, was Erroneous, Scandalous and Profane, contrary to the practice of the Apostles and all the Christian Churches, and should be therefore burnt, and the Author and Printer punished. And it was indeed high time to think of repressing Heresies and Blasphemies, which now swelled up against Heaven to a most prodigious height. One Salmon a Preacher in Coventry taught his People to Swear and Curse and commit Whoredom upon this profest Principle, That it was God which did swear in them; and that it was their Liberty to keep Company with Women to satisfy their natural Appetites. And one Wyke set up for breathing the Spirit of God into Men, by killing them three times.

Some few Examples were made of punishing those blasphemous Wretches; among others, one Boutbomey a Quarter-Master was tried by a Council of War for Blasphemy, and sentenc'd to have his Tongue bored through with a hot Iron, his Sword broke over his Head, and to be cashier'd the Army. These Spiritual Wickednesses gave the greater hopes to the Papists, who were never more numerous and busie; and Letters from Rome received Feb. 1. advised, that they had there an Agent from England, and that the English Priests there were very confident, that within few Years their Religion would be established in England. Most certainly the Priests and Jesuits well knew that a confusion in Church and State would be their Seed-time and Harvest; for which reason they help'd to destroy Abp. Laud and the King himself. What was deliver'd upon knowledge by Dr. Peter du Moulin since the Restauration, and promised to be made good by a publick Charge and Challenge, deserves to be here inserted. This certain Intelligence shall be justified whensoever Authority will require it, that the Year before the King's Death, a select number of English Jesuits were sent from their whole Party in England, first to Paris to consult with the Faculty of Sorbon, then altogether Jesuited, to whom they put this Question in writing, "That seeing the State of England was in a likely posture to change Government, whether it was lawful for the Catholicks to work that Change for the advancing and securing of the Catholick Cause in England, by making the King away, whom there was no hope to reclaim from his Heresy?" This was answer'd Affirmatively. After which, the same Persons went to Rome, where the same Question being propounded and debated, it was concluded by the Pope and his Counsel, that it was both Lawful and Expedient for the Catholicks to promote that alteration of State. What followed that Consultation and Sentence all the World knoweth; and how the Jesuites went to work God knoweth, and Time the bringer forth of Truth will let us know.

Cromwel had now a great mind to leave Ireland, but wanted a more publick Call from it. He had received many private Intimations of the Parliament's pleasure for his coming over and Copies of their Votes; but he desired the Honour of a more solemn Invitation; and therefore in a Letter dated from Carrick Apr. 2. he begg'd a more clear Expression of their Command and Pleasure. Professing, as before the Lord, that I am most ready to obey your Commands herein with all alacrity; rejoicing only to be about that Work which I am called to, by those whom God hath set over me, which I acknowledge to be you, and swearing only in obeying you to disobey you. When he had farther enlarged his Conquests, and left his Army under true Discipline, he came over into England, and at the end of May was met on Howslow-Heath by the prime Members of Parliament and Officers of the Army; at Hide-Park he was saluted with the great Guns, and with a Volly of Shot from Colonel Barkstead's Regiment, and so conducted like a King to Whitehal, where he next Day received the Visits and Complements of all the People in Authority, who are said to congratulate his safe Artival, after so many Dangers both by Sea and Land, wherein God had preserved him; and the wonderful Successes which the great God had given to him.

The King was at Breda in a new Treaty with the Scot's Commissioners, where the Prince of Orange was to assist in the Councils and in the Expedition. But the Kirk, who were the treating Party, kept up a Bigotry for Covenant and Discipline, and retarded all the measures that might have been otherwise easily concerted. Montross had his Majesty's Commission to prepare a little Army for him; but because he would not submit to the Sentences of the Kirk, they pursued him as a common Enemy; and getting him into their merciless Hands, they brought him before the Parliament, and accused him of nothing but Covenant breaking; he made a stout Defence, and told them, his Cause was good; he had not only a Commission but particular Orders for what he did from his Majesty, to whom he was engaged to be a Loyal Subject, and they themselves profest to be so. That if they would take away his Life for doing his Duty, the World knew he did not regard it. It was a Debt that must once be paid; and now in good season, when he should rejoice to go the same way his Royal Master had lately done. And for his present Majesty, it would be another Joy of his Heart, not only to do but to suffer for him. But at the instigation gation of the Assembly Men, the Parliament gave Sentence beyond all Precedent, that he should be hanged upon a Gibbet of six Ells and a half high, and when dead his Head to be sever'd from his Body, and set upon the Tolbooth at Edinburgh; his Right-hand to be cut off and sent to Glasgow, his left to Aberdeen, his Right-foot to St. Johnston, and his left to Durdee: All which Barbarities he suffered with an unmoved Meekness and Courage. His Character is thus given by the Lord Clarendon. " Thus died the gallant Marquis of Montrose, after he had given as great a Testimony of Loyalty and Courage as a Subject can do, and performed as wonderful Actions in several Battles, upon as great inequality of Numbers, and as great disadvantages in respect of Arms, and other preparations for War, as have been performed in this Age. He was a Gentleman of a very ancient Extraction, many of whose Ancestors had exercised the highest Charges under the King in that Kingdom, and had been allied to the Crown it self. He was of very good Parts, which were improv'd by a good Education: he had always a great emulation, or rather a great contempt of the Marquis of Argyle (as he was too apt to contemn those he did not love) who wanted nothing but Honesty and Courage to be a very extraordinary Man, having all other good Talents in a very great degree. Montros was in his Nature fearless of Danger, and never declined any Enterprize for the difficulty of going through with it; but exceedingly affected those which seem'd desperate to other Men, and did believe somewhat to be in himself above other Men, which made him live more easily towards those who were, or were willing to be inferior to him (towards whom he exercised wonderful Civility and Generosity) than with his superiors or equals. He was naturally jealous, and suspected those who did not concur with him in the way, not to mean so well as he. He was not without Vanity, but his Virtues were much superior, and he well deserved to have his Memory preserved and celebrated amongst the most illustrious Persons of the Age in which he lived.

Some others were executed only for joining with Montros: These Indignities and Cruelties might have justly provoked the King to break off the Treaty and desert a People given up to Bigotry and Blood; yet such were his Majesty's Necessities, and so great the Importunities of his Relations and Friends to comply at any rate, that he was forced to connive at all this Insolence, and to write to Edinburgh in no harder Words than these, That he was very sorry at a Report he heard, that there was some Blood of his good Subjects shed of late; but not knowing how it is, he desires to understand the Business more fully. To which the Parliament took a liberty to answer, that they hoped for a happy Agreement with his Majesty, and desired him not to be discouraged at some seeming Obstacles, such as the Death of Montros and some few others, they doing nothing therein but to accomplish his Interest. And his Majesty was bound to seem as if he did believe 'em, tho' they were so conscious of their own guilt as to question the King's forgiveness of it; so that after long Negotiations, in the Month of June they put it to the Vote in Parliament, Whether they should make any more Addresses to the King? But with some difficulty it was carried, " That they should desire the King's speedy coming thither, and would promise to endeavour to set him on his Throne; and would pass by many things contrary to his Agreement in the case of Montros, provided he would now come in and comply with them. And he did so comply with their Confidence and honour.

A Junctio of the Council of State in England having Intelligence of these dangers, were advised by Cromwel not to wait the coming of them, nor to trust to any after-game, but rather to prevent their Invasion of England by carrying the War directly into Scotland. Some Men of scruple did object, That to begin a War upon Scotland would be contrary to the Covenant; but it was answer'd, that the Scots had already broken the Covenant, and that therefore it was not now binding on the one side after it had been dissolved on the other. So it was resolv'd, That having a formed Army, well provided and experienced, they would march it forthwith into Scotland, to prevent the Scots marching into England, and the Miseries which might thence ensue. The Lord General Fairfax was taught by the Presbyterian Ministers, and his own Lady a great Patroness of them (and perhaps by Cromwel himself) to object, that he was unsatisfied, whether there was a just ground for the Parliament of England to send their Army to invade Scotland: But in case the Scots should first enter England, he was then ready to oppose and engage them in defence of his own Country. The Council of State were so far troubled about these scruples in the General, that they appointed a Committee to give him satisfaction, Cromwel, Whitlock, Lambert, Harrison and Saint John; and the Debates of this Conference are published by one of the Committee, the General concluding thus, What would you have me do? As far as my Conscience will give way, I am willing to join with you still in the Service of the Parliament; but where the Conscience is not satisfied, none of you, I am sure, will engage in any Service, and that is my condition in this, and therefore I must desire to be excused. So the General laid down his Commission; and by good contrivance an Act was immediately passed, for constituting and appointing Oliver Cromwel, Esq; to be Captain-General in chief of all the Forces raised and to be raised by Authority of Parliament within the Commonwealth of England; and on June 29. this new General march'd his Army Northward, to the great alarm of the Scots, who in vain alledg'd, that by the Covenant and Articles of Pacification, they ought not to be invaded without three Months warning.

The King landed in Scotland June 16. after a demand from the Council, That he would sign the Covenant before he set his Foot on Shore. He staid many Days at Dundee, attended with one Committee from the Parliament and another from the Kirk, who were pressing his Majesty to sign several Propositions, and before his doing so would not agree for his coming to Edinburgh in order to his Coronation. His Majesty submitted to all their Demands, and was proclaim'd King but not yet crown'd. Toward the end of July Cromwel with his Army enter'd Scotland, and without opposition advanced to Haddington within 12 Miles of Edinburgh, not above six Miles from the Scot's Army now increased to above thirty thousand. Cromwel resolutely march'd on, and drew up his whole Army before Edinburgh, and beat the Enemy from King Arthur's Hill, but could not force them out of their Trenches, till by fall of Rains and want of Victuals, he was forced to retreat to Musleborough, and had only some Skirmishes that were commonly to the disadvantage of the Scots. When the Army was refresh'd, Cromwel march'd back to the view of Edinburgh, and pitch'd his Tents on Pencland Hills, being well furnish'd with Provisions by the Parliament's Ships that attended his motion. In the mean time, upon safe Conduct, several of the Scots Officers came to a Conference with the English, and perfidiously said, that they were deluded by the Malignants, and that the King refused to sign the disowning of his Father's Actions, and to adhere to the Covenant, and repent for the Blood shed by his Father himself, and that they had thoughts of relinquishing him. And indeed the poor King had as much difficulty to deal with his Lieutenant-General, and his other Officers, as he had with the powerful English Army.

The Scots sending out a Party to take in Musleborough, Cromwel to prevent it decamp'd from the West side of Edinburgh on Saturday August 31. and came next Day to Dunbar, closely followed by the Scot's Army; the fight began early on Tuesday Morning

The Scots importune the King to come among 'em.

Resolutions in England to invade Scotland.

1650.
2 Car. II.

Cromwel made General.

Cromwel advanced.

Comes near Edinburgh.

Dunbar Fight.

1652. ning Sept. 3. wherein the divided Scots soon threw down their Arms and ran away, looting in the Battle and Pursuit above four thousand slain, and ten thousand taken Prisoners. Cromwel himself drew up a Narrative of this great Victory, and sent it by a Courier to the Council of State, who order'd it to be read in all the Churches of London with solemn Thanksgiving.

The Lord Clarendon says, " Their Horse did not " sustain one Charge, but fled and were pursued " with a great Execution. The Foot depended " much upon their Ministers, who preached and " prayed, and assured them of the Victory, till the " English were upon them, and some of the Preachers
 " were knock'd in the Head whilst they were pro" mising the Victory. — Never Victory was " attended with less Lamentations; for as Cromwel " had great Argument of Triumph in the total de" feat and destruction of the only Army that was in " Scotland, which defeat had put a great part of that " Kingdom, and the chief City of it under his Obe" dience; so the King, who was then at St. Johnstons, " was glad of it, as the greatest Happiness that " could befall him, in the loss of so strong a Body
 " of his Enemies; who, if they should have prevailed,
 " his Majesty did believe that they would have shut
 " him up in Prison the next Day.

The English Army the same Day possess'd themselves of Edinburgh and Leith, the King, whom the Scots would not suffer to be in the Battle, retiring to St. Johnstons, and the Lieutenant-General Leven endeavouring to rally his Forces about Sterling, the Scots Presbyters preaching it up, that their late Overtrom was owing to their too much complying with the King, whose ill treatment made him incline to escape privately from St. Johnstons, for which purpose he had sent to Orkney for shipping; and the Earl of Cleveland and many of his best Friends for refusing the Covenant were forc'd to run away from him. And the King himself, with the Duke of Buckingham and some few Servants, was in the way of Escape, but being discovered was brought back again, and to atone for many Indignities was crowned at Schone. But soon after the Commissioners of the Kirk presented a Remonstrance to him, pressing him to humble himself, and to repent of his own and his Father's Sins, that he might be thereby able to quit the Nation of their Enemies now in the Bowels of the Kingdom; and set forth an Exhortation to their Brethren not to communicate with any who deserted the Kirk. And the King coming to Aberdeen about the end of February to hasten his Levies, the Presbytery there openly oppos'd his Proceedings, and would not suffer him to receive the Marquis of Hamley, nor to erect the Office of a Lord Chancellor. Under which state of Persecution we leave his Majesty for this Year.

Only we may observe, that the hopeless condition of the King did incline the Court of Spain to favour the English Parliament; and therefore a Message was delivered to the King's Ambassadors to desire them to be gone; and when they pressed for a longer stay, they had severe Orders to depart immediately.
 Sir Edward Hile went away to Antwerp in Flanders, and obtained so good recommendations to the Magistrates of that City, that he kept up the Name of an Ambassador, and enjoyed the Privilege of his Chapel, and all the English, who were numerous then in that City, repaired thither with all freedom for their Devotion and the Exercise of their Religion, which Liberty had never been before granted to any Man there; and which the English and Irish Priests, and the Roman Catholics of these Nations exceedingly mumm'd at, and used all the Endeavours they could to have taken away, tho' in vain. The other Ambassador, the Lord Cottington, who relapsed to Popery, petition'd and obtained leave to abide in Spain as a private Person, and so retired to Valladolid, where he died within one Year after in the 77th Year of his Age. His Brother Ambassador has left him this Character.

" He was a very wise Man by the great and long Experience he had in business of all kinds, and by his natural Temper, which was not liable to any transport of Anger or any other Passion; but could bear Contradiction, and even Reproach, without being moved or put out of his way: For he was very steady in pursuing what he propos'd to himself, and had a Courage not to be frighted with any opposition. It is true he was illiterate as to the Grammer of any Language, or the principles of any Science, but by his perfectly understanding the Spanish (which he spoke as a Spaniard) the French and Italian Languages, and having read very much in all, he could not be said to be ignorant in any part of Learning, Divinity only excepted. He had a very fine and extraordinary understanding in the Nature of Beasts and Birds, and above all in all kind of Plantations and Arts of Husbandry. He was born a Gentleman both both by Father and Mother, his Father having a pretty entire Seat near Bruton in Somersetshire, worth about two hundred Pounds a Year, which had descended from Father to Son for many hundred Years, and is still in the possession of his Elder Brother's Children, the Family having been always Roman Catholicks. His Mother was a Stafford, nearly allied to Sir Edward Stafford, who was Vice-Chamberlain to Queen Elizabeth, and had been Ambassadour in France; by whom this Gentleman was brought up, and was Gentleman of his Horse, and left one of his Executors of his Will, and by him recommended to Sir Robert Cecil then Principal Secretary of State, who prefer'd him to Sir Charles Cornwallis when he went Ambasador into Spain, in the beginning of the Reign of King James, where he remained for the space of eleven or twelve Years in the Condition of Secretary or Agent, without ever returning into England in all that time. He rais'd by his own Virtue and Industry a very fair Estate, of which, tho' the Revenue did not exceed above four thousand Pounds by the Year, yet he had four very good Houses and three Parks, the Value whereof was not reckon'd into that Computation. He liv'd very nobly, well serv'd and attended in his House; had a better Stable of Horses, better Provision for Sports (especially of Hawks, in which he took great Delight) than most of his Quality, and lived always with great Splendor; for tho' he lov'd Money very well, and did not warily enough consider the Circumstances of getting it, he spent it well always but in giving, which he did not affect. He was of an excellent Humour and very easie to live with; and under a grave Countenance cover'd the most of Mirth, and caus'd more, than any Man of the most pleasant Disposition. He never us'd any Body ill, but us'd many very well for whom he had no regard: His greatest fault was that he could dissemble, and make them believe that he loved them very well, when he cared not for them. He had not very tender Affections, nor Bowels apt to yearn at all Objects which deserved Compassion. He was heartily weary of the World, and no Man was more willing to die; which is an Argument that he had peace of Conscience. He left behind him a greater esteem of his Parts than love to his Person.

The Parliament (as a House of Commons must he now called) were not wanting in the Politicks of securing the City of London to a fast Friendship with them. And for a Token of Love they presented New-Park, a fair Lot of the Crown-Lands to the City and Chamber of London for ever in their Term of Conveyance, with several Houses and Appertenances, and one thousand Pounds for distribution to the Poor.
 For which the Lord Mayor, Aldermen and Common-Council were taught to come to the Parliament Doors April 2. with their Address'es of Thanks, Declaring and Resolving (through God's assistance) with the hazard of their Lives and Estates, to stand and fall with the Parliament

1650. liament against all wicked Practices, and opposite preten- 2 Car. II. ded Powers whatsoever. To which the Speaker was instructed to answer, That the House took notice of this their good Resolution, and of the seasonableness of it; and the House kindly accepted it, and gave them their Thanks for it. Yet Loyalty and Honesty remained in many of the chief Citizens, who in this same Month presented a Petition to the Parliament, expo-sulating with them about the change of Rights, Liberties and Religion; for which reason it was rejected and censur'd, That the scope thereof was to bring Scandal and Reproach upon the just and necessary Laws and Proceedings of the Parliament, and to weaken the present Government, to give thereby advantage to the common Enemy, and to raise new Tumults and Troubles in the Nation.

Ordinances of Parliament against profaneness.
To gain the Reputation of Godliness and precise Justice, the Parliament passed an Act May 10. against Incest, Adultery and Fornication; making the two first to be Felony without benefit of the Clergy, and the latter to be punished with Imprisonment for the first Offence, and Death for the second. This Bill was smartly oppos'd by Mr. Henry Martin, who argued, That the severity of the Punishment would cause the Sins to be the more frequently committed, because People would learn to be the more sly and cautious in the commission of them, and the Parties so obliged to mutual Secrecy, that a Conviction would be impracticable. They passed another Act June 28. against Swearing and Curfing, with a Penalty of 20 s. on a Lord, 20 s. on a Baronet or Knight, 10 s. on an Esquire, 6 s. 8 d. on a Gentleman, and 3 s. 4 d. on every other Person for the first Offence, and for the second the penalty doubled.

Project for altering the laws.

The matter that occasioned most Debates in the House, was the Project of altering the Forms of Law, and making all Writs and Proceedings to run only in the English Tongue. This was the Subject of several Petitions from the Soldiers and the Country Farmers, who indeed had reason to think themselves impos'd upon by Languages which they did not understand. Hence it was at last enacted Nov. 22.
that all Report Books of the Resolutions of Judges, and other Books of the Law of England, shall be translated into the English Tongue, and all Writs, Process and Returns thereof, Pleadings, Rules, Orders, Indictments, Inquisitions, Certificates, Patents, and all Acts, Deeds and Proceedings whatsoever, shall be only in the English Tongue, in the ordinary usual Hand, and not in Court-Hand.

New Council of State.

The Council of State, who had the Executive Power, under direction of the Parliament and Army, was on Feb. 11. voted to be alter'd for the Year ensuing, twenty one of the old Members to continue, and twenty new Members to be chosen. The old Members continued in were Cromwel, Bradshaw, Rolles, Saint John, Skippon, &c. the new Members taken in were Major-General Harrison, Lieutenant-General Fleetwood, Sir Thomas Widdrington, Prideaux, Strickland, &c.

Ascham killed at Madrid.

The King had sent the Lord Cottington and Sir Edward Hyde as his Ambassadors into Spain, where they found sometimes a kind and sometimes a cold Reception. The Parliament sent likewise their Agent or Envoy Mr. Ascham a Scholar, who had been concerned in drawing up the King's Trial, and had written a Book to determine in what time, and after how many Years, the Allegiance which is due from Subjects to their Sovereign comes to be determined after a Conquest, and that from that time it ought to be paid to those who had subdued them.
This new Agent was no sooner come to Madrid, but the next Morning some English Officers and Soldiers who had served in the Spanish Armies, went to his Lodgings, and without asking any Questions walk'd directly up the Stairs into his Chamber, drew their Swords, and besides their Intentions in disorder killed the Friar as well as the Agent, and so return'd to their Companions with their Swords naked and bloody, and some foolish Expressions of Triumph, as if they had performed a very gallant and justifi- 1650.

able Service. The King's two Ambassadors abhor'd 2 Car. II. this Action, but had the misfortune to have one of their own Servants Henry Progers in it. In great trouble of Mind they immediately writ a Letter to the prime Minister Don Lewis de Haro, to express the sense they had of this unfortunate rash Action, of which, they hoped, he did believe, if they had had any Notice or Suspicion, they would have prevented it. Don Lewis return'd them at that time a dry and a severe Answer. But when some Weeks were pass'd, the Ambassadors went to confer with Don Lewis upon some other Occurrence, with no purpose of mentioning any thing of that matter: but Don Lewis then spoke of it in a manner they did not expect; one Expression was, To largo invidia de estos Cavaleros, &c.
I envy those Gentlemen for having done so noble an Action, how Penal soever it may prove to them, to revenge the Blood of their King: Whereas he said, The King his Master wanted such Resolute Subjects; otherwise he would never have lost a Kingdom, as he had done Portugal. for want of one brave Man, who by taking away the Life of the Usurper, might at any time, during the first two Years, have put an end to that Rebellion. The Persons concerned in this bloody Fact might have disperfed themselves and been secure, but in confusion they went into a little Chapel for Sanctuary, from whence in a Day or two they were taken by a principal Officer after Examination, and sent to the Prison, and were condemn'd to die, but then were delivered back into the same Chapel, and were kept there till they had all opportunity to make their escape; only one was apprehended and suffered Death. Mr. Progers had separated from the rest upon the first commission of the Fact, and had got safely into France.

In matters of Religion, the Parliament made an State of additional Act for Trustees to pay out of the Rents Religion. of Appropriations formerly belonging to Bishops, Deans and Chapters, all such Augmentations and Allowances as should be made and settled by Parliament, for the Maintenance of preaching Ministers, the Advancement of Learning, and other pious Uses.
 For which there had been many other Acts and Orders, and an Office establish'd for the execution of them, and yet with little effect but that of Suits and Delays. Another holy Act was made for the due observation and sanctification of the Lord's-Day, and the Days of publick Humiliation and Thankf-giving; wherein the Penalties for profaning the Parliamentary Fasts and Thanksgivings were equal with those for the profanation of the Lord's-Day, and made so by those Men who had abrogated the Church Festivals and Fasts, on a pretence that those Days assum'd a sanctity due only to the Sabbath.

Blasphemies, Heresies, Enthusiasts and Witch-crafts were in a full Tide. At Boston in Lincolnshire Blaspheone Man and two Women were condemn'd; of whom mies and the Man confess, that he had a Familiar suck'd him Witch-at some Paps which he then shew'd; that he had crafts.
 signed a Writing to the Devil to deny God and Jesus Christ; and that the Familiar drew Blood from those Paps, and appeared to him in the shape of a white Chicken; that he signed the Devils Covenant with a piece of a Stick, with the same mark he now made at the bottom of his Examination; and both the Women confess'd the like. Four Men out of Som- ersetshire pretending to have an immediate Call from God to go and preach the Gospel in Gali- lee, sold their Estates and came to London in order to embark for their own Mission. The Heresies and Blasphemies of the time are sum'd up in the Act made to restrain them. "Every Person that shall presume avowedly in Words to " profess, or by writing proceed to affirm and " maintain Him or Her, or any meer Creature " to be God, or to be Infinite or Almighty, or in " Honour, Excellency, Majesty and Power, to be " equal and the same with the true God; or that " the true God or the eternal Majesty dwells in " the Creature, and no where else; or shall deny
 the

1650. " the Holiness and Righteousness of God; or pro" fess that Unrighteousness in Persons, or Acts of " Uncleanness, profane Swearing, Drunkenness, " and the like Filthiness, are not forbidden in the " Word of God; or that these Acts are approved of " God, or that shall profess that these Acts of de" nyng and blaspheming of God, or the Acts of " Cursing God, or of Swearing profanely or falsely
 " by the Name of God; or the Acts of Lying,
 " Stealing, Cozening, Murder, Adultery, Incest,
 " Fornication, Uncleanness, Sodomy, Drunkenness,
 " and lascivious Speaking, are not of themselves
 " wicked, sinful, impious or detestable in any Per" son, or to be done and practised by any Person;
 " or shall profess that the Acts of Adultery, Drun" keness, Swearing, are in their Natures as holy " and righteous as the Duties of Prayer, Preaching, " Giving of Thanks to God; or shall profess that " whatsoever is acted by them is without Sin; or " that such Acts are acted by the true God; that " Heaven and all Happiness consists in acting these " things, which are Sin and Wickedness; or that " such Men and Women are most perfect, or like " to God, which do commit the greatest Sins with" out Remorse or Sense; or that there is no such " thing really as Unrighteousness, Unholiness, or " Sin; or that there is neither Heaven nor Hell, " neither Salvation nor Damnation, and that these " are one and the same thing. All and every Per" son or Persons so avowedly professing — and " thereof convicted, shall be committed to Prison " for six Months — And if after, they maintain " or publish any of the said Atheistical or blasphem" ous Opinions, they shall be banished this Com" monwealth, and upon Return shall be adjudged " Felons, and suffer as in case of Felony. All " these Suggestions of Horror and Hell do shew the " distracted and deplorable Condition of these Times;
 " and that the Fear of God was now as little as the " Honour of the King.

The Spirit of Presbytery shew'd it self to Perfection in Scotland; where, as the Lord Clarendon observes, upon the King's Arrival, " The first Wel" come he received was a new Demand, that He " would sign the Covenant himself, before he set his foot
 " on shore; which all about him press'd him to do:
 " and he now found, that he had made haste thither
 " upon very unskillful Imaginations and Presumpti-" ons; yet he consented unto what they so imperi" ously required. — They removed his English " Servants, and placed others about the King's Per" son, but principally relied upon their Clergy, who " were in such a continual Attendance about him,
 " that he was never free from their Importunities,
 " under pretence of instructing him in Religion;
 " and so they obliged him to their constant hours
 " of their long Prayers, and made him observe the " Sundays with more Rigour than the Jews accus" tomed to do their Sabbath, and reprehended him " very sharply if he smiled on those Days, and if " his Looks and Gestures did not please them,
 " whilst all their Prayers and Sermons, at which " he was compelled to be present, were Libels and " bitter Invectives against all the Actions of his Fa" ther, the Idolatry of his Mother, and his own " Malignity. — Yet after their Defeat at Dunbar,
 " they all look'd upon the King as one they might " stand in need of; they permitted his Servants,
 " who had been sequestred from him from his Arri" val in the Kingdom, to attend and wait upon " him, and began to talk of calling a Parliament, " and of a Time for the King's Coronation; which " had not hitherto been spoken of. Some Ministers " began to preach Obedience to the King; the Of" ficers who had been call'd for their Malignity,
 " talking aloud of the Miscarriages in the Govern" ment, and that the Kingdom was betray'd to the " Enemy for want of Confidence in the King, who " alone could preserve the Nation. So that the " King did, in a good degree, enjoy the Fruit of this Victory, as well as Cromwel. — Yet again 1650.

 " when the King was marching at the Head of an 2 Car. II.
 " Army into England, and had sent Maffey with some " Troops to march before; then was it fatal to all
 " Scottish Armies, to have always in them a Commit" tee of Ministers, who ruin'd all; and tho' there " had been now all the Care taken that could be,
 " to chuse such Men for that Service as had the Re" putation of being the most sober and moderate of " that whole Body, and who had shewed more Affe" ction, and advanced the King's Service more than " the rest; yet this moderate People no sooner heard " that Maffey was sent before to call upon their " Friends, and observed that from the Entrance in" to England, those about the King seem'd to have " less regard for the Covenant than formerly, but " they sent an Express to him, without communi" cating it in the least degree with the King, with " Letters and a Declaration, wherein they required
 " him to publish that Declaration, which signified
 " the King's and the whole Army's Zeal for the " Covenant, and their Resolutions to prosecute the " Interest of it; and forbid him to receive or en" tertain any Soldiers in his Troops, but those who " would subscribe that Obligation. The King had " soon notice of this, and lost no time in sending " to Maffey not to publish any such Declaration,
 " and to behave himself with equal Civility towards
 " all Men who were forward to serve his Majesty.
 " But before this Inhibition was receiv'd, the Matter
 " had taken Air in all Places, and was spread over " the Kingdom: All Men fled from their Houses, or " conceal'd themselves, who with'd the King very
 " well.

The King was at the Head of a considerable Ar- 1651.
 " my in Scotland, but had not the proper Command of Proceed-
 " them; for a select Committee of Sixty was appoin- ings of " ted to manage the Affairs of the War with the Con- the K. in " sent of the Kirk. Cromwel had order'd a Rendezvous Scotland.
 " of all his Horse at Muskeborough, and march'd thence " to Glasgow, and again return'd to Edinburgh, where " he lay so very ill of an Ague, that on May 27. the " Parliament sent two Physicians, Dr. Wright and Dr.
 " Bates, to attend upon him; and desired him to re" tire for his Health to some convenient Place in Eng- " land for fresh Air, and to intrust the Army in the " mean time in such hands as he should think fit. But " he soon recovered, and gain'd several Advantages Cromwel
 " over the Scots Army, much divided by the Factions gains Ad-
 " of Hamilton and Argyle; and especially in the Battle vantages.
 " of Fife, where two thousand of the Scots were slain,
 " and fourteen hundred taken Prisoners. By which " Cromwel got between the King and the North Parts
 " of Scotland; and so cutting off all Communication, " forced the King upon the Necessity of marching in-
 " to England. Cromwel sent away Letters to the Par" liament, that the Scots Army, in Fear and Despera" tion, and out of inevitable Necessity, were run away
 " into England; and doubts not but the Desperateness " and Folly of this Counsel of theirs would soon ap" pear, for that he had sent after them Major General
 " Lambert, with a considerable Body of Horse, to at" tend the Rear of the Enemy; and that he himself " was hastening after them; and that he should leave " behind him a sufficient Force under Lieutenant-" General Monk to keep Scotland in awe.

The King deserted by many of the Scotch Nobility The King " and great numbers of common Soldiers, made rather flies into " a flying Retreat than a regular March to Preston in England.
 " Lancashire, hoping his English Subjects would have " come in to his assistance; but all those Parts had ei" ther such an aversion to the Scots, or such a restraint " and terror from the close pursuit that Cromwel and " Lambert and Harrison made after the King, that no
 " Succour at all came in to him; which disappoint- Pursu'd by
 " ment the King took with patience, and marched his Cromwel.
 " poor Army of twelve thousand without committing " any Violence, or doing any Injury to the Country.
 " The brave Earl of Derby was the only English-man " who made any attempt to support the King; he got " toge-

1651. together a Body of 1500 Men, but before he could 3 Car. II. join the Royal Army, he was fell upon by Colonel Lilburn near Wiggan and entirely routed, he himself wounded retreated into Cheshire with about eighty Horse, and being afterward taken Prisoner upon Quarter given, was sentenc'd to Death, and lost his Head at Bolton.

The King comes to Worcester. The King brought his Army much fatigu'd to Wor- cester, where some Parliament Forces were got in and made a sharp resistance; but the worthy Citizens laying down their Arms, and even firing out of their Windows upon the Parliament Soldiers, the King obtain'd a quiet Possession. Hence the King sent a Letter to the City of London, but it was burnt by the common Hangman; and a Declaration of the Parliament was publish'd by Beat of Drum and Sound of Trumpet through all the Streets, proclaiming all those to be Traitors and Rebels that do or shall adhere to the King and his Party. The King sent out a Summons to all the adjacent Country, that all his loving Subjects, within the Age of 16 and 60, should come in to him to Worcester; but none came: so that finding himself not able to take the Field, he fortified the Town as well as the Time would allow, and kept up a strict Discipline; and when any English Prisoners were brought to him, he treated them courteously, gave them his Hand to kiss, and so discharg'd them.

Cromwel marches up to Worcester. Before the end of August, Cromwel was got up with his Foot and Baggage, and had his Head-Quarters within two Miles of Worcester; and upon Septemb. 3.
 the same day Twelve-month that he obtain'd the Victory at Dunbar, storm'd the City, entred it, and gave the Scots an absolute Defeat: and sent this Account of it in a Letter to the Parliament.

Account of it in his own Letter. I Am not able yet to give you an exact Account of the great things the Lord hath done for this Commonwealth and for his People; and yet I am unwilling to be silent, but, according to my Duty, shall represent it to you as it comes to hand. This Battle was fought with various Success for some hours, but still hopeful on your part, and in the end became an absolute Victory, and so full an one, as proved a total Defeat and Ruin of the Enemy's Army, and Possession of the Town: Our Men entering at the Enemies heels, and fighting with them in the Streets, with very great Courage took all their Baggage and Artillery. What the Slain are I can give you no Account, because we have not taken an exact View; but they are very many, and must needs be so, because the Dispute was long, and very near at hand, and often at push of Pike, and from one Defence to another. There are about six or seven thousand Prisoners taken here, and many Officers and Noblemen of Quality: Duke Hamilton, the Earl of Rothes, and divers other Noblemen, I hear the Earl of Lauderdale, many Officers of great Quality, and some that will be fit Subjects of your Justice. — The Dimensions of this Mercy are above my Thoughts; it is, for ought I know, a crowning Mercy; surely if it be not, such a one we shall have, if this provoke those that are concerned in it to Thankfulness, and the Parliament to do the Will of him who hath done his Will for it, and for the Nation; whose Good-pleasure is to establish the Nation, and Change of the Government, by making the People so willing to the Defence thereof, and so signally to bless the Endeavours of your Servants in this late great Work. I am bold humbly to beg, that all Thoughts may tend to the promoting his Honour who hath wrought so great Salvation, and that the Fatness of these continued Mercies may not occasion Pride and Wantonness, as formerly the like hath done to a chosen People; but that the Fear of the Lord even for his Mercies may keep an Authority and a People so prosper'd and blessed, and witnessed to humble and faithful, that Justice and Righteousness, Mercy and Truth, may flow from you, as a thankful Return to our glorious God. This shall be the Prayer of Your most humble and obedient Servant, Worcester. Sept. 4. 1651. O. Cromwel.

The first ill Omen of the King's Misfortunes, was 1651.
 the News of the Defeat of the Earl of Derby at Wigan 3 Car. II.
 in Lancashire, and the total Destruction of those gallant Persons who accompanied him. The Earl, after his Horse had been shot under him, made a shift to mount again; and so, with a small Party of Horse, through many Difficulties and Dangers, escap'd wounded to the King to Worcester. The Lord Witbrington, after he had received many Wounds, and given as many, and merited his Death by the Vengeance he took upon those who assaulted him, was kill'd upon the Place. Of whom my Lord Clar- endon gives this Character. "He was one of the "most goodly Persons of that Age, being near the "Head higher than most tall Men, and a Gentle"man of the best and most ancient Extraction of "the County of Northumberland, and of a very fair
 "Fortune, and one of the four which the last King
 "made choice of to be about the Person of his Son
 "the Prince as Gentleman of his Privy Chamber, "when he first settled his Family. His Affection
 "to the King was always remarkable; and serving "in the House of Commons, as Knight of the Shire "for the County of Northumberland, he quickly got "the Reputation of being amongst the most Malig"nant. As soon as the War broke out, he was of "the first who rais'd both Horse and Foot at his "own Charge, and serv'd eminently with them un"der the Marquis of Newcastle, with whom he had "a very particular and entire Friendship. He was "very nearly allied to the Marquis; and by his "Testimony that he had performed many signal "Services, he was, about the middle of the War, "made a Peer of the Kingdom. He was a Man of "great Courage, but of some Passion, by which he "incurr'd the Ill-will of many, who imputed it to "an Insolence of Nature, which no Man was farther "from; no Man of a Nature more civil, and candi-"did towards all, in Business or Conversation. But "having sat long in the House of Commons, and "observ'd the Disingenuity of the Proceedings there,
 "and the gross Cheats, by which they deceived and "cozened the People, he had contracted so hearty "an Indignation against them, and all who were "cozen'd by them, and against all who had not his "Zeal to oppose and destroy them, that he often "said things to slow and stigmatick Men which of"fended them, and it may be injur'd them; which "his Good-nature often obliged him to acknow"ledge, and ask Pardon of those who would not "question him for it. He transported himself into "the Parts beyond the Sea at the same time with the "Marquis of Newcastle, to accompany him, and re-"main'd still with him till the King went into "Scotland, and then waited upon his Majesty, and "endured the same Affronts which others did du"ring the time of his Residence there: And, it may "be, the Observation of their Behaviour, the Know"ledge of their Principles, and the Disdain of their "Treatment, produced that Aversion from their "Conversation, that prevailed upon his Impatience
 "to part too soon from their Company, in hope "that the Earl of Derby, under whom he was very "willing to serve, and he Himself, might quickly
 "draw together such a Body of the Royal Party,
 "as might give some Check to the unbounded Ima"ginations of that Nation. It was reported by the "Enemy, that, in respect of his brave Person and "Behaviour, they did offer him Quarter, which he "refused; and that they were thereby compelled,
 "in their own Defence, to kill him: which is pro"bable enough; for he knew well the Animosity
 "the Parliament had against him, and it cannot be "doubted but that if he had fallen into their hands,
 "they would not have used him better than they "did the Earl of Derby, who had not more Ene"mies.

The King could provide for no Safety but that of his own Person; nor could he have done this without a wonderful Providence. He went out of Character of the E. of Witbrington.

Defeat of the E. of Derby.

1651. St. Martin's Gate about Seven at Night in the Dusk, with the Earl of Derby; by whose Direction he got to an obscure House called Whiteladies, twenty five Miles from Worcester, betwixt Three and Four the next Morning, and there committed himself to the Fidelity of the Penderils, two Brothers, who put him immediately into the Habit of a Wood-cutter, and sent him to work in an adjoining Coppice all Day Sept. 4. and in the Night following Richard Penderil carried him to the House of Mr. Wolfe of Madeley, and there lodg'd him in a Barn, and thence guided him to Bosjobel, where he hid himself in an Oak in the Day-time, and stole into the House at Nights. Hence John Penderil, sent hither by the Lord Wilmot, brought him, in the Habit and on the Horse of a Miller, to Mr. Whitgrave's House at Moseley, and so, by the Lord Wilmot's Advice, to Bentley, where Colonel Lane contrived that the King should ride as a Servant before his Sister Mrs. Jane Lane, to Bristol. Upon the Road the King was very near Discovery upon shoeing his Horse at a Forge, but happen'd to pass free to Evesham and Cirencester, and so to the House of Mr. Norton at Leigh within three Miles of Bristol, where he was discovered by the Butler John Pope (a Soldier formerly in his Majesty's Army) who kept the Secret. The King was conducted hence by the Lord Wilmot to the House of Colonel Windham at Trent in Dorsetshire, where he continued three Weeks, not without the Privy of six or seven Persons in the Family, in Expectation of a Passage from Lime; but being disappointed of these Hopes, he was forc'd to wander on to Bridport, where an Ostler claiming Knowledge of him, he hasten'd away to Broad-Windsor, and hurried back again to Colonel Windham's; thence to the House of Mr. Hide at Heal, and after strange Escapes came to Brightonhead in Sussex, where Colonel Gunter and Mr. Mausfel had hired a Ship to carry him over to France. The Master, one Tetershal, discover'd the King, having seen him in the Downs, where he had obtained a Release of his Vessel bound from Newcastle; but encourag'd with Money, and Prospect of Honour, he promised to transport his Royal Passenger: but going home for a Bottle of Strong-water, his Wife became Partaker of the Secret; yet for Loyalty or Lucre she encourag'd her Husband to perform the Contract, and the King landed safely at Diep in France on Octob. 21. A signal Mercy of God in the miraculous Protection of his Anointed.

Death and Character of Duke Hamilton.

In the Fight at Worcester, Duke Hamilton, who had charged the Enemy with great Vigour, had his Leg broke with a Shot; and falling into the Enemy's hands, he died the next Day of his Wounds, and thereby prevented the being made a Spectacle as his Brother had been; which the Pride and Animosity of his Enemies would, no doubt, have caused to be, having the same Pretence for it, being a Peer of England, as the other was. The Lord Clarendon gives him this Character: "He was in all respects to be much preferred before the other; a much wiser, tho' it may be a less cunning Man: for he did not affect Dissimulation, which was the other's Master-piece. He had unquestionable Courage; he was in truth a very accomplish'd Person, of an excellent Judgment, and clear and ready Expressions; and tho' he had been driven into some unwarrantable Actions, he made it very evident he had not been led by any Inclinations of his own, and passionately and heartily run to all Opportunities of redeeming it: And, in the very Article of his Death, he expressed a marvellous Cheerfulness, That he had the Honour to lose his Life in the King's Service, and thereby to wipe out the Memory of his former Transgressions, which he always profess'd were odious to himself.

Crommel triumphs.

Crommel, in triumph, order'd the Walls of Worcester to be levell'd with the Ground, and the Dikes fill'd up; and then march'd up to London, driving his Prisoners like Sheep before him, and making Presents of them, on occasion, as of so many Slaves; and selling the rest for that purpose into the Plantations. He was met beyond Aylesbury by four Members of Parliament, sent from the House to pay him all the Marks of Favour and Honour. When he came to Alton, he was met by the Speaker and Members, and within the City-Liberties by the Lord Mayor and Aldermen: and on Septemb. 16. he took his Place in Parliament, and had excellent Complements from the Speaker in the Name of the House, and was the same Day feasted in the City of London with all possible State and Plenty. And two Acts were drawn up in Honour of him; one for a solemn Thanksgiving-Day, and another for a yearly Observation of the third Day of September in all the three Kingdoms, with a Narrative of the grounds thereof.

1651. 2 Car. II.

In Scotland, the rigid Presbyterians had the Conscience to impute the Defeat of their Brethren in England to their want of insisting upon stricter Terms with the King: And divers Scots Ministers had the Grace to desire a Permission from General Monk to meet in Edinburgh to keep a Day of Humiliation for this Sin, their too much Compliance with the King. Whatever they thought their Sin, they had certainly a grievous Punishment; for Monk, left there by Crommel with a piece of an Army, soon took Sterling their chief Strength; and not long after surprized a Convention of the Scotch Nobility, old General Lefley among them, and went on to the absolute Reduction of that Kingdom, which Crommel kept in Subjection as a conquer'd Province.

Scots perfidious and still rebellious.

Humbled by Monk.

Soon after Worcester Fight, the Isle of Man generously defended by the Countess of Derby, and the Isle of Jersey bravely maintained by Sir George Carteret, were both reduced under the Power of the Parliament: so as the new Commonwealth extended now as far as the late Monarchy.

It must be observed, that after Worcester Fight Order was taken for the Trial of the Earl of Derby, and such other notorious Prisoners as they had voted to Destruction. The Lord Clarendon gives this Character and this Account of his Execution. "The Earl of Derby was a Man of unquestionable Loyalty to the late King, and gave clear Testimony of it before he receiv'd any Obligations from the Court, and when he thought himself disobliged by it. This King, in his first Year, sent him the Garter, which in many Respects he had expected from the last: And the sense of that Honour made him so readily comply with the King's Command in attending him, when he had no Confidence in the Undertaking, nor any Inclination to the Scots, who, he thought, had too much Guilt upon them, in having depress'd the Crown, to be made Instruments of repairing and restoring it. He was a Man of great Honour and clear Courage; and all his Defects and Misfortunes, proceeded from his having liv'd so little time among his Equals, that he knew not how to treat his Inferiors; which was the Source of all the Ill that befell him, having thereby drawn such Prejudice against him from Persons of inferior Quality, who yet thought themselves too good to be contemn'd, that they pursu'd him to Death.

Character of the Earl of Derby.

The King's Army was no sooner defeated at Worcester, but the Parliament renewed their old method of Murdering in cold Blood; and sent a Commission to erect a High Court of Justice to Persons of ordinary Quality, many not being Gentlemen, and all notoriously his Enemies, to try the Earl of Derby for his Treason and Rebellion; which they easily found him guilty of, and put him to Death in a Town of his own, against which he had expressed a severe Displeasure for their obstinate Rebellion against the King, with all the Circumstances of Rudeness and Barbarity they could invent. The same Night, one of those who was amongst his Judges sent a Trumpet to the Isle of Man, with a Letter directed to the Countess of Derby, by which he required her, To deliver up the Castle and Island to the Parlia-

His Trial.

1651. Parliament: Nor did their Malice abate, till they had reduced that Lady (a Woman of very high and Princely Extraction, being the Daughter of the D. of de Trimonille in France, and of the most exemplary Virtue and Piety of her time) and that whole most noble Family, to the lowest Penury and Want, by disposing, giving, and selling all the Fortune and Estate that should support it.

The Care of Cromwel was to improve his Victories to his own Interest: and for this purpose he desired a Meeting with divers Members of Parliament and some chief Officers of the Army, at the Speaker's House. Where (as Whitlock, one of the Number, tells us) he proposed to them, That now the old King being dead, and his Son being defeated, he held it necessary to come to a Settlement of the Nation: and in order thereto he had requested this Meeting, that They together might consider and advise what was fit to be done, and to be presented to the Parliament. When the Speaker and Colonel Harrison had delivered themselves in general Words; Whitlock, who knew Cromwel's mind, offer'd a Question, Whether the Settlement desired should be by way of an absolute Republick, or with any mixture of Monarchy? Then Cromwel took the Hint, and answered, My Lord Commissioner Whitlock hath put us upon the right Point; and indeed it is my Meaning, that we should consider whether a Republick or a mixt Monarchical Government will be best to be settled; and if any thing Monarchical, then in Whom that Power shall be placed. When he had heard Colonel Deborough and Whaley declaring for a strict Republick, and Sir Thomas Widdrington pleading for a mixt Monarchical Government, to be placed upon Terms in one of the King's Sons; Cromwel replied, That will be a Business of more than ordinary Difficulty: but really I think, if it may be done with Safety, and Preservation of our Rights, both as Englishmen and as Christians, that a Settlement with somewhat of Monarchical Power in it would be very effectual. In Conclusion, after a long Debate, the Company parted without coming to any Result at all; only Cromwel discovered by this Meeting the Inclinations of the Persons that spake, for which he fish'd, and made use of what he then discerned.

Cromwel made one other Step toward his Designs, by bringing the House into a Vote Nov. 18. That the time for Continuance of this Parliament, beyond which they resolve not to sit, shall be the third Day of November 1654. Which help'd much to draw off the Eyes and Hearts of the People from a Parliament near unto Extinction; and fix'd them upon the General and his Army, that were not likely to be dissolv'd. So that from this time all Petitions and other Applications were to the General and his Officers, not to the Speaker and the Commons; who did little in the remainder of this Year, but appoint a Committee to consider of the Inconveniencies and Delays in the Proceedings of Law: wherein one of the Council to this Committee tells us, "That none of them was more active in this Business than Mr. Hugh Peters the Minister, who understood little of the Law, but was very opinionative, and would frequently mention some Proceedings of Law in Holland, wherein he was altogether mistaken. This Committee for regulating the Law presented to a Committee of Parliament, to be reported to the House, the Draughts of several Acts: 1. For taking away Fines upon Bills, Declarations, and Original Writs. 2. Against customary Oaths of Fealty and Homage to Lords of Mannors. 3. For taking away common Recoveries, and the unnecessary Charge of Fines, and to pass and charge Lands entailed, as Lands in Fee-simple. 4. For ascertaining arbitrary Fines upon Descent and Alienation of Copyholds of Inheritance. 5. For the more speedy Recovery of Rents. 6. Touching Pleaders, and their Fees. 7. For the more speedy regulating and easie Discovery of Debts and Damages, not exceeding 4*l.* and under. 8. For Marriages to be made before Justices of the Peace.

Nothing observable in the State of Religion, but the Decay and approaching Downfall of Presbytery. The English Presbyterians had been startled at the Murder of the King, and more disturbed at the Prevalence of an Independent Faction in the Army. Under these Grievances and Jealousies, they leaned much toward Hopes and Help from their Scotch Brethren, and for their sakes were inclined for the Restoration of the King as in Covenant with them. This Zeal for their own Cause carried many of the Presbyterian Ministers in London into a Correspondence with the Kirk, and so into a Plot for the King, distinguish'd by the Name of the Presbyterian Plot. This was soon discovered by the Vigilancy of the Government, and by the Forwardness of the Men concern'd: So Mr. Love, Mr. Jenkins, Mr. Drake, very eminent Presbyterian Divines, were seized by Order of the Council of State, and in order to their Trial, were on May 7. brought before the High Court of Justice; and Mr. Love was first charged with High Treason against the State and Commonwealth of England, for holding Correspondence with the King and his Party, and supplying them with Arms and Money, contrary to an Act of Parliament in that Case provided. He at first disputed the Authority of the Court, and then insisted upon his own Merits in promoting the Cause of the Parliament; and terrified Mr. Jackson a Minister from giving in Evidence against him; for which obstinate Refusal he was fined by the Court 500*l.* and committed to the Fleet. At another Appearance June 25. he did at last confess, That the Conspirators met at his House for furthering the Scots Designs; and that Letters were received, and Answers were sent from thence; but equivocated in Excuses, that he did not do it Himself, and that he did not Personally act any thing, &c. In short, tho' he had Mr. Matthew Hale for an Advocate, and the whole Party for Sollicitors, on July 5. he received Sentence to be Beheaded; and the Day of Execution was appointed on the 15th. Before the Day, very fervent Petitions were presented from himself and his Friends, to the Parliament, for Pardon of his Life; which, on long Debate, pass'd in the Negative. And on the very Day appointed for Execution, several Ministers in and about London came with a most importunate Petition to the House, praying earnestly, and in the Bowels of Jesus Christ, who when we were Sinners died for us, if not totally to spare the Life of our dear Brother; that yet you would say of him, as Solomon of Abiathar, that at this time he shall not be put to Death. Upon which the Parliament granted him a Reprieve for one Month. Within this time, all possible Sollicitations were used to the Men in Power; and particular Application was made to Cromwel, then in Scotland, who sent back a Letter of his free Consent to the Pardon of him: but the Post-Boy being seized by some Cavaliers, they search'd his Pacquet, and with special Indignation tore the Letter relating to Mr. Love, as thinking him not worthy to live who had been such a Firebrand in the Treaty at Uxbridge.

The Council of State and Leaders in the Parliament hearing nothing from Cromwel, and not finding the ingenuous discovery and humble Submission which they expected from Mr. Love (after the Condemnation of two other of his Accomplices Mr. Potter and Mr. Gibbons) they vacated his Reprieve, and recommitted him to the High Court of Justice, by whose Order he was executed on Tower-Hill with Mr. Gibbons on Aug. 22. The Lord Clarendon gives this Character. "This poor Man Love, who had been guilty of as much Treason against the King from the beginning of the Rebellion as the Pulpit could contain, was so much without remorse for any wickedness of that kind that he had committed, that he was jealous of nothing so much as of being suspected to repent, or that he was brought to suffer for his Affection to the King. And therefore when he was upon the Scaffold, where he appeared

1651. " peared with a maverillous undauntedness, he seem'd 3 Car. II. " so much delighted with the Memory of all that " he had done against the late King, and against the " Bishops, that he could not even then forbear to " speak with Animosity and Bitterness against both,
 " and expressed great satisfaction in Mind for what " he had done against them, and was as much trans" ported with the inward Joy of Mind, that he felt " in being brought thither to die as a Martyr, and " to give Testimony for the Covenant, whatsoever
 " he had done being in the pursuit of the Ends, he " said, of that sanctified Obligation to which he was " in, and by his Conscience engaged. And in this " raving fit, without so much as praying for the " King, otherwise than that he might propagate the " Covenant, he laid his Head upon the Block with " as much Courage as the bravest and honestest Man " could do in the most pious occasion.

This blow help'd to widen the Breach between the Presbyterians and the prevailing Powers: For from this time the Presbyterians were alway suspected of Loyalty to the King, and the Parliament and Army were alway jealous of them. Aug. 31. was appointed a Day of Thanksgiving for the Success of the Parliament's Forces in Scotland and against the Earl of Derby; and we are told, That the Ministers who were not of the rigid Presbyterian Judgment, were zealous in the Duties of the Day; but some of the more rigid Persons did not think fit to observe that Order, but dropt it in publick, and had their private Meetings to pray to God to bless their Brethren of the Presbytery and the Cause they were engaged in. And Oct. 24. being kept for a solemn Rejoycing over the King's defeat at Worcester, was so much slighted and slovenly observed by some of them, that they hardly escaped a publick Censure. Tho' it was the Policy of the governing People to make them easy, by granting a Pardon upon humble Acknowledgment and Submission to Mr. Jenkins, Mr. Cafe, Mr. Drake and others, who had confest themselves guilty of Mr. Love's Conspiracy. The Petition of Mr. Jenkins for his Life went high, and expressly owned the Authority of the prevailing Powers to be from God; for which reason it is said to have been printed here, and reprinted in Holland by Order and Procurement of the House of Parliament, to stop the Mouths of all other Presbyterians, and gain the reputation of a Divine Right to them and their Cause.

The poor Church of England being banished from its home, met with another Persecution abroad, of which this Account is well given by a witness of it, the Lord Clarendon. " There was another instance " of the King's extreme low condition, and of the " highest disrespect the Court of France could express " towards him, and of which all the Protestant Par" ty of the Queen's Family complained very vehe" mently. From the time of the Queen's being in " France, the late King had appointed a Chaplain " of his own, Dr. Cosins, who was afterwards Bi" shop of Durham, to attend upon her Majesty. for " the constant Service of that part of her Household,
 " the number of her Protestant Servants being much " superior to those who were Roman Catholics:
 " And the Queen had always punctually comply'd
 " with the King's directions, and used the Chaplain " very graciously, and assign'd him a competent " Support with the rest of her Servants. An under " Room in the Louvre, out of any common Passage,
 " had been assign'd for their Morning and Evening " Devotions, the Key whereof was committed to " the Chaplain, who caus'd the Room to be decent" ly furnished and kept, being made use of to no " other purpose. Here, when the Prince came thir-
 " ther, and afterwards whilst he staid, he perform'd
 " his Devotions all the Week, but went Sundays still " to the Resident's House to hear Sermons. All this " time an Order was sent from the Queen Regent,
 " that that Room should be no more apply'd to " that purpose, and the French King would not per" mit the Exercise of any other Religion in any of 1651. " his Houses than the Roman Catholick; and the 3 Car. II. " Queen gave notice to the Chaplain, that she was " no longer able to continue the payment of the " Exhibition she had formerly assign'd to him.

 " The Protestants, whereof many were of the best " Quality, lamented this alteration to the Chancel" lor of the Exchequer, and desired him to intercede " with the Queen, which he had the more Title to " do, because at his going into Spain she had vouch-" s'd to promise him (upon some Rumours of " which he took notice) that the same Privilege
 " which had been should still be continued, and en" joy'd by the Protestants of her Household; and " that she would provide for the Chaplain's subsi" stence. He presunn'd therefore to speak with her " Majesty upon it; and besought her to consider " what ill impression this new Order would make " upon the Protestants of all the King's Dominions,
 " upon whom he was chiefly to depend for his Re" stauracion; and how much prejudice it might be " to her self, to be look'd upon to be as a greater
 " Enemy to Protestants than she had been taken no" tice of to be; and likewise, whether this Order,
 " which had been given since the departure of the " Duke of Tork, might not be made use of as an " excuse for his not returning, or indeed for his go" ing away at first, since the precise time when it " issued would not be generally understood. The " Queen heard him very graciously, and acknow" ledged, That what he said had Reason in it; but " protested that she knew not what Remedy to ap" ply to it; that she had been herself surpris'd with " that Order, and was troubled at it; but that the " Queen Regent was positive in it, and blamed her " for want of Zeal in her Religion; and that she " cared not to advance it, or to convert any of her " Children. She wish'd him to confer with Mr.
 " Mountague upon it; and imply'd, that his bigotry " in his new Religion, had contributed much to the " procuring that Order. He had newly taken Or" ders, and was become Priest in that Church, and " had greater Power with the Queen Regent, as well
 " for his Animosity against that Religion he had pro-" fess'd, as for his vehement Zeal for the Church of " which he now was. Upon this occasion, her Ma" jesty expressed a great sense of the loss she had " sustain'd by the Death of her old Confessor, Fa" ther Philips, who she said, was a prudent and dis" creet Man, and would never suffer her to be pres" sed to any passionate Undertakings under pre" tence of doing good for Catholics; and always " told her, that as she ought to continue firm and " constant to her own Religion, so she was to live
 " well towards the Protestants, who deserv'd well " from her, and to whom she was beholden. She " said, it would not be possible to have the same " or any other Room set aside, or allowed to be u" sed as a Chapel; but that she would take such " course, that the Family might meet for the exer" cise of their Devotion in some private Room that " belonged to their Lodgings; and that tho' her " own Exhibition was so ill paid that she was in" debted to all her Servants, yet she would give " Order that Dr. Cosins (against whom she had some " personal Exceptions) should receive his Salary in " proportion with the rest of her Servants. She bid " him assure the Duke of Tork, that he should have " a free Exercise of his Religion as he had before,
 " tho' it must not be in the same place.

" The Chancellor conferr'd with Mr. Mountague
 " upon the Subject, and offer'd the same Reasons " which he had done to the Queen; which he look'd
 " upon as of no moment, but said, That the King " of France was Master in his own House, and he " was resolv'd, tho' the King of England himself " should come thither again, never to permit any " solemn Exercise of the Protestant Religion in any " House of his. The consideration of what the " Protestants in England might think on this occa" sion was of least moment to him; and it was in" deed

1652. 4 Car. II. deed the common Discourse there, that the Protestants of the Church of England could never do the King Service, but that all his hopes must be in the Roman Catholicks and the Presbyterians; and that he ought to give all satisfaction to both Parties.

The Conquest of Scotland makes a Union of it with England. The Scots finding their Army in England swallow'd up, and their own Country ravag'd and reduc'd to a Conquest by the English Arms, the Deputies of their Shires and Boroughs drew up their Form of Consent, required from them by the English Commissioners, to a Union with England in one Commonwealth, without a King or House of Lords, and to live peaceably in Submission to the Authority of the Parliament of England. And an Act was soon after prepar'd at Westminster, for Incorporating Scotland into one Commonwealth and Free State with England, and for abolishing the Kingly Office in Scotland.

Policy of Cromwel. Cromwel had laid a Scheme, that was now to be artfully carried on. Hence May 11. a Committee was reviv'd for setting a Period to this Parliament, and providing for the due Qualification of future Representatives. This amus'd the House, and opened the Inclination of the respective Members.

Death of Ireton. Cromwel had lost much of his Influence on the Affairs of Ireland, by the Death of his Son-in-Law Lieutenant-General Ireton, who died of the Plague in Limerick Nov. 27. 1651. succeeded in the Government of that Army by Edmund Ludlow, Esq; who would have thereby assumed the Regency of that Kingdom, at least till the coming over of Major-General Lambert, who was named by the Parliament to be Lord Lieutenant. But a Vote of Parliament was obtained June 16. that the Act of Parliament constituting Oliver Cromwel Captain-General and Commander in chief of the Armies and Forces rais'd by their Authority within England, shall extend to the Forces in Ireland, as if Ireland had been therein particularly named. And that the Lord-General be required to appoint such Person as he shall think fit to command the Forces in Ireland, and to Commissionate him accordingly. Whereby to the great offence of Lambert and Ludlow, Lieutenant-General Fleetwood had the Command in chief of the Forces in Ireland, to hold under the Lord-General Cromwel; and under his Conduct that Kingdom was soon brought into perfect subjection.

Fleetwood placed in Ireland. This Character is given of Ireton by the Lord Clarendon. "He was of a melancholick, reserv'd, dark Nature, who communicat'd his Thoughts to very few; so that for the most part he resolv'd alone, but was never diverted from any Resolution he had taken; and he was thought often by his obstinacy to prevail over Cromwel himself, and to extort his Concurrence contrary to his own Inclinations. But that proceeded only from his dissembling less; for he was never reserv'd in the owning and communicating his worst and most barbarous Purposes, which the other always conceal'd and disavow'd. Hitherto their Concurrence had been very natural, since they had the same Ends and Designs. It was generally conceiv'd by those who had the opportunity to know them both very well, that Ireton was a Man so radically averse from Monarchy, and so fix'd to a Republick Government, that if he had lived, he would either by his Council and Credit have prevented those excesses in Cromwel, or publicly oppos'd and declared against them, and carried the greatest part of the Army with him; and that Cromwel, who best knew his Nature and his Temper, had therefore carried him into Ireland and left him there, that he might be without his Counsels or Importunities, when he should find it necessary to put off his Mask, and to act that part which he foresaw it would be requisite to do. Others thought his Parts lay more towards Civil Affairs, and were fitter for the modelling that Government which his Heart was set upon (being a Scholar, conversant in the Law, and in all those 1652. 4 Car. II. Authors who had expressed the greatest Animosity and Malice against the Regal Government) than for the Conduct of an Army to support it; his Personal Courage being never reckon'd among his other Abilities.

And to render the new Commonwealth more glorious, or rather to make Cromwel more absolute, the English Navy under Admiral Blake, Vice-Admiral Pen, and Sir George Ascue, was this Year prosper'd with very great and repeated Successes against the Dutch Fleet commanded first by Van Trump, and afterward by De Wit. So that Victories and Conquests waiting upon the present Powers by Sea and Land, the only Question that seem'd now remaining, was how to make this Prosperity settle into Peace and established Government.

Cromwel affects to be King. Upon this Juncture Cromwel advises with Commissioner Whitlock how to maintain all things in Order and Obedience; and after general Talk puts this short Question; What if a Man should take upon him to be King? Whitlock, "I think that Remedy would be worse than the Disease. Cromwel. Why do you think so? Whitlock. "As to your own Person the Title of King would be of no Advantage, because you have the full Kingly Power in you already concerning the Militia, as you are General. As to the nomination of Civil Officers, those whom you think fittest are seldom refus'd: and altho' you have no negative Vote in the passing of Laws, yet what you dislike will not easily be carried; and the Taxes are already settl'd and in your Power to dispose the Money rais'd. And as to Foreign Affairs, tho' the ceremonial Application be made to the Parliament, yet the expectation of good or bad Success in it is from your Excellency; and particular Sollicitations of Foreign Ministers are made to you only. So that I apprehend indeed less Envy and Danger and Pomp, but not less Power and real opportunities of doing good in your being General, than would be if you had assum'd the Title of King. Cromwel went on to argue, that Whoever was actually King by Election, the Acts done by him were as lawful and justifiable as if done by a King who had the Crown by Inheritance; and that by an Act of Parliament in Henry VII.'s time, it was safer for the People to act under a King (let his Title be what it will) than under any other Power. Whitlock agreed to the Legality, but question'd the Expediency of it; and being ask'd what danger he apprehended, answer'd thus, "The danger I think would be this, one of the main Points of Controversy between us and our Adversaries is whether the Government of this Nation shall be established in Monarchy or in a free State or a Commonwealth; and most of our Friends have engag'd with us upon the hopes of having the Government settl'd in a free State; and to effect that, have undergone all their Hazards and Difficulties. They being perswaded (tho' I think much mistaken) that under the Government of a Commonwealth they shall enjoy more Liberty and Right, both as to their Spiritual and Civil Concernments than they shall under Monarchy, the pressures and dislikes whereof are so fresh in their Memories and Sufferings. Now if your Excellency shall take upon you the Title of King, this State of your Cause will be thereby wholly determin'd, and Monarchy established in your Person, and the Question will be no more, Whether our Government shall be by a Monarch or by a Free-State, but whether Cromwel or Stuart shall be our King and Monarch? And that Question wherein before so great Parties of the Nation were engag'd, and which was universal, will by this means become in effect a private Controversy only. Before it was national, What kind of Government we should have? Now it will become particular, Who shall be our Governour? Whether of the Family of the Stuarts or of the Family of the Cromwels? Thus the state of our Controversy being totally changed, all those 1652. 4 Car. II. " who were for a Commonwealth (and they are a very great and considerable Party) having their Hopes therein frustrate, will desert you: your Hands will be weakned, your Interest frainted, and your Cause in apparent Danger to be ruin'd. Cromwell confes'd he spoke Reason, and desired to know if he could find any other Expedient. Whitlock, after suggesting the Dangers he was in from his own Officers and from the Parliament, who were plotting to bring him down, or to clip his Wings, proceeded thus. " Pardon me, Sir, in the next place, a little to consider the Condition of the King of Scots. This Prince being now by your Valour, and the Success which God hath given to the Parliament, and to the Army under your Command, reduced to a very low Condition, both he and all about him cannot but be very inclinable to hearken to any Terms, whereby their last Hopes may be revived of his being restored to the Crown, and they to their Fortunes and native Country. By a private Treaty with him, you may secure your self and your Friends, and their Fortunes: You may make your self and Posterity as great and permanent, to all humane Probability as ever any Subject was, and provide for your Friends: You may put such Limits to Monarchical Power, as will secure our spiritual and civil Liberties: and, You may secure the Cause in which we are All engaged. And this may be effectually done, by having the Power of the Militia continued in your self, and whom you shall agree upon after you.

Cromwell adjourn'd the Discourse to some farther time, and went off with a Countenance and Carriage of Displeasure. And Whitlock says, " That Cromwell's Carriage toward him from that time was alter'd, and his Advising with him not so frequent and intimate as before; and, that it was not long after, he found an occasion, by an honourable Employment, to send him out of the way, that he might be no Obstacle or Impediment to his ambitious Designs. For certainly Cromwell, in his Thoughts and Intentions, was for bringing the Crown upon his own Head; and it was a great Providence that his Friends would not permit him to have his own way. However, to carry it as far as it would bear, he and his Officers were alway complaining of the Grievance of the Long Parliament, and were zealous and loud in recommending to the People the common Pretences of Right and Justice, and publick Liberty, to put a Period to their Session; and if they would not shortly do it themselves, the Army and the People must do it for them.

R. Charles in the Court of France.

The King was a Refugee in the Court of France, and was to live there upon Words and Air, tho' he was truly instrumental in composing the Differences between the French King and the Princes of the Blood; and the Duke of York was actually in the French Service under the Marschal de Turenne, who gave him a high Character for his Behaviour in the Battle of Esclamps. For which Obligations the King of France was in himself disposed to assist, and, if possible, to restore the Royal Family of England: but his commanding Minister, the Cardinal Mazarine, was alway averse to it: So that all that our distressed Prince could do, was to send abroad his Envoys and Agents to solicit, in vain, for Justice and Relief. He sent into England the noble Marquis of Worcester, for private Intelligence and Supplies: but he was taken up Prisoner in London, and committed to the Tower in September, where he was threatened with a speedy Trial, and worse punish'd with a long Confinement. The Lord Hopton, a Man of admirable Valour, lay in Prosecution of the Royal Cause at Bruges in Flanders, where he died in Affliction about the end of September. The Ld. Wentworth was employ'd to the King of Denmark, the Ld. Colpeper to Mosco, Mr. Crofts to Poland, Mr. Taylor to the Imperial Court, and the Ld. Wilmot (made E. of Rocheſter) to the Dyet at Ratisbon: 1652. 4 Car. II. But all their Negotiations for a righteous Cause, without Men and Money, were made cold and ineffectual. The States of Holland, in War with the People of England, were indeed the more kind and friendly to the King: they granted him the Freedom of Ports for harbouring his Men of War, and selling the Prizes they should take; and invited Prince Rupert to Command a Squadron; and talk'd much of committing their whole Fleet to the Command of the King in Person, as their superior Admiral; which Honour he had offer'd to them: nay, he propos'd to have gone Aboard as a private Person, to invite and receive the English Ships that should come over to him. But the States were afraid, and all their good Inclinations were owing to their Enmity to the new Commonwealth, more than to any Love or Respect to the King; and therefore went off, in order to prepare and purchase a Peace with the English Republick.

But the greatest Trial to which the King was now brought, was, how to secure himself from the continual Solicitations to pervert him from the good old Communion of the Church of England. The Relation of this Difficulty is best given by a Witness of it, the Lord Clarendon, who writes thus: " The Lord Fermyu, who in his own Judgment was very indifferent in all matters relating to Religion, was always of some Faction that regarded it. He had been much addicted to the Presbyterians from the time that there had been any Treaties with the Scots, in which he had too much Privity: And now, upon the King's Return into France, he had a great Design to persuade his Majesty to go to the Congregation at Charenton, to the end that he might keep up his Interest in the Presbyterian Party; which he had no reason to believe would ever be able to do the King Service, or willing if they were able, without such odious Conditions as they had hitherto insisted upon in all their Overtures. The Queen did not, in the least degree, oppose this; but rather seem'd to countenance it, as the best Expedient that might incline him, by degrees, to prefer the Religion of the Church of Rome. For tho' the Queen had never to this time, by herself, or by others with her Advice, used the least means to persuade the King to change his Religion, as well out of Observation of the Injunction laid upon her by the deceased King, as out of the Conformity of her own Judgment, which could not but persuade her that the Change of his Religion would infallibly make all his hopes of recovering England desperate; yet it is as true, that from the King's Return from Worcester, she did really despair of his being Restor'd by the Affections of his own Subjects, and believ'd that it could never be brought to pass without a Conjunction of Catholick Princes on his Behalf, and by an united Force to restore him; and that such a Conjunction would never be enter'd into, except the King himself became Roman Catholick. Therefore from this time she was very well content that any Attempts should be made upon him to that purpose; and, in that regard, wish'd that he would go to Charenton, which she well knew was not the Religion he affected, but would be a little Discouragement to the Church in which he had been bred, and from which as soon as he could be persuaded in any degree to swerve, he would be more expos'd to any other Temptation. The King had not positively refus'd to gratify the Ministers of that Congregation, who, with great Professions of Duty, had brought him to do them that Honour, before the Chancellour of the Exchequer came to him; in which it was believ'd that they were the more like to prevail by the Death of Doctor Steward, for whose Judgment in Matters of Religion the King had Reverence, by the earnest Recommendation of his Father: and he died after

“ the King's Return within fourteen Days, with “ some Trouble upon the Importunity and Artifice “ he saw used to prevail with the King to go to “ Charenton, tho' he saw no Disposition in his Ma“ jesty to yield to it.

“ The Lord Fermyn still pressed it, as a thing “ that ought in Policy and Discretion to be done, “ to reconcile that People which was a great Body “ in France to the King's Service, which would “ draw to him all the foreign Churches, and there“ by he might receive considerable Assistance. He “ wonder'd, he said, why it should be opposed by “ any Man, since he did not wish that his Majesty “ would discontinue his own Devotions according “ to the Course he had always observ'd, nor pro“ pose that he should often repair thither, but on“ ly sometimes, at least once, to shew that he did “ look upon them as of the same Religion with “ him, which the Church of England had always “ acknowledg'd; and that it had been an Instructi“ on to the English Ambassadors, that they should “ keep a good Correspondence with those of the “ Religion, and frequently resort to Divine Service “ at Charenton, where they had always a Pew kept “ for them.

“ The Chancellor of the Exchequer dissuaded “ his Majesty from going thither with equal Ear“ nestness: told him, That whatever Countenance “ or Favour the Crown or Church of England had “ heretofore shew'd to those Congregations, it was “ in a time when they carried themselves with Mo“ desty and Duty towards both, and when they “ profess'd great Duty to the King, and much Re“ verence to that Church; lamenting themselves, “ that it was not in their Power, by the Opposition “ of the State, to make their Reformation so perfect “ as it was in England. And by this kind of Beha“ viour they had indeed receiv'd the Protection and “ Countenance from England as if they were of the “ same Religion, tho', it may be, the Original of “ that Countenance and Protection proceeded from “ another less warrantable Foundation; which he “ was sure would never find Credit from His Ma“ jesty. But, whatever it was, that People, now “ had undeserv'd it from the King; for, as soon as “ the Troubles began, the Huguenots of France had “ generally express'd great Malice to the late King, “ and very many of their Preachers and Ministers “ had publicly and industriously justified the Re“ bellion, and pray'd for the good Success of it:
“ and their Synod it self had in such a manner in“ veigh'd against the Church of England, that they, “ upon the matter, profess'd themselves to be of “ another Religion; and inveigh'd against Episco“ pacy, as if it were inconsistent with the Prote“ stant Religion: That one of their great Profes“ sors at their University of Saumur, who was look“ ed upon as a Man of the most moderate Spirit “ amongst their Ministers, had publish'd an Apo“ logy for the general Inclination of that Party to “ the Proceedings of the Parliament of England, “ lest it might give some Jealousie to their own “ King, of their Inclination to Rebellion, and of “ their Opinion that it was lawful for Subjects to “ take up Arms against their Prince; which, he “ said, could not be done in France without mani“ fest Rebellion, and incurring the Displeasure of “ God for the manifest Breach of his Command“ ments, because the King of France is an absolute “ King, independent upon any other Authority: “ but that the Constitution of the Kingdom of Eng“ land was of another Nature, because the King “ there is subordinate to the Parliament, which hath “ Authority to raise Arms for the Reformation of “ Religion, or for the executing the publick Justice “ of the Kingdom against all those who violate the “ Laws of the Nation: so that the War might be “ just there, which in no case could be warranted “ in France.

“ The Chancellor told the King, That after such “ an Indignity offer'd to him, and to his Crown, “ and since they had now made such a Distinction “ between the Episcopal and the Presbyterian Go“ vernment, that they thought the Professors were “ not of the same Religion, his going to Charenton “ could not be without this effect; that it would be “ concluded every where, that his Majesty thought “ the one or the other Profession to be indifferent: “ which would be one of the most deadly Wounds “ to the Church of England that it had ever yet suf-“ fer'd. These Reasons prevail'd so far with the “ King's own natural Aversion from what had been “ propos'd, that he declared positively, He would “ never go to Charenton: which Determination eas“ ed him from any farther Application of that “ People. The Reproach of this Resolution was “ wholly charged upon the Chancellour of the Ex“ chequer, as the implacable Enemy of all Presby“ terians, and as the only Man who diverted the “ King from having a good Opinion of them; “ whereas, in truth, the daily Information he re-“ ceiv'd from the King himself of their barbarous “ Behaviour in Scotland towards him, and of their “ insupportable Pride and Pedantry in their Man“ ners, did confirm him in the Judgment he had “ always made of their Profession: and he was the “ more grievous to those of that Profession, because “ they could not, as they used to do all those who “ oppos'd and cross'd them in that manner, accuse “ him of being Popishly affected, and govern'd by “ the Papists, to whom they knew he was equally “ odious: and the Queen knowing him to be most “ disaffected to her Religion, made her willing to “ appear most displeas'd for his hindering the King “ from going to Charenton.

“ The Affairs of Religion (if Faction and multi“ plied Separation may be so called) are not worthy “ a distinct View. Socinianism began to make a Sect “ among the common People; and for that purpose “ the Craconian Catechism was done into the Vulgar “ Tongue, for the Instruction of Men, Women, and “ Children. This being represent'd to the Parliament, “ they could do no less than Vote on April 6. that the “ said Catechism did contain Matters that are blasphemous, “ erroneous, and scandalous; and therefore order, “ that all the printed Copies of that Book be burned by the “ common Hangman.

“ The Payment of Tithes was thought a continual “ Grievance to the Country People, and made the “ Subject of repeated Petitions to the Parliament, who “ were forced often to promise a Redress, even against “ the Judgment and Intention of the majority of “ Members. And so for a Pretence of Ease and Qui“ et, they refer'd it May 4. to a Committee, to con“ sider how a competent Maintenance for godly Ministers “ may be settled in lieu of Tithes. And in these Debates, “ there was this Good arising out of Evil: The Lay “ Improprators in the House would never consent to “ extinguish their own Interest, how indifferent so“ ever for the Inheritance of the Church and Main“ tenance of the Clergy. As in the Beginnings of “ our Reformation, Popery was kept out as much by “ the Tenure of Church-Lands, as by any better Prin“ ciple.

“ more in the Hearts of the People, and in the Voice “ of the Parliament, and especially in the Ardicions “ of Crommel and his Army: nay even in Scotland, the “ Kirk, that had exalted herself against Princes, could “ not stand against the People, but grew into Con“ tempt and Ridicule. They made their little Efforts “ of Jurisdiction to end in nothing but Jest or Riot.
“ The Synod of Edinburgh drew up a Paper, titled, “ A Testimony against the present invading of the Civil “ Power upon the Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction. And the

“ the Resolutions and Proceedings of the Civil Power, th

1653. And at Perth the Synod sent out their Letters of Citation to the several Presbyters and People who had thewn their Contempt, or expressed their Dislike of the Holy Discipline: But on the Day of Appearance, the Men wilfully absented, and their Wives came to answer for them; who, to the Number of above 120 came with Broom-sticks and Spits, and other Utensils, and besieged the Church where the reverend Assembly sat; who, on this Alarm, sent out one of the gravest Presbyters to treat with the Women: But he taking the wrong way, in threatening to Excommunicate all of them, they first beat him severely, and then bound him their close Prisoner, and fell upon the rest of the Brethren, bruising their Bodies, and taking away all their Books and Baggage, and making the Synod-Clerk forswear his Office. And the only Satisfaction, as we are told, was this, That 13 of the Presbyters rallied about 4 Miles from the Place, and voted, That this Village should never more have a Synod kept in it, but be accursed; and, That altho' in the Year 1638 and 1639 the Godly Women were called up for stoning the Bishops, yet the whole Sex should be now esteemed wicked. Thus the Stool thrown by a Woman's Hand, in the Church of Edinburgh, at the Dean and the Common-Prayer, was now improved into Clubs and Staffs, in the same hands, against Presbyters and Synods.

The Women beat the Presbyters.

1653. On April 19. Cromwel invited to his Lodgings in Whitehal the choicest of his Friends in the Parliament and Army, and proposed the Subject of Debate, to find out some expedient for the better carrying on the Government of the Common-wealth, and how to put a Period to the present Parliament. Some few (among whom were Sir Thomas Widdrington and Commissioner Whitlock) represented the dangers of dissolving the Parliament, and the difficulties of setting up any other Form of Government. But the General and his Officers, and several of the Members let into the Secret, declared their Opinion, that it was necessary to take some new Measures; and that it was not fit the present Assembly of Parliament should be permitted to prolong their own Power. No conclusion being made, the Junto was adjourn'd to next Morning, when most of them met again in the same place, and the Question in Debate was, Whether forty Persons, or about that number of Parliament Men and Officers of the Army, should be nominated by the Parliament, and impower'd for the managing the Affairs of the Common-wealth, till a new Parliament should meet, and so the present Parliament be forthwith dissolved? Cromwel had sent his Intimations to the House then sitting, that during this Debate at his Lodgings, they should put a Period to themselves, which would be the most honourable Dissolution for them. Colonel Ingoltsby was the chief Member sent by Cromwel to the House, to suggest to them this Project of a voluntary Dissolution: But he came back to Whitehal and informed his General, that the House instead of coming to any Resolutions of dissolving, were in the Debates of other Business which must be adjourned to farther Meetings, and occasion their much longer sitting. Cromwel was so enraged at this Demur, that he presently commanded some of the Officers of the Army to fetch a Party of Soldiers, with which he marched directly to Westminster, and placing his Men of Arms some at the Door and some in the Lobby, and others on the Stairs, he led one File of Musketers into the House with him, and there looking round with great Fury, he commanded the Speaker to leave his Chair, and told the House, that they had sate long enough unless they had done more good; that some of them were Whoremasters (looking with insult upon Harry Martin and Sir Peter Wentworth) that others of them were Drunkards, and some Corrupt and Unjust Men, and Scandalous to the profession of the Gospel, charging Sir Harry Vane with his breach of Faith and Corruption; and telling them all positively, that it was not fit they should sit as a Parliament any longer, and therefore he must desire them to go away. The Speaker presuming to sit still, Colonel Harrison

The Parliament not willing to dissolve themselves.

Cromwel dissolves them by force of Arms.

1653. took him by the Arm and forced him to leave the Chair. Some of the Members rose up to answer Cromwel's Speech, but he would suffer none to speak but himself; which he did with so much Arrogance and so great Reproach to his Fellow-Members, that some of his own Creatures were ashamed of it. Amongst all the Parliament Men, of whom many wore Swords, and would often boast high of their Valour in defence of Liberty and Property, not one Man offered to draw his Sword, or to make the least resistance, but all of them tamely departed the House. Cromwel bid one of the Soldiers take away the Fool's Bauble the Mace, and staid himself to see all the Members out of the House, himself the last of them, and then caused the Doors of the House to be shut up. When the Members thus ejected and exploded came with confusion to their own homes, they had leisure to consider many things, what an outcry they made, when their lawful Sovereign came singly and peaceably into that House, to demand the legal Appearance of a few Members to a Charge of Treason against them: And yet now a fellow Subject, a fellow Member, enters their House with armed Men in a Hostile manner, and without any special Accusation, calls them all Rogues and Sots and Fools, and with the utmost Indignity turns them by the Arms and Elbows out of Doors. How zealous they had been for their own indissoluble Being, how they had extorted from the King his lawful Prerogative of putting an end to them without their own consent; and yet now without a Question ask'd, or a Vote put, at a Word and a Blow they are bid to march off by an Officer, who had his Commission from them, and was in proper Subjection to them. How forward they were to have the sole Sovereignty and Legislature, a Parliament of the Commons of England without King or Lords, that they might have no controul nor competition from any other Power; when yet a Commoner of England commission'd to be their Servant becomes a most absolute Master of them, bids them go at a Word and they are gone, in the most ignominious manner.

1653. Car. II. They tamely submit and depart.

And had leisure to reflect.

The most amazing thing is this, that after the Members were thus with the last Contempt and Infamy expell'd, they never offer'd to meet in a Body, nor so much as in separate Clubs, to think how to reunite themselves, but crumbled away to their respective homes, with a silence that confess their Guilt and the just Punishment of it: Nay, and the common People never once interposed by any Tumult, or so much as by any Petition, but let them drop without a Word or a With to save them. So as they who had commanded the Mob in Routs and Libels, against the King, Bishops and Nobility, were now deserted by them in their extrem Agonies, and suffered to expire without one Sigh or Groan.

The Members all silent.

Cromwel and his Council of Officers did not so much want a Vindication of what they had done as a quieting Declaration of what they did intend to do. Hence they publish'd an Account of their Proceeding and Intention, beginning with sufficient intimation, that the whole Government was devolv'd upon the General and his Army by right of Conquest; then casting very abundant Reflections upon the Members who had designed to perpetuate their own Power; and so justifying the necessity of putting an end to such a self-seeking Parliament, promising to put the Government into the Hands of Persons of approved Fidelity and Honesty; and in the mean time declaring that all Magistrates and Officers whatsoever shall proceed in their respective Places and Offices, and Obedience shall be paid to them as fully as when the Parliament was sitting. Signed in the Name and by the Appointment of his Excellency the Lord-General and his Council of Officers, Whitehall Ap. 22. 1653.

Cromwel tho' encouraged by many Congratulations for dissolving the Parliament, and by many Addresses from the Fleet and Army and People to stand by him and his Council of Officers, yet thought it not time enough to assume the Government to his own Person.

 According to this novel Edi&ct on July 4. the feveral obfcure Perfons thus fummon'd, did appear in the Council-Chamber at Whitehal, to the number of about 120, and being fet round the Table, Cromwel ftanding with his Officers made a Speech to them, fhewing the caufe of their Summons, and telling 'em, they had a clear Call to take on 'em the Supreme Authority of the Common-wealth, quoting abundance of Scripture to admonifh them to do their Duties. And then he produced an Inftrument in Writing, under his own Hand and Seal, to conftitute and acknowledge them, or any forty of them, to be the fupreme Authority of this Nation. Then he and his Officers withdrew and the Perfons fo commiffion'd to be a Parliament, adjourn'd themfelves to the next Day to meet in the Parliament-Houfe; where they refolv'd That Mr.
 Rous fhould be their Speaker for one Month, and Mr.
 Scobel be their Clerk; and in fubmiffion to their Lords and Mafters, they gave a nomination to thofe who had nominated them, ordering that General Cromwel and his chief Officers Lambert, Harrifon, Desborough and Tomlinfon, fhould fit in the Houfe as Members.
 The Lord Clarendon gives this Character of the Speaker. " He was an old Gentleman of Devonfhire,

 " and in that time been prefer'd and made Provost of " the College of Eaton, which Office he then enjoy'd,

 And thus under the name of a Parliament, they kept a Day of Humiliation and Prayer in the Houfe, and published a Declaration to ftir up the godly of the Nation to feek God for a Bleffing upon their Proceedings.
 But not able to compofe a diftracted Nation, and not willing to come up to the ambitious Hopes of Cromwel, it was moved in the Houfe Decemb. 13. That the fitting of this Parliament any longer would not be for the good of the Common-wealth; and that it would be more fit for them to refign up their Powers to the Lord-General.
 The Houfe rifing without a full Refolution what to do, the Speaker with his Mace, attended by fome Members, went to Whitehal on Decemb. 12. and gave up their Inftrument of Commiffion, and prefented to his Excellency a Refignation under their Hands of all the Parliamentary Powers lately repofed in them. 1652.

 This Parliament was afterward called, Praife God 5 Car. II.
Barebone's Parliament, from a Leatherfeller of that Name in Fleet-ftreet, who was an eminent Speaker in it. They were generally a pack of weak fenfelefs Fellows, fit only to bring the Name and Reputation of Parliaments lower than it was yet.

In this new vacancy Cromwel called again his Council of Officers, and advis'd with them, How this great burthen of governing England, Scotland and Ireland, with the Armies therein, and the Navies at Sea fhould be born, and by whom? They fpent feveral Days in feeking of God, as the Phrafe then was, and did at laft refolve, That a Council of godly, able and difcreet Perfons fhould be named, confifing of twenty one; and that the Lord-General fhould be chofen Lord Protector of the three Nations.

Upon this arbitrary Refult an Inftrument was drawn up entituled, The Government of the Commonwealth of England, Scotland and Ireland; declaring, that the fupreme legislative Authority of the faid Commonwealth and the Dominions thereto belonging, fhall be and refide in one Perfon and the People affembld in Parliament, the Style of which Perfon fhall be Lord Protector of the Common-wealth of England, Scotland and Ireland.
 Then putting the Militia and executive Power into the Hands of the Protector, and providing for a new Parliament to meet on Sept. 2. 1654. and fucceffive Parliaments every third Year; the Members to be chofen according to the proportions and numbers hereafter exprest, that is to fay, for the County of Bedford fix, viz. for the Town of Bedford one, for the County of Bedford five, &c. Then conftituting a fe-lect Council of State, and ordaining that the Office of the Lord-Protector fhall be Elective and not Hereditary, and concluding with a forty fecond Article in thefe Words, That each Perfon of the Council fhall before they enter upon their Truft, take and fubfcribe an Oath, that they will be true and faithful in their Truft, according to the beft of their Knowledge: And that in the Election of every fucceffive Lord-Protector, they fhall proceed therein impartially, and do nothing therein for any Promife, Fear, Favour or Reward.

By this Compact on Decemb. 16. Cromwel was conducted in great Pomp to the Court of Chancery, where a Chair of State was placed for him, and he flood by it till the Inftrument was read, and the Oath adminifter'd to him, and fubfcribed by him.
 Then he put on his Hat as the only enfigh of Authority, and took poffeffion of the Chair; then the Com-miffioners deliver'd up the Great-Seal to him, and the Lord Mayor his Sword and Cap, which were immediately returned to him; then he went back to Whitehal, the Lord-Mayor himfelf uncover'd carrying the Sword before him. And all other Ceremonies and Refpects were paid to him as to a Sovereign Prince. With fo much eafe did a People become enflav'd to a Fellow-Subject Ufarper, when they had fpent fo much Treafure and Blood in fhaking off the Yoke of a lawful King.

Cromwel was encouraged to be more Abfolute by Addreffes from all parts of the three Kingdoms, by a magnificent Entertainment in the City of London upon Wednefday, when he Knighted the Lord-Mayor with as much Grace as if he had been the King; and by the Application of Foreign States and Kingdoms in as ample manner as if he had been a crown'd Head. His Authority was indeed greater, for in this interval of Parliament he and his Council made their Ordinances as if they had been the Acts of a Legiflature.

The King in Exile at Paris was fo unfortunate as to be able to take no Advantage of all thefe Convul-fions in the Government of England, tho' he had great hopes from the States of Holland and the King of Denmark, then in War with the English Commonwealth; but the Dutch Fleet was fo miferably beat in feveral Engagements, that before the end of the Year they were glad to fue for Peace. The Lord Robtson at the Diet of Ratisbon had procured a confiderable

1653. Sum of Money from the German Princes, and a Promise from the Emperour to assist the King as soon as his Affairs would permit. The French King was very kind and hospitable; but the Policies of Cardinal Mazarine were to be jealous of Monarchy restored in England, and for that reason inclined to an Amity with all the usurping Powers; upon which the Intrigues between him and Cromwel grew so familiar, that the King, instead of hoping for Supplies, could no longer hope for Protection in the French Court. There were some little Efforts of Loyalty made in the Highlands of Scotland, where the Earls of Glencarne, Seaforth, and Arbol, and others with Commissions and Instructions from the King, were raising Parties for him; and were recruited by Major General Middleton, who came over from Holland, and join'd with them. But they could form nothing but a flying Camp, and raise the vigilant Jealousies of Cromwel; who, to prevent their Advances, took off Monk from the Navy, and sent him again his Lieutenant General into Scotland, as he now did his own Son Henry Cromwel into Ireland.

The Victories at Sea this Year were not only to the Grandeur of Cromwel, but to the Honour of the English Nation. The Protector made this only good Use of Arbitrary Power, That without the Aid of Parliament, he did, without waiting for Money or Advice, cause a strong Fleet to be provided against this Spring, and committed it to the joint Command of three Admirals, Blake, Monk, and Dean. This Fleet, in the beginning of June, engag'd the Dutch under Van-Trump, about the middle Seas over between Dover and Zealand; and by not discharging their Guns till at a very small distance, they broke their Squadrons, and forc'd them to fly, and make all the Sail they could to their own Coasts, leaving eleven of their Ships taken, and six sunk. The Loss of the English was only in Admiral Dean, who was kill'd with a Canon Shot: Their Ships were all safe, and all able to pursue the Dutch, and block them up in their own Harbours. Yet Admiral Trump, who with some of the shatter'd Fleet had got into the Wierings, did with great Industry so far repair and recruit his Losses, that by the end of July he came out with a Fleet of 97 Men of War; and being join'd with 25 more from the Texel, he gave the English another Battle, which continued very hot from Six in the Morning to One in the Afternoon, when Admiral Van-Trump, signally performing the Office of a brave and bold Commander, was shot with a Musket-bullet into the Heart, of which he fell dead, without speaking a Word. This Blow made the Dutch fly toward the Texel, having lost between 20 and 30 of their Ships fir'd or sunk, and above 1200 Prisoners taken. By these two signal Victories, Cromwel brought the Dutch to accept of such Conditions of Peace as he thought fit to give them; among which, one was, That they should not suffer any of the King's Party, or any Enemy to the Commonwealth of England, to reside within their Dominions: and another, which was contained in a secret Article, to which the Great Seal of the States was affix'd, was, Never to admit the Prince of Orange to be their Stadt-Holder, General, or Admiral: and likewise, To deliver up the Island of Pulerone in the East-Indies (which they had taken from the English in the time of King James, and usurp'd it ever since) into the Hands of the East-India English Company again; and, To pay a good Sum of Money for the old barbarous Violence exercised upon the English at Amboyna; for which the two last Kings could never obtain any Satisfaction. And by the like Terrors of a Conquerour, he forced Portugal to send an Ambassadour to beg Peace, and to purchase it by the Payment of a great Sum of Money; and brought the two Crowns of France and Spain to sue for his Alliance. Nay, and while the Portugal Ambassadour was soliciting the Terms of Peace, his own Brother Don Pontaleon Sr., a Knight of Malta, and a Man eminent in many great Actions, making a Riot upon the Exchange, wherein a Man was kill'd, was made to submit (in spite of the Pretences of Privilege and Protection) to a Trial, and an Execution on a Scaffold upon Tower-Hill.

The Spirit and the very Face of Religion were cover'd, and in a manner extinguish'd: No Mean, but all Enthusiasm or Profaneness, and both in perfection. April 5. it was order'd by the House, that a certain number of Ministers and others be appointed to sit in every County, to Examine, Judge, and Approve all such Persons as shall be called to Preach the Gospel. This Court of Triers was more formally establish'd by an Ordinance of the Lord Protector, with Consent of his Council, March 20. wherein the first Test for Approbation was, to adjudge whether the Grace of God was in the Person: Hence this holy Inquisition was turn'd into a Snare to catch the Men of Probity and Sense, and sound Divinity; and to let none escape but the Ignorant, Bold, Canting Fellows. For these Triers ask'd few or no Questions in Knowledge and Learning, but only about Conversion and Grace in the Heart; to which, the readiest Answers would arise from Infatuation in some, and the Trade of Hypocrisy in others. By which means, the Right of Patronage was at their arbitrary Pleasure, and the Character and Ability of Divines was whatever they pleas'd to make 'em; and Churches were filled all with little Creatures of the State.

In that illegal and most irregular Assembly, summon'd by Cromwel, and commonly call'd Barebone's Parliament, a Spirit of Confusion had been working to take away the Maintenance and the very Office of the Ministry. Tithes were now at last resolv'd to be Antichristian, and fit to be abolish'd: in order to which, on July 15. they learnedly debated the Propriety of Tithes, whether the Title and strict Property of 'em was in the State, or in particular Persons? But that which gave them the greatest Difficulty was, to find an Expedient for satisfying Impropriators, i. e. for saving themselves, and for providing some Maintenance for the Ministry; i. e. for their own Creatures, who must have otherwise come upon their own Parishes. And on July 22. they referred it to a Committee to consider of the Laws that hinder the Progress of the Gospel, and to repeal them; i. e. to take away all the few remaining Rules of Decency and Order. The City of London were so sensible of this Tide, that they endeavoured to stem it; and Sept. 2. a Petition was presented to the House in the Name of the Mayor, Aldermen, and Common Council, praying, That the precious Truths of the Gospel may be preserved in Purity; and the Dispensers thereof being approved to be Learned, Godly, and void of Offence, may be sent forth to preach the Gospel: That their settled Maintenance by Law may be confirmed, and their just Properties preserved; and that the Universities may be zealously countenanc'd and encourag'd. By whose good Example, another Petition was presented in the Name of the Freeholders and others of Hampshire, praying for a Support and Encouragement of the Ministry, and for the Continuance of Tithes, being above five hundred Years growth, and confirm'd by Magna Charta, &c. And so at last the only Objection against Tithes did become the Preservation of them, i. e. the Interest of Impropriators, and the Voice of the People.

This Parliament (for so it must be called) was made up most of the Independent Faction, to whom the Congregational Churches were humble Suitors for Liberty and Protection against the Presbyterians; and did obtain a Vote, that there should be a Declaration for giving fit Liberty to all that fear God, and for preventing the Abuses against Magistrates, and for Preservation of such as fear God among themselves, without imposing the one upon the other; and for discountenancing Blasphemies, damnable Heresies, and licentious Practices. And yet nothing could have been more damnable and licentious than what we are told was under their Deliberation, "That no Courts of Equity or Justice, in the common Course, should re-

Cromwell's Religion was to Reign. How little Religion was the Concern or so much as any longer the Pretence of Cromwell and his Council of Officers, does appear from this, that in the large Instrument of the Government of the Commonwealth committed to the Protector, which was the very Magna Charta of the new Constitution, in forty two Chapters there is not a Word of Churches or Synods or Ministers, nor any thing but the Christian Religion in general, with Liberty to all differing in Judgment from the Doctrine, Worship or Discipline publickly held forth.

Kirk of Scotland contemptible. Nay and the Kirk of Scotland was as low and contemptible as the Presbytery in England; for when the General-Assembly met at Edinburgh July 25. as soon as the Sermon was done, and the Presbyters and Elders gone to the Assembly-House, and enter'd upon their Business, Lieut. Col. Cottrel in his Military Figure went in to them, and standing up on a Bench, told them, that no Judicatory ought to sit that had not Authority from the Parliament of England, and without giving them leave to plead their Divine Right, he turned them forth into the Street, and then led them Prisoners with a Troop of Horse and Company of Foot out of the City at the West Gate. He then brought them all into a close Ring, and so environing them with his armed Men, he rebuked them severely for their bold Meeting, took in their Commissions, charg'd them to quit the City before eight a clock, and repair every one to his own home, and never to meet again so much as three of them in a Company. Thus righteously were Schism and Rebellion chastised, those Presbyters who would assemble and rule in spite of their Bishops and their King, were now dissolved by an Officer or Layman and Soldier.

1654. Cromwell takes the first universal Parliament of England, Scotland and Ireland. The Lord-Protector to confirm himself in his new Government, resolv'd to unite the three Kingdoms into one Commonwealth, to be the more easily manag'd by him the sole Head. So with consent of his Council he made an Ordinance April 12. setting forth " How he had took into consideration, that the People of Scotland ought to be united with the People of England into one Commonwealth, and under one Government; and had found that in December 1651. the Parliament then sitting had sent Commissioners into Scotland to invite the People of that Nation unto such a happy Union, who proceeded so far therein, that the Shires and Boroughs did accept of the said Union, and assent thereunto; for the compleating and perfecting which Union, he now ordained, that all the People of Scotland, and of all the Dominions and Territories thereto belonging, should be incorporated into one Commonwealth with England: And in every Parliament to be held successively for the said Commonwealth, thirty Persons should be called from, and serve for Scotland, &c. And a like Ordinance was soon after made for a like distribution of thirty Members from Ireland, to serve in the Parliament at Westminster. So much greater was the Power of a Usurper than that of lawful Princes.

He frights all foreign Kingdoms and States. And to strenghten himself the more at home, he made a Peace with Holland, and let Denmark be taken into the Treaty, upon the good Terms of making the States responsible for one hundred and forty thousand Pounds, to repair the damage done by the Danes to the English. Then by the Negotiations of Ambassador Whitlock, he made a firm Alliance with Sweden, and brought the French Court to send over a Lord Ambassador to propose and even to sue for his Alliance; and terrified the Portugal Ambassador into a ready signing the Articles of Peace between his Master and this Commonwealth and Protector, even on that very Day when his own Brother was Beheaded for a Riot and Murder upon Tower-hill. He had no Enemy abroad but Spain, against whom he prepared 1654. 6 Car. II. a Fleet and Army to attack their West-Indies, which gave such an alarm, that the Spanish Ambassador till then at London applied himself to his Excellency, to know whether he had any just ground of Complaint against the King his Master, and if so, he was ready to give him all possible Satisfaction. Cromwell, as if he were now to give Laws to the old and the new World, demanded no less than a Liberty of trading freely to all parts of the West-Indies, and the Court of Inquisition to be abolished thro' all the Spanish Territories. To which the Ambassador replied, that his Master had but two Eyes, and he must not suffer them to be both put out at once. So the Expedition went on, the Fleet commanded by Vice-Admiral Pen, and the Army by Colonel Venables; their Descent on Hispaniola having no Success nor Honour, they took the Island of Jamaica; but the General and Admiral had been so divided in their Counsels, that after their return they were both put under Confinement by their absolute Master.

Cromwell in effect chuses his own Parliament. The Protector's greatest Game was to manage the approaching Parliament, to this purpose he expressly fixt upon the set of Members to be sent out of Scotland and Ireland, where the shew of Election was made to concur with his express Nomination. And even in England where Liberty was to be a little more pretended, he had such an influence upon the People, and such an awe upon the Sheriffs and Magistrates, that very few were returned Disagreeable to his own Desires. And then to purge out those few, he brought the Trial of Elections into a Committee of his own Council before the opening of the Parliament. So that by the time of sitting they were all to appearance right and true, except the Lord Grey of Grooby, Mr. John Wildman, Mr. Highbury and one or two other inflexible Republicans, whom therefore by his own Will and Pleasure he excluded from the House.

Opening of this Parliament. Sept. 3. (tho' it fell upon a Sunday) Cromwell, who thought it his fortunate Day, would have to be the opening of the Parliament, and made the Members after hearing a Sermon in the Abby, wait upon him in the Painted-Chamber, where he made a Speech to them of the cause of their Summons, and so sent them to their House to adjourn to the next Day. On which he had a second opening in the most solemn Monarchical manner; he was drawn in a Coach of State (in which his Son Henry and Lambert sat with him bare) many hundreds of Gentlemen and Officers walking uncover'd, and next before the Coach his Pages and Lackeys in splendid Liveries on each side of the Coach, Strickland and Howard Captains of his Guards; after the Coach Claypole Master of the Horse with a led Horse richly trapp'd, then the Commissioners of the Seal and of the Treasury, and all the principal Men of his Council and Army. He alighted at the Abby Door, and had the Purse carried before him by Whitlock and the Sword by Lambert, and was placed in a Seat raised before the Pulpit, the Members of Parliament being disposed on each side of him. After a Sermon preach'd by Mr. Thomas Goodwyn, his Highness went in the same Equipage to the Painted-Chamber, where being seated on a Chair of State, with the Members sitting round upon Benches all bare, he rose up and made a long Speech to them, telling them first of the Danger of the levelling Principles, and of the Fifth Monarchy Opinions, and of the form of Godliness, and the two bad pretensions, Liberty of the Subject and Liberty of Conscience. Then he reminded them of the great Judgments that had fell upon the Nation by the Civil Wars, and by the late Foreign Wars, and gave them to understand, that the Remedy and Deliverance was owing to him. Then he reckon'd up his own Merits, how he had reformed the Laws, and put good Men into Seats of Justice, and regulated the Chancery, and settled a way for the approbation of able Ministers, and had been instrumental to call a new Parliament; had made Peace with Sweden, with the Danes, with the Dutch, with Portugal, and was now in a Treaty with France. Then he bid them take notice of the great Expence of the Forces and the Fleet;

1654. and ended thus, I shall conclude with my persuasion to

 chosen Speaker.

After he had done, the Members went to their House and chose the old Speaker Mr. Lenthall Master of the Rolls, and appointed a Day of Humiliation for the credit of beginning with Religion. The Ld Clarendon observes, "That their Agreement in chu-sing Lenthall to be their Speaker was upon very disagreeing Principles. Cromwel having design'd him for Luks-fake, and being well acquainted with his Temper, concluded that he would be made a Property in this as well as he had been in the Long-Parliament, when he always complied with that Party that was most powerful. And the other Persons who meant nothing that Cromwel did, were well pleas'd out of hope, that the same Man's being in the Chair might facilitate the renewing and reviving the former House, which they look'd upon as the true legitimate Parliament, frangled by the Tyranny of Cromwel, and yet that it had Life enough left in it.

Their next business was to take into consideration the New Articles of Government; but the Protector finding that instead of immediate Confirmation they fell into Debating and Reasoning about them, he sent for them to the Painted-Chamber Sept. 12. and told them, "That at their first meeting he had much more Comfort and Hopes of them than he had now: He was very sorry to find them falling into Heats and Divisions; but they must remember, that the same Government which made them a Parliament made him Protector; and there were some things in the Government Fundamental, which could not be alter'd by them: they were
 1. The Government in one Person and a Parliament. 2. Parliaments not to be perpetual. 3.
 The Militia in the Protector as well as in the Parliament. 4. A Liberty of Conscience in matters of Religion. That therefore they must not meddle with any of these fundamental things: And to prevent their doing so, he was necessitated to appoint them a Test or Recognition of the Government in a Protector and a Common-wealth, which they should all sign before they went any more into the House.

The Form of the Recognition was this: I A. B. do hereby freely promise and engage myself, to be True and Faithful to the Lord Protector and the Common-wealth of England, Scotland and Ireland, and shall not (according to the Tenour of the Indenture whereby I am return'd to serve in this present Parliament) propose or give any consent to alter the Government, as it is settled in one single Person and a Parliament. This being ingross'd in Parchment, was laid on a Table for the Members to sign, before they should be qualified to sit. And of those who refus'd, they were not only excluded the House, but were some of them taken into Custody, among whom was the Protector's late greatest Creature, Major General Harrison, now in Custody of a Party of Horse. This terrified them into this unanimous Vote Sept. 19. That the supreme Legislative Authority shall reside in a Lord Protector and the People assembled in Parliament; and that the present Lord Pro-tektor shall continue during Life; and brought them to a long Debate, Whether the Office of Protector should be Elective or Hereditary? But resolving it should be Elective, and placing the nomination in a Parliament, and voting, that no Law should be alter'd or repeal'd, nor new Laws made, nor any Tax impos'd, but by assent of Parliament: These and other Claims of Li-berly made the Protector weary of them; so he required them to attend him in the Painted-Chamber January 22. and dissolv'd them with a most tedious and intricate Speech, beginning thus.

Gentlemen,

Perceive you are here as the House of Parliament, by your Speaker, whom I see here, and by your Faces, which are in a great measure known to me. There be some Trees that will not grow under the shadow of other Trees; there be some that chuse (a Man may say so by way of Allusion) to thrive under the shadow of other Trees. I will tell you what hath thriven, I will not say what you have cherish'd under your shadow, that were too hard. Instead of the Peace and Settlement, instead of Mercy and Truth being brought together, Righteousness and Peace kissing each other, by reconciling the honest People of these Nations, and settling the woful Distempers that are amongst us (which had been glorious things, and worthy of Christians to have propos'd) Weeds and Nettles, Briers and Thorns have thriven under your shadow, Dissentment and Division, Discontentment and Dissatisfaction, together with real Dangers to the whole, has been mere multiplied within these five Months of your sitting than in some Years before. Foundations have been also laid for the future renewing the Troubles of these Nations by all the Enemies of it abroad and at home. Let not these Words seem too sharp, for they are true, as any Mathematical Demonstrations are or can be. I have troubled you with a long Speech, and I believe it may not have the same Resentment with all that it hath with some; but because that is unknown to me, I shall leave it to God, and conclude with that, that I think myself bound in my Duty to God, and the People of these Nations, to their Safety and Good in every respect; I think it my Duty to tell you, that it is not for the profit of these Nations, nor for common and publick Good, for you to continue here any longer: and therefore I do declare unto you, that I do dissolve this Parliament.

 His Speech
 at dissolving.

This upbraiding and insulting way of Dissolution was so very unpopular, that the Protector could never have betrayed himself into it, if his Pride and Passion had not sunk his Judgment and Experience of the People of England. It gave encouragement to the Royalists and Indignation to the Republicans:
 So that both Parties for King and Common-wealth were in Rage and Plots and Arms against him. Major John Wildman, whom he had expelled the House at first opening of the Session, as much an Enemy to the King as to this Usurper, was seized with a Paper dictated by him, entituled, The Declaration of the Free and Well-affected People of England, now in Arms against the Tyrant Oliver Cromwel, Esq;. "Being satisfied in our Judgment and Consciences of the present necessity to take up Arms for the defence of our Native Rights and Freedoms, which are wholy invaded and swallowed up in the Pride and Ambition of Oliver Cromwel, who calls himself Lord Protector of England, and hath render'd all English-men no better than his Vassals, &c.

Wildman's Declarati-
 on.

The Character of John Wildman and the Account of this Intrigue is thus given by the Lord Clarendon.
 He had been bred a Scholar in the University of Cambridge, and being young and of a pregnant Wit, in the beginning of the Rebellion meant to make his Fortune in the War, and chose to depend upon Cromwel's Countenance and Advice, when he was not above the degree of a Captain of a Troop of Horse himself, and was much esteem'd and valued by him, and made an Officer, and was so active in contriving and fomenting Jeal-ousies and Discontents, and so dexterous in composing or improving any disgusts, and so inspired with the Spirit of Praying and Preaching, when those Gifts came into request, and became thriving Arts, that about the time when the King was taken from Holmby, and it was necessary that the Army should enter into Contests with the Parliament, John Wildman grew to be one of the principal Agitators, and was most relied upon by Cromwel to insufe those things into the Minds of the Soldiers, and to conduct them in the management of their Discontents, as might most advance those Designs he then had; and quickly got the “ first kindled the Fire between the Parliament and “ the Army, that was not afterwards extinguished “ but in the Ruin of both. His Reputation in those “ Faculties made him quit the Army, where he was “ become a Major, and where he kept still a great “ Interest, and betake himself to Civil Affairs, in “ the Solicitation of Suits depending in the Parliam“ ent, or before Committees, where he had much “ Credit with those who had most Power to do “ Right or Wrong, and so made himself necessary “ to those who had need of such Protection from “ the Tyranny of the time. By these Arts he thriv“ ed, and got much more than he could have done “ in the Army, and kept and encreased his Credit “ there, by the Interest he had in other places.

“ When Cromwel declined the Ways of establishing “ the Commonwealth, Wildman, amongst the rest, “ forsook him; and enter'd, warily, into any Coun-

“ the Dissolution of this last Parliament, having

“ he did believe he should be able to make such a “ Schism in the Army, as would give an Oppor“ tunity to other enraged Persons to take Venge“ ance upon him.

Cromwel's Arts to save himself.

But from a universal Odium Cromwel saved himself, by paying well the Fleet and Army, and discharging all Officers whose Fidelity he could suspect; by carrying it very fair with the City of London, giving them the Power of their own Militia, under their own old Leader Major Skippon; treating them, and accepting of Treats from them; by easing the common People from some customary Burdens, and some part of their Taxes; and by an indefatigable Industry and unbounded Expence in procuring Intelligence, and early crushing all Designs against him. So that tho' his Mother (who died this Year) was continually afraid of her Son's Life, and when she heard the Noise of any Gun, would cry out that her Son was shot; and could not be satisfied without seeing him to be alive once or twice a Day: and tho' a thousand of his Enemies did in Conscience believe, that Killing him would be no Murder: yet he escaped all Dangers, and even that which a mad Frolick of his own expos'd him to; For going to take the Air in his Coach, drawn by a fine Set of six gray Friselmd Horses presented him by the Duke of Holstein, he must needs get up in the Box to drive the Horses, which he did so furiously, that they run away, and could not be stop'd till they had thrown him out of the Box, with a grievous Fall, in which the Pistol in his Pocket fired and flew off, and yet his Person had no harm: Only it provoked to a thousand Wilthes that he had broke his Neck, and this little Lampoon was stuck up in his Sight
next Day:

King Charles was yet in France attending on the Solemnity of the French King's Coronation at Rheims, and had some Overtures for a March with the Duke of Lorraine's Daughter, with whom he was to have received four Millions in Money, and the Duke's Assistance for his Restoration. But Mazarine falling in with Cromwel to set him upon humbling the Spaniards, made the King to be no longer Welcome or Safe in the French Court. Nor could he hope for any Refuge in Holland; for the States, in a servile Submission to Cromwel, had agreed to give Him no Reception; and had, for the sake of preventing any Aid to him, made an Order, That neither the Prince of Orange, nor any descending from the late King of England, should be Admiral of Holland, or have Power over the Militia. He had some Encouragement to adventure once more into Scotland, by the encrease of his Forces under Glencaigne and Middleton; and the common Sense of Slavery, that the People now lay under. But he had so little Love of the Country, and so much Experience of the Kirk, that he left the Armies there to complain of his not coming to the Head of them, till they were entirely defeated and suppress'd by General Monk. In these Streights the K. went to Cologne, rather for a Journey and a Visit to the Span, than for any formed Design, unless that of seeing his Aunt the Queen of Bobemia, and his Sister the Princess of Orange: He waited upon the latter in her Return to Holland, as far as Duffeldorp, and was there kindly entertained by the Duke of Newburgh.

When his Majesty came back to Cologn, the Marquis of Ormond brought to him his younger Brother the Duke of Gloucester, whom he had honourably taken out from the Jesuits College at Paris, where his Queen Mother would have train'd him in the Bigotry of the Romish Religion. All that his Majesty could do was, to hold a Correspondence (which he thought secret) with his Friends in England: but one of his own Court and Confidants, Mr. Manning, was corrupted by Cromwel to betray his Master; so as the Designs were broke before they were perfected. The good Project laid was, to have several Parties rise together in several Parts of the Kingdom in the beginning of March, and so to make their way into a common Rendezvous; while the King was waiting on the Coast of Flanders to come over and command them. But Letters were intercepted, and Persons apprehended: Sir Henry Slingsby in Yorkshire, and Captain Pemuddock who headed the most confiderable Party at Salisbury, and proclaimed the King at Blandford, was taken at South-Melton in Devonshire by Captain Unton Croke, and with Colonel Grove soon after beheaded at Exeter; with a multitude of other Royalists hanged, imprisoned, fined, and transported: For tho' Cromwel, in pursuit of his sole Administration, had shewn some special Favours to the Royal Party, yet now he never spared them, because their Opposition was no longer to the Commonwealth, but to his single Person.

Religion was what the Protector pleased to make it, or to call it: The Pretension of it was to serve his Purpose. When he concluded a Peace with Holland, he appointed a Day of publick Thanksgiving for it. He made several Ordinances, with Advice of his Council, for the seeming End of Reformation of Manners: One to inhibit all Meetings upon Matches made for Cock-fighting, adjudging them to be Riots and unlawful Assemblies: Another, to restrain all Challenges and Duels, upon the severest Penalties of long Imprisonment for giving or accepting any Challenge, and of Banishment and Death in case of Fighting and of Blood ensuing. A third for the more effectual suppressing of Drunkenness, Swearing, and Cursing. A fourth for the speedy Ejectment of Ministers and Schoolmasters, for their Ignorance, Insufficiency, or Scandal in their Lives and Conversations. A fifth for the better Maintenance of Preaching-Ministers, and uniting of small Parishes. A sixth for the better Propagation of the Gospel in Wales. In all which the Political Reasons were easie to be distinguish'd from the Glory of God and the good Lives of Men. As to Assemblies and Discipline, He kept the English Presbyterians in a perfect Submission to his Will, and despised and silenced all their Claims of Divine Right. Those indeed of the Scotch Kirk laboured somewhat longer to keep their Pretensions up; and on October 11.
refused to observe the Fast-day then ordered by the Protector and his Parliament; declaring it to be a Principle of their Faith and Worthip, Not to receive any Directions for the keeping of Fasts from the Civil Magistrate. But a little military Execution seems to 4 Car. II. Discipline.

The Parliament, under the Protector's Guidance, made a general Vote December 11. that the true reformed Protestant Christian Religion shall be publickly professed and maintained: and, That to Bills touching Liberty of Conscience, the Protector should have a Negative Voice: and, That without Consent of the Lord Protector and Parliament, no Laws should be made for the restraining of such tender Consciences as shall differ in Doctrine, Worshipping, and Discipline, from the publick Profession. And yet a Liberty of Conscience to be given to those only who shall not maintain Atheism, Popery, Prelacy, Profaneness, or any Heresie to be enumerated by the Parliament. And yet the Protector, in his parting Speech to them, charged them with a Neglect of giving just Liberty to godly Men of different Judgments, Men of the same Faith with them that you call the Orthodox Ministry in England, as it is well known the Independents are, and many under the Form of Baptism, who are sound in the Faith, only may perhaps be different in Judgment in some lesser matters, yet as true Christians both looking at Salvation only by Faith in the Blood of Christ, then professing the Fear of God, having recourse to the Name of God as to a strong tower. On Decemb. 12. the Parliament, upon a just Complaint, voted two Books, written by John Biddle, to contain many impious and blasphemous Opinions against the Deity of the Holy Ghost; and condemn'd the said Books to be burnt by the Hand of the common Hangman: and bringing the Author to the Bar of their House, committed him to Prison. Thomas Firmin applied to the Protector for his Release, but met with a blunt Reproof, to this effect; Would you have me displeas'd the People for such a lousie silly Fellow? There let him lie.

John Biddle.

King Charles in the Court of France, under the Roof of his Mother, had some Trial of his Conscience and Courage, in resisting the little Arguments or rather the Importunities of Popery; while, at the same time, the Presbyterians, and especially the Scots, were solliciting his Majesty to come into their Communion. These two irreconcilable Factions did unite in a Contrivance of removing Sir Edward Hyde from the King, because both Sides thought him the chief Enemy who oppos'd and prevented their Designs. The Lord Balcarris, with Dr. Frazier and other Scots, set forth in a Petition, "That the Presbyterian Party had great Affections to serve his Majesty, and much Power to do it; and, that they had many Propositions and Advices to offer, but that they were discourag'd and hinder'd by reason that his Majesty entrusted his whole Affairs to the Chancellour of the Exchequer, who was an old known and declared Enemy to all their Party: and therefore they besought his Majesty that he might be removed, &c."

Another Petition was prepared in the Name of his Roman Catholick Subjects, which said, "That all his Majesty's Party which had adhered to him were now totally suppress'd, and had for the most part compounded with his Enemies, and submitted to their Government: That the Church Lands were all sold, and the Bishops dead, except very few who durst not exercise their Function; so that he could expect no more Aid from any who were concern'd to support the Government of the Church as it had been formerly established: That by the Defeat of Duke Hamilton's Party first, and then by his Majesty's ill Success at Blenheim, and the total Reduction of the Kingdom of Scotland afterwards by Cromwel, his Majesty might conclude what greater Aid he was to expect from the Presbyterian Party. Nothing therefore remain'd to him of Hope for his Restoration, but from the Affection of his Roman Catholick Subjects, to whose Power and Assistance he might be us'd, under the Blessing of God, owe his Restoration. But they had great reason to fear

1654. that all these Hopes would be obstructed, unless " the Chancellour of the Exchequer, a known Enemy
" my to the Catholicks, might be removed from his " Majesty, &c." 6 Car. II.

And above all, the two Queen-Mothers of England and France were more especially displeas'd with the same Person, for the same reason of prejudicing (as they thought) the King against the Catholick Religion. They were continually tempting him upon the Motives of Interest, and a more speedy Restoration; whereas, had his Majesty turn'd Papist, it would never have promoted those Hopes; as was frankly own'd by a very Cardinal of that Church. The Cardinal de Retz had always express'd great Civilities towards the King, and a Desire to serve him; and upon some occasional Conference between them, the Cardinal ask'd the King, Whether he had made any Attempt to draw any Assistance from the Pope? and whether he thought that nothing might be done that way to his Advantage? The King told him, Nothing had been attempted that way; and, that He was better able to judge, whether the Pope was like to do any thing for a Man of his Faith: The Cardinal smiling said, He had no Thought of speaking of his Faith: Yet in short, he spoke to him like a wise and honest Man, that if any Overtures were made him of the Change of his Religion, he must tell his Majesty, it becomes him as a Cardinal to wish his Majesty a Catholick for the saving his Soul: but he must declare too, That if he did change his Religion, he would never be restored to his Kingdoms.

In the Beginning of this Year, Cromwel sent two very great Fleets to Sea: the one under Admiral Pen, with a Land Army commanded by General Venables; the other under Blake, without any Land Forces. The first Fleet was by Commision, open'd at Sea, bound directly to the Bahabadoes, where they took in new Men for the Land Army, and sail'd to Hispaniola, coming about the middle of April to Santo Domingo, the chief Port of that Island: General Venables land'd his Men in an ill Place, different from the Orders that Cromwel had given, and march'd them through such Woods and uneasy Passages, that the Spaniards, with a very unequal Number, beat them back. They advanc'd again toward the Town, taking Negroes for their Guides, who betray'd them into an Ambuscade, and they were again shamefully repuls'd to the Bay where they land'd, with the Loss of their Major General, and above six hundred Men. They were soon compell'd to reembark themselves; and then, to recover the Dishgrace, they made another Descent on Jamaica, and obtain'd an easie Conquest of it: and leaving a good Body of Foot to keep Possession, they return'd to England. Cromwel was never so much discompos'd as at this Miscarriage at Hispaniola; and as soon as they came on shore he committed both Pen and Venables to the Tower, and could never be perswaded to trust either of them again; and could not, in a long time, speak temperately of that Affair. The other Fleet, under the Command of Blake, sailing into the Mediterranean, had better Success, in forcing Algiers to the Terms of Submission and Peace, in entering the Harbour of Tunis, and burning all the Piratical Ships; Actions of the highest Conduct and Courage, which made the Name of the English very terrible and formidable in those Seas. In their Return, a Squadron of our Ships fell in with the Spanish West-India Fleet, took the Rear-Admiral, and another Ship very richly laden, fired the Vice-Admiral, and run the Admiral on Shore: And so coming back to Portsmouth, the Bullion was there land'd, and carried in Carts to London, as a Trophy and Triumph of War.

The Commissioners for the Great Seal were, The Lords Sir Thomas Widdrington, Whitlock, Lenthall, and Lisle; Commissioners for the Great Seal of Scotland, Cromwel. of which, the three former made their Exceptions against executing an Ordinance of his Highness and his Council for the better regulating and limiting the Jurisdiction of the High Court of Chaucery. Upon which the Protector not suffering his Authority or his his Acts to be disputed, sent for them to the Council-Chamber June 6. and there commanded them to lay down the Seal and withdraw; the Protector kept it for some Days in his own possession, and on June 15. delivered it to Major Lisle (one of the old Commissioners obsequious to his Master's Will) and Colonel Fienes; and it was indeed proper enough for Military Men to be Chancellors, while Law and Equity were both at the point of the Sword. However to please the ejected Commissioners, the Protector made Widdrington and Whitlock Commissioners of the Treasury, and continued Lenthall in his Favour for old Services.

State Libels or Reflections on the Tyranny of the Protector and his Ministers were so bold and common, that it was now found expedient to restrain that Liberty of the Press, which began to turn upon the greatest Advocates for it: So an Ordinance was made at Whitehall in October, that no Person presume to publish in Print any matter of publick News or Intelligence, without leave and approbation of the Secretary of State: And another Order to enforce the Restraint of Printing unlicensed and scandalous Books and Pamphlets, and for regulating of Printing.

The Protector wanted a pretence to increase his Standing Army, and therefore improved the Rumours of Plots and Conspiracies against him by the King's Party: So he raised more Forces for the double Service of a Terror to restrain them, and a Burthen to oppress them: For in November he published his Declaration of the Reasons for raising additional Standing Forces of Horse in every County, to preserve the Peace of the Nation from the new Plots and Attempts of the Enemies of the Commonwealth, upon whom he resolv'd to put the Charge of these additional Forces which they themselves have occasioned, and not upon the honest Party who have already so much suffered. This Proceeding is severely censur'd by one of his own late Creatures and a fellow Judge, Edmund Ludlow, Esq; "Tho' (says he) he had lately so meanly stoop'd to court the Cavalier Party, and thereby highly provoked his ancient Friends to a just Jealousie and Indignation, he resolv'd now to fall upon them, and to break thro' all their Compositions, even the Act of oblivion it self, in the obtaining and passing of which he had so great a hand. To this end he commanded a tenth part of their Estates to be levied, in order, as he pretended, to maintain those extraordinary Forces, which their turbulent and seditious Practises obliged him to keep up. In defence of which oppression I could never yet hear one Argument offer'd that carried any weight, either with respect to Justice or Policy: For having by his Treachery and Usurpation disobliged those with whom he first engaged, he seem'd to have no other way left to support himself, but by ballancing his new with his old Enemies, whom by this fresh Act of Injustice, he render'd desperate and irreconcilable, they being not able to call any thing their own, whilst by the same Rule that he seiz'd one Tenth, he might also take away the other Nine parts at his pleasure. And to put this detestable Project in execution, he divided England into Cantons, over each of which he placed a Bashaw under the Title of Major General, who was to have the inspection and government of inferior Commissioners in every County, with Orders to seize the Persons, and distrain the Estates of such as should be refractory, and to put in execution such farther directions as they should receive from him. — Things run every Day more and more into confusion, the Cavaliers being enraged to see the Throne usurp'd, and those who had hazarded all for their Country finding themselves cheated; Custom and Excise raised without Authority of Parliament, and Taxes imposed to no other end than to support the Pride and Insolence of a single Person. Some there were that openly oppos'd these Oppressions, and amongst some others Mr. George Cony a Merchant, who having refused to pay Custom, it was violently taken from him, and he thereupon sued the Collector at the Common Law. But Cromwel resolving to put a stop to such dangerous Precedents, caused the Council for Mr. Cony, who were Serjeant Maynard Serjeant Twisden, and Mr. Wadham Windham, to be sent to the Tower, where they had not been above three or four Days, when they unworthily petitioned to be set at Liberty, acknowledging their Fault, and promising to do so no more, chusing rather to sacrifice the Cause of their Client, wherein that of their Country was also eminently concerned, than to endure a little Restraint with the loss of the Fees of a few Days. By this means, when the Cause came to the next Hearing, Mr. Cony was necessitated to Plead for himself, which he did in as short a manner as he could, referring it wholly to the Judge, whether that Tax, being not authorized by Parliament, ought to be paid by the Law of the Land; and declaring that he would abide by his Judgment therein, Serjeant Rolls, then Chief Justice of the Upper-Bench, tho' a Conscientious Man, and a lover of Civil Liberty, yet not daring to determine it for him, said That something must be allowed to Cases of Necessity. To which Mr. Cony replied, That it was never wont to be a good Plea in Law, for a Man to make Necessities and then to plead them. But the Judge wanting Courage would not give Judgment against the Usurper, and being too much an honest Man to give it for him, he took time till the next ensuing Term, to consider what Rule he should give in the Case. In the mean time upon consideration, that his continuance in that Station was like to enshare him more and more, he desired by a Letter to Cromwel to have his Quietus, and Serjeant Glyn was appointed to succeed him — who before he came to sit on the Bench took care to have this Business accommodated with Cony, who lost his Reputation by withdrawing himself from a Cause wherein the Publick was so much concern'd. Sir Peter Wentworth a Member of the Long Parliament caus'd also a Collector in the Country to be arrested and prosecuted at his Suit, tho' he could hardly procure an Attorney to appear, or Council to plead for him. Cromwel having received notice of this Prosecution, sent a Messenger with an Order to bring him before the Council; where being examined concerning the ground of his Proceeding, he told them, that he was moved to it by his constant Principle, that by the Law of England no Money ought to be levied upon the People without their consent in Parliament. Cromwel then ask'd him, Whether he would withdraw his Action or no? To which he replied, If you will command me I will submit; and thereupon Cromwel having commanded it, he withdrew his Action. — Not contenting himself with the Death of many of those who had raised Arms against him, and seizure of the Goods of that Party, he transported whole droves of them at a time into Foreign Parts, without any legal Tryal, &c.

The King, with no prospect of Return, continued his Residence at Cologne; and went thence with the Princess Royal and the Duke of Gloucester, for the Diversion of seeing the Mart at Frankfort: In their Passage through every Prince's Country, the chief Officers of State were sent to complement them, and they were saluted with the great Guns, and other Marks of Honour. The Elector of Mentz entertain'd them for three Days with great Magnificence. The King hearing that Queen Christina of Sweden was coming that way in her Journey to Italy, sent one of his Lords to salute her in his Name, and to express his Desire to wait upon her Majesty at what place she would appoint. She named Cuningstern, where they met and had private Conference together.

His Majesty return'd to Cologne about the end of October, where (as the Lord Clarendon observes) the Magistrates of the City renewed their Civilities and Professions of Respect to the King, which they always made good: Nor could his Majesty have cho-

The Nuncio of the Pope resided in that City, and perform'd all Respects to his Majesty: He was a proper and grave Man, an Italian Bishop, who never made the least Scruple at his Majesty's enjoying the Liberty of his Chapel, and the Exercise of his Religion, tho' it was very publick.

The Roy-alists persecuted.

Upon Suppression of the Rising at Salisbury, at the end of the preceding Year, so many of the Royalists were Beheaded, Hanged, and Transported, that no farther Motions of Loyalty could be now made. Of the King's Friends, the noble James Duke of Richmond died of a Quartan Ague, having never had his Health nor his Spirits since the deplorable Murder of his beloved Master: The Lord Willoughby of Purbam, and the Lord Newport, upon Suspicion of Treason, were committed to the Tower; while the Lord Lauderdale and his Brother, by Intercession of the King of Sweden, were released from their Imprisonment in Windser-Castle.

Religion was now allow'd to be every thing that did not disturb the Possession of Cromwel. Sectaries were licentious and innumerable; and under that Advantage, Popery made the more considerable progress. The Protector indeed, for Reasons of State, did in May publish his Proclamation for the better Execution of the Laws against Jesuits and Priests, and for Conviction of Popish Recusants. But one of his principal Judges, Commissioner Whitlock, declared his Opinion to be for no way of penal Proceeding against them; because, says he, there was not a fixed Settlement, and so great Pretences of Liberty of Conscience. And well might the Papists hope for Indempnity, when the Jews were treating for purchase of the same Privilege. Manasseh Ben Israel made his flated Proposals, and had a Conference upon them, for admitting the Jewish Nation to exercise Trade and Worship in England. The Protector, to shew a Regard to Christianity, sent for divers Ministers of the Gospel, and laid those Proposals before them, and referred the Matter, as a Case of Conscience, to their Consideration.

Bishop
Goodman.

At the latter end of this Year died Dr. Godfrey Goodman, Bishop of Gloucester, and with great Scandal declared himself, in his last Will, to die in the Faith and Communion of the Mother Church of Rome. He had before given many Causes of Suspicion; for on the fifth Sunday in Leit 1626. in a Sermon before the King, he asserted the Real Presence in such a gross way, as gave very great Offence to all the judicious Auditors: and on March 29. it occasion'd a just Complaint and Debate in the Convocation. The King referred it to a Committee of Archbishops and Bishops, who made a very tender Report; "That some things were therein spoken less cautiously, but nothing falsly; nor was any thing innovated by him in the Doctrine of the Church of England:" however, it was best the Bishop should preach the Sermon again at some time to be chosen by himself, and should then shew how and wherein he was misunderstood by his Auditors. Whatever Salvo this was to cover up Scandal, yet wiser People thought him then preparing his Faith for Transubstantiation. He again betray'd himself in the Convocation of 1640. when he was the only Member who refused to Subscribe the Canons; for which single Dissent, the Archbishop told him, He must be either a Papist, or Socinian, or Puritan: He did at last comply, but with so much Reluctancy, that he con-1655. 7 Car. II. firmed himself in the Character of a reputed Papist. It is not no Scandal to the Church of England, that this Man was the only Bishop who made his Addresses to Cromwel, and dedicated a Book to his Excellence, (A Discourse concerning the Trinity and Incarnation, Lond. 1653. quarto) with Flattery, and a servile Petition for bearing his Cause, and for doing Justice to him. It is farther remarkable, that as this was the only Apostate Bishop of our Church since the Reformation, so he was the only one who left Children to beg their Bread: I saw the Example at my own Doors; where an old Woman, a common travelling Beggar, used this Argument to incite my Charity, that she was the Daughter of Bishop Goodman: and tho' at first I suspected the Truth, yet upon Enquiry from her after the Person, Fortune, and even Writings of Bishop Goodman, I found she might well bear that near Relation to him.

The Endeavours of the Queen-Mother to pervert the Duke of Gloucester, were a great Trouble to the King in the midst of his other Sufferings. This young Prince, with his Sister Elizabeth, had been committed in 1648. to the Countess of Leicester, and entertain'd by her with little Ceremony at Penhurst in Kent; but for fear of a Respect paid to them, they were soon after sent away into the Ile of Wight to Carisbrook-Castle, to be under the Custody of Captain Mildmay, who was strictly commanded, that no Person should be permitted to kiss their Hands, and that they should not be otherwise treated than as the Children of a Gentleman: which Mildmay observed very exactly; and the Duke of Gloucester was not called by any other Stile than Master Harry. The Prince's died in this place; and at last Mr. Lovel, the Duke's Tutor, procured from Cromwel an Order and Warrant to Transport the Duke into any Parts beyond the Seas. By which means the Duke was brought safe to his Sister the Princess of Orange in Holland, at the latter end of 1652. The Queen very earnestly desired he might be presently sent for to Paris, she having not seen him since he was about a Year old. The King could not refuse to satisfy his Mother in so reasonable a Desire; tho' he did suspect that there might be a farther Purpose in that Design of seeing him than was then own'd. When the King left Paris in June 1654. to retire into Germany, the Queen ask'd, with great importunity, that he would leave the Duke of Gloucester with her, and offer'd such Arguments as would have easily prevailed, had it not been for the fear that the Purpose was to pervert him in his Religion; which when the Queen had assured the King was not in her Thought, and that she would not permit any such Attempt to be made, his Majesty consented to it. But for all this Faith given, the Queen's Zeal did exceed and dispense with the Obligation of it: For (as the Lord Clarendon relates) "Within a short time after his Majesty's Return to Cologne, he received News that exceedingly afflicted him, and the more, that he knew not what Remedy to apply to the Mischiefs which he saw was likely to befall him upon it. From Paris, his Majesty heard that the Queen had put away the Tutor he had left to attend his Brother the Duke of Gloucester; who remain'd at Paris upon her Majesty's Desire, that he might learn his Exercises. The Queen had conferr'd with him upon the Desperateness of his Condition, in respect of the King his Brother's Fortune, and the little Hope that appeared that his Majesty could ever be restor'd, at least if he did not himself become Roman Catholick, whereby the Pope, and other Princes of that Religion, might be united in his Quarrel; which they would never undertake upon any other Obligation: That it was therefore fit that the Duke, who had nothing to support him, nor could expect any thing from the King, should be instructed in the Roman Catholick Religion; that so, becoming a good Catholick, he might be capable of those Advantages which her Majesty should be able to procure 1655. 7 Car. II. procure for him: That the Queen of France would hereupon confer Abbies and Benefices upon him to such a Value as would maintain him in that Splendor as was suitable to his Birth: That in a little time the Pope would make him a Cardinal; by which he might be able to do the King his Brother much Service, and contribute to his Recovery; whereas, without this, he must be exposed to great Necessity and Misery, for that she was not able any longer to give him Maintenance. She found the Duke more resolute than she expected from his Age: He was so well instructed in his Religion, that he disputed against the Change, urg'd the Precepts he had receiv'd from the King his Father, and his dying in the Faith he had prescribed to him; put her Majesty in mind of the Promise she had made to the King his Brother at parting; and acknowledg'd that he had oblig'd himself to his Majesty, that he would never change his Religion; and therefore besought her Majesty that she would not further press him, at least till he should inform the King of it. The Queen well enough knew the King's Mind, and thought it more excusable to proceed in that Affair without imparting it to him; and therefore took upon her the Authority of a Mother, and remov'd his Tutor from him, and committed the Duke to the Care of Abbot Montague, her Almoner; who having the pleasant Abby of Pontoise, entertain'd his Highness there, sequester'd him from all Resort of such Persons as might confirm him in his Aversness from being converted.

1656. Cromwell at the highest pitch of Glory. Cromwell was more in Power and Dread, abroad and at home, than perhaps ever any English Monarch was: He wanted nothing but a Name; and he was sensible he could not have the Name of a King without a Parliament. He wanted no Forces to be rais'd; for he had augmented them at his own Pleasure. Nor did he want Money to supply his great Occasions; for he had Ways and Means always in his own Hands. Nor had he any Love to see a Parliament sitting; for he had parted with two former Assemblies in the most rough and odious manner. So that really he could have no Inclinations and no Occasions for a new Session, but only to make a Party for a Crown. To this purpose, he was to get an Awe and a Rule upon Elections: So beside his standing Force of Major Generals in every County and chief Corporation, he set up a new Office of Purgatory, called a Committee for Inspection of Charters; of which Mr. Gabriel Beck, Solicitor to his Highness, was Chairman; and their Consults were all to be reported to the Protector and his Council: By which means the Boroughs and Corporations were influenced or modell'd as his Highness and his Court pleas'd. This Menage for a new Parliament is thus deliver'd by an old Associate of Cromwell's. "The Usurper having governed, as he thought, long enough by Virtue of the Instrument of Government, which tho' drawn up by himself and his Creatures, was now thought to lay too great a Restraint upon his ambitious Spirit; and resolving to rest satisfied with nothing less than the Succession of his Family to the Crown, he attempted to make himself King. To this end, he thought it necessary to call a Parliament: and that he might engage the Army to assist him in all Parts to procure such Men to be chosen as would be fit for his purpose; he pretended that this Assembly was called only in order to raise Money for the Payment of the Army and Fleet. to confirm the Authority of the Major Generals, and that of the Instrument of Government. By this means he obtained his Desires in a great measure, especially in Scotland and Ireland, where all kinds of Artifice, and in many Places the most irregular Courses, were taken, to get such Men returned as were propos'd by the Court. But knowing the People of England not to be of so mercenary a Spirit, and that as they were better instructed in the Principles of Civil Liberty, so Thinks of a new Parliament.

1656. 8 Car. II. they were not wanting in Courage to assert it; he us'd his utmost Endeavours to disable and incapacitate such Men from being chosen, whom he thought most likely to obstruct his Designs. In order to this, he summon'd the Lord President Bradshaw, Sir Henry Vane, Colonel Rich, and myself (Colonel Ludlow) to appear before him in Council. — Colonel Rich was sent Prisoner to Windsor-Castle. — Colonel Ludlow was order'd to be taken into Custody. — Sir Henry Vane was sent Prisoner to Carisbrook-Castle. — And Bradshaw, tho' suffer'd to go his Circuit as Chief Justice of Chester, had Letters sent after him to deterr People from giving their Voices for him.

On Sept. 16. this Party of a Parliament met the Lord Protector in the Abby-Church at Westminster, where they heard a Sermon preach'd by a prime Creature and very Confessor of Cromwell, Dr. John Owen, Dean of Christ-Church and Vice-Chancellor of Oxford, on Isa. 14. 32. What shall one then answer the Messengers of the Nation? That the Lord hath founded Zion, and the Poor of his People shall trust in it. A Sermon calculated for the new Monarchy project'd. After this, his Highness and the Members went into the Painted Chamber, where he made a dark Speech to them, and sent them away to their House for Admission or Exclusion, according as He and his Council had thought meet: for, at the Doors of the House they found a Guard, and an Officer standing with a List in his Hand, and demanding the Names of every Person: Such as were mark'd for Non-admittance were turn'd back, and such as had been approved for right trusty Men, took a Ticket to introduce them, in this form; These are to certify, that A. B. is returned by Indenture one of the — to serve in this present Parliament for the said — and is approved by his Highness's Council. Nath. Taylor Clerk of the Commonwealth in Chancery. 17 Sept. 1656. Old Ludlow represents the Matter right: "The Court finding by the Lists they had received, that notwithstanding all their Menaces, Promises, and other Artifices, divers Persons were chosen whom they knew to be no Favourers of the Usurpation, resolv'd to clear their Hands of them at once. And to that end, under colour of a Clause in the Instrument of Government, that none should be admitted to Places of Power and Trust, but such as were Men of Sincerity and Integrity, they gave an Exclusion to Sir Arthur Haslerig and Mr. Scot, with as many more as they thought fit. By this means, and the Refusal of others to take out their Permissions to sit from Cromwell and his Council, as was required, lest they should seem to countenance such a detestable Imposition, and open Breach of Privilege; it came to pass, that about a hundred of those who were elected by the Country, were excluded from the Discharge of their Trust; whilst those for Ireland and Scotland, who were chosen by and for the Sword, were admitted without any Scruple. Those that were excluded presented a Petition to the sitting Members, acquainting them, that being chosen by the Country to serve with them, they were ready to discharge their Duty, but were prevented from doing the same by the Power of the Sword, and refus'd Admittance into the House by a Guard of Soldiers. After the Petition had been read, a Committee was sent to enquire of Cromwell and his Council concerning the Reasons of that Proceeding; who returned with this Answer, That if the Persons complaining would address themselves to them, they should be relieved if there was cause. With this Answer, these Men who would be accounted an English Parliament acquitted, leaving their Privileges unvindicated, and the Merit of Elections to Parliament to be adjudg'd by Men without Doors. The Lord Clarendon represents it thus: "When upon the Returns Cromwell found, that tho' in some places he had succeeded according to his Wish, it was in others 1656. 8 Car. II. " others quite the contrary, and that very many Members were return'd, who were Men of the most notorious Malignity against him; he therefore resorted to his old Security, to keep all manner of Persons from entering into the House, who did not first subscribe, that they would act nothing prejudicial to the Government, as it was established under a Protector; which being tender'd, many Members utterly refused, and returned into their Countries, where they were not for the most part the worse welcome for insifting upon their Privileges and Freedom of Parliament.

The Excluded Members being no Redress appeal'd to the People in a Remonstrance or Protestation, setting forth that " The Lord Protector had by force of Arms invaded their fundamental Right and Liberty, and violently prevented the meeting of the People chosen Deputies in Parliament; and concluding with an Appeal unto God and all the good People of England for Assistance and Protection in their Service, -- and pouring out their sad Complaints before the Lord against our powerful Oppressors, humbly hoping that he will come forth speedily, to redeem his People out of the hands of wicked and deceitful Men. But all this to no effect, because most of the Subscribers, Hastig, Scot, Jones, Goodwyn, &c. had been violent Rebels to the just Prerogatives of the King, and were the more fit and worthy to fall a just Sacrifice to an Arbitrary Power in an Accomplice and late Equal of their own.

Proceedings of this Parliament.

The sitting Members with Sir Thomas Widdrington their Speaker, being all disposed to follow Instructions, began the first Day of Business Sept. 18. with resolving upon a Declaration for a general Fast throughout the three Nations; and with reading a Bill for renouncing and disannulling the pretended Title of Charles Stuart. This was to make the Throne more expressly vacant for the reception of Cromwell, who was to carry his Point chiefly by his Major Generals and other Military Officers; but when he saw them fall short in their Interest or Zeal, he dropp'd them and Sacrificed them in the most ungrateful manner. " It was supposed that Cromwell who had erected their Authority, and engaged them in those Actions, for which they were now become odious, would support them against all Attempts, because there appeared now no way so probable to maintain his own Power, as by keeping the Army firmly united to him. But Ambition had corrupted his Understanding to that degree, that he made no scruple to sacrifice these Men, who, to say no worse, had enlarged their Consciences to an extraordinary size in the execution of his Orders, to those who in requital of the Favour had promised to make him King. Hitherto he had given good Words to the Major Generals; but when their Power came to be debated, Mr. Cleypole his Son-in-Law first stood up, which was unusual for him to do at all, and told the House, that he could but start the Game, and leave those who had more Experience to follow the Chase; and therefore should only say, that he had formerly thought it necessary, in respect to the Condition in which the Nation had been, that the Major Generals should be entrusted with the Authority which they had exercised; but in the present state of Affairs, he conceived it inconsistent with the Laws of England, and Liberties of the People, to continue their Power any longer. This Motion was a clear Direction to the Sycophants of the Court, who being fully persuaded that Cleypole had delivered the Sense, if not the very Words of Cromwell in this Matter, joined as one Man in opposing the Major Generals, and so their Authority was abrogated. Soon after Colonel William Jephson, one of the Members that served for Ireland, moved in the House, That Cromwell might be made King; but matters not being thoroughly concerted, it had no other effect than to sound the Inclinations of the Assembly.

Motion for Cromwell to be King.

The Parliament did every thing else to gratifie the Protector. They resolv'd October 1. that the War against the Spaniard was undertaken upon just and necessary Grounds, and for the good of the People of this Common-wealth, and that the Parliament doth approve thereof, and will by God's blessing assist his Highness therein. And immediately after this Vote, came the News of Captain Stayner's Engagement with the West-India Spanish Fleet, and taking two Millions of Silver, which were brought home and delivered into the Mint, and a Day of solemn Thanksgiving appointed for this Joy to Cromwell, who seem'd now to borrow from one Crown a sufficient Fund to purchase another.

Novem. 27. the Protector came in State to the Painted-Chamber, and like a Sovereign passed these Bills. 1. An Act that passing of Bills shall not determine this present Session of Parliament. 2. An Act for renouncing and disannulling the pretended Title of Charles Stuart. 3. An Act for the security of his Highness the Lord Protector his Person, and continuance of the Nation in Peace and Safety. 4. An Act for taking away the Court of Wards and Liveries. 5. An Act for the Exportation of several Commodities of the Breed, Growth and Manufacture of this Common-wealth.

A Plot against the Life of Cromwell was another good advantage to him: Miles Syndercomb a Leveller, cashier'd in Scotland, combined with one Cecil and one Troop of Cromwell's Life-guard (who betray'd him) to kill the Protector by some one of several ways proposed. Syndercomb denied the Plot, but was condemn'd upon the Stat. 25 E. 3. which the Chief Justice Glyme declared to be Treason in case of a Protector as much as of a King, since by the Word King any chief Magistrate was understood. The Prisoner was found dead in the Morning appointed for his Execution; so his Body was tied with his Head forward to a Horses Tail, and dragg'd naked to the Scaffold on Tower-Hill, and under that Buried with a Stake driven thro' him, cover'd with Iron at the top, to stand the more durable Mark of Infamy. And Feb. 20. was appointed for a Day of publick Thanksgiving for this great Mercy and Deliverance; when after a Sermon at St. Margaret's, the Protector treated the Speaker and all the Members in the Banqueting-House at Whitehall, with so much Endearment, that on the very next Day Alderman Pack moved again in the House, that to prevent the like Dangers, and to compose the Minds of Men, the Protector might be desired to assume the Title and Authority of King, as the most known and most agreeable Government. But the Major Generals and Military Members, who now thought themselves deserted and highly affronted, out of Rêvenge on the Protector fell in with the Common-wealth Party, " And turn'd " (says Ludlow) so furiously upon Pack, for his " great Presumption in bringing a business of that " Nature into the House in such an unparliamentary way, that they bore him down from the Speaker's Chair to the Bar of the House of Commons. But this Heat being soon over, the Lord Broughil, Sergeant Glyn and others, who were acquainted with Cromwell's Design, endeavour'd to persuade the House to debate the new Form, telling them, that being Masters of their own Resolutions, they might retain as much of it as was good, and reject what was not so. By this means they brought it to be debated; and tho' they received some opposition therein, yet when it came to be put to the Question, they carried all before them, and grew so hardy to move, that the Blank left for the Inferrion of the Title of the Chief Magistrate might be filled up with the name of King. This motion though earnestly oppos'd by Lieutenant-General Fleetwood, was carried also, and the Name voted, together with the filling up the two Blanks left for the two Houses, with the Words House of Commons and other House.

Another Motion for Cromwell to be King.

1656. The King kept his Court at Bruges in Flanders, and had many Consultations with the Governor Don John how to make the Spanish Interest and his own subservient to each other. But all his Majesty was enabled to do, was to Lift some Regiments of his own Native Subjects into Service and Pay, to be quarter'd in Flanders for some opportune Expedition which did not yet offer.

The Church was nothing but the Remnant of Presbytery old and weak, with no Power in Effect but what came from the Protector and the Parliament; who now would allow no Assembly of Divines, nor indeed any Doctrine or Discipline but what should occasionally depend on their Votes and Orders. Under many effusions of Religious Phrensie, the Quakers were extremely Mad, one disturbed the Preacher in White-Chapel Church with such an impulse, that a Complaint was made to the Protector, who order'd him to be carried to a Justice of Peace, and proceeded against according to Law. Another pretending to an immediate Message from God, went about the streets denouncing his Judgments against the Protector and his Council. A third insatuated Quaker in Colchester starved himself to Death, upon claim of a Commission from the Spirit that he must fast forty Days. But the most impudent of all Mortals was James Naylor, a late Soldier under Lambert, who proposing to out-do Ignatius Loyola, set up to be Jesus himself in Person, and so with Garb, Hair and Looks exactly in resemblance of the Pictures of our Blessed Saviour, he went about with Disciples and Women ministring unto him: And so enter'd Bristol with Women and Mob crying Hosanna, Blessed, &c. and giving no other Answer to any Question but thou hast said it. The Magistrates of that City sent him up to Westminster, where the House resolv'd Decemb. 8. that James Naylor was guilty of horrid Blasphemy, and was a grand Impostor, and a great Seducer of the People; and order'd the Speaker to pronounce this Judgment against him; To stand in the Pillory two Hours at Westminster; to be whipp'd by the Hangman through the Streets from Westminster to the Old Exchange, and there to stand in the Pillory two Hours more: his Tongue bored thro' with a hot Iron, and his Forehead stigmatiz'd with the Letter B; to be afterward sent to Bristol, and convey'd thro' the City on a Horse bare back'd, and his Face backward, and his Body whipp'd in the Market-place. Thence to be brought back to London, and committed to Prison in Bridewel, and there to be restrained from all Company, and to have no Relief but what he earns from hard Labour; and being debarred from the use of Pen, Ink and Paper, shall be kept to continual work, till he shall be released by the Parliament. It was some reproach to Humane Nature, that this wretched Fellow under all his Sufferings had some of his Followers to admire him and to adore him; to lick his Wounds, to kiss his Feet, to lean in his Bosom, to do all that was prodigiously Impious and Silly. When he came first to Bridewel, to act on the Imposture, he fasted three Days; but then Flesh and Blood beginning to quarrel with the Spirit, he begg'd for Victuals, and fell to Work: At the return of the Rump he obtained his Liberty, and died soon after with no Fruits, nor so much as Signs, of Repentance.

Upon discourse of the Polyglot Bibles now ready to be publish'd in six Volumes Folio, by the immense Labour of Dr. Brian Walton, and a great Treasure raised for the Expence by the Contributions of the Nobility and Gentry, most of 'em Members of the persecuted Church; a Proposal was made to the Parliament for a new Translation of the Scriptures into the English Tongue: Upon this, at the grand Committee for Religion Jan. 16. it was order'd, that it be refer'd to a subcommittee, to send for and advise with Dr. Walton, Mr. Hughes, Mr. Castle, Mr. Clerk, Mr. Poulk, Dr. Cudworth, and such others as they shall think fit, and to consider of the Translations and Impressions of the Bible, and to offer their Opinions therein to this Committee, and that it be especially commended to the Ld Commissioner Whitlock to take care of this Business. " This Committee (as Whitlock says) often met in his House at Chelsea, and they had the most learned Men in the Oriental Tongues to consult with in this great Business; and divers excellent and learned Observations were made of some Mistakes in the Translations of the Bible in English, which yet was agreed to be the best of any Translation in the World. Great Pains was taken in it, but it became fruitless by the Parliaments dissolution.

The Question of the Times was, Whether Cromwell should assume the Title and Office of King? The difficulty upon himself was, that he did passionately desire it, and yet must artfully decline it. The majority of the Members were by this time drawn into the Plot, and presented him a Writing which they stiled, The Humble Petition and Advice of the Parliament of England, Scotland and Ireland to his Highness, with a Speech from Sir Thomas Widdrington their Speaker, recommending the Title and Office of a King as settled here with Christianity it self, approved and retained by our Ancestors, and every way fitted to the Laws and Temper of the People of England. Had the Protector immediately comply'd with their Zeal and his own Hearts desire, he might have gone to Crown and Scepter without any other opposition. But whether it was to dissemble greater Modesty and be at last made a King by the very force of the People; or whether it was to obviate all Dangers by more deliberating on the matter, Cromwell instead of a ready Assent, devoutly demurr'd and told them, That it was a weighty matter, and therefore desired space to seek God; for the Charge laid upon him was too great to bear without the Divine Assistance; that the English were the best People in the World, and required therefore all Tenderness and Consideration of their Liberties; he must therefore desire that a Committee might be appointed to confer with him, and to offer him better knowledge and satisfaction in this great Cause. Such a Committee did accordingly attend his Highness, where the Chairman Whitlock and all the chief Members were to argue for Monarchy in Cromwell, and he who reached at it was to be the only Man that should speak against it.

Amongst others the Lord Broughil much press'd that Passage brought by the Apostle in the Dispute concerning the Abolition of the Jewish Worship, by the new and living way reveal'd in Jesus Christ, illustrated by the Wife that was put away, who yet might be retaken by her former Husband, if she was not married to another; applying this Similitude to the present occasion, as if there was no other way to keep out Charles Stuart, but by filling his place with another King. Mr. Lenthall's Argument was very Parliamentary and Rational had it been rightly applied: For he press'd him to accept of it, because it was propos'd to him by the Parliament, as he was pleas'd to call it, whom, he said, he ought not to deny.

S I R,

I Have very little to trouble your Highness with: So much hath been already spoken and so well, that it will be hard for me, or any other to undertake to add to it; only the Duty of my Employment, and something due to your Highness occasions me to speak a few Words, to acknowledge with very humble Thanks the Honour and Right which you have done this Committee, by the clear and free Discourses and Conferences which they have had with your Highness, and for your frequent Expressions and Testimonies of Affection and Respect to the Parliament, whose sense in This I may presume to speak, that never any Persons met their supreme Magistrate with more Love, Duty, and Honour, than the Parliament

1657. 9 Car. II. " have met your Highness with in their present
 " Addresse; which Argument of Love deserves the " Esteem and Force which I doubt not but your " Highness will put upon it. I am fearful to be too
 " tedious at any time, especially at so late an hour,
 " and therefore shall speak but short, to some things
 " which I remember not to have been mentioned.
 " Your Highness was pleased, at the last Meeting,
 " to say, That the original Institution of the Title
 " King was by common Consent, and that the same " common Consent might institute any other Title, " and make it as effectual as that of King. This " must be acknowledged; but withall you may be " pleased to observe, that the Title of King is not " only by an original common Consent, but that " Consent also approved and confirmed, and the " Law fitted thereunto, and that fitted to the Laws,
 " by the Experience and Industry of many Ages,
 " and many hundreds of Years together: whereas
 " any other Title will be only by present common " Consent, without that Experience and Approba" tion. For that Experience which your Highness
 " mentioned to have been of other Titles, and the " due Administration of Justice under them; this " Experience is far short of the other: and for the " Course of Justice, we have cause to thank that " Care which placed so good Judges and Officers " over us. Yet give me Leave to say, that in pri" vate Causes between Party and Party, and in pub" lick Matters in nominal Causes, it was not easie
 " to find Justice to be done by some Jurors; and " many Questions have arisen upon occasion of these " new Titles, concerning that tender point of good " Mens Satisfaction. I think it requires a very " great Regard from us, and I doubt not but those " good People will be fully satisfied, if they con" sider the Covenants, Promises, and Precepts, which " in the Scriptures are annex'd to the Name of " King: and although some have alledged, that they " belong to any chief Magistrate as well as to King,
 " yet no Man did ever read the original Word tran" slated otherwise than King: neither do I find the " present Title once mentioned in the Holy Text.
 " If the present Authority be a lawful Authority,
 " which I hope none of us will deny; surely those " good Men who are so well principled in Godliness
 " will not forget that Precept of Submission to Au" thority, and to be satisfied with that which law" ful Authority shall ordain. Their Rights and " Liberties are the same with ours, and the Parlia" ment cannot advise any thing for the Preserva" tion of the People's Rights, but these good Men " are included; which I hope will be no Dissatis" faction to them. In all the Changes which we " have seen, there hath been a Dissatisfaction to " some; yet still the Blessing of God hath gone a" long through all these Changes, with those who " carried on his Interest: and the Cause being the " same, the same Mercies have been continued.
 " And I doubt not, if the intended Change, or ra" ther Reformation be made (as I hope it will) the " same God will continue his Blessings to that good " Old Cause wherein we are engaged; and that " good Men will receive Satisfaction by it.
 " Your Highness hath been told, that the Title " of King is upon the Foundation of Law, and that " a new Title must have a Constitution to make " the Laws relate unto it, and that to the Laws.
 " I shall add only this, That a Title by Relation " is not so certain and safe as a Title upon the old " Foundation of the Law; and that a Title upon a " present single Constitution (as any new Title " must be) cannot be so firm as a Title both upon " the present Constitution, and upon the old Foun" dation of the Law likewise, which the Title of " King will be. If any Inconvenience should ensue " upon your Acceptance of this Title which the " Parliament adviseth; your Highness's Satisfac" tion will be, that they did advise it.

1657. 9 Car. II. " On the contrary part, if any Inconvenience " should arise upon your Highness's Refusal of this " Title, which the Parliament hath advised, your " Burden will be the greater: And therefore what" soever may fall out, will be better answer'd by " your Highness's complying with your Parliament " than otherwise.

" This Question is not altogether new, some In" stances have been given of the like; to which I " shall add two or three. The Title of the Kings " of England in the Realm of Ireland, was Lord of " Ireland; and the Parliament in 22 Hen. VIII. re" citing that Inconveniences did arise there by rea" son of that Title, did enact, That Hen. VIII.
 " should assume the Stile and Title of King of Ire" land; which, in the Judgment of this Parliament,
 " was preferred before the other.

" In the State of Rome, new Titles proved fatal " to their Liberties. Their Case was not much un" like ours: They were wearied with a Civil War,
 " and coming to a Settlement, Cuncta discordiis civi" libus fessa, sub nomine Principis Imperium accepit.
 " Some would not admit the Title Rex to be used,
 " but were contented to give the Titles of Cesar,
 " Perpetuus Dictator, Princeps, Senatus, Imperator.
 " Non sum Rex sed Cesar came at last to this; Vo" luntas Cesaris pro Lege habebatur.

" The Northern People were more happy among " themselves: A private Gentleman of a noble Fa" mily took up Arms with his Country-men against " a Tyrant, and by the Blessing of God rescued
 " their native Liberties, and Rights of their Coun" try, from the Oppression of that Tyrant. This " Gentleman had the Title of Marshal given to him,
 " which continued for some Years: Afterwards " their Parliament (judging it best to resume the " old Title) elected this Gentleman King, and with " him was brought in the Liberty of the Protestant " Religion, and the Establishment of the Civil " Rights of that People; which have continued in " a prosperous Condition ever since unto this Day.

" Sir, I shall make no other Application but in " my Prayers to God, to direct your Highness and " the Parliament (as I hope he will) to do that " which will be most for his Honour and the Good of his " People.

Thus ended the Speech of Whitlock: and it gives A Credit some Reputation to the Form of English Monarchy, to Monar-to see that those very Men who had persecuted and chy, tho' murder'd one King, and had banish'd and renounc'd a Scandal another, and abolish'd all Kingly Government, and who desir'd it. sworn themselves into a Commonwealth, without King or Lords; that those Men should at last turn back to the good old Constitution, and find no Rest or Peace but under a new Monarch. If they did this from their Opinion of the Excellence and Necessity of a Sovereign Power in one single Person; it was a singular Testimony given unto that Government which they had wickedly destroy'd, and would now industriously restore: But if all this was against their own Conscience, and they were terrified into the Desire of a King, when they still hated the Name and the Office in their Heart; this was such a Token of an abject Spirit, as could have nothing less than Divine Vengeance in it; that they who rebell'd for Liberty under a lawful and merciful Prince, should be now so dead to all sense of Liberty, as to prostitute their Judgment and their Necks to a Yoke more servile and more heavy than what they had before shaken off, on a Pretence that they were not then able to bear it. And if this were the Case of giving themselves up to Captivity in spite of their own Conscience; it was the finer Riddle, that those who abhorred a Monarchy were forc'd to petition and to plead for it, while he who vehemently was ambitious of it was likewise forced to decline and to deny it. For whatever this Junto of a kind of Parliament pretended, this Project was entirely against the Sense of the main Body of the Nation, and (what was of more consideration to Cromwel)

1657. Cromwel) it was against the Humours of the Army, and the chief Officers of it. One who knew the Intrigues of the Court and the Camp, gives this Account of them.

Ludlow's Account of these Matters.

" Cromwel endeavour'd, by all possible means, to prevail with the Officers of the Army to approve his Design; and knowing that Lieutenant General Fleetwood and Colonel Desborough were particularly averſe to it, he invited himself to dine personally with the Colonel, and carried the Lieutenant General with him, where he began to droll with them about Monarchy; and speaking slightly of it, said, It was but a Feather in a Man's Cap, and therefore wonder'd that Men would not please the Children, and permit them to enjoy their Rattle. But he receiv'd from them, as Colonel Desborough since told me, such an Answer, as was not at all suitable to his Expectations or Desires: for they assured him, there was more in this matter than he perceived; that those who put him upon it were no Enemies to Charles Stuart; and that if he accepted of it, he would infallibly draw Ruin on Himself and Friends. The next Day he sent a Message to the House, to require their Attendance in the Painted Chamber the next Morning, designing, as all Men believ'd, there to declare his Acceptation of the Crown. But in the mean time meeting with Colonel Desborough in the great Walk of the Park, and acquainting him with his Resolution, the Colonel made Answer, that he then gave the Cause and Cromwel's Family also for lost. After some other Discourse, Desborough went home, and there found Colonel Pride, whom Cromwel had Knighted with a Faggot-stick: And having imparted to him the Design of Cromwel to accept the Crown, Pride said He shall not. Why, said the Colonel, how wilt thou hinder it? To which Pride replied, Get me a Petition drawn, and I will prevent it. Whereupon they both went to Dr. Owen, and having acquainted him with what had happen'd, they perswaded him to draw a Petition according to their Desires. Whilst this was doing, Cromwel having reflected on his Discourse with Colonel Desborough, and being informed that Lambert and divers other Officers were dissatisfied with his Design, sent a Message to put off the Meeting in the Painted Chamber, and to desire that the House would send a Committee to confer with him about the great Business that was then depending, intending thereby to gain time in which he might be fitting the Officers for his Design. — One Morning the House being in great Expectation of a Message to appoint the Time and Place for the Acceptance of what they had prepared; some Officers of the Army coming to the Parliament-doors, sent in a Message to Colonel Desborough, to acquaint him, that they had a Petition, which they desired him to present to the House. But he knowing the Contents of it, and conceiving it unfit for him to take publick notice of it before it was presented, acquainted the House, that certain Officers of the Army had a Petition to present to them. Which having done, and every one supposing that the Desires of the Officers were conformable to their own, Cromwel's Party concluding that no Part of the Army durst appear for the crossing his Design, it was generally agreed that they should be called in, and have Leave to present it with their own Hands. Lieutenant Colonel Mason was chosen by the rest of the Officers to deliver the Petition; which when he had done, and the Officers withdrawn, it was read. The Contents of it were to this purpose: That they had hazarded their Lives against Monarchy, and were still ready so to do in Defence of the Liberties of the Nation. That having observed in some Men great Endeavours to bring the Nation again under their old Servitude, by pressing their General to take upon him the Title and Government of a King, in order to de-

They therefore humbly desired, that they would discountenance all such Persons and Endeavours, and continue stedfast to the Old Cause; for the Preservation of which, they, for their parts, were most ready to lay down their Lives.* This Petition was Subscribed by two Colonels, seven Lieutenant Colonels, eight Majors, and sixteen Captains, the Majority of the Army then quarter'd about the Town. It is difficult to determine whether the House or Cromwel was more surpris'd at this unexpected Address: but certainly both were infinitely disturb'd at it. As soon as the Notice of it was brought to Cromwel, he sent for Lieutenant General Fleetwood, and told him, that he wonder'd he would suffer such a Petition to proceed so far, which he might have hinder'd, since he knew it to be his Resolution, not to accept the Crown without the Consent of the Army: and therefore desired him to hasten to the House, and to put them off from doing any thing farther therein. The Lieutenant General immediately went thither, and told them, that the Petition ought not to be debated, much less to be answer'd at this time, the Contents of it being to desire him not to press the Protector to be King, whereas the present Business was, to receive his Answer to what had been formerly offer'd to him; and therefore desired that the Debate of it might be put off till they had received his Answer. To this the House having consented, they received a Message from Cromwel, that instead of meeting him in the Painted Chamber, which was the Place where he us'd to give his Content; they would meet him in the Banqueting House. So the Members came to Whitehall, and Cromwel with great Ostentation of his Self-denial, refused the Title of King.

This Refusal was made on May 8. in a Speech to the Parliament Members; concluding thus: I have truly thought, and do still think, that if I should (at the best) do any thing on this Account to answer your Expectation, it would be at the best Doubtingly; and certainly what is so is not of Faith; and whatsoever is not of Faith is Sin to him that doth it; whether it be with relation to the Substance of the Action about which the Consideration is conversant, or whether to Circumstances about it, which make all indifferent Actions good or evil to him that doth it. I lying under this Consideration, think it my Duty; only I could have wish'd I had done it sooner, for the sake of the House, who have laid so infinite Obligations on me: I wish also I had done it sooner for your sake, for saving Time and Trouble; and indeed for the Committee's sake, to whom I must acknowledge publickly, I have been unseasonably troublesome: I say, I could have wish'd I had given it sooner; but truly this is my Answer, That although I think the Government doth consist of very excellent Parts in all but in that one thing, the Title; as to me, I should not be an honest Man, if I should not tell you, that I cannot accept of the Government, nor undertake the Trouble and Charge of it, which I have a little more experimented than every Man, as to what Troubles and Difficulties do befall Men under such Trusses, and in such Undertakings. I say, I am perswaded to return this Answer to you, that I cannot undertake this Government with this Title of a King: And that is mine Answer to this great and weighty Business.

1657. Car. II.

Cromwel's self-denying Speech.

It is plain enough by this Answer, that he would renounce nothing but the Name and Stile of King; as to Sovereign Power in a single Person he resolv'd to exercise it in more ample manner, than had been yet done by any one of the preceding Monarchs: So he would have his old Title of Protector confirm'd to him in a new Instrument of Government called, The Humble Petition and Advice of the Knights, Citizens and Burgeses now assembled in the Parliament of this Commonwealth, presented to him May 25. and desiring in Duty, 1. That his Highness will be pleas'd by, and under the Name and Stile of Lord Pro-

 6 Car. II. and Ireland, to hold and exercise the Office of Chief Magistrate of these three Nations. 2. That his Highness will for the future be pleased to call Parliaments consisting of two Houses: And so investing him in a Power more than Regal; he acting as a Supreme Sovereign in the acceptance of that Trust, ordering his Answer to be read by the Clerk of the Parliament in these Words, The Lord Protector doth consent. And soon after taking occasion to pass some Bills, he did it in the Royal manner, with a Speech of Thanks for their Supplies. "I perceive that among these many Acts of Parliament, there hath been a very great care had by the Parliament, to provide for the just and necessary support of the Commonwealth, by these Bills for levying Money now brought to me, which I have given my consent unto; and understanding it hath been the practice of those who have been chief Governors, to acknowledge with Thanks to the Commons, their Care and Regard of the Publick, I do very heartily and thankfully acknowledge their Kindnefs herein. And to compleat his Grandeur, he had a solemn Inauguration in Westminster-Hall under a Cloth of State and a glorious Chair, where the Speaker put upon him a Robe of Purple Velvet lin'd with Ermine, telling him, It was an Emblem of Magis- tracy, and imported Righteousness and Justice. Then he delivered him a Bible richly Gilt and Bossed with Gold, and told him, It was a Book that contained the Holy Scriptures, in which he had the happiness to be well vers'd. Then he put in his Hand a Sceptre of mally Gold, saying, Here is a Sceptre not unlike a Staff: for you are to be a Staff to the Poor. Lastly, he gave him a very rich Sword, with this Comment, The last thing is a Sword, not a Military but a Civil Sword; it is a Sword rather of Defence than Offence, not to defend your self only but your People also. If I might presume to fix a Motto upon this Sword, as the valiant Lord Talbot had upon his, it should be this, Ergo sum Domini Protektoris ad protegendum Populum meum, I am the Protector's to protect my People.

After all possible Ceremonies and Ensigns of Authority (nothing wanting but Oil and Crown) Mr.
Manton prayed, and the People shouted, and the Trumpets sounded, and the Parliament rose after many Acts were pass'd, among which one for the Adjournment of this present Parliament from the 26th of June 1657. unto the 26th of January next ensuing.

All things went prosperous abroad to promote and confirm the Advancements of Cromwel. Admiral Blake on April 20. set upon the Spanish West-India Fleet, in the Bay of Sancta Cruz on the Island of Te- noriff, and with invincible Courage broke thro' the Barrier, beat the Enemy out of all their Forts and Castles, sunk two Ships, and fired all the rest, to the insufferable Loss and Shame of the Spaniards. And to disturb them at Land as well as at Sea, the Protector sent over six thousand Men under command of Colonel John Reynolds and Major General Morgan to assist the French in their Attempts upon Flanders, and to do them the Service of helping them to take St. Faniac and Mardike: And yet the Commanders in both these fortunate Expeditions lost their own Lives; Colonel Reynolds being recalled upon suspicion for having a Conference with the Duke of Tork, was cast away on the Goodwin Sands Decemb. 12. And Admiral Blake returning home in Glory, died on Ship-board in Plimouth Sound at the beginning of August: a Man of admirable Courage and equal Success.

Before the meeting of the Parliament, there was to be a new Constitution of it, by adding another House, to bring back the Form of a King, Lords and Commons. The Protector sent out his Writs in the same Form with those formerly sent to summon the Peers to Parliament; their number was sixty, of which the two first, like Princes of the Blood, were his own Sons, the Lord Richard and Lord Henry Crommel, then Nathaniel Fiennes and John Lisle Lords

Commissioners of the Great-Seal, Henry Lawrence Lord President of his Highnesses Council, the Lord Charles Fleetwood, Robert Earl of Warwick, Edmund Earl of Mulgrave, and other Noblemen, and chief Officers Military and Civil; who in Rights and Privileges should differ nothing from a House of Peers, only as the Head must not have the Name of a King so these Members were to have the new Title of the other House of Parliament.

On Jan. 20. both these Houses met, and the Protector came as Sovereign to the House of Lords, and sent for the Speaker and House of Commons by the Black-Rod, and then spoke in short to them, beginning his Speech in the old Stile, My Lords, and you the Knights, Citizens and Burgeses of the House of Commons, and then discoursed some Particulars which he recommended to them; thank'd them for their fair Correspondence the last Session, and assured them, if they would continue to prosecute his Designs, they should be called the blest of the Lord, and Generati- ons to come should bless them: And so he left his Lord Keeper Fiennes to make a large Speech to them, with all the state of our ancient Monarchs. When the two Houses fell upon Business, they could by no means agree; the Commons had Envy and Indignation to see a House pretending to be superior to them without the claim of Birthright, or any old legal Creation; and the other House knew it was their Commission to be a House of Peers in every thing but Name, and therefore insisted upon all the ancient Rights and Privileges belonging to the place where they sat. The Protector seeing their Disputes growing higher every Day, resolv'd upon their Dissolution; the manner of which is thus delivered by a Witness of it.

"Crommel was not a little startled at these Proceedings, suspecting that part of the Army, especially those that were Quarter'd about St. James's were engag'd therein; therefore to prevent that which he feared, and which his Conscience told him he had deserved, he took the inspection of the Watch at Whitehal for several Nights successively in his own Person. And the Alarm from abroad increasing daily, he resolv'd upon the Dissolution of this Assembly, intending as soon as they were dismissed, and the Power devolv'd upon him again, to curb that Spirit of Liberty that had lately appear'd, and to remove such Officers from their Commands in the Army, whom he suspected to have any hand in their late Counsels. Whilst he was deliberating about the best means of effecting this design, fresh informations were brought him concerning the diligence of his Adversaries in all Parts, which quicken'd him to that degree, that he would not stay for one of his own Coaches, but taking the first that was at hand, with Guards as he could presently get together, he hurried to the other House; whither being come, he imparted his Intentions to dissolve that Assembly to Lieutenant General Fleetwood, who earnestly endeavouring to dissuade him from it, he clapp'd his Hand upon his Breast, and swore by the Living God he would do it. Then he sent for the Judges; and they being come, dispatched another Message to the Assembly to attend him presently. Many of them declined to come, and those that appeared were very ill treated by him for obstructing that Work, which he said was so well begun in order to the settlement of the Nation. On the other hand, he assured those whom he had called to his other House, that notwithstanding all the practises that had been us'd against them, they should continue to be Lords, and so dismissed both the Assemblies to follow their own private Affairs.

He is said in his Speech to have declared several urgent and weighty Reasons, that made it necessary for him, in order to the publick Peace and Safety, to proceed to an immediate Dissolution of this Parliament; and to have concluded with these or such Words.

 Houses.

1657. Words, By the Living God I do and must dissolve you. This impetuous act of Cromwel was censur'd and condemn'd by his best Friends; yet it was indeed a Masterstroke of Policy: For a Faction between the two Houses would have broke all his Interests asunder; and if he had made himself a Party on either side, it had but more inflam'd the Quarrel.

Hopes of the King.

The King had reasons to hope that these distractions in the English State, would by degrees bring a People to cast back their Eyes and Hearts upon their lawful Prince. This encourag'd the Spaniards to protect his Person and accept his Arms in Flanders, where his loyal Subjects the Marquis of Ormond, the Lord Rocheſter, the Lords Gerrard and Wentworth, the Lord Taaf and General Middleton had their several Regiments quarter'd along the Sea-Coasts, under Command of the Dukes of York and Glouceſter; wisely to serve a double Design, to assist the King of Spain against his Enemies the French, who were supported by Cromwel, and to be in a readineſs to transport themselves into England, if any favourable Juncture should invite them. For the Royalists in England, tho' weak and poor, were continually forming some Hopes and Designs for recalling the King: But their most secret Counsels were betray'd, and therefore their wisest Projects could seldom grow so far as an Attempt to give Life and Success to them. However, a general Insurrection was at this time designed; and for a preparation to it, there was now published and industriously dispers'd a very smart and surprizing Paper, under the title of Killing no Murder, wherein it was proved to be not only lawful, but honourable, to kill the Tyrant as a common Enemy of his Country. This wak'd the Protector into a dreadful fright, and made him very vigilant to apprehend the Author, who was happily then concealed, not only in his Person but in the very suspicion of his Name, tho' since commonly taken to be Colonel Titus, a Man of great figure in many of the Parliaments after the King's Return. After this alarm given, (which serv'd not so much to put the King's Party into a Preparation as it did to put Cromwel upon his Guard) the Marquis of Ormond slip'd over from Flanders and lay privately in London, to ripen the Design, and to send for his Troops to push on the execution of it. But Cromwel, who well knew that Money could be at any time the Price of a Traitor, had corrupted Sir Richard Willis, and one Corker an ejected Minister, who then practis'd Physick; and by their perfidious Intelligence, he set out a Proclamation for the Plotters before they could get into a Body; many of them were seiz'd, and some furiously Executed; the Marquis of Ormond luckily escap'd into Suffex, and there by disguise and Shifts preserv'd himself, till by the Assistance of Mr. Graver a worthy Gentleman of that County, he got away in a small Boat, and was by Providence kept for better times.

Marquis of Ormond sent into England.

Hardly escap'd.

Death of Admiral Blake.

This Year, as before hinted, died the Valiant and Victorious Admiral Blake, who wanted nothing but a better Master and a better Cause to have made him the Glory of England, and the Wonder of the World. And yet he did not so much espouse the Interest of the Long Parliament, or the new Service of Cromwel, as he did the Honour of his Country, and the English Dominion of the Seas. It was his Argument for Peace and Unity among his Seamen, that they should not listen to any News from Land, nor mind the Changes in the Government; but remember that the Fleet was English, and that their Enemies were Foreigners and Strangers, and therefore they must fight for the Honour of the English Nation. By this Principle he had been always Safe and Successful; and had in this very Summer insulted the Spanish Coasts, and sail'd thence to intercept their West-India Fleet, which got into the Bay of Santa Cruz, in one of the Canary Islands, where Don Diego Diagues the Spanish Admiral had so well barricado'd the Entrance, and so well fortified and planted the Castle and Forts upon the Shore, that he sent Word by a Dutch Merchant, Let Blake come if he dares. But Blake wanted no Challenge; he sent a Squadron under Command of 1657. Captain Steiner, in the Speaker Frigate, who forced 9 Car. II. their passage into the Mouth of the Bay, and were presently supported by the whole English Fleet, and an absolute Victory was by degrees obtained; and yet it was impracticable to carry off the Prizes, and therefore they were to a single Vessel burnt and sunk on Monday April 20. for which noble Service the Parliament (at Cromwel's imparting the News) order'd a Day of Thanksgiving, and voted 500 l. for a Jewel to be presented to the Admiral, as a Testimony of his Countries Gratitude and Respect to him. After this great Exploit he sail'd back to the Coasts of Spain, and having triumphantly kept all their Ships and Ports in awe, he was bringing home the Fleet, while falling sick of the Marine Distemper a Scorbutick Feaver. he died just as the Fleet was entering into Plymouth-Sound, where he passionately enquir'd for the Land, but found his own Element to be the more proper Bed of Honour. He had a publick Funeral solemnly and justly bestowed upon him, with the Honour of Interment in the Chapel of Henry VII. of whom the Lord Clarendon gives this Character. "He was a Man of a private Extraction, yet had enough left him by his Father to give him a good Education; which his own Inclination dispos'd him to receive in the University of Oxford, where he took the Degree of a Master of Arts; and was enough vers'd in Books for a Man who intended not to be of any Profession, having sufficient of his own to maintain him in the Plenty he affect'd, and having then no appearance of Ambition to be a greater Man than he was. He was of a melancholick and a sullen Nature, and spent his time most with Good-Fellows, who lik'd his Moroseness and Freedom he us'd in inveighing against the Licence of the Time and the Power of the Court. They who knew him inwardly discover'd that he had an Anti-Monarchical Spirit, when few Men thought the Government in any Danger. When the Troubles began he quickly declared himself against the King; and having some Command in Bristol, when it was first taken by Prince Rupert and the Marquis of Hertford, being trusted with the Command of a little Fort upon the Line, he refus'd to give it up, after the Governour had signed the Articles of Surrender, and kept it some Hours after the Prince was in the Town, and killed some of the Soldiers; for which the Prince resolv'd to hang him, if some Friends had not interpos'd for him, upon his want of Experience in War, and prevail'd with him to quit the Place by very great Importunity and with much Difficulty. After this, having done eminent Service to the Parliament, especially at Tamerton, at Land, he then betook himself wholly to the Sea, and quickly made himself signal there. He was the first Man that declined the old Track, and made it manifest that the Science might be attain'd in less time than was imagin'd; and defis'd those Rules which had been long in practice, to keep his Ship and his Men out of Danger; which had been held in former times a point of great Ability and Circumspection; as if the principal Art requisite in the Captain of a Ship had been to come home safe again. He was the first Man that brought the Ships to contemn Castles on Shore, which had been thought ever very formidable, and were discovered by him to make a noise only, and to fright those who could rarely be hurt by them. He was the first that infused that proportion of Courage into the Seamen, by making them see by Experience what mighty things they could do if they were resolv'd; and taught them to fight in Fire as well as upon the Water: and though he had been very well imitated and followed, he was the first that gave the Example of that kind of Naval Courage and bold and resolute Achievements.

The unhappy State of Religion in this Year is not worth mentioning. The Plan was to reverse Presby-

State of Religion

1657. Presbytery, as adapted only to a Commonwealth, and to form a new System of Doctrine and Discipline more agreeable to the new Model of Government in a single Person. But that the Alteration might be rather kept in Reserve, than be too suddenly introduc'd; it was only provided in the Instrument of Constituting a Protector, Article XI.

Article in the Instrument of Government.

“ That the true Protestant Christian Religion, as it is contained in the Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testament, and no other, be held forth and asserted for the publick Profession of these Nations: And that a Confession of Faith to be agreed by your Highness and the Parliament, according to the Rule and Warrant of the Scriptures, be asserted, held forth, and recommended to the People of these Nations: That none may be suffer'd or permitted, by opprobrious Words, or writing maliciously or contemptuously, to revile or reproach the Confession of Faith to be agreed on as aforesaid. And such who profess Faith in God the Father, and in Jesus Christ his eternal Son the true God, and in the Holy Spirit God coequal with the Father and the Son, one God blessed for ever; and do acknowledge the holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testament to be the revealed Will and Word of God; and shall in other things differ in Doctrine, Worship, or Discipline, from the publick Profession held forth; Endeavours shall be used to convince them by sound Doctrine, and the Example of a good Conversation: But, that they may not be compelled thereto by Penalties, nor restrained from their Profession, but protected from all Injury and Molestation in the Profession of the Faith, and Exercise of their Religion, whilst they abuse not this Liberty to the Civil Injury of others, or the Disturbance of the Publick Peace. So that this Liberty be not extended to Popery or Prelacy, or to the countenancing such who publish horrible Blasphemies, or practise or hold forth Licentiousness or Profaneness under the Profession of Christ. And that those Ministers or publick Preachers who shall agree with the publick Profession aforesaid in Matters of Faith, although in their Judgment and Practice they differ in Matters of Worship and Discipline, shall not only have Protection in the way of their Churches and Worship respectively, but be esteemed fit and capable, notwithstanding such Difference (being otherwise duly qualified and duly approved) of any Trust, Promotion, or Employment whatsoever in these Nations, that any Ministers who agree in Doctrine, Worship, and Discipline with the publick Profession aforesaid are capable of. And all others who agree with the publick Profession in Matters of Faith, although they differ in Matters of Worship and Discipline as aforesaid; shall not only have Protection as aforesaid, but be esteemed fit and capable (notwithstanding such Difference, being otherwise duly qualified) of any Civil Trust, Employment, or Promotion in these Nations. But for such Persons who agree not in Matters of Faith with the publick Profession aforesaid, they shall not be capable of receiving the publick Maintenance appointed for the Ministry.

Presbytery, with a Toleration to destroy it.

The meaning of all this Provision, was only to dispense for a while with continuing the Establishment of Presbytery, and yet to give an absolute Toleration and a capacity of Preferment to the Independents; and so to hold the Scales between each Party till the Protector and his Council should determine any other way.

It is not improbable, that if Cromwell had been King he would have been for restoring Episcopacy, tho' not upon a Principle of Conscience. The Lord Clarendon says, “ He used to speak much, that it was pity the Nobility should be totally suppress'd, and that the Government would be better if it pass'd another Consultation besides that of the House of Commons. In matter of Religion, he would often speak, that there was much of Good in the Order of Bishops, if the Dross were scow'd off. But indeed Enthusiasm was the Protector's Talent, which he was glad to hide from the use of any others; and if he had reign'd long, would have made it his own Prerogative: For by getting among the People, it put him and his Government into perpetual Trouble and Danger. But of all the Spirits, that of the Fifth-Monarchy Men was the most turbulent, and the most likely to destroy his new Empire. Major General Harrison had put himself into the Counsels and Designs of these furious Men, and the Plot was laid for an Insurrection (in their Cant) to set up King Jesus. Their chief Cabal was held in a House in Shoreditch, where Secretary Thurlo (who spared no Pains or Money for his Master's Safety) had a Spy among them, and discover'd the Intrigues time enough to prevent the Execution of them: He seized their Arms and Ammunition, with a Standard of a Lion Couchant (as of the Tribe of Judah) with this Motto, Who shall rouse him up? and several Copies of a printed Declaration, with this Title, The Principle of the Remnant, &c. The Conspirators taken were Thomas Venner, Gray, Gowler, Hopkins, Ashton, and others, who were spared to create Disturbance and their own Destruction at another time.

Plot of the Fifth-Monarchy Men.

It is certain, the Protector was not himself of any one Religion, and therefore was for Liberty and utmost Latitude to all Parties, so far as consist'd with the Peace and Safety of his Person and Government. And therefore he was never jealous of any Cause or Sect, on the Account of Heresie or Fallhood; but on his wiser accounts of political Peace and Quiet. As he mortally hated the Fifth-Monarchy Men, because by their Notion he was to be dethron'd; and had no Charity for the Anabaptists because of their singular Opinions about the Civil Magistrate; so he had always a suspicious Eye upon the Presbyterians, because he thought their Principles to be Republican: and even the Prejudice he had to the Episcopal Party, was more for their being Royalists, than for being of the good Old Church; as appeared upon the Occasion of their keeping up the Solemnity of Christmas this Year. On Decemb. 25. several Assemblies met to observe the Day, and especially Dr. Gunning's Congregation at Exeter-House in the Strand: Notice of these Meetings was immediately carried to the Protector, and by some Zealots he was earnestly moved to send Soldiers and suppress them: He at first denied the Motion, and argued against it, saying, that to disturb them, was contrary to the Liberty of Conscience which he and his Friends had always acknowledged and pleaded for. But when it was objected, that the keeping of Christmas was a Contempt of the publick Acts and Ordinances; and that under that Pretence there might be a Concourse of People to Rise, or at least to conspire for the King: then he sent away a Detachment of Soldiers, who broke into Dr. Gunning's Meeting, plunder'd and stript some of the People, and carried off others to Imprisonment and Fine. And as the Lord Clarendon observes, “ All Prisons, as well in the Country as the City, were fill'd with those who had been of the King's Party, or he believ'd would be; and he thought this a necessary Season to terrify his Enemies, of all Conditions, within the Kingdom, with Spectacles which might mortify them.

Cromwell for Liberty of Conscience as he pleas'd.

He hated Parties as his Enemies only.

Meetings of the Old Church Men.

This Year began with prosecuting the Discovery of a reasonable Plot of the Royalists to restore their Master and their own Rights. Cromwell had Advice of all their Steps and Measures, both by Intelligence from abroad, and by corresponding with some of the very Actors here at home. He knew well how to turn the Discovery into an Act of Popularity and Gain: And therefore (for want of a Parliament) he sent for the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of London, and in a very aggravating Strain inform'd them of the whole Story; and then professing a greater Passion for their Safety than for his own, he desired their

They took the Bait, and went home with great Indignation against the Royalists, for attempting to plunder their Houses, and cut their Throats; and took mighty care of the Gates and of Guards; and drew up a humble Representation and Address to his Highness, promising the Faith of the City and the Purse of it, in faithfully adhering to him against all his Enemies. A like Hint was given to the Army, and Addresses of the same strain were sent up from several Regiments, and brought over from the English Forces in Flanders; the Protector begging the Complement by imparting to them, that the Designs and Preparations of the Enemy were very formidable, that Commissioners were sent over hither from the King of Scots, and that he had four thousand Men in Flanders ready to be embarked to join with his Party here, and Ships ready to transport them; and therefore it behoved all honest Men to provide for a Defence, and to join heartily together. When he had thus fortified his Interest, he resolved to proceed against the Conspirators whom he had laid fast in Prison: But in what Method to proceed he could not so easily determine: His Council advised him to the antient way of Indicting them in the Upper Bench for Treason, and so going on in the ordinary Course of Trials at the Common Law: But he did not care for trusting to the ordinary Practice of Judges and Juries, tho' they might have been all Creatures of his own making. His Head and Heart lay rather for a High Court of Justice: he had had Experience of it, as the shortest way with Offenders; and therefore he had such a new Court erected, and under the Seal nominated the Commissioners of the Seal and of the Treasury, the Judges, and some other Confidants, to be in this Commission; though some of them would have been glad to have wash'd their hands of Blood: and Whitlock does in particular confess, that though He was one of them, yet he never sat with them, it being against his Judgment. This High Court of Justice was founded on a Law of the late Parliament for Security of his Highness's Person, and had Power to try all such (and such only) as should be named to them by him or his Council. Before this Court were first brought Sir Henry Slingsby, an Officer for the King at Worcester Fight, there taken Prisoner, and sent to the Garrison of Hull; where some of the Officers, Major Waterhouse, Captain Overton, and Lieutenant Thompson, wheedled him into procuring a Commission from the King, and then betrayed him, and sent him up Prisoner to the Tower. At his Trial he pleaded, that all the Discourses he had held with those Persons who trepan'd him, were all in Jest, and for Discourse sake; and that the Fact was impossible, that he, being a single Person and a Prisoner, could have any Hopes of putting that Garrison into the King's Hands: but he was adjudg'd to Death by a Plurality of Voices. Dr. John Hewit, Preacher of St. Gregory's near Paul's, was brought at the same time, and charg'd with the like horrible Conspiracy. He stoutly denied the Jurisdiction of the Court, and pleaded several Cases against the Legality of it; and so for Contempt was adjudg'd guilty of the Charge: and when he did afterward offer to Plead, he was told, It was now too late. These two were Beheaded on Tower-Hill on June 8. one dying with the Bravery of a Christian Soldier, the other with the Devoutness of a Christian Divine; and both proving that the Goodness of a Cause is the only Argument to dare to die. Their Characters are thus given by the inimitable Pen of the Lord Clarendon. Sir Henry Slingsby was in the first Rank of the Gentlemen of Torkshire, and was return'd to serve as a Member in the Parliament that continued so many Years, where he sat till the Troubles began; and having no Relation to, or Dependance upon the Court, he was sway'd only by his Conscience to detest the violent and undutiful Behaviour of that Parliament. He was a Gentleman of a good Understanding, but of a very melancholick Nature, and of very few Words: and when he could stay no longer with a good Conscience in their Councils, in which he never concurr'd, he went into his Country, and join'd with the first who took up Arms for the King. And when the War was ended, he remain'd still in his own House, prepared and disposed to run the Fortune of the Crown in any other Attempt. And having a good Fortune and a general Reputation, had a greater Influence upon the People than they who talked more and louder, and was known to be irreconcilable to the new Government, and therefore was cut off, notwithstanding very great Intercession to preserve him: For he was Uncle to the Lord Falconbridge, who engaged his Wife and all his new Allies to intercede for him, without effect. When he was brought to die, he spent very little time in Discourse; but told them, He was to die for being an honest Man, of which he was very glad. Dr. Hewit was born a Gentleman, and bred a Scholar, and was a Divine before the Beginning of the Troubles. He lived in Oxford, and in the Army till the End of the War, and continued afterwards to preach with great Applause in a little Church in London; where, by the Affection of the Parish he was admitted, since he was enough known to lie notoriously under the Brand of Malignity. When the Lord Falconbridge married Cromwell's Daughter (who had used secretly to frequent his Church) after the Ceremony of the Time, he was made choice of to matry them according to the Order of the Church; which engaged both that Lord and Lady to use their utmost Credit with the Protector to preserve his Life: but he was inexorable, and desirous that the Church-men, upon whom he look'd as his mortal Enemies, should see what they were to trust to, if they stood in need of his Mercy. Mr. John Mordant, one of the principal Actors, was brought next to the Bar, who first put in a Demurrer to the Court, and then pleaded his Cause with great Readiness and Caution, taking Notes of the Witnesses Evidence, and replying with so much presence of Mind, that he was by the Majority of one single Voice acquitted. Mr. Mallory having made his Escape, is supposed to have made his Peace, and then to have surrender'd himself; for upon his Trial he pleaded Guilty, and had a Pardon. Sir Humphry Bennet had great Friends to make Application for him to the Commissioners, who saved his Life. Mr. Cwent a Citizen (in whose Warehouse Arms were found) was delivered by the Generosity of Mr. Pits, who was produc'd to give the expected Evidence against him; but he utterly refused, and chose rather to suffer Imprisonment, and a Fine of 500*l.* to be laid upon him. Mr. Stacy, Mr. Bettly, Mr. Ashton, Mr. Alten, Mr. Summers, and Mr. Fryar, were all condemn'd; and the three former Executed on July 6. This drawing of cool Blood made the Royalists more exasperated, and the Protector more odious; especially because he refused his Mercy upon the greatest Importunity from his nearest Friends and Relations. The Lord Falconbridge, who on Nov. 18. 1657. had married Mary his third Daughter, and was now sent his Ambassadour to France, made earnest Suit for the Life of his Uncle Sir Henry Slingsby; but all his own Interest, and his Wife's, could not obtain that Favour. His beloved Daughter, the Lady Elizabeth Cleypole, interceded for the pious Dr. Hewit, and yet in that only Instance had a Denial from her fond Father; which the so grievously repented, that this is said to have been the Occasion of her last Sickness, wherein she raved against Cruelty and Blood, and died at Hampton-Court on the 6th of August, leaving her Father to follow her within a Month from the very same place. Her Body was carried by Water to Westminster; and being laid in State in the Painted-Chamber, was solemnly

The Siege of Dunkirk.

The great Action abroad was the Siege and Battle of Dunkirk. The French King in Person, and the Cardinal his prime Minister, had a good Army on the edge of Flanders; and being joined by a great Body of the English, under the Command of General Lockhart, it was concluded to besiege Dunkirk, and if taken to put it into the Hands of the English. The Spanish General Don John of Austria well knowing the importance of that Place, resolv'd to raise the Siege, and advancing with 15000 Men, offer'd to relieve it, but in a desperate Fight was entirely routed, and the Town soon after surrendr'd. There was something in this Management that very much shews the Perfidiousness of the French, and the Policy and Power of Cromwel. There was an Article in the Treaty between France and the Protector, that if Dunkirk came to be taken, it should be immediately delivered up to the English, and his Ambassador and General Lockhart had Orders to take possession of it. When the French Army being join'd with the English Auxiliaries, was in its March to invest the Town, Cromwel sent one Morning for the French Ambassador to Whitehal, and upbraided him publicly for his Masters design'd breach of Promise, in giving secret Orders to the French General to keep Possession of Dunkirk, in case it was taken, contrary to the Treaty between them. The Ambassador protest'd he knew nothing of the matter, as indeed he did not, and begg'd leave to assure him, that there was no such thing thought of. Upon which, Cromwel pulling a Paper out of his Pocket, Here, says he, is the Copy of the Cardinal's Order; and I desire you to dispatch immediately an Express, to let him know, that I am not to be impos'd upon; and that if he deliver not up the Keys of the Town of Dunkirk to Lockhart within an Hour after it shall be taken, tell him, I'll come in Person, and demand them at the Gates of Paris. There were but four Persons said to be privy to this Order, the Queen-Mother, the Cardinal, the Marschal de France, and a Secretary. The Cardinal for a long time blamed the Queen, as if she might possibly have blabb'd it out to some of her Women: Whereas it was found after the Secretary's Death, that he had kept a secret Correspondence with Cromwel for several Years, and therefore it was not doubted but he had sent him the Copy of the Order above mention'd. The Message had its due effect; for Dunkirk was put into the Possession of the English: And to palliate the Matter, the Duke and Marschal of Crequy was dispatch'd into England Ambassador Extraordinary to complement Cromwel, attended with a numerous and splendid Train of Persons of Quality; among whom was a Prince of the Blood, and Monsieur Mazarine's Nephew, who brought a Letter from his Uncle to the Protector, full of the highest Expressions of Respect; and assuring his Highness, that being within view of the English Shore, nothing but the King's Indisposition (who lay then ill of the Small-Pox at Calais) could have hinder'd him from coming over to England, that he might enjoy the Honour of waiting upon one of the greatest Men that ever was; and whom next to his Master, his greatest Ambition was to serve. But being deprived of so great a Happiness, he had sent the Person that was nearest to him in Blood, to assure him of the profound Veneration he had for his Person, and how much he was resolv'd to the utmost of his Power to cultivate a perpetual Amity and Friendship betwixt his Master and him.

French perfidiousness yields to Cromwel's Glory.

Dunkirk put into Possession of the English.

A good instance of the Grandeur of Cromwel.

Few Princes ever bore their Character higher upon all Occasions than Oliver Cromwel, especially in his Treaties with crown'd Heads. And its a thing without Example, that is mention'd by one of the best inform'd Historians of the Age, Puffendorf, in the Life of the late Elector of Brandenburgh, that in Cromwel's League with France against Spain, he would not allow the French King to call himself King of France, but of the French; whereas he took to himself not only the Title of Protector of England, but likewise of France. And which is yet more surprising, and can hardly be believed, but for Authority of the Author, whose own * Words are in the Margin, in the Instrument of the Treaty, the Protector's Name was put before the French King's. It is true, France was then under a Minority, and was not arriv'd at that Greatness to which it has since attained: Towards which Cromwel contributed not a little by that League with France against Spain; being the falsest step he ever made, with respect to the tranquility of Europe.

1655. Puffendorf de Rebus Gestis Frederici Wilhelmii Electoris Brandenburgici p. 313. Id porro Bellum Protektoris in Hispania

nos adeo opportunum Gallo accedebat, ut summo studio istum federe sibi innectere studeret, etiam concessit, ut Cromwellus eundem Gallorum Regem, non Galliarum nuncuparet, alius ipse Protektoris quoque Franciæ vocabulum sicut Angliæ assumpturus simul pateretur Cromwellum Instrumento suo nomen Titulæque ante Gallicum ponere.

It ought to be here observ'd, that in the publick Instruments of Correspondence between States and Kingdoms, little Words and Phrases are of great Importance, so far as they relate to Claims and Titles, whose loss or preservation may hereafter in great measure depend upon the ways of former Expression of 'em. This distinction of the King of France and of the French King, thus nicely made by Cromwel, ought to be studiously kept up to assert the Dignity and Stile of our English Princes: And I remember it observ'd by an accurate Person, that in our English Gazettes, that Monarch was continually called the French King, till the writing of those publick Papers falling into the hands of Persons unskilful or inadvertent, he had been now of late sometimes called the King of France.

The French King not the King of France.

But to return, King Charles was ready on the Sea-Coasts of Flanders to have relieved the Expectation of his Friends in England, by bringing over an Army under the Conduct of the Count of Marsini, General to the Prince of Conde, newly distinguish'd with the Garter, to engage him with more Spirit and Honour in the Service of the King. But the discovery of that Design in England, and the execution of several Agents in it, and the clapping up most of the King's Friends, and the defeat of the Spanish before Dunkirk, where the Dukes of York and Gloucester were engaged and forc'd to fly; and the surrendry of Dunkirk, and a strong Garrison put into it by Cromwel, and a Fleet and Harbour for a Guard on all those Coasts; it was impossible for the King to do any thing but to acquiesce under the Baseness of France and the Grandeur of Cromwel.

Charles disappointed of all hopes.

And yet a to promise the most favourable Juncture in the World for restoring the King, that was the Death of the Uurper: The Relation of it is thus given by one of his Fellow Regicides. "After the Death of Mrs. Clypole, it was observ'd that Cromwel grew Melancholly, and also distemper'd with divers Infirmities, particularly a malignant Humour in his Foot, which hindring him from the Exercises of walking or riding abroad: He oblig'd his Physicians to endeavour to disperse it, which they endeavouring to do, drove it upwards to his Heart. By this means he became desperately Sick; and as some about him had for a long time deceiv'd others, so they now endeavour'd to impose upon God himself: For Dr. Goodwin his Creature and Trencher Chaplain, us'd this Expression in his Prayer, during the time of his Sickness: Lord, we beg not for his Recovery, for that thou hast already granted and assur'd us of, but for his speedy Recovery.— At Whitehal they were unwilling to have it known that he was so dangerously ill; yet by reason of a Clause in the Humble Petition and Ad-count. " Sir Philip Warwick tells us, " That some time be" fore his Death he seem'd dispirited; and by the " Acquaintance (says he) I had with an old Gen-" tlewoman, who made his Broths and Jellies, and " other such cockering Meats, I learnt, that for one

 " while he frequently used these, and for another
 " he took large draughts of Wine; and he seldom
 " awaked, even in the Night, but with one or other
 " of these he must be replenish'd: So as at last fal" ling into a Fever, he soon fell into a Delirium;
 " and one of his Physicians, whom I was intimate" ly acquainted with, assured me, that during all " his Sickness, he was never Master of so much Rea" son as to determine any thing of his Successor or " matters of State: And yet his fulsome flattering " Divines and Friends all gave themselves assurance " of his Recovery; inso much, as Thomas Goodwin
 " in his fancy Expostulations with God in Prayer,
 " would tell God, that they ask'd not for his Life;
 " for they were assured he had too great Things for this " Man to do to remove him yet; but they prayed for his " speedy Recovery, because his Life and Presence were so " necessary to divers things then of great Moment to be " dispatched. But all this while this poor Gentleman
 " lay disturb'd in his Head, and as it was thought,
 " reflecting upon a then meeting of the Independent " Ministers, that were assembled at the Savoy, to " set forth their Articles of Faith: For the most " that he said was, They must be satisfied, they must be " satisfied, or else we all run into Blood again. And " tho' it was pretended at that time by Thialo the " Secretary and Goodwin the Minister, that he gave " particular Directions to them, that his Son Richard
 " should be his Successor, and they brought in others
 " afterward to testify the same; yet his Physician
 " assured me, he never was in any such condition " as distinctly to know what he did. And thus on " his beloved and victorious Day, Sept. 3. 1658. he " expired siccâ morte, ten Years after he had spilt
 " the innocent Blood of the King; and tho' he had " run thro' so many dangers, and had so many Plots

1658. " against his Life, and committed so many wicked 10 Car. II. " and fugitious Acts, yet he breathed out his last " in his Bed. But as if the Elements as well as Men " had waited for this Day; " It was very memorable " (says a late Historian) for the greatest Storm of " Wind that had been ever known, for some Hours " before and after his Death, which overthrew Trees, " Houses and made great Wrecks at Sea: And the " Tempest was so universal that the effects of it were " terrible both in France and Flanders, where all " People trembled at it; for besides the Wrecks all " along the Sea-Coasts, many Boats were cast away " in the very Rivers; and within few Days after " the Circumstance of his Death that accompanied " the Storm was universally known.

His Death was generally the most welcome News Rejoicing in the World at home and abroad, being every where at his fear'd and hated. The Royal Party had most reason Death. to be forward in their Joys: for amidst the distraction of Interests arising from the success of the great Rebellion, nothing could have hinder'd the Return of a lawful Prince, but such a single Usurper setting up himself, and re-establishing Monarchy without the King: And they had reason to hope, that this great Obstructor being now taken away, he could not leave a Successor of equal Genius with himself, but Feuds and Divisions must be at last compos'd by the only way, that of restoring the Legal Government. The Commonwealth's Men were, if possible, more exceeding glad to be rid of him, for they thought him a Traitor to the People of England; and if their Power had served, would have brought him to the same Punishment to which he had so villainously brought his Master: Even Desborough his Brother-in-Law, and Fleetwood his Son-in-Law, were in Confederacy with Pickering and Sydenham, and others of his Privy-Council (whom he thought securest to him) to bring back a beloved Commonwealth. And even all the Parties in Religion thought his Death would bring advantage to their several Causes: for he properly espoused none, and kept all under. The Foreign States and Kingdoms did likewise all rejoice as in a common Deliverance. The Dutch had lost Glory to him at Sea, and had found him more imperious in his Treaties and Terms than any English Monarch. The Portuguese had been fill'd with Indignation at him; because he had solemnly carried their Ambassador's Brother to be executed for a Tumult in London, notwithstanding his Plea of being a Publick Minister. The Spaniards above all other Nations were disposed to curse his Meinoty, because of their dreaddful suffering by his Arms at Sea and Land:
 And even the French Court, who by his Assistance laid the Foundation of their succeeding Greatness, envied him as a Friend, and suspected he might one Day prove their Enemy: And it was said, that Cardinal Mazarine would change Countenance whenever he heard him named; so that it pass'd into a Proverb in France, that The Cardinal was not so much afraid of the Devil as he was of Oliver Cromwel.

His Character is thus given by a generous Enemy The Chathe Lord Clarendon. " He was one of those Men, racter of " quos vituperare ne inimici quidem possunt, nisi ut simul Cromwel.
 " laudent; whom his very Enemies could not con" demn without commending him at the same time:
 " For he could never have done half that Mischief " without great parts of Courage, Industry and " Judgment. He must have had a wonderful Un" derstanding in the Natures and Humours of Men,
 " and as great a dexterity in applying them, who,
 " from a private and obscure Birth (tho' of a good " Family) without Interest or Estate, Alliance or " Friendship, could raise himself to such a Height,
 " and compound and knead such opposite and con" tradictory Tempers, Humours and Interests into a " Consistence that contributed to his Designs and to " their own Destruction; whilst himself grew insen" sibly powerful enough to cut off those by whom he " had climbed, in the instant that they projected to " demolish their own Building. What was said of 1658. "Cinna may very justly be said of him, ausum eum, que nemo audeat bonus; perfecisse que a nullo, nisi fortissimo, perfici possent; he attempted those things which no good Man durst have ventur'd on, and atchieved those in which none but a valiant and great Man could have succeeded. Without doubt no Man with more wickedness ever attempted any thing, or brought to pass what he desired more wickedly, more in the Face and Contempt of Religion and Moral Honesty; yet wickedness as great as his could never have accomplished those Designs, without the assistance of a great Spirit, an admirable Circumspection and Sagacity, and a most magnanimous Resolution.

"When he appeared first in the Parliament, he seem'd to have a Person in no degree Gracious, no ornament of Discourse; none of those Talents which use to conciliate the Affections of the Stander-by: Yet as he grew into Place and Authority, his Parts seem'd to be rais'd, as if he had concealed Faculties till he had occasion to use them; and when he was to act the part of a great Man, he did it without any indecency, notwithstanding the want of Custom.

"After he was confirm'd and invest'd Protector by the Humble Petition and Advice, he consulted with very few upon any Action of Importance, nor communicated any enterprize he resolv'd upon with more than those who were to have principal Parts in the execution of it; nor with them sooner than was absolutely necessary. What he once resolv'd, in which he was not rash, he would not be dissuaded from, nor endure any contradiction of his Power and Authority; but extorted Obedience from them who were not willing to yield it.

"One time when he had laid some very extraordinary Tax upon the City, one Cory an eminent Fanatick, and one who had heretofore serv'd him very notably, positively refused to pay his part; and loudly dissuaded others from submitting to it, as an Imposition notoriously against the Law and the Property of the Subject, which all honest Men were bound to defend. Cromwel sent for him, and cajol'd him with the Memory of the old Kindness and Friendship that had been between them; and that of all Men he did not expect this opposition from him, in a matter that was so necessary for the good of the Commonwealth; it had been always his fortune to meet with the most rude and obstinate Behaviour from those who had formerly been absolutely govern'd by him, and they commonly put him in mind of some Expressions and Sayings of his own in cases of the like Nature: So this Man remember'd him, how great an Enemy he had expressed himself to such Grievances, and had declared, that all who submitted to them, and paid illegal Taxes were more to blame, and greater Enemies to their Country than they who had imposed them; and that the Tyranny of Princes could never be grievous but by the Tameness and Stupidity of the People. When Cromwel saw that he could not convert him, he told him, that he had a Will as stubborn as his, and he would try which of them two should be Master. Thereupon, with some Expressions of Reproach and Contempt, he committed the Man to Prison, whose Courage was nothing abated by it; but as soon as the Term came, he brought his Habeas Corpus in the King's-Bench, which they then called the Upper-Bench. Maynard who was of Council with the Prisoner, demanded his Liberty with great Confidence, both upon the illegality of the Commitment, and the illegality of the Imposition, as being laid without any lawful Authority. The Judges could not maintain or defend either, and enough declared what their Sentence would be; and therefore the Protector's Attorney required a farther Day to answer what had been urged. Before that Day, Maynard was committed to the Tower, for presuming to Question or make doubt of his Authority; and the Judges were sent for, and severely reprehended for suffering that Licence, when they with all Humility mention'd the Law and Magna Charta, Cromwel told them with Terms of Contempt and Derision, their Magna F— should not controul his Actions, which he knew were for the safety of the Commonwealth. He ask'd them, Who made them Judges? Whether they had any Authority to sit there but what he gave them? And if his Authority were at an end, they knew well enough what would become of themselves, and therefore advis'd them to be more tender of that which could only preserve them; and so dismiss'd them with caution, that they should not suffer the Lawyers to prate what it would not become them to hear.

"Thus he subdued a Spirit that had been often troublesome to the most Sovereign Power, and made Westminster-Hall as obedient and subservient to his Commands as any of the rest of his Quarters. In all other matters, which did not concern the Life of his Jurisdiction, he seem'd to have great reverence for the Law, rarely interposing between Party and Party. As he proceeded with this kind of Indignation and Haughtiness, with those who were refractory and durst contend with his greatness, so towards all who complied with his good Pleasure and courted his Protection, he us'd great Civility, Generosity and Bounty.

"To reduce three Nations which perfectly hated him to an entire Obedience to all his Dictates; to awe and govern those Nations by an Army that was indevoted to him, and wish'd his ruin, was an Instance of a very prodigious Address. But his Greatness at home was but a shadow of the Glory he had abroad. It was hard to discover which fear'd him most France, Spain or the Low Countries, where his Friendship was current at the Value he put upon it. As they did all sacrifice their Honour and their Interest to his Pleasure, so there is nothing he could have demanded that either of them would have denied him. To manifest which, there needs only two Instances: The first is when those of the Valley of Lucern had unwarily risen in Arms against the Duke of Savoy, which gave occasion to the Pope and the Neighbour Princes of Italy, to call and sollicite for their extirpation, and their Prince positively resolv'd upon it, Cromwel sent his Agent to the Duke of Savoy, a Prince with whom he had no Correspondence or Commerce, and so engaged the Cardinal, and even terrified the Pope himself, without so much as doing any Grace to the English Roman Catholicks (nothing being more usual than his saying, that his Ships in the Mediterranean should visit Civita Vecchia; and that the sound of his Cannon should be heard in Rome) that the Duke of Savoy thought it necessary to restore all that he had taken from them, and did renew all those Privileges they had formerly enjoy'd and newly forfeited.

"The other Instance of his Authority was yet greater and more incredible. In the City of Nismes, which is one of the fairest in the Province of Languedoc, and where those of the Religion do most abound, there was a great Faction at that Season when the Consuls (who are the chief Magistrates) were to be chosen. Those of the Reformed Religion had the confidence to set up one of themselves for that Magistracy, which they of the Roman Religion resolv'd to oppose with all their Power. The Diffention between them made so much noise, that the Intendant of the Province, who is the supreme Minister in all Civil Affairs throughout the whole Province, went thither to prevent any Disorder that might happen. When the Day of Election came, those of the Religion possessed themselves with many arm'd Men of the Town-House where the Election was to be made. The Magistrates sent to know what their meaning was; to which they answer'd, They were there to give their Voices for the choice of the new Consuls, 1658. " and to be sure that the Election should be fairly made.

 10Car.II. " The Bishop of the City, the Intendant of the Province, with all the Officers of the Church, and the present Magistrates of the Town, went together in their Robes to be present at the Election, without any suspicion that there would be any force used. When they came near the Gate of the Town-House, which was shut, and they supposed would be open'd when they came, they within pour'd out a Volley of Musket-shot upon them, by which the Dean of the Church, and two or three of the Magistrates of the Town were kill'd upon the place, and very many others wounded; whereof some died shortly after. In this confusion the Magistrates put themselves into as good a Posture to defend themselves as they could, without any purpose of offending the other, till they should be better provided; in order to which, they sent an Express to the Court, with a plain relation of the whole matter of Fact; and that there appeared to be no manner of Combination with those of the Religion in other places of the Province; but that it was an Insolence in those of the place, upon the presumption of their great Numbers, which were little inferior to those of the Catholics. The Court was glad of the occasion, and resolv'd that this Provocation, in which other places were not involv'd, and which no body could excuse, should warrant all kind of Severity in that City, even to the pulling down their Temples, and expelling many of them for ever out of the City; which, with the Execution and Forfeiture of many of the principal Persons, would be a general Mortification to all of the Religion in France, with whom they were heartily offended, and a part of the Army was forthwith order'd to march towards Nismes to see this executed with the utmost rigour.

" Those of the Religion in the Town were quickly sensible into what condition they had brought themselves, and sent with all possible submission to the Magistrates to excuse themselves, and to impute what had been done to the rashness of particular Men, who had no order for what they did. The Magistrates answer'd, That they were glad they were sensible of their Miscarriage; but they could say nothing upon the Subject till the King's pleasure should be known, to whom they had sent a full Relation of all that had passed. The others very well knew what the King's Pleasure would be, and forthwith sent an Express, one Moulins, who had liv'd many Years in that place and in Montpellier, to Crommel to desire his Protection and Interposition. The Express made so much haste, and found so good a reception the first Hour he came, that Crommel after he had received the whole Account, bid him refresh himself after so long a Journey, and he would take such care of his Business, that by the time he came to Paris he should find it dispatch'd, and that Night sent away another Messenger to his Ambassador Lockhart; who by the time Moulins came thither, had so far prevail'd vvith the Cardinal, that Orders vvere sent to stop the Troops which were upon their March tovwards Nismes; and vvithin few Days after, Moulins return'd with a full Pardon and Amneesty from the King, under the Great-Seal of France, so fully confirm'd with all Circumstances, that there was never farther mention made of it, but all things passed as if there had never been any such thing. So that no body can vvonder that his Memory remains still in those Parts, and with those People in great Veneration.

" He would never suffer himself to be denied any thing he ever asked of the Cardinal, alledging, that the People would not be otherwise satisfied, which the Cardinal bore very heavily, and complain'd of to those vvith vvhom he vvould be free. One Day he visited Madam Turenne, and vvhen he took his leave of her, she, according to her Custom, besought him to continue gracious to the Churches.

1658. " Whereupon the Cardinal told her, That he knew 10Car.II. " not how to behave himself; if he advised the King to " punish and suppress their Insolence, Crommel threat-
 " ned him to join with the Spaniards; and if he shew'd " any Favour to them, at Rome they accounted him an " Heretick.

" To conclude his Character, Crommel vvwas not so far a Man of Blood as to follow Machiavel's Method, vvwhich prescribes, upon a total alteration of Government, as a thing absolutely necessary, to cut off all the Heads of those, and extirpate their Families vvho are Friends to the old one. It was confidently reported, that in the Council of Officers it was more than once propos'd, that there might be a general Massacre of all the Royal Party, as the only Expedient to secure the Government, but that Crommel would never consent to it; it may be out of too great a contempt of his Enemies. In a Word, as he was guilty of many Crimes against which Damnation is denounc'd, and for which Hell-fire is prepared, so he had some good Qualities, which have caused the Memory of some Men in all Ages to be celebrated; and he will be look'd upon by Posterity as a brave wicked Man. The consequence of his Death was, that immediately the Council assembled and declared his Son Richard to be his Successor by this notable Proclamation.

Richard made Protector.

Whereas it hath pleased the most wise God in his Providence to take out of this World the most Serene and Renowned Oliver, late Lord Protector of this Commonwealth: And his Highness having in his Lifetime, according to the Humble Petition and Advice declared and appointed the most Noble and Illustrious the Lord Richard, eldest Son of his said late Highness, to succeed him in the Government of these Nations, We therefore of the Privy Council, together with the Lord Mayor, Aldermen and Citizens of London, the Officers of the Army, and numbers of other Principal Gentlemen, do now hereby with one full Voice and Consent of Tongue and Heart, Publish and Declare the said Noble and Illustrious Lord Richard to be rightful Protector of this Commonwealth of England, Scotland and Ireland, and the Dominions and Territories thereto belonging: To whom we do acknowledge all Fidelity and constant Obedience, according to Law, and the said Humble Petition and Advice, with all hearty and humble Affections beseeching the Lord, by whom Princes Rule, to bless him with long Life, and these Nations with Peace and Happiness under his Government.

God save his Highness Richard Lord Protector.

Then the Council proceeded to give the Oath of Government to the new Protector, who published a Proclamation for all Officers to continue in their Places; and the Master of the Ceremonies was order'd to acquaint all Foreign Ministers with the Death of the late Protector, and the Succession of his Son Richard; which soon brought over many new Ambassadors and Envoys from the neighbour Princes and States, all admitted with due Ceremony to a solemn Audience given by his Highness, to condole 1c Car. II. Succellion to the Government; while infinite Ad-dresseſ came up from all Parts of the three Kingdoms, to complement the new Protector with mighty Profeſſions of publick Joy and Satisfaction, and with ſolemn Reſolutions and Promiſes of adhering to him againſt all his Enemies. And indeed the general Exultation of the People and Armies was ſo very great upon this new Succellion, that it muſt be imputed more to the common Senſe of Deliverance from one Tyrant, than to their Hopes or Expectations from this other Protector; who was raiſed to the Government without any Reſpect or good Opinion in the Minds of the People or the Soldiers. For he had been neither a Military Man, nor a Stateſ-man; rather an honeſt Country Gentleman, bred to Privacy and Sports, and willing to ſerve his Neighbours, and even the Cavaliers, by a little Inter-eſt he had in his Father's Court. His own Father ſeem'd to have the leaſt Affection and the loweſt Opinion of this Son, among all his other Children: He never truſted him in any Command, nor employ'd him in any true Buſineſs: He made him indeed Chancel-lour of Oxford, and put him at the Top of the other Houſe in Parliament: but this was rather for the Honour of his Family, than for the Love of his Son. He never let him in to any Secrets of Policy nor any Arts of War; and therefore it is plain, he never deſign'd him for his Succellor, becauſe he never train'd him up to it.

Cromwell's Funeral.

One of the firſt Acts of the new Government, was to order the Funeral of the late Uſurper; and the Council having reſolved that it ſhould be very magnificent, the Care of it was referred to a Committee of them, who ſending for Mr. Kimmerly, Maſter of the Wardrobe, deſired him to find out ſome Precedent by which they might govern themſelves in this important Affair. After Examination of his Books and Papers, Mr. Kimmerly, who was ſuſpected to be inclined to Popery, recommended to them the Solemnities uſed upon the like occaſion for Philip II.
King of Spain, who had been repreſented to be in Purgatory for about two Months. In the like manner was the Body of this great Reformer laid in Somſet-Houſe. The Apartment was hung with Black, the Day-light was excluded, and no other but that of Wax-Tapers to be ſeen. This Scene of Purgatory continued till the firſt of November, which being the Day preceding that commonly called All-Souls, he was removed into the Great Hall of the ſaid Houſe, and repreſented in Effigie, as lying on a Bed of Crimſon Velvet, covered with a Gown of the like coloured Velvet, a Sceptre in his Hand, and a Crown on his Head. That part of the Hall wherein the Bed ſtood was railed in, and the Rails and Ground within them covered with Crimſon Velvet:
 Four or five hundred Candles ſet in flat ſhining Candleſticks, were ſo placed round near the Roof of the Hall, that the Light they gave ſeemed like the Rays of the Sun. By all which he was repreſented to be now in a ſtate of Glory. This Folly and Profuſion ſo far provoked the People, that they threw Dirt in the Night on his Eſcucheon, that was placed over the great Gate of Somerset-Houſe. I purpoſely omit the reſt of the Pageantry, the great Number of Perſons that attended on the Body, the Proceſſion to Wyſtmiſter, the vaſt Expence in Mourning, the State and Magnificence of the Monument erected for him, with many other things that I care not to remember. To this Account may be added, That this pompous Funeral of Cromwell was celebrated on Nov. 23. and the exceſſive Charges of it never half paid, as if the very dead Body was to uſurp upon the Rights and Properties of the People. It was Interred in the moſt ſacred and ſolemn Place of the Abbey, above the High Altar, with a Monument excelling that of any Crown'd Head: But within leſs than two Years the Pile was broken down, and the Body carried to a more proper Place.

A new Park call'd

On Dec. 4. the Protector, by Advice of his Council, reſolved to call a Parliament to meet on the 1658.

 27th Day of January next: And in order to it, theſe 1c Car. II.
 three Queſtions were debated.

1. "Whether the Elections ſhould be made by "the Counties, Cities, and chief Towns, according "to the Diſtribution agreed on by the Long Parlia"ment, and practiſed by Cromwell: Or whether "they ſhould be made by the Counties, Cities, and "Boroughs, according to the ancient Law of the "Land? It was determined for the latter way; which broke the Meaſures of the Court, and ſet the People upon Hopes of a Free Parliament, and gave many of the Commonwealth's Men an Opportunity to be elected in private Boroughs, who dared not yet to have appeared in the open Counties and Cities.

2. "How the other Houſe ſhould be ſummoned,
 "whether by a new general Form, or by particular
 "Writs of Summons, as antiently uſed to the Peers?
 It was carried for the latter, under the ſame Pretence of bringing all things back to the ancient Courſe of Law. But this too was a Diſadvantage to the new Government; for when the Houſes met, they quarrell'd upon the Forms of Meeting, and the Commons would not treat with thoſe new Nobles without ſaving the Rights of ancient Peerage.

3. "Concerning the thirty Members to ſerve for "Scotland, and thirty for Ireland, whether or how "they ſhould be choſen? There having been as "yet no Diſtribution of Powers to Elect, as it was "order'd there ſhould be in the humble Petition "and Advice. It was at laſt concluded, that Members ſhould be choſen for Scotland and Ireland, as had been practiſed in the time of Cromwell, with this Pro-viſo, that they ſhould not be admitted to ſit, till the Conſent of thoſe choſen for England was firſt obtained. And this again occaſion'd a fierce Contention in the Houſe about admitting or rejecting the Scotch and Iriſh Members. — So as the way of projecting and modelling this Parliament made the very Conſtitution of it to be Strife and Division.

When the Parliament met Jan. 27. Mr. Chaloner Meeting Chute was choſen Speaker of the Commons, who of the Parl. was ſo much indiſpoſed with the Heats and Tumults of the Houſe, that in the beginning of March Sir Lillibone Long was choſen to ſupply his Place, in which he ſoon after died, and Mr. Bamfield was appointed Speaker pro tempore; then Mr. Chute died, and Bamfield was voted to keep his Poſſeſſion: A fatal Parliament, that kill'd two Speakers before it diſpatch'd any Buſineſs. An Oath was required of any ſitting Member, not to act or contrive any thing againſt the Lord Protector: but ſome of the old Republicans declined the Oath, and had Inter-eſt enough in the Houſe to ſit and vote without it. The only two Parties were thoſe for the preſent Government or new Protector, and thoſe for a Commonwealth. All that were ſuſpected to have been Roy-aliſts, on which ſide ſoever they voted, were expell'd the Houſe by the Complaint and Clainours of the other ſide. Mr. Secretary Thurlo, Leader of the Court Party, preſented a Declaration ready drawn, as a Bill for the Recognition of Richard Cromwell to be lawful Lord Protector, and the former Petition and Advice to be ſtill the Rule of Government for theſe Nations. Sir Henry Vane and his Commonwealth Party oppos'd this Declaration with great Vehemence, urging, that the Protector's Right ought to be founded on the Conſent of the People; and therefore the Word Recogniſing ought at leaſt to be alter'd into that of Agniſing, to make his Authority ſtand upon the true bottom. And yet the Court-Party did at laſt carry their Queſtion, but by ſo ſmall a majority, that the other Party quickly grew upon them; till the Officers and Army formed themſelves into a third Party, and ſwallowed up both the other.

Religion had been ſo proſtituted to the moſt vile State of and wicked Ends, that the Face of it began to be Religion.
 aſham'd. The Presbyterians appeared to be the moſt 1658. sedate and sober Party, but Cromwel thought 'em all Hypocrites toward Heaven, and disaffected toward his Person and Government. The Independents were the Faction by whose Interest he had raised himself; and therefore for Gratitude he was expressly for them, or rather out of Policy, knowing their Tenets to have been born and bred in a Camp, and well suited to his Military arbitrary Power, and equally averſe to the old legal Monarchy, and to the new-invented Commonwealth. But the World did not yet know what the Religion of the Independents was; for it had not been drawn into any publick Confession; nor had the Leaders met in any one General Assembly. To make up this Defect, Cromwel resolved upon a Convention or Assembly of the Independent Ministers, whom he called to meet at the Savoy, there to treat with the Presbyterians, and come, if possible, to some Accommodation with them. They were here Sitting and Debating at the time of Cromwel's Death, and gave him some Distraction to hear of their Disputes and Quarrels. After his Death, they publish'd a Declaration of the Faith and Order owned and practis'd in the Congregational Churches in England, agreed upon and consented unto by their Elders and Messengers in their Meeting at the Savoy, Octob. 12. 1658.

The Army against the Protector and the Parliament.

But it was now too late to pass their Scheme into a National Religion: for the new Protector not being Heir to his Father's Politicks nor Conscience, was more inclinable to the Presbyterians, by whom he was fervilely courted, and especially by Mr. Baxter. This Presbyterian Spirit was got much into the new House of Commons, and shew'd it self in their Declaration for a Fast, wherein they had this Expression, that they ought to take Shame unto themselves for neglecting to settle the Government of the Church, and for having permitted so many erroneous and heretical Opinions to be divulged. Tho' Richard, for want of the Arts of Dissembling, was no Bigot to any of the Ways which they called the Ways of Godliness, and therefore was the less able to work upon any Party. A Member of his Parliament tells us, "That a certain inferiour Officer having publickly murmur'd at the Advancement of some that had been Cavaliers, to Commands in the Army, he was carried to Whitehall to answer for the same: Richard Cromwel, besides other reproachful Language, asks him in a deriding manner, whether he would have him prefer none but those that were godly? Here, continued he, is Dick Ingoldsby, who can neither Pray nor Preach, and yet I will trust him before you all. Those imprudent as well as irreligious Words, so clearly discovering the Frame and Temper of his Mind, were soon published in the Army and City of London, to his great Prejudice. And from this time, all Men among them, who made but the least Pretences to Religion and Sobriety, began to think themselves unsafe whilst he governed; and thereupon soon formed a Resolution to use their utmost Endeavours to divide the Military from the Civil Power, and to place the Command of the Army in Lieutenant General Fleetwood.

While the Sitting Parliament was miserably divided between the Governing Party and the old Commonwealth's Men; the chief Officers in the Army formed themselves into a third Party more formidable than both the others, because they had the Sword in their Hand, and wanted Money. These met and consulted frequently at Wallingford-House, the Dwelling of Fleetwood: and having drawn over several of the Republican Commoners, Vane, Ludlow, Hasturig, and others; they at first kept fair with the Protector, and upon the Tumults in the two Houses they wheedled him into an Opinion of the Necessity of calling a General Council of Officers, in order to present something to the Parliament for the Regulation and Maintenance of the Army. He not suspecting their Design, consented to the Proposition: and having issued out an Order to that purpose, this Military General Council met, and quickly assumed so much Power to themselves, that on Apr. 20. they presented a Remonstrance to the Protector, against the Proceedings of the Parliament; who, to be even with them, voted, 1. "That during the Sitting of this Parliament, there shall be no General Council, or Meeting of the Officers of the Army, without Direction and Authority of his Highness the Lord Protector, and both Houses of Parliament. 2. That no Person shall have or continue any Command or Trust in the Army, who shall refuse to Subscribe, That he will not disturb or interrupt the free Meetings in Parliament of any the Members of either House of Parliament, or their Freedom in their Debates or Counsels. The Protector, a dubious and unskilful Manager, endeavour'd to execute the Parliamentary Votes, and forbid the General Meeting: But the Officers were now too strong to obey. On April 22. Friday Morning, Fleetwood the Protector's Brother, Desborough his Uncle, and other Leaders, brought up their Forces to Whitehall, and forced him, poor Man, to consent to a Commission and Proclamation ready drawn for Dissolving the Parliament; which they took care to execute by locking up the Doors, and guarding of them.

11 Car. II.

Richard terrified into Dissolving the Parliament.

When the Army had thus deliver'd themselves from the Parliament, their remaining Grievance was the Protector himself, whom they resolved to lay aside, and to declare for the Good Old Cause, a Commonwealth without a single Person or a House of Peers. To pursue this Design, they drew up an Instrument, intitled, A Declaration of the Officers of the Army, inviting the Members of the Long Parliament, who continued Sitting till the 20th of April 1653, to return to the Exercise and Discharge of their Trusts. Sign'd May 6. by the Direction of the Lord Fleetwood and the Council of Officers of the Army. Deliver'd to the old Speaker by Lambart and a Train of other Officers. Upon this, many secluded Members of the Rump Parliament paid a Visit to their Speaker, and signified to him (as was concerted) their Willingness to return to the Discharge of their Trust.

This Rump, violently thrust out by Cromwel, and now as illegally thrust in by the Army, met on Saturday May 7. and soon agreed on a Declaration, That they were resolved to settle the Commonwealth upon such a Foundation as shall assert, establish, and secure the Properties and Liberties of the People in reference to all, both as Men and Christians, and that without a single Person, Kingship, or House of Peers: and they will vigorously endeavour carrying on of the Reformation so much desired and so often declared for, to the end there may be a godly and faithful Magistracy and Ministry upheld and maintained in the Nation, to the Glory and Praise of the Lord Jesus Christ, and to the reviving and making glad the hearts of the Upright in the Land. But these Gentlemen were to remember, that they were but new Tools in the Hands of the Army, and were to be managed by them.

The Rump restored.

Hence the Army brought them their humble Petition and Address, desiring, that is, prescribing, 1. The Government of a Free State and Commonwealth, without a single Person, Kingship, or House of Peers. 2. A just and due Regulation of Law, and Courts of Justice and Equity. 3. An Act of Oblivion for All that had acted since the 9th of Apr. 1653. 4. The Discharge of all publick Debts contracted since the 20th of April 1653. 5. Liberty of Conscience not extending to Popery or Prelacy. 6. A godly, faithful, and painful Gospel-preaching Ministry to be countenanc'd and maintain'd. 7. All Persons adhering to the late King, or to Charles Stuart his Son, to be removed from all Places of Trust. 8. To prevent the long Sitting of Parliaments, and to provide for a due Succession of 'em. 9. To own and acknowledge the Lord Charles Fleetwood to be General of the Land Forces of this Commonwealth. 10. To put the Administration of all executive Power of Government in a Council of State. 11. To discharge 10000 l. per Annum upon Richard Cromwel and his Heirs, and 10000 l. more upon him during Life, and 8000 l. a Year upon his Mother during her Life.

This Instrument was deliver'd in the House on the 12th of May by Lambert at the Head of several Officers, with this Speech :

Mr. Speaker,

Lambert's Speech. WE are commanded, by the Officers of the Army, to present before you their humble Petition and Address. There are several things contained in it, which have been a long time upon their hands; but now finding, to their great Joy and Satisfaction, that you are return'd, in discharge of their Trust they thought it unfit to neglect this Opportunity, but have commanded us to present this Petition.

Then they withdrew; and the House, upon debating the Matter, order'd their Speaker to return them this Answer :

Speaker's
 Answer. I Am commanded by the House to tell you, they have read the Petition and Address, and that as they found your Affection before they came hither, so they find that Affection continuing. The things contained in your Petition are of great weight, and many more things of great weight are laying before the House. And it is concerning the Settlement for which the Divine Providence of God hath brought us hither, who we hope shall never depart from us. The House finds in your Advice much of Love and Affection, and have commanded me to acknowledge that Love and Affection you have shewn, and to give you Thanks, very hearty Thanks, for your Love and Expressions of it; and accordingly, in their Name, I do give you very hearty Thanks.

The House, upon first Debate of the Articles, agreed to all of them, excepting that in favour of Richard and his Family; having, as 'tis thought, secret Instructions from the Army to put some Slight and Indignity upon that Cypher of Government.
 And therefore they appointed a Committee to receive his Submission to their Authority, and to take a state of his Debts, before they would do any thing for him. He was full of Compliance, and gave in his formal Submission, with a Schedule of his Debts an-nexed. What was contracted for his Father's Funeral (in despite to his Memory) they absolutely rejected, and declined the Settlement of any Revenue upon him or his Mother; only gave him a small Sum to discharge part of his private Debts, and required him and all his Dependents to remove from Whitehall in six Days time. The next thing they did was to call home Henry Cromwel from his Government in Ireland, where he had been very popular, and had an Army under good Discipline: but seeing the Tide turn strongly, he would not offer to oppose it.

There is a pleasant Story told by the Lord Clarendon, which may here be inserted. Says he, "It may not prove ungrateful to the Reader, in this place, to entertain him with a very pleasant Story that related to this miserable Richard, tho' it happen'd long afterwards; because there will be scarce again any occasion so much as to mention him during the continuance of this Relation. Shortly after the King's Return, and the manifest Joy that possessed the whole Kingdom thereupon, this poor Creature found it necessary to transport himself into France, more for fear of his Debts than of the King; who thought it not necessary to enquire after a Man so long forgotten. After he had lived some Years in Paris untaken notice of,
 and indeed unknown, living in a most obscure Condition and Disguise, not owning his own Name, nor having above one Servant to attend him; he thought it necessary, upon the first Ru-1659. mour and Apprehension that there was like to be 11 Car. II. a War between England and France, to quit that Kingdom, and to remove to some place that would be neutral to either Party; and pitch'd upon Genevva. Making his way thither by Bourdeaux, and through the Province of Languedoc, he pass'd through Pezenas, a very pleasant Town belonging to the Prince of Conti, who hath a fair Palace there, and, being then Governour of Languedoc, made his Residence in it.

"In this Place Richard made some stay; and walking abroad to entertain himself with the View of the Situation, and of many things worth the seeing, he met with a Person who well knew him, and was well known by him, the other having always been of his Father's and of his Party; so that they were glad enough to find themselves together. The other told him, That all Strangers who came to that Town used to wait upon the Prince of Conti, the Governour of the Province, who expected it, and always treated Strangers, and particularly the English, with much Civility: that he need not be known, but that he himself would first go to the Prince and inform him, that another English Gentleman was passing through that Town towards Italy, who would be glad to have the Honour to kiss his Hands. The Prince receiv'd him with great Civility and Grace, according to his natural Custom, and after few Words, began to discourse of the Affairs of England, and asked many Questions concerning the King, and whether all Men were quiet, and submitted obediently to him?
 Which the other answer'd briefly, according to the Truth. Well, said the Prince, Oliver, tho' he was a Traytor and a Villain, was a brave Fellow, had great Parts, great Courage, and was worthy to Command; but that Richard, that Coxcomb, Coquin, Poltron, was surely the basest Fellow alive: What is become of that Fool? How was it possible he could be such a Sot? He answer'd, That he was betray'd by those whom he most trusted, and who had been most obliged by his Father. So being weary of his Visit, quickly took his Leave, and the next Morning left the Town, out of fear that the Prince might know that he was the very Fool and Cox-comb he had mention'd so kindly. And within two Days after, the Prince did come to know who it was whom he had treated so well, and whom before, by his Behaviour, he had believed to be a Man not very glad of the King's Restoration.

The Royalists could not forbear attempting to make some advantage of these Confusions, and therefore were now ready to rise in all parts of the Kingdom; and a Declaration was publish'd in the Names of the Lords, Gentlemen and Citizens, Freeholders and Yeomen of this once happy Nation; some little Efforts were made to no purpose in the South and West parts of England; but the most considerable Body that got together was in Cheshire, under the command of Sir George Booth, who with the Earl of Derby, the Lord Kilmurry, and Major General Egerton, met at Warrington in a small Party, and had soon an accession of great numbers of the Gentry. Colonel Roger Whitley brought a Message to Sir George Booth from his Majesty, with an Account of his Majesty's Preparations beyond Sea, and that he was ready to come over when the first opportunity should call him. This being a great satisfaction to the Party now encreas'd to 500 Men, they resolv'd to march to Chester, and by the Interest of Colonel Worden had the Gates open'd to them; then Egerton was sent with a Party to Chirk-Castle, where Sir Thomas Middleton hearing of his Approach opened the Gates and joyfully receiv'd him. Colonel Whitley put a Garrison into Harding-Castle in Flintshire, then belonging to Judge Glyne: Colonel Ireton declared for them in Liverpool, and Mr. Brooks and Mr. Duxob, two of the Members of the House, to atone for their former Disloyalties join'd also with them.

The Royalists hope for some Advantage.

Rising in Cheshire.

1659. Upon the noise of this Rising on Aug. 5. Lambert 11 C. II. was immediately dispatched with a good Body of Forces. Sir George Booth hearing that Lambert was drawing near, was retiring into Lancashire to gain time, and encrease his Numbers; and for better amusement, he sends a Trumpeter to Lambert with two Ministers, to shew the cause of their appearing in Arms, and to desire a Treaty for saving the effusion of English Blood. Lambert would agree to nothing, without first laying down their Arms and surrendering all their Garisons. Having no Reply, he press'd hard upon them at Wilmington-bridge near Northwich in Cheshire, and gave them an entire Rout.
 Capt. Morris a gallant Gentleman was kill'd; the Lord Kilmory, Brooks, Egerton, O Neale and others were taken Prisoners: Sir George Booth and Sir Thomas Aliddleton made their Escapes; but Sir George was afterward taken in Disguise at Newport-Paynel in Euckinghamshire, by the Treachery of one Carter his Host at the George-Inn; and soon after the Earl of Derby, Colonel Shamrofs and others were taken.

Lambert was so flusht with this Victory, that at Derby he consults with his chief Officers how to restore the Military Power to its former Grandeur, and to reform all Miscarriages in the Civil Administration; and concluded to draw up their Intentions in the Form of A Petition to the Parliament to redress their Grievances. Upon the News of this Project Sir Arthur Hylrigge in the House exclaim'd against it, as a design for altering the Government and setting up another single Person. Under this Jealousie the House order'd Sept. 22. that Ashfield, Cobbet and Duckingfield (in whose hands it was) should bring the original Paper into the House that Afternoon; and next Day to check the Ambition of Lambert, whom they suspected to be riding over the Head of Fleetwood, they pass'd a Vote, That to have any more General Officers in the Army than are already settled by the Parliament, is Useless, Chargeable and Dangerous to the Commonwealth; and soon after pass'd An Act against raising any Money without consent of Parliament; and made Application to General Fleetwood to protect them from his Rival Lambert, and got a Declaration from his part of the Army for adhering to the Parliament. And then the House thought themselves able to make an Order Octob. 12. that the Commissions of Lambert, Desborough, Kelsey, Ashfield, Cobbet, Packer and Berry should be all void, and they should be succeeded by the next Officers in their several degrees. But then again afraid to trust themselves with Fleetwood or any single General, they pass'd an Act for putting out Fleetwood from being Lieutenant General of the Army, and to constitute him and Ludlow, Monk, Hylrigge, Walton, Morley and Overton Commissioners to govern all the Forces; and then order'd two Regiments to be their Guard, who took their Station in the Palace-Yard and Westminster-Hill.

Lambert scorning to be turn'd out by the Fellowvs he had so lately put in, resolv'd to strike an early blow upon them; and therefore Oct. 13. meeting Evelyn marching his Troop to guard the Parliament, he commanded him to dismount, and tho' Lambert was on Foot and none with him, yet Evelyn at the Head of his Troop tamely dismounted at the Word of Command, while Lambert commanded the Troop to follow him, and drawing some other Forces together, he march'd into King-street, and possess'd all the Avenues to the Parliament House. Next Morning the Speaker came in his Coach toward the House, but was stop'd at his entry into the Palace-Yard by Colonel Duckenfield, and after some Expostulation was forc'd to return. The Soldiers on both sides kept their Stations in a posture of Hostility, till the Council of State meeting at Whitehall order'd them all to draw off to their Quarters, which they agreed to do, upon condition the Parliament should sit no longer, and the Government should be settled by a Council of Officers.

This new Military Council dissolv'd the Council of State, and appointed ten Persons to be a select Committee for Administration of the Government till further Order. These were Fleetwood (whom they had declared to be again General of all the Forces) Lambert (whom they had declar'd Major General) Desborough, Whitlock, Sir Henry Vane, Sir James Harrington, Major Salway, Berry, Sidenham and Archibald Johnston. But within few Days the General Council of Officers lay aside the Council of Ten, and set up another Committee of twenty three Persons, who should have the Administration of the Government, and the same Powers with the late Council of State, and should be called the Committee of Safety; these were Fleetwood, Lambert, Desborough, Whitlock, Steel, Sir Henry Vane, Ludlow, Sydenham, Salway, Strickland, Berry, Lawrence, Sir James Harrington, Johnston, Ireton, Tichbunn, Hughson, Clerk, Bennet, Lilbunn, Cornelius Holland, Henry Bandriff and Robert Thompson.

 Who dis-

 Council of State.

And settle a Committee of Safety.

This new Pack of Governours publish'd a Declaration to acquaint the World, "That it was upon their Hearts to settle a due Liberty upon the Freeborn People of these Nation to make a thorough Reformation of the Law, and to establish a Painful, Godly, Faithful, Gospel-preaching Ministry, and to provide them a Maintenance less troublesome to them, and less vexatious to the People than that of Tythes; and to prepare such a Form of Government as should best suit with a Free-State and Commonwealth, without a single Person, Kingship or House of Lords. They doubted not, but such who saw the many Temptations be-setting them on every side, and the great Difficulties they labour'd under, and knew not what farther Streights a Day may bring forth, would say on their behalfs, Who is sufficient for these things?
 And out of former Experiences being taught, that the Lord is a present help in time of Trouble, will cry aloud for them before the Throne of Grace, that the Lord himself may appear, and carry on his own Work in their Hands: And if it shall please him by his Spirit to stir up those that fear his Name to be instant on their behalf, they shall not fear what Evil Man can do unto them.

Their Declaration.

This Committee of Safety were going on in this mad Canting Vein, when they met with a providential Rebuke from General Monk in Scotland, in a Letter to Fleetwood and Lambert, which came to their Hands Oct. 29. wherein he upbraided them with the violation of their Faith to the Parliament, and declared his Resolution to restore the Parliament to a freedom of Sitting and Acting against all opposition.

A stop put to them by Monk.

And this brings us to consider the Counsels and Steps of General Monk, by which he brought about the happy Restauration of the King. It is hard to know how and when this great Man was brought over to the King's Interest: It is certain that upon the Abdication of Richard Cromwel, he and his chief Officers in Scotland sent an Address to the English Parliament, promising all Duty to them, and desiring them to assert the native Rights and Liberties of these Nations, in and by the Government of a Free-State and Commonwealth, and to vindicate their Authority against the opposition of all arbitrary Powers whatsoever. But when he heard of that Parliament curb'd and corrected by the English Army, he was then prepared to think of interposing in the dubious Affairs of England.

The steps of General
 Monk.

Under this disposition Mr. Nicholas Monk, a Reverend Divine of continual Loyalty, only Brother to the General, was sent up from the West by Sir Hugh Pollard and other Royalists to London, to consult with Mr. Thomas Charges, whose Sister was his Brother's Wife, and thence to proceed to Scotland, to engage his Brother in the King's Service. He accordingly took his Instructions from Mr. Charges, how to manage his Negotiations with great Secrecy and Caution, and to communicate his Designs to none except Dr. Samuel Barrow Physician, and Mr. John Price,

Mr. Nicklas Monk sent to his Brothers.

1659. Trice, Chaplain to General Monk. By their assistance he made a due advantage of the Report of Sir George Booth's Rising, and by degrees brought his Brother to a Resolution of marching into England, in pursuance of Booth's Declaration for a free Parliament. But when all things were ready for his March, he received Intelligence from his Agent Mr. Clarges of Booth's Defeat; at which he was so much concern'd, that he sent a Letter to Lenthall the Speaker to be communicated to the Parliament, desiring to be dismiss'd from his Command, pretending he was infirm in his Health, and had long continued in that remote Country; but now since all Insurrections were appeas'd, that threaten'd Disturbances to the Peace of the Nation, he hoped he might be permitted to return into his own Country, and to end his Days in Quiet. This Letter whether writ in earnest, or for a Blind, is said to have been deliver'd by Clarges to the Speaker, under an obligation to suppress the reading of it for ten Days, before which time laps'd, the Parliament was turn'd out of Doors.

General Monk's escape from a Plot to turn him out.

The succeeding Committee of Safety were resolv'd to secure Monk, who kept his ordinary Residence at Dalkeith, some four Miles on this side Edinburgh, the London Packet being there constantly open'd, that the General might have his Letters before any were deliver'd at Edinburgh. The Committee dispatch'd their secret Orders to Scotland by the ordinary Packet, lest an Express might give Suspicion; and instead of directing the Label for Dalkeith, as was usual, it was order'd strait for Edinburgh. It happen'd that one of Monk's Life-guard met accidentally the Post turning out of the Road that led to Dalkeith, and finding he had not touch'd there, he brought him back, notwithstanding the Direction of the Label. Monk suspecting a trick opened all the Letters that he found directed to the Officers of the Army, among which there was one from the Committee of Safety to Colonel Thomas Wills, ordering him To use the most effectual, speedy and secret way to secure the Person of General Monk, and to send him up to London under a strong Guard, in a Frigate that lay in Leith Road, and then to take upon him the Command of the Army till further Order. Having taken out this Letter; and what others he thought fit, together with his own from the same Committee, full of high Compliments and Expressions of Trust, he sent away the Packet as it was directed. And then communicating the matter to some of his particular Friends, he gave Orders for a General Review of the Army to be made next Morning at Edinburgh, where he arrester'd Colonel Wills, and some other Officers he had reason to suspect, and sent them Prisoners to the Castle, filling up their places with those in whom he could confide.

Mr. Nicholas Monk sent back from Scotland.

At the same time The Petition and Proposals of the Army to the Parliament were sent into Scotland to be signed by Monk and his Officers; but he would not suffer it to be handed about: and knowing it was no time to dally, he sent back his Brother Mr. Nicholas Monk to London, with Advice to Mr. Clarges, that he was resolv'd, if the Parliament would be resolute in asserting their own Authority against the Army, he would assist them in it; and if requir'd would march into England in their Defence. Upon Advice of this Resolution communicated by Mr. Clarges to Walton, Hastings and Scot, they were encourag'd in the House to order the removal of Lambert and his associated Officers, but they prov'd too hard for the Parliament and turn'd them out of Doors, as before related. But Monk not afraid to prosecute his Design, sent upbraiding Letters to Fleetwood and Lambert, as before mention'd, which they receiving Octob. 20. they met at Whitehall in great consternation about twelve at Night, and sent Major Haines to desire Mr. Clarges to come to them; and when he came, they press'd him with great importunity to go into Scotland with Colonel Talbot, to prevail with General Monk to come to a right Understanding with them: Mr. Clarges undertook the Journey, and it seems they did not suspect his Fidelity to them.

Mr. Clarges sent into Scotland.

In the mean time General Monk had dismiss'd the Anabaptist Officers, secured Berwick, and regulated his Army, and then made a Speech to them, That the Army in England had broke up the Parliament, for not humouring them in their Extravagancies, and that he was resolv'd to make the Military Power as it ought to be, subordinate to the Civil: And since they had their Protection and Maintenance from the Parliament, he had no reason to question their joining with him in restoring them to the exercise of their Trust: But if any were dissatisfied with these his Intentions, he desired they would declare it, and they should have free Liberty, without Reflection to leave the Service, and have Passports to return home. Upon which the Officers unanimously declared, That they would live and die with him.

1659. Gen. Monk secures his own Army.

Colonel Talbot and Mr. Clarges came to Edinburgh Sept. 2. and were well received by the General, especially Clarges, with whom he had a private Conference that Night, at which Clarges frankly ask'd him, What was the true End he aim'd at in this Enterprize? The General, who was one of the most reserv'd Men living, only answer'd, that he resolv'd to free his Native Country from the Slavery it was now under, and to that end would restore the Parliament; but in their admission to it he would make no difference between them, but would let in the secluded Members as well as others. But, says he, I must conjure you to secrecy, for the Army are jealous of me, that a King is in the bottom of this Design, and therefore all I can contrive will be little enough to beget a Confidence even in my own Party to engage heartily with me.

Conference between Mr. Clarges and General Monk.

The General Council of Officers in London not trusting to their Endeavours of pacifying General Monk, sent away Lambert with an Army of 12000 Men, to meet General Monk who had not above half that number. When Lambert was advanc'd as far as York, he found there Major General Morgan, who kept fair with him, and offer'd to use the Credit he had with Monk, to bring him to an Accommodation, and was thereupon sent on that Errand into Scotland where his Regiment then was. He came to Edinburgh Nov. 8. and upon his first access to the General, ask'd him in a loud merry way, If he would lay down his Arms and be Friends with Fleetwood and Lambert? The General answer'd, If they would restore the Parliament, he had little more to say; and if he pleas'd he might let them know it. Morgan reply'd, I promised to ask you the Question, but not to return to them that sent me if you denied it. I am glad I am here to assist you, and to follow your Fortunes in all your Undertakings. You know I am no Statesman; but I am sure you are a lover of your Country, and therefore I join with you and submit to your Conduct. This generous Friendship was kindly accepted by the General, and had a great influence in raising the Spirits of his Army.

Lambert sent with an Army to meet Monk.

Morgan joins with Monk.

In the Evening Morgan was in private with the General, and delivered him a Letter from Mr. Bowles a Minister in York, a considerable Man in those parts, and in great reputation with the Lord Fairfax, and many other Persons of good Quality in that Country: the Letter import'd, That the Lord Fairfax, and many others of good Interest were willing to join with the General, but disapproved his Declaration, which was restrain'd to that part of the Parliament only, which sat after the rest were Secluded, and was filled with Protestations for asserting no other Government but a Commonwealth. To this the General answer'd, That Clarges could witness with him his Intentions in those Particulars; that what was printed in his Name, as Affairs then stood, was not to be regarded as the result of his own Reason, and till he had got more Strength it would be unseasonable and indiscreet to do otherwise.

Ld Fairfax willing to follow that Example.

With this Apology Clarges was sent to the Lord Fairfax, but first to discourse Mr. Bowles, who desired Mr. Clarges to continue private in York, while he for fear of discovery transacted the Affair with the Lord Fairfax; which he did so effectually, that at his return he acquainted Clarges, that the Lord Fair-

1659. Fairfax, Bethel and Smithson would rise in January

General Monk received Letters daily from the Commissioners of the Militia of London, and from the Officers of the Fleet, and from the Forces in Ireland, all to persuade him to come to an Accommodation with the General Council of Officers in London. And therefore to seem willing to satisfy them, and to keep all Parties in Amusement, he enter'd into a Treaty with Fleetwood to be manag'd by Commillioners. In the mean time he marches on to Berwick, and Lambert was advanc'd to Newcastle, and both Armies seem'd preparing to meet and fight: But the Garison of Portsmouth and Admiral Lawson with his Fleet declaring for a restitution of the Parliament, Lambert thought it more advisible to march back to assist his Friends in the South, rather than to hazard a Battle with Monk.

Fleetwood and the rest of the Committee of Safety when they could not evade it, came into the general Cry for restoring the Parliament, and sent to the Speaker, desiring him to bring the rest of the Members to re-assemble for the exercise of their Trust, acknowledging in the most abject manner, that the Lord had blasted their Counsels and had spit in their Faces.

Decemb. 26. the Speaker and Members of Parliament then in Town met at Whitehall, and from thence walked together to the Parliament House in the Evening. The next Morning, the Speaker sent a Letter to General Monk, by order of the House, with Thanks for his good Service, and with acknowledgement that the Restitution of their Authority was owing to his Fidelity, Care and Courage. Soon after they appointed Commillioners to order the Military Affairs, and sent to Lambert to disperse his Forces. But to let the World know that they meant nothing of Monarchy; they provided that none should sit but such as would take this Oath of Abjuration.

I Do hereby swear, that I do renounce the pretended Title of Charles Stuart, and the whole Line of the late K. James, and of every other Person as a juggle Person, pretending or w^{ch} shall pretend to the Crown or Government of these Nations of England, Scotland or Ireland, or any of them, and the Dominions and Territories belonging to them, or any of them. And that I will by the Grace and Assistance of Almighty God be true, faithful and constant to the Parliament and Commonwealth, and will oppose the bringing in or setting up any juggle Person or House of Lords, and every of them, in this Commonwealth.

This Oath carried by a Majority was yet refused by at least a third part of the Members, who were therefore compelled to leave the House: And two of the most zealous for it, Scot and Robinson, were sent to meet the General upon the Road, to congratulate his coming, but with private directions to engage him to take the Oath. When the General came to Nottingham, his Brother Clarges met him, and in a private Conference acquainted him with the State of Affairs, and the truest way to do his Country Service. At Leicester he was met by Scot and Robinson, who told him, that the Parliament had order'd 1000 l. a Year to be settled on him for ever; that they were sensible of his Services, were providing Money for his Soldiers, and were glad to hear of his Marching towards London. He then expected to be attack'd about the Oath of Adjurati- on, and was much troubled to think how to divert it. Clarges told him, he had a plain and full Answer to make them, which was, that he heard many Men of undoubted Integrity had refused it, and till he came to London to hear the Reasons on both sides, he could not in prudence resolve upon it. This Advice he follow'd and succeeded in it.

At Harborough Alderman Fowke, Alderman Vincent and Mr. Bromfield met him as Commillioners from the Lord Mayor, Aldermen and Common-Council of London; who, after some Respects and Civilities, fell upon Particulars, and Mr. Bromfield in a set Speech, after enumerating the Calamities the Nation lay under, propos'd the Re-admission of the excluded Members, that the Parliament might be full and free. To the same purpose were the Address'es from the Gentlemen of Northamptonshire, Buckinghamshire, Oxfordshire, Norfolk and many other Counties; all which he received in a decent and respectful manner, but gave only dubious and suspending Answers. By which Policy he merited this Character given of him. "He was a Man of deep Thoughts and few Words; and what he wanted in Eloquence he had in Judgment; and he had a natura. Secrecy in him, prevalent upon all these Qualifications of a Soldier, which made him so fit an Instrument in the hand of Divine Providence to work his Majesty's Restoration. Hence he carried it all so closely that I believe no Man to this Day can positively say, that he design'd any more than a general Quiet of the Land: And so he fram'd his Designs suitable to the Opportunities that were given him; but that he wish'd that that might be procured by the means of his Majesty's happy Return no Man can rationally doubt.

From St. Albans the General sent a wise Letter to the Parliament, to remove all the Regiments out of London and Westminster, except Colonel Figs, for he thought it not for their Service, that these Soldiers now in and about London, and lately in Rebellion against them, should mingle with those who had approved themselves faithful to them. The Parliament readily complied with this Advice: but the Soldiers took such a hardship to be turn'd out of Town, they fell into a Mutiny, and made a Garison of Somerset-House, but by the assurance of a Months pay, and many fine Words, they were brought over, and march'd away on Saturday Morning Feb. 4. and in the same Afternoon the General enter'd the City at the head of three Regiments of Horse, attended by his principal Officers, and many Persons of Honour and Quality to Whitehall, provided for his Reception.

On Monday Morning Feb. 6. he was invited to the Parliament House, introduc'd by a Serjeant at Arms, and attended by his late Companions and Spies upon him, Scot and Robinson. A Chair of Velvet was set for him on the left Hand within the Bar, and the Speaker desired him to sit down; but he excus'd himself and stood behind the Chair. Whilst the Speaker in a set Speech magnified his Services and Merits, and gave him the Thanks of the House. The General sedately answer'd, "That he could not but extol the Mercy of their Restitution, and acknowledge the goodnefs of God in making him Instrumental therein, which was but his Duty, and deserv'd not the Honour they had done to him. That he had received many Address'es in his Journey for a full and free Parliament, and that this Parliament would determine their Sitting: that he had answer'd them, that as to the excluded Members, this Parliament had already given their Judgment, in which all ought to acquiesce; and that no Parliament had admitted new Members to sit without a previous Oath or Engagement: but he must needs say to this Assembly, that the less Oaths and Engagements are impos'd, the Settlement will be the sooner attained. He hop'd the Parliament would be careful that neither the Cavalier nor Phanatick Party have yet a share in the Civil or Military Power. He concluded with speaking of Ireland and Scotland, who feared nothing more than to be over-run with Phanatick Notions; he desired a Settlement there, and their Favour to that Nation.

This Speech had the influence intended by him that spoke it, which was to amuse the House, and to cover his own Designs: But a leading Party suspected him, and resolv'd to try him on this following occasion. The City in Common-Council resolv'd to pay no publick Taxes, till the House was filled up with all legal Representatives: For they indeed well think it unreasonable to be taxed Parliament, wherein they had then no Mem-sitting. The Council of State were so apprehensive of this beginning of a Rebellion against them, that they came to a Resolution, and sent it to the House, who pass it into a Vote, "That the "Commissioners for government of the Army, do "appoint Forces to be in London for preserving the "Peace thereof, and of the Commonwealth, and "for reducing of the City to their Obedience to "Parliament. For executing this Vote, the General was order'd to enter the City next Morning with a sufficient part of the Army; to seize eleven of the most active Common-Council Men and commit them to the Tower; to pull down the City Polls and Chains, take down the Gates and Portcullices, and Quarter his Soldiers in the City till it was reduc'd to due Obedience. This severe Command was very surprising to the General and his chief Officers, who were very unwilling to make themselves so odious to the City; and therefore Monk writes to the House to mitigate his Orders, or to let him suspend the execution of them; but they the more inflamed make their Directions the more positive. Upon this he advised with some of the most eminent Citizens, and giving secret Assurance that he would protect the City while he seem'd to dispoil it. He did literally execute the Order, but wisely turn'd the Odium of it upon the Parliament that so commanded.

And to atone for this Action, he presently after writes a Letter to the House, and boldly complain'd of a Faction in it manag'd by Lambert, Vane and Ludlow; that they excluded many honest Men from serving the Publick, by tendering them Oaths which they could not take, and were guilty of many other Irregularities; and therefore he desired them by Friday next to issue our Writs to fill up their House, and then to rise at an appointed time May 6. to give place to a full and free Parliament.

The House dissembled their resentment of this Letter, and sent Scot to assure him of their high Opinion of his Services, and to recall him to his Lodgings at Whitehall. But he was now resolv'd to throw himself upon the City, and not yet to trust his Person near Westminster. This so enraged the House that they made an Act to put the Government of the Army into the Hands of new Commissioners, Monk, Hylbrigge, Walton, Morley and Alford, making three a Quorum, but denying a Motion that Monk should be of that Quorum. Upon this the next Day being Feb. 12. Monk drew up all his Forces in Finsbury Fields, met the Lord Mayor and Common-Council at Guild-Hall, went with them to hear a Sermon at Paul's, and dined with them at the Bullhead in Cheapside, the City giving all the Demou-strations of Joy in Bells and Bonfires.

stores the secluded Members.

On Feb. 18. the General appointed a Conference to be held in his Quarters, of the Sitting and Secluded Members to agree upon the Re-admission of the latter. But it being much oppos'd by a majority of the sitting Party, the General resolv'd to do it by his own Strength, which he began now to understand: And therefore on the Tuesday following Feb.
21. he gave the Secluded Members a meeting at Whitehall; and in a short Speech recommended to them the Settlement of the Nation, and promised to impose nothing upon them, and then had them conducted to take their places in the House. The sitting Members knew nothing of this, till they saw the Secluded Members enter in and sit down among them; upon which, being much surpriz'd, they demurr'd among themselves, whether they should quit the House or keep their Seats. After some hurry and confusion, the sticklers for a Commonwealth knowing their Cause would be now over-power'd, immediately departed in spleen and Murmurs, while the more Moderate kept their Seats among the new admitted Members.

The Parl.

This new modell'd Parliament pass'd several Votes to expunge out of their Journals all Votes and Orders that disabled them from sitting; to release Mr.

Vincent, Mr. Bromfield, and other Citizens who had been lately imprison'd; to constitute Monk General of all the Forces in England, Scotland and Ireland; to dissolve the Council of State, and erect a new one consisting of one and thirty Persons; to repeal the Oath of Abjuration; to restore the Common-Council of London; to release the imprison'd Apprentices, and to set up again the Posts, Chains, Gates and Portcullices of the City: and finally to take off the File, and make void to all Intents and Purposes the Engagement to be true to the Commonwealth of England without a King or House of Lords; And a new Parliament to be summon'd to meet on Apr. 25. 1660.

Hylbrig, Scot and other fierce Republicans, knowing well that these Proceedings tended to the Restoration of the King, had one part more of Hypocrisy and Villainy to Act, that was, to court the General (whom they mortally hated) to take upon himself the Dominion of the three Kingdoms; telling him, that the Parliaments Actions tended to ruin him and all the good People of England: Your destruction, say they, must needs succeed the King's Admission; for a Merit too great to be rewarded can have no Recompence but Death. Remember Stanley, who set the Crown upon Henry VII's Head, he had his own struck off upon frivolous Pretences, when the true Reason was excess of Merit. Nay, and they had drawn in the French Ambassador into this Intrigue, who in a most perfidious manner (as Sir Philip Warwick tells us) "Having "winded this Proposition, finds means for a Con"ference with Charges, and to desire by him to as"sure the General, that if he had any Aim to as"sume the Government himself, his Master would "be a very steady Friend to him. But tho' this "wise General admitted a respectful Conference "with him, yet he made him soon perceive he was "not susceptible of French Counsels. To all these Sollicitations the General made Answer, That the Parliament were best Judges of their own Proceedings; and as to taking the Government upon himself, he said, The Experience of Cromwel's Fate gave him suf- ficient Reasons to shun that Rock on which that Family was Shipwrack'd. They reply'd, That Oliver usurp'd the Government against the Suffrage of the Army, and the Consent of the People, whereas he should have it by an unanimous Submission, and under what Name or Title he would please to accept it: But he had the Honour and the Wit to overcome all Temptation.

And yet tho' all things seem'd thus to concur toward the Restauration of the King, yet the Name of an English Parliament was so terrible abroad, that neither France nor Spain durst venture to give King Charles the least Assistance to regain his Throne; but on the contrary were oblig'd to treat him in a manner altogether unworthy of a crown'd Head, as appears in the following Instances at the Treaty of the Pyrennes. The King after having in vain sought a Sanctuary in France, was necessitated to throw himself upon the Friendship of Spain: He was at Brus- sels when he received the News of the Disposition that was in England, just at the time the Conferences were to begin between Cardinal Mazarine and Don Lewis de Haro, the two Plenipotentiaries of France and Spain. This determin'd King Charles to take post from Brussels thro' France to the place of Treaty, that he might in Person represent his Interests to these two Ministers. He judg'd the Spaniards had reason to be Enemies to the then Government in England, for not only having taken Dunkirk and Jamaica from them, and enter'd into a League with Portugal against them, but for endeavouring all that was possible to persuade the French to continue the War. Upon the other hand it was but reasonable to think, that France could not be well pleas'd to see the Eng- lish Master of such a Frontier Town as Dunkirk, or that Mazarine, the most Ambitious Man upon Earth, would not be willing to raise his own Glory, by espousing the Cause of an exil'd Prince, especially when there was so great probability of Success. But notor France.

1659. withstanding all these plausible Appearances, King Charles made this long Journey to no purpose; it's true Don Lewis de Huro receiv'd him with all possible Marks of Respect; but the Cardinal positively deny'd him Access. All he could be brought to after several Messages from the King, was to allow the Duke of Ormond to talk to him upon the Road from St. Jean de Luz to the place of Treaty, as if it had been but an accidental Rencontre. Ormond obtain'd nothing of the Cardinal but general and ambiguous Answers, till being press'd, he told Ormond plainly, That all his Master could do for his Cousin the King of England, was to compassionate his Misfortunes, as not being in a Condition himself to break with the Government of England, with which his Affairs obliged him to keep a good Correspondence. Over and above this neglect of Mazarine's, King Charles had the Mortification to see Ambassador Lockhart received at the same time with the greatest Pomp and Splendor, having the Cardinal's Coaches and Guards sent a Days Journey to receive him, and the Cardinal giving him the Right-hand, which was a Respect he denied the Ambassadors of crown'd Heads: Nor was Don Lewis kinder upon the matter to King Charles, notwithstanding all his Civilities; for having ask'd the Command of the Army in Flanders, which the Prince of Conde was by the Treaty obliged to quit, Don Lewis refused it: All which will be a lasting Example to Posterity, how little trust is to be repos'd in Foreign Aid when a Prince comes to need it, for recovering his Throne. But indeed it seems probable that all these Sights put upon King Charles, were a Political Feint to hide the secret Intrigue of their mutual Assistance to be lent to him for Recovery of his Kingdoms, upon Conditions very prejudicial to the Interest of the Reformation, as we shall have occasion to observe in the view of Religion this Year.

In the mean time it ought to be farther observ'd, that this famous Pyrenean Treaty of a Peace between France and Spain, was concluded in a Match between the young French King and the eldest Daughter or Infanta of Spain, the younger Sister being afterward married to Leopold Emperor of Germany, both so dispos'd before the Birth of their Brother, who lived to be the poor weak King of Spain. But as this Treaty was made in the deepest Dissimulation and Treachery, so almost every Article of it was violated by the French; in respect to Portugal, to the Prince of Conde, to the Duke of Lorraine, and in all likelihood in respect to England, and with a reference to most other Things and Persons. Even the main Article of all, and without which the Spaniards would never have endur'd the Match, was for the Infanta, before and after Marriage, to disclaim for herself and her Heirs, all manner of Right and Title to the Kingdom of Spain, or any of its Dominions. And yet this that was the Cement of all the other Articles, has been now at last most shamefully broken. Under such a scene of perfidiousness it was the less wonder, that Mazarine should deal so inhumanly by King Charles, and should even instruct the French Ambassador Bourdeaux in England to hinder the King's return, and even to set up another Usurper against him: But French Politicks have been alway false and fatal to the true Interest of our English Monarchy. Another Inference is, that the good Providence of God so contriv'd to repair the Honour of this Nation, as to make the King's return be entirely owing to the Hearts of his People, and not at all to any Foreign Aid.

Affairs at home looking favourably upon the King's Interest, he sent Sir John Granville to General Monk, who knowing his wary Temper, made use of his Neighbour Mr. William Morris to introduce him; Mr. Morris acquainted the General with it, who made Answer, that unless he would send him Information of his Business by him, he could not admit of any Interview between them. Mr. Morris told him, he had already propos'd that to him, but he refused it. The General approving this Reservedness in Sir John, order'd him to come to him at St. James's by nine in the Evening. Accordingly Granville came, and begging Pardon for his Importunity, desired leave to deliver a Message to him from the King. The General seem'd surpriz'd at this; but being alone, bid him say what he pleas'd. Then Sir John presented a Letter to him from the King, and told him, that his Majesty had great Confidence in him; and since he had so far comply'd with the Desires of the Kingdom, for the admission of the Secluded Members, in order to a free Parliament, the consequences of it could be no less than the Restoration of his Majesty, if he concurr'd with their Councils. The General reply'd, "That he had long lamented the Miseries of his Country, and waited an opportunity to redeem them from Vassalage: And as to the King's Majesty, none wish'd him greater Felicity than he did: or with greater Passion desired his Restauration; but if it were not cautiously attempted, it would be out of his Power to serve him in it: And therefore he must conjure him to acquaint no Person with it but the King, and desire his Majesty also to conceal it. But above all, he must intreat him to desire the King to remove out of the King of Spain's Dominions to Breda; for he had certain Intelligence he would otherwise be detained by the King of Spain's Ministers. Sir John return'd with this kind Message and good Advice to the King, who accordingly retir'd to Breda.

Under all these Convulsions in the State, the Affairs of Religion were subject to the same Distemper. The Independents were all zealous for a Commonwealth; but the Presbyterians who had been outwitted and overpower'd by those younger Brethren, were for the Parliament in opposition to the Army, and for the Restitution of the Secluded Members; and had shewn themselves generally inclined to the Rising of Sir George Booth, and to all the Measures of General Monk, even to the Restauration of the King. When the Members of the Long Parliament were restored, the Enthusiastick People prefer'd a Petition to them against Tythes; but the House calmly voted June 27. That for the Encouragement of a godly Preaching Learned Ministry throughout the Nation, the payment of Tythes shall continue as now they are, unless this Parliament shall find out some other more equal and comfortable Maintenance, both for the Ministry and for the Satisfaction of the People. The Independents to ingratiate themselves with this Parliament and their Council of State, in the name of the Congregational Churches, desired leave to raise three Regiments for the Parliament against Sir George Booth and the Royalists then in Arms, and had their willing consent to it. For which they got a Vote of the House Octob. 10. for Liberty of Conscience. After the Secluded Members were restor'd by Monk, all things run on the Presbyterian side. On March 2. the Confession of Faith of the Assembly of Divines was agreed unto by the House, except the 30th and 31st Chapters, which are touching Church-Censures and Synods; and an Act pass'd for the establishing that Confession on March 5. and the same Day an Order was granted for printing and setting up in Churches the Solemn League and Covenant, which did now really conduce to the bringing in the Son, as it had formerly done for driving out the Father: And yet the Act for the Militia was not suffer'd to pass March 10. without a Clause for every Commissioner to acknowledge and declare, that the War undertaken by both Houses of Parliament, in their Defence against the Forces raised in the name of the late King, was just and lawful; and that Magistracy and Ministry are the Ordinances of God. And to shew their displeasure against Dr. John Owen, the beloved Chaplain of Cromwell, the Trumpet of his Usurpation, and the Head of the Independent Party, there was a Vote of the House March 13. to discharge the said Dr. Owen from being any longer Dean of Christ-Church in Oxford, and for putting Dr. Edward Reynolds a Presbyterian known to be so averſe to Monarchy, and even to a Free Parliament, that they loſt all manner of Inter-eſt in General Monk, who had the more Experience of their Jealouſies of him, by what he found in Scotland upon his firſt deſign of Marching into England. For then the Army-Party ſent their Commiſſioners to him; and, in the Words of Sir Phil. Warnick, "The Men of God who had decried and out-ed the Biſhops for meddling with any thing that was Secular, Civil, or Military, from the very Beginning of theſe Revolutions, are the active In-ſtruments in all important Secular or Military Affairs. And therefore now Mr. Caryl (a great Independent Miniſter) is principally to manage this Affair with Monk; and he is to let him know how fatal ſuch a Breach as was like to be, would prove to the People of God; that the Independent Churches would not interpoſe, or juſtify the Right of either Party; but they thought fit to lay before Monk, that his Province was only to keep Scotland quiet, and not to engage in the Differences of England; and therefore ſince he could not have any true Information of the State of Affairs, and had not any Call thereto, it became him not to interpoſe.

There were, undoubtedly, great Endeavours to pervert the King to the Popiſh Religion: And it is much fear'd, that in the great Treaty this Year between the two Crowns of France and Spain, the King was drawn into ſome Articles and Meaſures which were happily broken.

The King's Negotiation in this Treaty was kept a Secret: but there is too much Suſpicion of the Intrigues of it. My Lord Clarendon would let fall no other Intimation than what he gave in theſe Words:
It is believ'd by wiſe Men, that in that Treaty ſomewhat was agreed to the Prejudice of the Proteſtant Inter-eſt. Which could hardly be leſs than a Promiſe of the King to eſtabliſh or at leaſt to tolerate Popery in England, and to ſet the Example of it in his own Perſon, upon condition he ſhould be reſtor'd to his Crowns by the united Powers of France and Spain.
 The way of my Lord Clarendon's introducing and ſupporting his foreſaid Belief of Wiſe Men, is ſome Key to underſtand the Meaning of what he intended to conceal. Speaking of the King's Journey to the Place of Treaty, where Sir Harry Bennet was preparing Terms for him; he ſays, "When the Marquis of Ormond diſcover'd, by the Information he re-ceiv'd at Toulouſe, that the Treaty was ſo near an end, he made all poſſible haſte to the Place the King had appointed to meet at, that his Majeſty might loſe no more time. When he came thither he found no body; which he imputed to the uſual Delays in their Journey, and ſtay'd one whole Day in expectation of them; but then concluded, that they were gone forward ſome other way, and thought it his Buſineſs to haſten to Fuentarabia, where he heard nothing of the King. Sir Harry Bennet was in great perplexity, and complain'd very reaſonably, that the King neglected his own Buſineſs in ſuch a Conjunction; the Benefit whereof was left by his not coming. Don Lewis ſeem'd to wonder that the King had not come thither, whilst the Cardinal and he were together. The Treaty was now concluded; and though the Cardinal remain'd ſtill at his old Quarters on the French ſide, under ſome Indispoſition of the Gout, yet he and Don Lewis were to meet no more: But Don Lewis was the leſs troubled that the King had not come ſooner, becauſe he had found the Cardinal, as often as he had taken occaſion to ſpeak of the King, very cold and reſerv'd; and he had magnify'd the Power of the Parliament, and ſeem'd to think his Majeſty's Hopes deſpe-rate; and advis'd Don Lewis, to be wary how he embark'd himſelf in an Affair that had no Foundation; and, that it was rather time for all Catholicks to unite to the breaking the Power and 1659. Interest of the Heretical Party, where-ever it was, than to ſtrengthen it by reſtoring the King, except he would become Catholick. And it is believ'd by wiſe Men, that in that Treaty ſome-what was agreed to the Prejudice of the Proteſtant Inter-eſt; and that in a ſhort time there would have been much done againſt it both in France and Germany, if the Mea-ſures they had there taken had not been ſhortly broken, chiefly by the ſurprizing Revolution in England (which happen'd the next Year) and alſo by the Death of the two great Favourites of the two Crowns, Don Lewis de Haro and Cardinal Mazarin, who both died not very long after it; the Cardinal probably ſtruck with the Wonder, if not with the Agony of that undream'd-of Proſperity of our King's Affairs; as if he had taken it ill, and laid it to heart, that God Almighty would bring ſuch a Work to paſs in Europe without his Concurrence, and even againſt all his Machinations. From this Relation thus cauſtiously given on purpoſe to cover an invidious Truth, I think it is too plain, that what was agreed to the prejudice of the Proteſtant Religion, was for King Charles to become a Proteſtor, or at leaſt a ſworn Favourer of Popery.

 That nothing could have broke theſe Meaſures, but the ſurprizing Revolution in England; and that ſuch a providential Reſtoration of the King without the propoſed Terms of bringing in Popery with him, was the great Diſappointment, and almoſt the very Death of Cardinal Mazarin, the ſame Author does a little more explain himſelf, when he ſoon after adds, "That ſome about the King began to think of providing a Religion, as well as other Conveniences, that might be grateful to thoſe People and Places, where and with whom they were like to reſide. The Proteſtant Religion was found to be very unagreeable to their Fortune, and they exerciſed their Thoughts moſt how to get hand-ſomly from it; and if it had not been for the King's own Steadineſs, of which he gave great Indications, Men would have been more out of Countenance to have owned the Faith they were of; and many made little doubt, but that it would ſhortly be very manifeſt to the King, that his Reſtoration depended wholly upon a Conjunction of Catholick Princes, who could never be united but on the behalf of Catholick Religion.
 It is matter of Fact, that upon this Peace between France and Spain, both thoſe Crowns did immediately begin to encourage and aſſiſt the King with Money and Men, and advanc'd great Promiſes to him, which ſeems to have been done upon the Foot of ſecret Articles. It is farther certain, that the Earl of Briſtol, who was the King's Companion and Guide to the Place of this Treaty, and Sir Harry Bennet who was the prime Agent for the King, did both of them turn Papiſts about this time; as if they did it upon a Compact then made. And there is a Story to confirm all, which I have reaſon to think true.
 Sir Harry Bennet was ſoon after ſeen to wait upon the King from Maſs; at which ſight the Lord Culpeper had ſo much Indignation, that he went up to Bennet, and ſpoke to this effect: I ſee what you are at: Is this the way to bring our Maſter home to his three Kingdoms? Well, Sir, if ever you and I live to ſee England together, I will have your Head, or you ſhall have mine. Which Words ſtruck ſuch a Terror upon Sir Harry Bennet, that he never dared to ſet Foot in England till after the Death of the Lord Culpeper, who met with a very abrupt Death within few Months after the King's Return. When he was taken out of the way, Sir Harry Bennet came to Court, and ſoon aroſe into Honours and Preferments, and was in Diſguiſe a meer Creature of the Papiſts, and had the dying Courage to take off that Diſguiſe.

Lambert, upon the Complaint made againſt him by General Monk, had for ſome time abſconded; but finding no Hopes in ſtanding out, he ſurren-der'd himſelf to the new Council of State: and upon his Refuſal to give Security for his quiet Department,

1660. ment, he was by them committed to the Tower; from whence he made his Escape, and in the beginning of April got into Northamptonshire, and pick'd up all the discontented Officers and Soldiers, till he had got together about seven Troops of Horse and a Company of Foot. General Monk, upon Intelligence of his intended Rendezvous at Edgehill, was preparing to march out against him: but when he heard that his Party was but inconsiderable, he sent Colonel Ingoldsby and Streater to Northampton to watch his Motions, and with due Caution to fall upon him. They hearing that Lambert was at Daventry, march'd thither; and there being informed that he lay two Miles off, they hasten'd after him, and came up to him in a plain Field, where a little Brook parted them. The two Parties fac'd one another near four Hours: When they came to advance, and were beginning to charge, Lambert's Men held the Muzzles of their Pistols toward the Ground, and the Troops of Hazlerig and Nelthorpe came over to Ingoldsby. Lambert desir'd a Parley, and mov'd that Richard might be restor'd to the Protectorship: But he was answer'd, that He himself was one of those who pull'd down Richard, and therefore he was the more unfit to set him up again; however, that they had no Commission to dispute, but to reduce him and his Party. Then Ingoldsby rode up to Lambert, and told him he was his Prisoner; whereupon Major Creed and other Officers intreated him to do what he pleas'd with them, but to let Lambert escape: which Ingoldsby absolutely refusing, Lambert turned his Horse, and attempted to escape: but Ingoldsby pursu'd him so close, that he quickly came up with him, vowing to pistol him if he did not yield immediately. Lambert, in great dejection of Mind, twice begg'd him to let him escape: but when he saw he could not prevail, he submitted, as all the rest did except Colonel Okey, Colonel Axtel, and Captain Clave, who made their Escapes.

This Defeat was seconded with the good News of the Submission of the Fleet, brought about by Mountague, who by Monk's Advice had been made one of the Generals at Sea, who wrote an Account to the Council of State, "That Vice-Admiral Lanfon and the whole Navy had received him with great Satisfaction, and were all peaceably inclin'd, and resolv'd to submit to the Determination of the next Parliament. There was such a general Disposition to the King, as the only Deliverer from Feuds and Wars, that many of the profess'd Royalists were chosen Members of the House of Commons; and the Lords, who had been long deny'd a fundamental Right, met now with a full Sense, that they had not been themselves restored without a prospect of the King's Restoration. And at this same juncture there was publish'd, A Declaration of the Nobility and Gentry that had adhered to the late King; mildly and affectionately worded for composing all Differences, and burying all former Animosities.

Under this promising Aspect, the two Houses of Lords and Commons began their Convention on April 25. meeting both at St. Margaret's Westminster, where Dr. Reynolds Preach'd; and after Sermon they went to their several Houses, and the Commons chose Sir Hubbert Grimstone for their Speaker. On the 26th they order'd a Day of solemn Thanksgiving to God for raising up General Monk and other blessed Instruments in the Delivery of this Nation from Thralldom and Misery. And then they order'd their Thanks to be presented in a publick manner to the General, for his great Wisdom and unparallell'd Services to this Nation. On the 27th Sir John Granville attended the General, and presented him with a Letter from his Majesty, to be communicated to the Council of State and the Officers of the Army, with a Commission from his Majesty, constituting him Captain General of all the Armies in England, Scotland, and Ireland. On May 1. Sir John Granville went to the House of Lords, and sent in word, that he had a Letter for their Lordships from the King:

which the Earl of Manchester their Speaker, going down to the Clerk, received; and it was read in these Words:

Charles R.

Right-trusty and well-beloved Cousins, We greet you well. We cannot have a better Reason to promise Ourselves an End of our common Sufferings and Calamities, and that our own just Power and Authority will, with God's Blessing, be restored to us; than that we hear you are again acknowledg'd to have that Authority and Jurisdiction which hath always belong'd unto you by your Births, and the fundamental Laws of the Land. And We have thought it very fit and safe for Us to call to you for your Help in composing the Distempers and Distractions of the Kingdom, in which your Sufferings are next to those we have undergone Ourselves; and therefore you cannot but be the most proper Counsellors for removing these Mischiefs, and for preventing the like for the future. How great a Trust We repose in you, for the Restoring and Establishing a blessed Peace and Security in the Kingdom, will appear to you by our enclosed Declaration; which Trust, we are most confident you will discharge with Justice and Wisdom that becomes you, and must always be expected from you: And that upon experience, how one Violation succeeds another when the known Relations and Rules of Justice are once transgressed, you will be as zealous for the Rights of the Crown, and for the Honour of your King, as for Yourselves. And then you cannot but discharge with good Success, and provide for and establish the Peace, Happiness, and Honour of King, Lords, and Commons, upon that Foundation which only can support it; and we shall all be happy in each other. And as the whole Nation will bless God for you all, so We shall hold Ourselves obliged, in an especial manner, to thank you in particular, according to the Affection you shall express towards us. We need the less to enlarge upon this Subject, because We have likewise writ to the House of Commons, which We suppose they will communicate to you. And we pray God to bless your joint Endeavours, for the Good of us all; and so We bid you very heartily farewell.

Given at our Court of Breda this 14th of Apr. 1660. in the 12th Year of our Reign.

The Declaration enclosed was under this Title and Form.

His Majesty's gracious Declaration to all his Loving Subjects.

Charles R.

Charles, by the Grace of God King of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c. To all our loving Subjects of what Degree or Quality soever, greeting. If the general Distraction and Confusion which is spread over the whole Kingdom, doth not awaken all Men to a Desire and Longing that those Wounds which have for so many Years together been kept bleeding, may be bound up; all we can say will be to no purpose. However, after this long Silence, we have thought it our Duty to declare, how much we desire to contribute thereunto: And that, as we can never give over the Hope in good time to obtain the Possession of that Right which God and Nature hath made our due; so we do make it our daily Suit to the Divine Providence, that he will, in Compassion to us and our Subjects, after so long Misery and Sufferings, remit and put us into a quiet and peaceable Possession of that our Right with as little Blood and Damage to our People as is possible. Nor do we desire more to enjoy what is ours, than that all our Subjects

Votes of the Lords.

The Letter and Declaration being read, the Lords order'd Thanks to be given to Sir John Granville for bringing of them, and resolv'd by Vote, that they do own and declare, that according to the ancient and fundamental Laws of this Kingdom, the Government is, and ought to be by King, Lords and Commons: And therefore they desired, that some may be consider'd how to make up the Breaches, and to obtain the King's return again unto his People.

Then Sir John Granville went to the House of Commons, and upon notice of his attending at the Door, was called in, and presented a Letter with a Duplicate of the same Declaration enclosed and superscribed.

To our Trusty and Well-beloved the Speaker of the House of Commons.

Charles R.

Trusty and well-beloved we Greet you well.
In these great and insupportable Afflictions and Calamities under which the poor Nation hath been so long exercis'd, and by which it is so near exhausted, we cannot think of a more natural and proper Remedy, than to resort to those for Counsel and Advice, who have seen and observ'd the first beginning of our Miseries, the progress from bad to worse, and the Mistakes and Misunderstandings which have produc'd and contributed to Inconveniencies which were not intended:
And after so many Revolutions, and the observation of what hath attended them, are now trusted by our good Subjects to repair the Breaches which are made, and to provide proper Remedies for those Evils, and for the lasting Peace, Happiness and Security of the Kingdom. We do assure you upon our Royal Word, that none of our Predecessors have had a greater Esteem of Parliaments than we have, in our Judgment as well as from our Obligation. We do believe them to be so vital a part of the Constitution of the Kingdom, and so necessary for the government of it, that we well know, neither Prince nor People can be in any tolerable degree happy without them: And therefore you may be confident that we shall always look upon their Counsels as the best we can receive; and shall be as tender of their Priviledges, and as careful to preserve and protect them, as of that which is most near to our self, and most necessary for our own Preservation.

And as this is our Opinion of Parliaments, that their Authority is most necessary for the Government of the Kingdom, so we are most confident that you believe and find, that the preservation of the King's Authority is as necessary for the preservation of Parliaments; and that it is not the Name but the right Constitution of them which can prepare and apply proper Remedies for those Evils, which are grievous to the People, and which can thereby establish their Peace and Security.
And therefore we have not the least doubt, but that you will be as tender in, and as zealous of, any thing that may infringe our Honour, or impair our Authority, as of your own Liberty and Property, which is best preserv'd by preserv'g
the other.

How far we have trusted you in this great Affair, and how much it is in your Power to restore the Nation to all that it hath lost, and to redeem it from any infamy it hath undergone, and to make King and People as Happy as they ought to be, you will find by our enclosed Declaration (a Copy of which we have likewise sent to the House of Peers) and you will easily believe, that we would not voluntarily, and of our self, have reposed so great a Trust in you but upon an entire confidence that you will not abuse it; and that you will proceed in such a manner, and with such due consideration of us who have trusted you, that we shall not be ashamed of declining other Assistance (which we have assurance of) and repairing to you for more natural and proper Remedies, for the Evils we would be freed from; nor sorry that we have bound up our own Interest so intirely

1660. "intirely with that of our Subjects, as that we refer it to the same Persons to take care of us who are trusted to provide for them.

12Car.II. "We look upon you as Wise and Dispassionate Men, and good Patriots, who will raise up those Banks and Fences which have been cast down, and who will most reasonably hope the same Prosperity will again spring from those Roots from which it hath heretofore and always grown. Nor can we apprehend that you will propose any thing to us, or expect any thing from us, but what we are as ready to give as you to receive. If you desire the advancement and propagation of the Protestant Religion, we have by our constant Profession and Practice of it, given sufficient testimony to the World, that neither the unkindness of those of the same Faith towards us, nor the Civilities and Obligations of those of a contrary Profession (of both which we have had abundant Evidence) could in the least degree startle us, or make us swerve from it: And nothing can be proposed to manifest our Zeal and Affection for it, to which we will not readily consent. And we hope in due time our self to propose somewhat to you for the propagation of it, that will satisfy the World that we have always made it both our Care and our Study, and have enough observ'd, what is most like to bring disadvantage to it.

"If you desire security for those, who in these calamitous times, either wilfully or weakly have transgressed those bounds which were prescrib'd, and have invaded each others Rights; we have left to you to provide for their Security and Indemnity, and in such a way as you shall think just and reasonable, and by a just computation of what Men have done and suffer'd, as near as is possible, to take care that all Men be satisfied, which is the surest way to suppress and extirpate all such Uncharitableness and Animosity, as might hereafter shake and threaten that Peace, which for the present might seem established. If there be a crying Sin, for which the Nation may be involved in the Infamy that attends it. We cannot doubt but that you will be as solicitous to redeem and vindicate the Nation from that Guilt and Infamy as we can be.

"If you desire that Reverence and Obedience may be paid to the fundamental Laws of the Land, and that Justice may be equally and impartially administer'd to all Men; it is that which we desire to be sworn to ourself, and that all Persons in Power and Authority should be so too.

"In a Word, there is nothing that you can propose, that may make the Kingdom Happy, which we will not contend with you to compute, and upon this Confidence and Assurance, we have thought fit to send you this Declaration, that you may, as much as is possible, at this distance, see our Heart, which when God shall bring us nearer together (as we hope he will do shortly) will appear to you very agreeable to what we have profess'd; and we hope that we have made that right Christian use of our Affliction, and that the Observation and Experience we have had in other Countries, hath been such as that we, and we hope all our Subjects, shall be the better for we have seen and suffer'd.

"We shall add no more but our Prayers to Almighty God, that he will so bless your Countels and direct your Endeavours, that his Glory and Worship may be provided for, and the Peace, Honour and Happiness of the Nation may be established upon those Foundations which can best support it: And so we bid you farewell. Given at our Court at Breda this 4th Day of April 1660. in the twelfth Year of our Reign.

After the Reading his Majesty's Letter and Declaration in the House of Commons Tuesday May 1. they immediately resolv'd, Nemine contradicente, that a Committee be appointed to prepare an Answer to his Majesty's Letter, expressing the great and joyful sense of this House of his gracious Offers, and their humble and beawty Thanks to his Majesty for the same; and with professions of their Loyalty and Duty to his Majesty; and that this House will give a speedy Answer to his Majesty's gracious Proposals. Then the House took into consideration, that the King being long deprived of his Revenue, might be in want of Money, and therefore order'd that fifty thousand Pounds should be speedily raised and presented to his Majesty, with ten thousand to the Duke of York, and five thousand to the Duke of Gloucester.

The Lords and Commons appointed their several Committees to draw up their respective Answers to his Majesty's Letters, and resolv'd that the Supercription should be, To the King's most excellent Majesty; and order'd that all the Acts and Orders should be raz'd out of the Journals, that were inconsistent with the Government of King, Lords and Commons. Both Houses having drawn up their Answers, six Lords and twelve Commonets were appointed to attend his Majesty with them, and to desire his Majesty to make a speedy Return to his Parliament, and to his Kingly Office. On Monday May 7. it was resolv'd by both Houses that the King be Proclaimed to Morrow, which was done by this Form of Proclamation.

Altho' it can no way be doubted, but that his Majesty's Right and Title to these Crowns and Kingdoms is and was every way complet by the Death of his most Royal Father of glorious Memory, without the Ceremony or Solemnity of a Proclamation: Yet since Proclamations in such Cases have been always used, to the end that all good Subjects might upon this occasion testify their Duty and Respect; and since the armed violence, and other the Calamities of many Years last past, have hitherto depriv'd us of any opportunity, wherein we might express our Loyalty and Allegiance to his Majesty: we therefore the Lords and Commons now assembled in Parliament, together with the Lord Mayor, Aldermen and Common-Council of the City of London, and other Freeman of this Kingdom now present, do according to our Duty and Allegiance heartily, joyfully and unanimously acknowledge and proclaim, that immediately upon the Decease of our late Sovereign King Charles I. the Imperial Crown of the Realm of England, and of all the Kingdoms, Dominions and Rights belonging to the same, did by inherent Birth-right and lawful undoubted Succession descend and come to his most excellent Majesty King Charles II. as being lineally, justly and lawfully next Heir of the Blood Royal of this Realm; and that by the Goodness and Providence of Almighty God, he is of England, Scotland and Ireland, the most Potent, Mighty and Undoubted King, And thereunto we most humbly and faithfully do submit and oblige our selves our Heirs and Posterities for ever.

The King having been thus proclaimed with great Solemnity and inexpressible Joy, took his leave of the States of Holland on Tuesday May 22. and after a noble Entertainment, a very endearing Speech, and magnificent Presents received from them, he took Ship under the Convoy of Montague on Wednesday May 23. and on Friday about one landed at the Beach near Dover-Pier, where General Monk stood ready to receive him on his Knees, and was raised, kiss'd and embrac'd by his Majesty. They all walked toward the Town, and were soon met by the Mayor and Jurates, and the Minister Mr. John Reading, who presented the King with a Bible, and made a proper Speech at the delivery of it. Then the King took Coach, the Duke of York sitting next to him; at the other End sat the Duke of Gloucester and the General, and the Duke of Buckingham in the Boot. About two Miles from Dover the King took Horse, his Brothers riding on his Right-Hand, and the General on the Left, follow'd by a gallant Equipage into Canterbury, where he staid on Saturday and Sunday,

On Monday May 28. the King came to Robchester, and early next Day went on to Black-Heath, where the Army was drawn up, and his Majesty having taken a most pleasing view of them, advanced toward London with infinite Crowds and incredible Acclamations: About one he was met at St. George's Fields by the Lord Mayor and Aldermen waiting there in a glorious Tent, the Mayor with a profound Reverence delivered the Sword to his Majesty, and received it again with great Respect and the Honour of being Knighted Sir Thomas Alleyn. From thence the King was conducted thro' London in a very splendid manner to his Royal Palace at Whitehall; where he paid his Devotions and Thanks to God on this Day of his Birth and Return in the Presence Chamber, because the Chapel was not yet in order.

Offices and Honours.

His Majesty's first Care was to constitute his Privy Council, of which were General Monk, the Duke of Bucks, and Sir Anthony Ashley Cooper; and to fill up the Offices of State, the Duke of Ormond being made Lord High Steward, the Earl of Southampton Lord High-Treasurer, and the Earl of Manchester Lord Chamberlain, Sir Frederick Cornwallis Treasurer of the Household, and Sir John Berkley Comptroller: And then to confer suitable Honours on his principal Servants, General Monk made Duke of Albemarle and Earl of Torrington, Admiral Montague Earl of Sandwich and Viscount Hinsrinbrook, &c.

Bill for general Pardon.

The great Affair that took up the Debates of the two Houses was A Bill for a general Pardon. The Lords would have excepted all that late and acted in any High-Court of Justice; the Commons were more tender, and the King was inclin'd to extend his Mercy to all but his Father's Murderers. And therefore on July 12. the King went to the House of Lords, and commanded the Commons to be called up. He made a very Prudent and Pathetick Speech to advise their Agreement to a Bill, without too much Limitation of his Royal Clemency and Mercy. And on Aug. 20. he came and passed the Act for a general Pardon, that had excepted no Person from the Favour of it, but those that acted or late as the King's Judges and Sir Henry Vane, Col. Lambert and Hugh Peters, with the two unknown Persons disguised on the Scaffold; and even in the number of the King's Judges, those who did not sit in the Day of Sentence, nor sign the Warrant for Execution, had their Lives spared. After passing some other Acts for disbanding the Army; for making the 29th of May a perpetual Anniversary, &c. the two Houses adjourned themselves to Nov. 6. following.

Addresses and Congratulations.

In the mean time the King was perpetually entertained with the Loyal Addresses of his People, and with the solemn Congratulations of Foreign Princes and States, who seem'd all to vie in Haft and Zeal for sending over their Ambassadors and Agents to complement his Majesty upon his happy Restoration to his Royal Dignity and Government. In the paying of these Ceremonies a dreadful Rencounter happen'd on Tower-Hill, in a dispute of Precedence between the Coaches of the Spanish and French Ambassadors.

A little after this time, the Princess Dowager of Orange, having recommended the Interest of her young Son the Prince (born after his Father's Death) to the care of the States-General, who had now at length agreed to invest the young Prince with the Dignity and Trust which his Ancestors formerly held in that Commonwealth, came into England to visit her Royal Brother, and once again to see her native Country: But the Joy of seeing her eldest Brother peaceably enthron'd was much allay'd, and in a manner prevented by her Sorrow for the Loss of her youngest Brother, Henry of Orlando Duke of Gloucester, who just before her landing died of the Small-Pox on Sept. 12. in the twentieth Year of his Age, much lamented by the King, and much beloved by all that knew tried.

On October 10. the Commissioners of Oyer and Terminer for Trial of the Regicides, met at the Sessions-House in the Old-Bailey, Sir Orlando Bridgman Lord Chief Baron, late as principal Judge, the King's Council were Sir Jeffrey Palmer Attorney General, Sir Henrage Finch Solicitor General, Sir Edward Turner the Duke of York's Attorney, Serjeant Keeling, Windham, &c. The Prisoners having been this Day brought from the Tower to Newgate, were thence brought to the Bar, Sir Hurdress Waller, William Heveningham, Col. Harrison, Isaac Pennington, Henry Marten, Gilbert Millingham, Robert Tibburn, Owen Roe, Robert Lilburn, Adrian Scroop, John Carew, John Jones, Thomas Scot, Gregory Clement, John Cook, Edmund Harvey, Henry Smith, John Downs, Vincent Potter, Augustine Garland, George Fleetwood, Simon Meyn, James Temple, Peter Temple, Thomas Wait, Hugh Peters, Francis Hacker and Daniel Axtel. Two only pleaded Guilty, Sir Hurdress Waller and Mr. George Fleetwood. Harry Marten pleaded, "He was not excepted out of the Act of Indemnity, the Person there mention'd being Hemy Martin, not Marten, till the Court informed him a Mistake in this case was not pleadable. Carew put himself upon his Trial, with this canting Salvo, Saving to our Lord Jesus Christ his Right to the Government of these Nations. Peters would be tried by the Law of God only, which he of all Men had most wickedly abused. Axtel stood long Mute, and the Court had much ado to convince him of the danger of it. The Crimes were so very odious, and the Proofs so clear, that the Jurors without any Hesitation found them all Guilty: But ten only were Executed, Harrison, Carew, Scot, Clement, Jones, Scroop, Cook and Peters at Charing-Cross; Hacker and Axtel at Tyburn. All the rest were respited till the King and Parliament should order their Execution, according to the Tenor of the Act of Indemnity. One William Hewlet was indicted for being the Man that in a Frock and Vizard cut off the King's Head, and three several Witnesses averr'd it was his own Confession; upon which he was found Guilty, and yet had the Favour of the Court to be Repriev'd, and not to suffer. Of these wretched Criminals some pleaded Ignorance, but none betray'd a Repentance. Most of them gloried in the Villany, and justified the Cause and the Authority by which they acted: And some of their surviving Friends were so very insolent, that they publish'd their Pleadings and Prayers and Speeches, to all the Advantage that the Spirit of Hell could invent, with an insufferable Insult upon the Civil Government and all Morality and Religion.

The Queen-Mother came over from France to congratulate her Son, and to bring over her fair Daughter Hennietta Maria, and to advise of a Match between her and Monsieur, Brother to the French King; and as generally suspected to draw her Son the King into a Match with Portugal and a League with France, and a Surrendry of Dunkirk.

Both Houses of Parliament met on Nov. 6. and being advis'd to expedite their Business, an Act was pass'd for settling the Excise upon Beer and Ale, and other Liquors. Another for taking away the Court of Wards and Liveries, which had been long complain'd of as an Oppression to the Subject, and accepting the Excise in lieu of it, as an Hereditary Duty to the Crown of England for ever. And so this Parliament (to which the King from his own Mouth had given the Epithet of the Healing Parliament) was Dissolv'd on Decemb. 29. the same Day with the Funeral of the excellent Princess of Orange, Mary eldest Sister of the King, and Mother of William III. King of England, whom she left with the Title of Prince of Orange, in Minority of ten Years and one Month.

Immediately after this Calamity, the Government was alarm'd with a desperate Insurrection of the Fifth-

1660. Fifth-Monarchy-Men, who being the most bold and 12 Car. II. loody of all sort of Enthusiasts, had given so much Insurre- Jealousie of their Madnes, that Colonel Overton, tion of the Fifth- Cornet Day, Major Allen, and some other leading Monarchy Men of that Party, had been seized and imprisoned.
 Men. Yet the Congregation of them meeting by the King's Indulgence in Coleman-street, did on Sunday Evening Jan. 6. break into open Rebellion, under the Conduct of their Preacher Thomas Venner, a Cooper.
 They were not above sixty in number when they first sallied out of their Meeting-house well arm'd, marching to St. Thomas Apostles to call in more of their Party, thence into Whitcross-street, coming into the City again at Cripplegate, and going out again at Aldersgate, declaring for King Jesus, and killing several People. Sir Richard Brown, then Lord Mayor, having notice of their desperate Design, got together some Files of the Train'd-Bands, who were at first repuls'd by Venner's Party, who fought with an incredible Impulse of Infatuation, as making themselves to believe that One should chase a thousand, and no Weapon formed against them should prosper. But finding themselves harder press'd, and being told the Life-guards were coming down upon them, they retired, and under Cover of the dark Evening got into Cane-wood betwixt Highbate and Hampstead: and a Party of Horse and Foot being sent thither to hunt them out, on Wednesday Morning very early this villainous Crew return'd again to London, dividing themselves into two Parties, one whereof appear'd about Leaden-ball, and from thence march'd into Little Eastcheap, where they fought obstinately, but were dispers'd by the Train'd-Bands. Venner, with another Party, came to the Lord Mayor's House, thinking to have surpriz'd him; but missing their aim, they march'd into Wood-street, where they were met by Colonel Corbet and about 20 Horse. Corbet and 9 only of his Horse-men charg'd through the Rebels, and broke them; and the Train'd-Band Foot fell in and pursu'd them. They fought with a Courage more brutish and devilish than was ever seen in Men: and if their Numbers had been equal to their Spirits, they would have overturn'd the City, and the Nation, and the World. Venner (who was much wounded before he could be taken) was soon after, with about 16 of his Crew, arraign'd in the Old Bailey; and being all found Guilty, they were Executed in several Places in London, most of them raving, and threatening Judgment, and calling down Vengeance upon the King, the Judges, and the City.

Defeated, Upon a View of the King's Return, there began to be a brighter Prospect of Religion, which for 20 Years together had run into such a variety of Forms and Figures, as to be well ashamed to appear longer without reassuming the good old Habit of a Church Church of England, as formerly by Law established:
 'estor'd. And yet Prejudices were so deep, and Parties so powerful, that it was the King's Prudence to smooth and soften the way by his many Expressions of Indulgence and Condescension mention'd in his Letters and Declaration from Breda; and after his Return by this remarkable Declaration to all his loving Subjects of his Kingdom of England and Dominion of Wales, concerning Ecclesiastical Affairs.

His Decla- Charles R. ration. HOW much the Peace of the State is concerned in the Peace of the Church, and how difficult a thing it is to preserve Order and Government in Civil, whilst there is no Order or Government in Ecclesiastical Affairs, is evident to the World: And this little part of the World, our own Dominions, hath had for late Experience of it, that we may very well acquiesce in the Conclusion, without enlarging Ourselves in Discourse upon it, it being a Subject we have had frequent occasion to contemplate upon, and to lament abroad as well as at home.
 "In our Letter to the Speaker of the House of 1660. Commons from Breda, we declared how much we 12 Car. II. desired the Advancement and Propagation of the Protestant Religion; that neither the Unkindness of those of the same Faith towards us, nor the Civilities and Obligations from those of a contrary Profession (of both which we have had abundant Evidence) could in the least Degree startle us, or make us swerve from it; and that nothing can be propos'd to manifest our Zeal and Affection for it, to which we will not readily consent. And we said then, that we did hope in due time, ourself to propose somewhat for the Propagation of it, that will satisfy the World that we have always made it both our Care and our Study, and have enough observ'd what is most like to bring Disadvantage to it. And the truth is, we do think ourself more competent to propose, and with God's Assistance to determine many things now in difference, from the Time we have spent, and the Experience we have had, in most of the Reformed Churches abroad, in France, in the Low Countries, and in Germany, where we have had frequent Conferences with the most Learned Men, who have unanimously lamented the great Reproach the Protestant Religion undergoes from the Distempers and too notorious Schisms in Matters of Religion in England.

 And as the most Learned amongst them have always with great Submission and Reverence acknowledged and magnified the established Government of the Church of England, and the great Countenance and Shelter the Protestant Religion received from it before these unhappy times: so many of them have with great Ingenuity and Sorrow confess'd, that they were too easily misled by Misinformation and Prejudice into some Disesteem of it, as if it had too much complied with the Church of Rome; whereas they now acknowledge it to be the best Fence God hath yet rais'd against Popery in the World: And we are persuas'd they do with great Zeal wish it restored to its old Dignity and Veneration.

When we were in Holland, we were attended by many grave and learned Ministers from hence, who were look'd upon as the most able and principal Assertors of the Presbyterian Opinions; with whom we had as much Conference as the Multitude of Affairs which were then upon us would permit us to have; and, to our great Satisfaction and Comfort, found them Persons full of Affection to us, of Zeal for the Peace of the Church and State, and neither Enemies (as they have been given out to be) to Episcopacy or Liturgy, but modestly to desire such Alterations in either, as, without shaking Foundations, might best allay the present Distempers which the Indisposition of the Time and the Tenderness of some Mens Consciences had contracted. For the better doing whereof, we did intend, upon our first Arrival in this Kingdom to call a Synod of Divines, as the most proper Expedient to provide a proper Remedy for all those Differences and Dissatisfa-ctions which had or should arise in Matters of Religion. And in the mean time, we published in our Declaration from Breda, a Liberty to render Consciences, and that no Man should be disquieted, or called in question for Differences of Opinion in Matters of Religion, which do not disturb the Peace of the Kingdom, and that we shall be ready to consent to such an Act of Parliament as upon mature Deliberation shall be offer'd to us, for the full granting that Indulgence.

Whilst we continued in this Temper of Mind, and Resolution, and have so far complied with the Persuasion of particular Persons, and the Distemper of the Time, as to be contented with the Exercise of our Religion in our own Chapel, according to the constant Practice and Laws established, without enjoining that Practice, and the 1660. "Observation of those Laws in the Churches of 12Cor.II. "the Kingdom; in which we have undergone the "Censure of many, as if we were without that "Zeal for the Church which we ought to have, and "which, by God's Grace, we shall always retain:

"We have found ourself not so candidly dealt with
"as we have deserved, and that there are unquiet
"and restless Spirits, who, without abating any of "their own Distemper in recompence of the Mo"deration they find in us, continue their Bitter"ness against the Church, and endeavour to raise "Jealousies of us, and to lessen our Reputation by "their Reproaches, as if we were not true to the "Professions we have made: And in order there-"unto, they have very unreasonably caused to be "Printed, Published, and Dispersed, throughout "the Kingdom, a Declaration heretofore Printed in "our Name in Scotland, of which we shall say no "more, than that the Circumstances by which we "were enforced to Sign that Declaration, are enough
"known to the World; and that the worthiest
"and greatest part of that Nation did even then "detest and abhor the ill Usage of us in that Par"ticular, when the same Tyranny was exercised
"there by the Power of a few ill Men, which at "that time had spread itself over this Kingdom,
"and therefore we had no Reason to expect that "we should at this Season, when we are doing all "we can to wipe out the Memory of all that hath "been done amiss by other Men, and we thank God "have wiped it out of our own Remembrance, have "been ourself assaulted with those Reproaches,
"which we will likewise forget.

"Since the Printing this Declaration, several se-"ditionous Pamphlets and Queries have been pub"lish'd and scatter'd abroad to insufe Dislike and "Jealousies into the Hearts of the People, and of "the Army: and some, who ought rather to have "repented the former Mischief they have wrought,
"than to have endeavoured to improve it, have "had the Hardiness to publish, That the Doctrine "of the Church, against which no Man with whom "we have conferred hath excepted, ought to be re"formed as well as the Discipline.

"This over-passionate and turbulent way of Pro"ceeding, and the Impatience we find in many for "some speedy Determination in these Matters,
"whereby the Minds of Men may be compos'd,
"and the Peace of the Church established, hath "prevail'd with us to invert the Method we had "propos'd to ourself, and even in order to the "better calling and composing a Synod (which the "present Jealousie, will hardly agree upon) by the "Assistance of God's blessed Spirit, which we daily
"invoke and supplicate, to give some Determina"tion ourself to the Matters in Difference, until "such a Synod may be called, as may without Pas"sion or Prejudice give us such farther Assistance "towards a perfect Union of Affections as well as "Submission to Authority, as is necessary. And "we are the rather induced to take this upon us, by "finding upon the full Conference we have had
"with the Learned Men of several Persuasions, "that the Mischiefs under which the Church and "State do at present suffer, do not result from any "formed Doctrine or Conclusion which either Par"ty maintains or avows; but from the Passion and "Appetite, and Interest of particular Persons, who "contract greater Prejudice to each other from "those Affections, than would naturally rise from "their Opinions; and those Distempers must be in "some degree allay'd, before the Meeting in a Sy"nod can be attended with better Success than their "Meeting in other Places, and their Discourses in "Pulpits, have hitherto been: and till all Thoughts "of Victory are laid aside, the humble and neces"sary Thoughts for the Vindication of Truth can"not be enough entertained.

"We must, for the Honour of all those of either "Persuasion with whom we have conferr'd, declare, 1660. "That the Professions and Desires of All, for the 12Cor.II. "Advancement of Piety and true Godliness, are "the same; their Professions of Zeal for the Peace "of the Church, the same; of Affection and Duty "to us, the same: They All approve Episcopacy;

"they All approve a set Form of Liturgy; and "they All disprove and dislike the Sin of Sacrilege,
"and the Alienation of the Revenue of the Church.
"And if, upon these excellent Foundations, in Sub"mission to which there is such a Harmony of Affe"ctions, any Superstructures should be raised, to "the shaking those Foundations, and to the con"tracting and lessening the blessed Gift of Charity,
"which is a vital part of Christian Religion, we "shall think ourself very unfortunate, and even "suspect that we are defective in that Adminis"tration of Government with which God hath in"trusted us.

"We need not profess the high Affection and "Esteem we have for the Church of England, as it is "established by Law; the Reverence to which hath "supported us, by God's Blessing, against many "Temptations: Nor do we think that Reverence
"in the least degree diminished by our Condescen"sions, not peremptorily to insist on some Partic"ulars of Ceremony, which however introduced "by the Piety, and Devotion, and Order of for"mer Times, may not be so agreeable to the pre"sent, but may even lessen that Piety and Devot"ion for the Improvement whereof they might "happily be first introduced, and consequently may "well be dispensed with. And we hope this cha"ritable Compliance of ours will dispose the Minds "of all Men to a cheerful Submission to that Au"thority, the Preservation whereof is so necessary "for the Unity and Peace of the Church; and that "they will acknowledge the Support of the Episco"pal Authority to be the best Support of Religion,
"by being the best means to contain the Minds of "Men within the Rules of Government. And they "who would restrain the Exercise of that holy Fun"ction within the Rules which were observed in "the primitive Times, must remember and consid"er, that the Ecclesiastical Power being in those "blessed Times always subordinate and subject to "the Civil; it was likewise proportion'd to such "an Extent of Jurisdiction, as was most agreeable "to that. And as the Sanctity, and Simplicity,
"and Resignation of that Age did then refer ma"ny things to the Bishops, which the Policy of suc"ceeding Ages would not admit, at least did o"therwise provide for; so it can be no Reproach to "primitive Episcopacy, if where there have been "great Alterations in the Civil Government from "what was then, there have been likewise some "Difference and Alteration in the Ecclesiastical,
"the Essence and Foundation being still preserved.

"And upon this Ground, without taking upon "us to censure the Government of the Church in "other Countries, where the Government of the "State is different from what it is here; or enlarg"ing Ourself upon the Reasons why, whilst there "was an Imagination of erecting a Democratical "Government here in the State, they should be wil"ling to continue an Aristocratical Government in "the Church: It shall suffice to say, that since by "the wonderful Blessing of God, the Hearts of this "whole Nation are return'd to an Obedience to "Monarchick Government in the State, it must be "very reasonable to support that Government in "the Church which is established by Law, and with "which the Monarchy hath flourish'd through so "many Ages, and which is, in truth, as ancient in "this Island as the Christian Monarchy thereof,
"and which hath always, in some Respects or De"grees, been enlarged or restrained, as hath been "thought most conducing to the Peace and Happi"ness of the Kingdom. And therefore we have not "the least doubt, but that the present Bishops will "think the present Concessions now made by us to "allay

1660. "allay the present Distempers, very just and rea-12 Car. II. sonable, and will very cheerfully conform themselves thereunto.

1. "We do in the first place declare our Purpose and Resolution is, and shall be, to promote the Power of Godliness, to encourage the Exercises of Religion both publick and private, and to take care that the Lord's-Day be applied to Holy Exercises, without unnecessary Divertisements; and that insufficient, negligent and scandalous Ministers be not permitted in the Church. And that as the present Bishops are known to be Men of great and exemplary Piety in their Lives, which they have manifested in their notorious and unexampled Sufferings during these late Distempers, and of great and known sufficiency of Learning:
So we shall take especial Care to prefer no Man to that Office and Charge, but Men of Learning, Virtue and Piety, who may be themselves the best Examples to those who are to be govern'd by 'em.
And we shall expect and provide the best we can, that the Bishops be frequent Preachers, and that they do very often Preach themselves in some Church of their Diocese, except they be hinder'd by Sickness or other bodily Infirmities, or some other justifiable Occasion, which shall not be thought justifiable if it be frequent.

2. "Because the Diocesses, especially some of them, are thought to be of too large Extent, we will appoint such a number of Suffragan Bishops in every Diocese, as shall be sufficient for the due performance of their Work.

3. "No Bishop shall Ordain or Exercise any part of Jurisdiction which appertains to the Censures of the Church, without the Advice and Assistance of the Presbyters: And no Chancellours, Commissaries or Officials, as such, shall execute any Act of Spiritual Jurisdiction in these Cases, viz.
Excommunication, Absolution, or wherein any of the Ministry are concerned, with Reference to their Pastoral Charge. However our Intent and Meaning is to uphold and maintain the Profession of the Civil Law, so far and in such matters, as it hath been of Use and Practice within our Kingdoms and Dominions: Albeit, as to Excommunication our Will and Pleasure is, that no Chan-cellour, Commissary or Official shall decree any Sentence of Excommunication or Absolution, or be Judges in those things wherein any of the Ministry are concerned as is aforesaid: Not shall the Archdeacon exercise any Jurisdiction without the Advice and Assistance of six Ministers of his Archdeaconry, whereof three to be nominated by the Bishop, and three by the Election of the major part of the Presbyters within the Archdeaconry.

4. "To the end that the Deans and Chapters may be the better fitted to afford Counsel and Assistance to the Bishops, both in Ordination and the other Offices mention'd before, we will take care that those Preferments be given to the most Learned and Pious Presbyters of the Diocese. And moreover, that an equal number to those of the Chapter, of the most Learned, Pious and Discreet Presbyters of the same Diocese, annually chosen by the major Vote of all the Presbyters of that Diocese present at such Elections, shall be always advising and assisting together with those of the Chapter, in all Ordinations, and in every part of Jurisdiction, which appertains to the Censures of the Church, and at all other solemn and important Actions in the Exercise of the Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction, wherein any of the Ministry are concerned; provided that at all such Meetings the number of the Ministers so Elect'd, and those present of the Chapter, shall be equal, and not exceed one the other, and that to make the Numbers equal, the Juniors of the exceeding number be withdrawn, that the most ancient may take place. Nor shall any Suffragan Bishop Ordain or Exercise the foremention'd Offices and Acts of Spiritual Jurisdiction, but with the Advice and Assistance of a sufficient number of the most Judicious and Pious Presbyters annually chosen as aforesaid within his Precincts. And our Will is, that the great Work of Ordination be constantly and solemnly perform'd by the Bishop and his aforesaid Presbytery, at the four set Times and Seasons appointed by the Church for that purpose.

5. "We will take care that Confirmation be rightly and solemnly perform'd, by the Information and with the Consent of the Minister of the Place, who shall admit none to the Lord's-Supper, till they have made a credible Profession of their Faith, and promised Obedience to the Will of God, according as is expressed in the Considerations of the Rubrick before the Catechism: And that all possible Diligence be used for the Instruction and Reformation of Scandalous Offenders, whom the Minister shall not suffer to partake of the Lord's-Table, until they have openly declared themselves to have truly repented and amended their former naughty Lives, as is partly expressed in the Rubrick and more fully in the Canons; provided there be place for due Appeals to Superior Power. But besides the Suffragans and their Presbytery, every Rural Dean (those Deans, as heretofore, to be nominated by the Bishop of the Diocese) together with three or four Ministers of that Deanery, chosen by the major part of all the Ministers within the same, shall meet once in every Month, to receive such Complaints as shall be presented to them by the Ministers or Church-Wardens of the respective Parishes; and also to compose all such Differences betwixt Party and Party, as shall be offer'd to them by way of Arbitration, and to convince Offenders, and reform all such things as they shall find amiss by their Pastoral Reproofs and Admonitions, if they may be so Reformed: And such matters as they cau-not by this Pastoral and Perswasive way compose and reform, are by them to be prepared for, and presented to the Bishop; at which meeting any other Ministers of that Deanery may, if they please, be present. Moreover, the Rural Dean and his Assistants are in their respective Divisions to see that the Children and the younger sort be carefully instructed by the respective Ministers of every Parish in the Grounds of Christian Religion, and be able to give a good Account of their Faith and Knowledge, and also of their Christian Conversation conformable thereunto, before they be confirmed by the Bishop, or admitted to the Sacrament of the Lord's-Supper.

6. No Bishop shall exercise any Arbitrary Power, or do or impose any thing upon the Clergy or the People, but what is according to the known Law of the Land.

7. "We are very glad to find, that all with whom we have conferr'd, do in their Judgments approve a Liturgy, or Set-Form of Publick Worship to be Lawful; which in our Judgment, for the preservation of Unity and Uniformity, we conceive to be very necessary. And though we do conceive the Liturgy of the Church of England, contained in the Book of Common-Prayer, and by Law established to be the best we have seen; and we believe, that we have seen all that are extant, and used in this part of the World, and well know what Reverence most of the Reformed Churches, or at least the most Learned Men in those Churches have for it; yet since we find some Exceptions made against several things therein, we will appoint an equal number of Learned Di-vines of both Perswasions to review the same, and to make such Alterations as shall be thought most necessary; and some additional Forms (in the Scripture Phrase as near as may be) suited unto the several parts of Worship, and that it be left to the Ministers choice to use one or other at his 1660. " discretion. In the mean time, and until this be 12 Car II. " done, altho' we do heartily wish and desire, that " the Ministers in their severall Churches, because " they dislike some Clauses and Expreſſions, would " not totally lay aſide the uſe of the Book of Com" mon Prayer, but read thoſe Parts againſt which " there can be no exception, which would be the " beſt Inſtance of declining thoſe marks of diſtincti-

 " on which we ſo much labour and deſire to re" move: yet in compaſſion to divers of our good
 " Subjects, who ſcruple the uſe of it as now it is,
 " our Will and Pleaſure is, that none be puniſhed
 " or troubled for not uſing it, until it be review'd
 " and effectually reformed as aforeſaid.

8. " Laſtly, concerning Ceremonies which have " adminiſter'd ſo much matter of Difference and " Contention, and which have been introduced by " the Wiſdom and Authority of the Church, for E" dification and the Improvement of Piety: We " ſhall ſay no more, than that we have the more E-" ſteem of all, and Reverence for many of them,
 " by having been preſent in many of thoſe Churches,
 " where they are moſt Aboliſhed or Diſcountenanc'd,
 " and it cannot be doubted, but that, as the Uni-" verſal Church cannot introduce one Ceremony in " the Worſhip of God, that is contrary to God's " Word expreſſed in the Scripture; ſo every Na" tional Church with the Approbation and Conſent
 " of the Sovereign Power, may, and hath always " introduc'd ſuch particular Ceremonies, as in that " conjuncture of Time are thought moſt proper for " Edification and the neceſſary improvement of " Piety and Devotion in the People, tho' the neceſ" ſary practice thereof cannot be deduced from Scrip" ture; and that which before was, and is in it ſelf
 " indifferent, ceases to be indifferent, after it is e" ſtabliſhed by Law. And therefore our preſent " Conſideration and Work is, to gratifie the private " Conſciences of thoſe who are griev'd with the uſe
 " of ſome Ceremonies, by indulging to and diſpen" ſing with their omitting thoſe Ceremonies; not " utterly to abolith any which are eſtabliſhed by " Law (if any are practiſed contrary to Law the " ſame ſhall ceaſe) which ſhould be unjuſt and of " ill Example, and to impoſe upon the Conſcience " of ſome, for the ſatisfaction of the Conſcience of " others, which is otherwiſe provided for. As it " could not be reaſonable that ſuch Men ſhould ex" pect, that we ſhould our ſelf decline, or enjoyn
 " others to do ſo, to receive the bleſſed Sacrament " on our Knees, which in our Conſcience is the moſt " humble, moſt devout and moſt agreeable Poſture
 " for that holy Duty, becauſe ſome other Men up" on reaſons beſt, if not only known to themſelves, " chooſe rather to do it Sitting or Standing: We " ſhall leave all Deciſions and Determinations of " that kind, if they ſhall be thought neceſſary for a " perfect and entire Unity and Uniformity throug" hout the Nation, to the Advice of a National Syn" od, which ſhall be duly called after a little time,
 " and a mutual Converſation between Perſons of " different Perſuaſions, hath mollified thoſe Diſtem" pers, abated theſe Sharpneſſes, and extinguiſhed
 " thoſe Jealouſies which make us unfit for thoſe
 " Conſultations. And upon ſuch Advice, we ſhall " uſe our utmoſt Endeavour, that ſuch Laws may " be eſtabliſhed, as may beſt provide for the Peace " of the Church and State; provided that none ſhall
 " be denied the Sacrament of the Lord's-Supper, " though they do not uſe the Geſture of kneeling
 " in the act of receiving.

" In the mean time, out of Compaſſion and Com" pliance towards thoſe who would forbear the Croſs
 " in Baptiſm. We are content that no Man ſhall be " compell'd to uſe the ſame, or ſuffer for not doing it.
 " But if any Parent deſire to have his Child chriſten'd
 " according to the Form uſed, and the Miniſter will " not uſe the Sign, it ſhall be lawful for that Pa" rent to procure another Miniſter to do it: And " if the proper Miniſter ſhall reſuſe to omit that Ce-1660. " remony of the Croſs, it ſhall be lawful for the 12 Car II. " Parent, who would not have his Child ſo Baptiz'd, " to procure another Miniſter to do it, who will do

 " it according to his Deſire.

" No Man ſhall be compelled to bow at the name
 " of Jeſus, or ſuffer in any degree for not doing it, " without reproaching thoſe who out of their Devo" tion continue that ancient Ceremony of the " Church.

" For the uſe of the Surplice, we are contented
 " that all Men be left to their liberty to do as they " ſhall think fit, without ſuffering in the leaſt de" gree for wearing or not wearing it. Provided " that this Liberty do not extend to our own Cha" pel, Cathedral or Collegiate Churches, or to any " Colledge in either of our Universities, but that the " ſeveral Statutes and Customs for the uſe thereof
 " in the ſaid Places, be there obſerv'd as former" ly.

" And becauſe ſome Men, otherwiſe Pious and " Learned ſay, they cannot conform unto the Sub" ſcription required by the Canon, nor take the " Oath of Canonical Obedience, we are content, " and it is our Will and Pleaſure (ſo they take the " Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy) that they
 " ſhall receive Ordination, Inſtitution and Inducti" on, and ſhall be permitted to exerciſe their Fun" ction, and to enjoy the Profits of their Livings, " without the ſaid Subſcription or Oath of Canoni" cal Obedience: And, moreover, that no Perſons
 " in the Universities ſhall for the want of ſuch Sub" ſcription be hinder'd in the taking their Degrees.
 " Laſtly, That none be judg'd to forfeit his Pre" ſentation or Benefice, or be deprived of it upon " the Statute of the thirteenth of Queen Elizabeth,
 " Chapter the twelfth, ſo he read and declare his " Aſſent to all the Articles of Religion, which on" ly concern the Confeſſion of the true Chriſtian
 " Faith, and the Doctrine of the Sacraments com-" priſed in the Book of Articles in the ſaid Statute " mention'd. In a Word, we do again renew what " we have formerly ſaid in our Declaration from " Breda, for the Liberty of tender Conſciences, that " no Man ſhall be diſquieted, or called in queſtion
 " for differences of Opinion in matters of Religion,
 " which do not diſturb the Peace of the Kingdom:
 " And if any have been diſturb'd in that kind ſince
 " our arrival here, it hath not proceeded from any " Direction of ours.

" To conclude, and in this place to explain what " we mention'd before, and ſaid in our Letter to " the Houſe of Commons from Breda, that we hop'd " in due time ourſelf to propoſe ſomewhat for the " propagation of the Proteſtant Religion that will
 " ſatisfie the World, that we have always made it
 " both our Care and our Study, and have enough
 " obſerv'd what is moſt like to bring diſadvantage " to it: We do conjure all our loving Subjects to " acquieſce in and ſubmit to this our Declaration, " concerning thoſe Differences which have ſo much
 " diſquieted the Nation at home, and given ſuch " Offence to the Proteſtant Churches abroad, and " brought ſuch Reproach upon the Proteſtant Reli" gion in general from the Enemies thereof; as if " upon obſcure Notions of Faith and Fancy, it did " admit the practice of Chriſtian Duties and Obe" dience to be diſcountenanc'd and ſuſpended, and " introduce a Licence in Opinions and Manners, " to the prejudice of the Chriſtian Faith. And let " us all endeavour and emulate each other in thoſe
 " Endeavours, to countenance and advance the Pro-
 " teſtant Religion abroad, which will be beſt done
 " by ſupporting the Dignity and Reverence due to " the beſt Reformed Proteſtant Church at home;
 " and which being once freed from the Calumnies
 " and Reproaches it hath undergone from theſe late " ill times, will be the beſt ſhelter for thoſe a" broad, which will by that countenance both be " the better proteſted againſt their Enemies, and be " the more eaſily induced to compoſe the Differen" ces

1660. " ces amongst themselves, which give their Enemies 12 Car. II. " more advantage against them: And we hope and " expect, that all Men will henceforward forbear to " vent any such Doctrine in the Pulpit, or to endea" vour to work in such manner upon the Affections
 " of the People, as may dispose them to an ill Opi" nion of us and the Government, and to disturb " the Peace of the Kingdom; which if all Men will
 " in their several Vocations endeavour to preserve " with the same Affection and Zeal we ourself will " do; all our good Subjects will by God's Blessing " upon us enjoy as great a measure of Felicity, as this " Nation hath ever done, and which we shall con" stantly labour to procure for them, as the greatest " Blessing God can bestow upon us in this World
 " Given at our Court at Whitehall this twenty fifth " Day of October 1660.

Excellen- " This Declaration tho' very large, cannot be tedious cy of this " to any good Reader, because it has a Spirit Declara- " of Truth and Wisdom and Charity above any one tion. " Publick Profession, that was ever yet made in mat" ters of Religion. It shews the admirable Temper " and Prudence of the King and his Council in that " tender Juncture of Affairs: It proves the Charity and " Moderation of the suffering Bishops in thinking
 " such Concessions to be just and reasonable for Peace " and Unity; and it shews a disposition in the chief " Leaders, of the other Party, to have accepted of " Terms of Union consistent with our Episcopacy and " Liturgy: It condemns the unhappy Ferments that " soon after followed for want of coming to this Tem" per; and it may stand for a Pattern to Posterity,
 " whenever they are heartily disposed to restore the Dis" cipline and heal up the Breaches of the Church. A very " Learned Conformist Writer has given this Character " of it; *If ever a divine Sentence was in the Mouth of any " King, and his Mouth erred not in Judgment, I verily " believe it was thus with our present Majesty, when he " composed that admirable Declaration; which next to " Holy Scripture I adore, and think that the united Judge" ment of the whole Nation cannot frame a better, or a " more unexceptionable Expedient for a firm and lasting
 " Concord of these distracted Churches.*

Speech of " A little time before this Declaration was publish-Chancellor " ed, Chancellor Hyde (whose Head and Hand were Hyde. " most in it) had given notice of it in a Speech to the " Parliament, wherein he tells them, " He was com" manded to mention to them two things recom" mended to them by his Majesty in his Declarati" on from Breda, the one for composing those un" happy Differences and Distempers in Religion, " which had too much disturbed the Peace of the " Kingdom. This (saith he) is a sad Argument
 " indeed, it is a Consideration that must make e" very Religious Heart to bleed, to see Religion
 " which should be the strongest Obligation and Cemen" t of Affection, and brotherly Kindness and " Compassion, made now by the perverse Wrang" lings of passionate and froward Men, the ground " of all Animosity, Hatred, Malice and Revenge;
 " and this unruly and unmanly Passion, I fear, too
 " frequently transports those who are in the right,
 " as well as those who are in the wrong, and leaves
 " the latter more excusable than the former. When " Men who find their Manners and Dispositions very " conformable in all the necessary Obligations of " Human Nature, avoid one anothers Conversati" on, and grow first Unsociable and then Unchari" table to each other, because one cannot think as " the other doth. —

My Lords and Gentlemen,
 " this disquisition hath cost the King many a Sigh,
 " many a sad Hour, when he hath considered the " almost irreparable Reproach the Protestant Reli" gion hath undergone from the Divisions and Dis" tractions which have been so notorious in this " Kingdom. What pains he hath taken to compose " them, after several Discourses with Pious and " Learned Men of different Perswasions, you will 1660. " shortly see by a Declaration he will shortly pub-12 Car. II. " lish upon that occasion; by which you will see " his great Indulgence to those who can have any " pretension from Conscience to differ from their " Brethren.

The Presbyterians had not been wanting to use their Endeavours of preventing the Re-establishment of the Church: For as the Lord Clarendon relates,
 " With the Commissioners sent from the Parliament
 " and from the City, to wait on the King at the " Hague, in the beginning of May, there came a com" pany of their Clergymen, to the number of eight " or ten, who would not be look'd upon as Chap" lains to the rest, but being the popular Preachers " of the City (Reynolds, Calamy, Case, Munton, and " others the most eminent of the Presbyterians) de" sired to be thought to represent that Party. They " intreated to be admitted altogether to have a for" mal Audience of his Majesty; where they presen" ted their Duties, and magnified the Affections of " themselves and their Friends; who, they said, " had always, according to the obligation of their " Covenant, wished his Majesty very well, and had " lately, upon the opportunity that God had put in-
 " to their Hands, informed the People of their Du" ty; which, they presum'd, his Majesty had heard " had proved effectual, and been of great use to him.
 " They thank'd God for his constancy to the Prote" stant Religion; and professed, that they were no
 " Enemies to moderate Episcopacy; only desired " that such things might not be pressed upon them " in God's Worship, which, in their Judgment, who " used them, were acknowledged to be matters in" different, and by others were held unlawful.

The King spoke very kindly to them, and said,
 " that he had heard of their good Behaviour to" wards him, and that he had no purpose to im" pose hard Conditions upon them, with reference " to their Consciences; that they well knew he had
 " refer'd the settling all Differences of that Nature " to the Wisdom of the Parliament, which best knew " what Indulgence and Toleration was necessary for " the Peace and Quiet of the Kingdom. But his " Majesty could not be so rid of them; they de" sired several private Audiences of him, which he " never denied; wherein they told him, the Book " of Common-Prayer had been long discontinued in " England, and the People having been disused to it,
 " and many of them having never heard it in their " Lives, it would be much wonder'd at, if his Majesty " should at his first landing in the Kingdom, re" vive the use of it in his own Chapel, whither all " Persons would resort; and therefore they besought " him, that he would not use it intirely and for" mally, but have only some parts of it read, with " mixture of other good Prayers, which his Chap" lains might use.

The King told them with some warmth, that " whilst he gave them Liberty, he would not have " his own taken from him; that he had always used " that Form of Service, which he thought the best " in the World, and had never discontinued it in " places where it was more disliked than he hop'd it " was by them; that when he came into England
 " he would not severely inquire how it was used in " other Churches, though he doubted not he should " find it used in many; but he was sure he would " have no other used in his own Chapel. Then they " besought him with more importunity, that the use " of the Surplice might be discontinued by his Chap" lains, because the sight of it would give great of" fence and scandal to the People. They found the " King as inexorable in that Point as in the other;
 " he told them plainly, that he would not be re" strained himself when he gave others so much " Liberty; that it had been always held a decent " Habit in the Church, constantly practic'd in Eng" land till these late ill times; that it had been still " retained by him; and though he was bound for " the present to tolerate much Disorder and Inde" cency

1660. " cency in the Exercise of God's Worship, he would 12 Car. II. " never, in the least degree, by his own Practice, " discountenance the good old Order of the Church,
 " in which he had been bred. Though they were " very much unsatisfied with him, whom they " thought to have found more flexible, yet they " ceased farther troubling him, in Hope and Pre" sumption, that they should find their Importuni-" ty in England more effectual.

Promoti- Sept. 20. Dr. Juxon Bishop of London was translaons of Bi- ted to the See of Canterbury, and Dr. Sheldon was made shops. Bishop of London, and Dr. Flewen Bishop of Cov. and Liabf. translated to York, and the other Sees filled with Prelates of eminent Piety and Learning, who yet took not their Seats in the House of Lords, because of the Act ——— that took away the Bishops Votes in Parliament, tho' as to their Spiritual Jurisdiction, and all other Rights of Ordination, Institution, Censures and even Uniformity of Worship, they were now in possession of them. For without any new Acts, or Repeal of any abolishing Ordinances, by restoring the Constitution of this Kingdom, the Church of England was by Law Establish'd.
 It ought to be observ'd, that the King on the very next Day after he had took possession of his Royal Palace, publish'd A Proclamation against vicious, debauch'd and profane Persons; given at Whitehall May 30. in the twelfth Year of his Reign. And happy had it been for the Peace and Honour of this Reign, if the Example of the Court had confirm'd the Order of it.

Coronati- His Majesty's Coronation was with great State on of the and Splendor performed on April 23. St. George's King. Day, his Majesty the Day before making a solemn Procession from the Tower thro' the City, amidst Triumphal Arches, and all the possible Tokens of Respect and Joy. At the opening of the new Parliament on May 8. his Majesty came to the House of Lords, and sending for the Commons made this Meeting of the Parliament. Speech :

My Lords and Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

King's " Will not spend the time in telling you why I Speech. " called you hither, I am sure I am very glad " to see you here. I do value myself much up" on keeping my Word, upon making good what" soever I promise to my Subjects: And I well re" member, when I was last in this place, I promised " that I would call a Parliament as soon as could be " reasonably expected or desired; and truly confi" dering the season of the Year, and all that hath " been done since we parted, you could not reason" ably expect to meet sooner than now we do: If it " might have been a Week sooner, you will confess
 " there was some reason to deferr it to this Day:
 " For this Day, we may without Superstition love
 " one Day, prefer one Day before another, for the " Memory of some Blessing that befell us that Day;
 " and then you will not wonder that the Memory " of the great Affliction the whole Kingdom shew'd " to me this Day twelve Month, made me desirous " to meet you again this Day, when I dare swear
 " you are full of the same Spirit, and that it will be " lasting in you. I think there are not many of you " who are not particularly known to me; there are " very few of whom I have not heard so much good,
 " that I am as sure, as I can be of any thing that is " to come, that you will all concurr with me, and " that I shall concurr with you in all things which " may advance the Peace, Plenty and Prosperity of " the Nation, I shall be exceedingly deceived else.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

" You will find what Method I think best for " your Proceeding, by two Bills which I have cau" sed to be prepared for you, which are for confir" mation of all that was Enacted at our last meet" ing: And above all, I must repeat what I said
 " when I was last here: That next to the miraculous
 " Blessing of God Almighty, and indeed as an immediate " Effect of that Blessing, I do impute the good Disposition
 " and Security we are all in, to the happy Act of Indem- nity and Oblivion, that is the principal Corner-Stone 1661.

 " which supports this excellent Building, that creates 13 Car. II.
 " Kindness in us to each other, and Confidence is our " joint and common Security.

" I am sure I am still of the same Opinion, and " more if it be possible of that Opinion, than I " was by the Experience I have of the benefit of " it, and from the unreasonableness of what some " Men say against it, tho' I assure you not in my " hearing. In God's name provide full Remedies " for any future Mischiefs; be as severe as you will
 " against new Offenders, especially if they be so up" on old Principles, and pull up those Principles by " the Roots. But I shall never think him a wise Man " who would endeavour to undermine or shake that " Foundation of our publick Peace, by infringing " that Act in the least degree; or that he can be " my Friend, or wish me well, who would persuade " me ever to consent to the breach of a Promise
 " I so solemnly made when I was Abroad, and per" formed with that Solemnity; because, and after " I promised it, I cannot suspect any attempts of " that kind by any Men of Merit and Vertue.

I will not conclude without telling you some News; News that I think will be very acceptable
 " to you, and therefore I should think myself un" kind and ill-natur'd, if I should not impart it to " you. I have been often put in mind by my " Friends, that it was high time to marry; and I " have thought so myself ever since I came into " England: But there appeared difficulties enough " in the Choice, tho' many Overtures have been " made to me; and if I should never marry till I " could make such a Choice, against which there " could be no foresight of any Inconvenience that

 " please. And towards my Resolution, I have used " that Deliberation, and taken that Advice, as I " ought to do in an Affair of that Importance; and " trust me, with a full Consideration of the good of " my Subjects in general, as of myself; it is with " the Daughter of Portugal. When I had, as well " as I could, weigh'd all that occurred to me, the " first Resolution I took, was to state the whole O" vertures which had been made to me, and in " truth, all that had been said against it to my Privy " Council; without hearing whose Advice I never " did nor ever will resolve any thing of publick Im" portance. And I tell you, with great Satisfaction

 " riage, which I look'd upon as very wonderful,

And accordingly the Lord Chancellor told them,
 " that the King had called them hither by his Writ,

 " God he had reserved them to this Day, a Day
 " that many good Men had died praying for, that

 " tho' not call'd by the Kings Writ, might be rea-

 " self, upon the Supplication and Prayer of the King " and the whole Nation, as the only means to re" store the Nation to its Happiness, to its self, to " its Honour, and even to its Innocence. That for " the King after so many Injuries and Losses, to " have been not only willing to confirm and to re-" enact the Act of Oblivion and Indemnity, but to " prepare such an Act for them, to conjure them
 " by all that was precious by their Friendship to " such a piece of fatherly Tenderness and Piety, as " could proceed from no Heart, but such a one in " which God had treasured up a stock of Mercy " and Justice and Wisdom to redeem a Nation.

 " That the last Parliament which had done so very " much, had still left great things for them to do;
 " they would find the Revenue the last Parliament
 " intended to raise for the King, very much short " of what they promised: They would find the pub" lick Debts for the discharge of the Army and the " Navy, which the last Parliament thought they " had provided for sufficiently, to be still in Ar-" rear and unpaid. That they were now the great " Physicians of the Kingdom; and God knows had " many wayward and froward and distemper'd Pa" tients, some who in truth were very Sick, others " who thought themselves sicker than they were, and " some who thought themselves in Health, and were " most sick of all: They were therefore to use all " the Diligence, Patience and Compassion which " good Physicians have for their Patients, all the " Cheerfulness and Complacency and Indulgence,
 " their several Habits and Constitutions and Dis" tempers might require. — But there were a " sort of Patients who deserved not their Lenity or " Indulgence, those were the seditious Preachers,
 " who could not be contented to be dispensed with
 " for their full Obedience to some Law established,
 " without reproaching and inveighing against those " Laws now established forever. That when the " King spake last in this place before this Day, he " said, when he should call the next Parliament, he " should receive their Thanks for what he had done
 " since he had dissolv'd the last Parliament: For,
 " he said, he should not more propose to himself any one " Rule in his Actions or Councils, than this, What is a " Parliament like to think of this Action, or of that " Counsel? And that it should be want of Understand" ing in him, if it would not bear that Test. That in a " little time after the Dissolution of that Parliament,
 " while his Majesty accompanied his Royal Mo" ther to the Sea-side, the most desperate and pro" digious Rebellion brake out in this City that had " been heard of in any Age; and by the multitude " of intercepted Letters from and to all the Coun" ties of England, in which the Time was set down " wherein the Work of the Lord was to be done, by " the desperate Carriage of the Traitors themselves, " and the bragging of their Friends, it might be " concluded the Combination reached very far; and " if the indefatigable Industry of the Lord Mayor " had not prevented it, probably the Fury would " not have been extinguish'd, before this famous " City, or a great part of it, had been burnt to " Ashes: and therefore it would become their Wis-" doms to provide new Remedies for new Diseases,
 " and to secure the precious Person of our dear So" veraign from the first Approaches of Villainy, and " the Peace of the Kingdom from the first overtures
 " of Sedition. That the King had now told them, " he was resolv'd to marry, and resolv'd whom to " marry; the most grateful News that the whole " Kingdom could receive. That it would be judg'd " an irrecoverable Error in Policy, if Portugal should " be suffered again to be swallow'd up by Spain.
 " That the Spanish Ambassador was solicitous to ob" struct this Match; and the King had not conceal-

 " offer'd against this Marriage; what profers he had " made of others, what Threats of War in one case,
 " what Advantage of Dowry in another; nay, that " he had been so solicitous for the advancement of " the Protestant Religion, that he had offer'd sever" al Protestant Princesses to whom his Master " should give a Portion, as with the Infanta of " Spain; but had withal pressed very earnestly the " delivering up of Dunkirk and Jamaica; by which " it was plain the Spanish King would have that Re" compence for the Portion he would give. That " there being a unanimous Advice from his Coun" cil to his Majesty to make this Marriage, he had " sent for the Portuguese Ambassador, had declared his " Resolution to him, had writ himself to Portugal,
 " and was preparing his Fleet to fetch home our
 " Queen. —

The Commons returned to their House, and chose Sir Edw. Turner the Duke of York's Solicitor General, who in his Speech when presented excused himself, and petition'd for the Liberties of the House, and exprest their hopes, that as his Majesty had manifested his Royal Favours to the late Adopted Parliament, so he had a Blessing left for this his Natural Parliament. On May 13. both Houses attended his Majesty at Whitehall, expressing their humble Acknowledgments and Thanks for communicating to them his Royal Intentions to marry with the Infanta of Portugal, which they could not but receive with great Joy and Satisfaction; and with all earnestness should beg a Blessing upon it, and a speedy Accomplishment of it. On May 22. by Order of Parliament, the Solemn League and Covenant was publickly burnt at London and Westminster by the common Hangman, as afterward over all England; and on May 28. the pretended Act for the Trial of King Charles I. was burnt in Westminster-Hall by a like Order of Parliament. The Commons were so unanimous and zealous in their Loyalty and Affections to the King, that the Common-wealth Party began to suspect that the late Act of Oblivion and Indemnity would not secure them from being called to the old Accounts; they doubted the Validity of that Act might be question'd, unless confirmed and expressly established by the present Parliament: They had solicited the King for this new Security, and he had promised to procure it for them: but for fear the Inclinations of the House would not so readily meet the King's Desire, upon the importunity of those who were conscious of their Guilt and Danger, his Majesty sent this gracious Letter to the House of Commons, to pass the bill for confirming the Act of Oblivion and Indemnity.

Charles R.

*T*rusty and Well-beloved we greet you well. At the opening of our Parliament you were told, that we had a great Desire this Summer to make a Progress thro' some parts of our Kingdom, which we resolve to begin in Devotion to our City of Worcester, that we may pour out our Thanks to God for our Deliverance there; and the Season of the Year quickens us in that Inclination, as we presume it disposes you to withdraw from this City and to visit your Countries. But you may remember we told you then, that we had caused some Bills to be prepared for you, for confirmation of what we enacted at our last meeting; and we said all we could to you of the Value we set upon the Act of Indemnity (as we have great reason to do) and if we could have used stronger Expressions to have conjured you speedily to have dispatched it we assure you we would have done it. And we did think what we said would have made an Impression in all who profess a desire to serve us; and therefore we expected every Day, that the same Bill would have been presented to us for another Assent: We confess, we bear you have shew'd great Affection to us, since your coming together, and that you have already prepared and pass'd some very good Bills (for which we heartily thank you) that are ready for the Roy-to pass them, till the Act of Indemnity be likewise presented to us, upon which (if you take our Word) most of our Quiet and Good depends, and in which we are sure our Honour is concerned: Therefore we must again, and as earnestly as is possible, conjure you to use all possible Expedition in the passing that Act in the same Terms we already passed it (to which we take ourself obliged) and that you will for the present lay aside all private Business, that so betaking yourselves only to the Publick, you may be ready to Adjourn by the middle of next Month, which will best suit with all our Occasions. And so not doubting of your Readiness to comply with us in these our just and necessary Desires, we bid you heartily Farewel. Given at our Court at Whitehall the two and twentieth Day of June 1661. in the thirteenth Year of our Reign.

To our Trusty and Well-belov'd Sir Edward Turner, Kt. Speaker of our House of Commons, to be communicated to the House.

Bills passed.

This Letter had the desired effect of prevailing with the Commons, and of pleasing the People: And so the Bills were dispatch'd and pass'd For Confirmation of the Act of Oblivion, for Regulating Corporations, for Restoring the Bishops to their Privilege of sitting as Peers in the House of Lords, and some other Acts, and then the Houses were adjourn'd to Nov. 20.

King's progress put off.

The King had mention'd in his Letter the design of a Summer Progress, and especially to Worcester, and to that end his Tent-Office was held at Clankwell Green, to prepare all things for his Equipage and Accommodation: But either for Cares and Pleasures intervening, the Progress was deferr'd to another Summer, and not then made.

Merry to the beggars.

Several of the Regicides and principal State Criminals had been kept in Custody as reserved, by the Act of Oblivion, to any Punishment that a Parliament should determine to be inflicted on them. Under this Condition the Lord Munson, Sir Henry Mildmay, and Mr. Robert Wallop, had been brought to the Bar of the Lords, the Commons then present, where their Estates were declared confiscate, and they degraded from all Titles and Arms of Gentility, and further sentenc'd to be drawn from the Tower thro' the City of London to Tyburn on Jan. 30. next, and so back again with Halters about their Necks upon Sledges, and to suffer perpetual Imprisonment. Several others of them were in October sent away from the Tower to remote Prisons in Castles and Islands to continue there for Life.

Success of our Fleet.

The Earl of Sandwich had the command of our Fleet, and set Sail with his Vice-Admiral Sir John Lanjon, on June 19. toward the Streights to reduce the Pirates who had very much obstructed our Trade and Navigation. On July 29. he came before the Port of Algier, and sent a Message to the Dey of that place, to come out and confirm the League formerly made with England. A Treaty was begun, but the Algerines appear'd so insolent in their Terms, that the Admiral weigh'd and stood in to their Harbour, but found it so well secur'd in a new manner by a Mole and Forts and Batteries, that after the firing some few Ships, and striking the Town into great Consternation, he found it advisable to bring off the Fleet which had suffer'd extremely in their Sails and Rigging, and leaving Sir John Lanjon to block them up, he sail'd away with part of the Fleet to the Coast of Spain, then cross to Tangier, and so back by Lisbon, according to his Orders. The old Republicans made their envious and seditious Remarks, that the Naval Force of England would not be so great under Monarchy, as it had been under a Commonwealth.

Among other Branches of the Royal Family that came over to Congratulate the Restauration of the King, was Elizabeth Queen of Bohemia, the King's Aunt, and only surviving Daughter of King James I.

the happy Mother of a Protestant Heir to this 1661.
 Crown, the Princess Sophia. She had been married 13 Car. II.
 to the unfortunate Elector Palatine on Feb. 14. 1612. and having been out of England forty nine Years, had endured and survived all the possible Misfortunes of her Family, and came now to her Native Country to die in Peace: For she had arrived here on May 17. and departed this Life in Leicester-House the 13th of February following, in the sixty sixth Year of her Age, and was privately buried in the same Vault with Prince Henry her eldest Brother, in the Chapel of Henry VII.

Death of the Queen of Bohemia.

The Government of Ireland had been committed to three Justices, the Earl of Orrery, Sir Maurice Eustice, and Sir Charles Coote Earl of Mountrath, of which the latter dying this Year, James Duke of Ormond was by his Majesty appointed Lord Lieutenant of that Kingdom, where he had before shewn his Loyalty and Wisdom and Valour in a very eminent degree.

According to the Adjournment, the two Houses met Nov. 20. now first in their true Parliamentary Constitution of Lords Spiritual, Temporal and Commons; for the Bishops by Virtue of the Act of Repeal made in the last meeting, did now take their Places; and the King in his Speech congratulated them upon the Restitution of their Rights, and said it was a Felicity which he had much desired to see accomplished, as the only thing wanting to compleat the goodly Fabrick of Church and State.

Eps restor'd to their Seats in Parl.

Religion was now to undergo the same happy State of Change with the Civil Government. A new Parliament had met on May 8. and tho' there was no legal Necessity for a Convocation to attend it, yet the latter Custom had prevail'd for the King to send out his Writs to the two Archbishops to summon the Clergy of their respective Provinces to assemble in Convocation much about the same time with the sitting of Parliament, because to treat among themselves of the same Affair in Aiding and Assisting the Crown; and because they may be ready as the Church Representative to consult in any matters of Doctrine or Discipline or Worship, that may happen to come under the Consideration of the whole Legislature. But because the Constitution of the Church was not yet perfectly re-established, and because the King had promised another sort of Synodical meeting of Commissioners, Episcopal and Presbyterian Divines; therefore it was not resolv'd to call a Convocation with this Parliament. While this matter was held in suspense, Dr. Heylyn wrote this Letter to the chief Minister of State.

Parl. intended to be called without a Convocation.

Right Honourable and my very good Lord,

I Cannot tell how welcome or unwelcome this Address may prove in regard of the greatness of the Cause, and the low Condition of the Party. But I am apt enough to perswade myself, that the honest Zeal which moves me to it, not only will excuse but endear the Boldness.
 There is, my Lord, a general Speech, but a more general Fear withal, amongst some of the Clergy, that there will be no Convocation called with the following Parliament; which, if it should be so resolv'd on, cannot but raise sad Thoughts in the Hearts of those who with the Peace and Happiness of our English Sion. But being the Bishops are excluded from their Votes in Parliament, there is no other way to keep up their Honour and Esteem in the Eyes of the People, but the retaining of their Places in the Convocation. Nor have the lower Clergy any other means to shew their Duty to the King, and keep that little Freedom which is left unto them, than by assembling in such Meetings where they may exercise the Power of a Convocation in granting Subsidies to his Majesty, tho' in nothing else. And should that Power be taken from them, according to the constant (but unprecedented) Practice of the late

Dr. Heylyn's Letter on that occasion.

1661. late Long Parliament, and that they must be taxed and rated with the rest of the Subjects without their liking and consent; I cannot see what will become of the first Article of Magna Charta, so solemnly, so frequently, confirmed in Parliament: or what can possibly be left unto them, of either the Rights or Liberties belonging to an English Subject.

I know 'tis conceived by some, that the Distrust which his Majesty hath in some of the Clergy, and the Diffidence which the Clergy have of one another, is look'd on as the principal Cause of the Innovation; for I must needs behold it as an Innovation, that any Parliament should be called without a Meeting of the Clergy at the same time with it. The first Year of King Edward VI. Queen Mary, and Queen Elizabeth, were Times of greater Diffidence and Distraction than this present Conjuncture; and yet no Parliament was called in the Beginning of their several Reigns, without the Company and Attendance of the Convocation, tho' the Intendments of the State aimed then at greater Alterations in the face of the Church, than are now pretended or desired. And, to say the truth, there was no Danger to be feared from a Convocation, tho' the Times were ticklish and unsettled, and the Clergy was divided into Sides and Factions, as the Case then stood, and so stands with us at this present time. For, since the Clergy in their Convocations are in no Authority to propound, treat, or conclude any thing (more than the Passing of a Bill of Subsidies for his Majesty's Use) until they are empower'd by the King's Commission; the King may tie them up for what time he pleases, and give them nothing but the opportunity of entertaining one another with the News of the Day.

But if it be objected, That the Commission now on foot for altering and explaining certain Passages in the publick Liturgy, may either pass instead of a Convocation, or else is thought to be neither competible nor consistent with it; I hope far better in the one, and must profess, that I can see no reason in the other. For First, I hope that the selecting some few Bishops and other learned Men of the Lower Clergy to debate on certain Points contained in the Common Prayer Book, is not intended for a Representation of the Church of England, which is a Body more diffused, and cannot legally stand bound by their Acts and Counsels. And if this Conference be for no other purpose, but only to prepare Matters for a Convocation (as some say it is not) why may not such a Conference and Convocation be held both at once? For neither the selecting of some learned Men out of both the Orders for the Composing and Reviewing of the two Liturgies digested in the Reign of King Edward VI. proved any Hindrance in the calling of those Convocations which were held both in the second and third, and in the fifth and sixth of the said King's Reign. Nor was it found, that the holding of a Convocation together with the first Parliament under Queen Elizabeth, proved any Hindrance to that Conference or Disputation which was designed between the Bishops and some learned Men of the opposite Parties. All which considered, I do most humbly beg your Lordship to put his Majesty in mind of sending out his Mandates to the two Archbishops for summoning a Convocation (according to the usual Form) in their several Provinces; that this poor Church may be held with some degree of Veneration, both at home and abroad.

And, in the next place, I do no less humbly beseech your Lordship to excuse this Freedom; which nothing but my Zeal for God's Glory, and my Affection to this Church, could have forced from me. I know how ill this present Office does become me, and how much fitter it had been for such as shine in a more eminent Sphere in the holy Hierarchy, to have tendered these Particulars to Consideration: which since they either have not done, or that no visible Effect hath appeared hereof, I could not chuse but cast my poor Mite into the Treasury; which, if it may conduce to the Church's Good, I shall have my Wish; and howsoever shall be satisfied, in point of Conscience, that I have not fail'd of doing my Duty to this Church, according to the Light of my Understanding: and then what happens unto me shall not be material. And thus again, most humbly craving Pardon for this Presumption, I kiss your Lordship's Hands, and subscribe my self,

My Lord,
Your Lordship's most humble Servant to be commanded, Peter Heylin.

Upon such Reasons and Application to the Ministers of State, long after the Writs for Parliament, the King sent out his Mandates for a Convocation in each Province; that to William Archbishop of Canterbury dated Apr. 11. for his Suffragans and Clergy to meet before him in the Church of St. Paul in London on the 8th of May following. At which Time and Place the Convocation was opened by Divine Service, and a Sermon preach'd in Latin by Dr. Thomas Pierce on Acts xv. 28. the Bishop of London presiding (instead of the Archbishop, detained by Age and Infirmities) and by Schedule continuing and proroguing the Convocation unto the 16th of May in the Collegiate Church of Westminster: On which Day Dr. Henry Fearn, Dean of Ely, having been in the former Session elected Prolocutor, was now presented to the President, and confirmed by him. After which, the Lower Clergy being dismiss'd, the President and other Bishops treated of a Form of Prayer to be used on the 29th of May, to be observed as a solemn Thanksgiving for the King's Birth and Restoration; and for another special Form of Prayer to be used on the 30th of January. The drawing up these Forms was referred to two several Committees, each consisting of four Bishops and eight of the Inferiour Clergy. And then the Convocation was by Schedule prorogued to May 18. In which third Session, the President delivered the Form of Prayer for May 29. to the Prolocutor, to be considered and consented to by him and the Lower House; and then intimated the want of a particular Form for the Ministration of Baptism to those of riper Years and referred it to a Committee of three Bishops, and six of the Lower Clergy. In the eighth Session, June 7. Richard Aldworth Esq; presented to the Bishop of London, as President, his Majesty's Royal Licence under the Great Seal of England for Amending, Reforming, Expounding, and Correcting the Constitutions and Canons already made, and for Ordaining and making new Constitutions and Ordinances concerning the Peace and Good of the Church of England. After which, the Attorney General brought in a Copy of his Majesty's Proclamation for a solemn Fast; which being read by the publick Notary, the President and Bishops consulted about a Form of Prayer for the said Fast, to be observed on the 12th of June, and referred this Matter to a Committee of four Bishops and eight of the Inferiour Clergy. In the tenth Session, June 19. the President informed the other Bishops, that (there having been some Defect in the former Licence) he had obtained from his Majesty new Letters Patents for a more effectual Licence to proceed in Ecclesiastical Affairs: by vertue of which, a Committee of 12 Bishops and 24 of the Lower Clergy, was appointed to examine the Canons already made, and to consider of Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction, and the Regulation of Spiritual Courts and Officers. In the next Session, June 21. the Bishop of London sitting President, and the Archbishop of Tork, with

In the 14th Session, July 3. the President and Bishops treated and considered of an Act about Printing, and referred the Matter to another Committee. In the 18th Session, July 17. the Bishop of Sarum brought in a Draught of some Canons, which were read and amended, and recommitted. In the 23d Session, July 27. the President and Bishops made their Subscription singly for a Royal Benevolence to be presented to the King. At the second Meeting of the Parliament, Decemb. 20. the Convocation met the Day following, when the King's Letters were read for a Review of the Book of Common Prayer, and a Committee was appointed for that purpose. This important Business took up the Care and Application of both Houses till the 48th Session, Decemb. 20. when the Book of Common Prayer is Revised and Amended, was solemnly Received, Approved, and Subscribed, by all the Members of each House. In the 50th Session, Jan. 8. the President and Bishops treated about Revising the Canons and Constitutions that were made in 1640. to consider which of them might be duly and fitly observed and used; and this Matter, in the 53d Session, was committed to a select Committee. In the 56th Session the Upper House treated and consulted about the Act for Uniformity of Publick Prayers. And in their next Session, Jan. 21. the Question fell under Debate among the Bishops, how far it was safe or lawful for the Bishops to sit or be present in the House of Lords in the Trial and Condemnation of Persons impeach'd of Treason: and after many Arguments, it was agreed to take Advice of the best common Lawyers and Civilians. The Convocation met again the Day following; and then the several Lawyers who had been consulted in this Case were admitted into the Upper House, who, after several Questions and Arguments, deliver'd in their Opinion in Writing, That the Bishops might sit with the other Peers in Parliament, without any Detriment or Prejudice, during the said Business of Condemn'd Persons. In the 62d Session, Feb. 18. the President sent for the Lower House, and admonish'd them to chuse another Prolocutor and Referendary in the Place of Dr. Henry Fenne, promoted to the See of Chichester: and they accordingly chose and presented Dr. John Barwick, Dean of St. Paul's, accepted and approved by the President with consent of his Brethren. In the next Session, Feb. 22. the Upper House made some farther Progress in Revising the Canons and Constitutions made in 1640. and in drawing up a Book of Articles to be used in every Episcopal Visitation. In the 66th Session, March 5. the President and Bishops consulted about the Amendments and Alterations which had been made by the Parliament in the Book of Common Prayer, and committed the Revival of them to George Bishop of St. Asaph, Richard Bishop of Carlisle, and Brim Bishop of Chester, whose Report was approved by both Houses. In the next Session, March 8. John Bishop of Durham deliver'd into the Hands of the President, a Book of Articles to be used in Visitations; which was order'd to be transmitted to the Archbishop of Canterbury for his Grace's Perusal and Correction. Then a Debate was held about taking care of the Impression of the Book of Common Prayer; and it was agreed, that Dr. Smecroft should be Supervisor, and Mr. Scattergood and Mr. Dillingham should be Correctors of the Press. In the 70th Session, the President sent for the Prolocutor and Clergy, and told them, that the Book of Common Prayer, and Administration of the Sacraments, and other Rites and Ceremonies of the Church, according to the Use of the Church of England; together with the Form of Ordaining and Consecrating Bishops, Priests, and Deacons, as Revised by the Convocation, had been well accepted in the House of Lords: and that the Lord Chancellour, as well in his own Name, as in the Name of all the Peers in Parliament, had returned Thanks to the Archbishops and Bishops of both Provinces, for their great Care and Industry in Revising the said Book of Common Prayer: and that the said Lord Chancellour had desired him to return the like Thanks to the Prolocutor, Prelates, and Clergy, for their respective Care and Labour in the said Work. On Saturday, March 22. the 71st Session, the President and Bishops consulted about a publick Form of Consecration of Parish-Churches and Chapels, and committed that Matter to the sole Care of John Lord Bishop of Durham.

Before the opening of this Convocation, a Conference was begun at the Savoy between the Bishops with their Episcopal Clergy, and the Presbyterian Divines, by virtue of a Commission given by his Majesty to the Archbishop of York, the Bishops of London, Durham, Rochester, Sarum, Worcester, Lincoln, Peterborough, Chester, Carlisle, Exeter, and Norwich, Dr. Earles, Dr. Heylin, Dr. Hacket, Dr. Barwick, Dr. Gunning, Dr. Pearson, Dr. Pierce, Dr. Sparrow, Mr. Thordike, on the one part; Dr. Tuckney, Dr. Conant, Dr. Spurflow, Dr. Wallis, Dr. Manton, Mr. Calamy, Mr. Baxter, Mr. Jackson, Mr. Case, Mr. Clark, Mr. Newcomen, Dr. Horton, Dr. Jacomb, Dr. Bates, Mr. Rawlins, Mr. Cooper, Dr. Lightfoot, Dr. Collins, Mr. Woodbridge, and Mr. Drake, on the other part; to advise upon and review the Book of Common Prayer, comparing the same with the most antient Liturgies which have been used in the Church in the primitive and purest times — and to take into their serious and grave Considerations the several Directions and Rules, Forms of Prayer, and Things in the said Book of Common Prayer contained; and to advise and consult upon and about the same, and the several Objections and Exceptions which shall now be raised against the same; and (if occasion be) to make such reasonable and necessary Alterations, Corrections, and Amendments, as shall be agreed upon to be needful and expedient for the giving Satisfaction to tender Consciences, and the restoring and continuance of Peace and Unity in the Churches under his Majesty's Protection and Government — And to certify and present to his Majesty in Writing, under their several Hands, the Matters and Things whereupon they shall so determine to be by his Majesty approved and established — As by the Letters Patents dated at Westminster the 25th Day of March in the thirteenth Year of our Reign.

The Place of Meeting was the Savoy, in the Lodgings of Dr. Sheldon Master of the Savoy and Bishop of London. When they first met, the Bishop of London, in a Speech, opened the Occasion of their Meeting; and told the Presbyterian Divines, "That the King had graciously appointed this Conference at their Request; and for their Satisfaction, they having been desirous of some Alterations in the Liturgy: And therefore he propos'd that they would bring in all their Objections against the Liturgy in Writing, and all the additional Forms and Alterations which they thought proper to be made to it. This Method the Presbyterian Divines had before declined when it had been offer'd by the King, and again by the Lord Chancellour, excusing themselves by saying, They were but few, and had no Commission from their Brethren to express their Minds; and therefore begg'd leave to acquaint their Brethren in the Country, that they might know their Sense. And when the King again press'd them for their Proposals, they declar'd, That they could not pretend to speak for or oblige others; and that therefore what they did, must signify but the Minds of so many Men as were present. And being farther required to deliver in their Desires of Alteration, which should be taken as their own Judgment without including the Sense of their whole Party; they again endeavoured to evade it, by begging of his Majesty, that if they made their Proposals, the other side might bring in their Concessions at the same time, containing the ut-

Judgment might be the better form'd as to the probability of Success. According to this Art of Reservedness, the Presbyterian Commissioners objected against the Proposal of the Bishop of London for stating their Case in Writing, and moved for an Amicable Confe- rence, according to the intent as they presumed of the Commission, and which they thought more likely to contribute to a Dispatch of their great End of meeting; whereas writing would be a tedious, endless Business, and prevent their Familiarity and Acquaintance with each others Minds, which would best facilitate Peace and Concord. But the Bishop of London prudently insisted on the safer and more certain way of bringing in all their Exceptions, Alterations and Additions in one view in Writing, to which they should receive distinct Answers likewise in Scriptis. After some Debate it was agreed, That they should bring all their Ex- ceptions at one time, and all their Additions at another time.

The Exceptions were accordingly drawn up by Dr.
 Reynolds, Dr. Wallis, Mr. Calamy, Mr. Newcomen, Dr.
 Bates, Mr. Clark, Dr. Jacomb, &c. and presented to the Bishops under this Title, The Exceptions of the Presbyterian Brethren against some Passages in the present Liturgy, dated Aug. 30. 1661. In this Paper they proposed much more than they themselves could expect to be granted: For they proposed, that the Prayers and Materials of the Liturgy might have nothing in them Doubtful, or question'd among pious, learned Persons (a thing impacticable) That the Re-petitions and Responfals of Clerk and People might be omitted (a pious Custom of the primitive Church, and which Mr. Baxter himself had said, was first owing to the devout Raptures of the People in breaking in upon the Priest, and taking their share in the Holy Offices) that the Petitions of the Litany might be cast into one solemn Prayer to be offer'd up by the Minister alone. That there be nothing in the Liturgy countenancing the observati^on of Lent as a Religious Fast. That the Observati^on of Saints Days be omitted. That the Gift of Prayer be not excluded from being a part of Publick Worship. That the new Translation of the Scriptures be every where used instead of the Old Version. That all Apocryphal Lessons be omitted. That no part of the Liturgy be read at the Communion Table. That the Word Priest and Curate be turned into that of Mini- ster, and Sunday into Lord's-Day. And finally, that no Ceremonies of Habit or Posture be impos'd, but those things be left to the liberty of Discretion in the Minister. After these general Proposals, they added their particular Exceptions to several Parts and Passages of the Liturgy, and express'd or suggested the Amendmens and Alterations to be made to them.
 The Episcopal Clergy gave in their Answer, and accepted of the others Reply. And several Amendments and Alterations were made in the Publick Liturgy: But, after all, it was an unhappy prejudice to the Peace of the Church and Nation, that the Presbyterian Divines thought these Concessions and Amendments to be not enough for their own Honour and the general Satisfaction of their Party: And on the other side, the Bishops and Clergy were apt to think that the more they yielded the more importu-nate Demands would be made upon them, as they saw by the Practice of Mr. Baxter: For when the drawing up the Additions or new Supplements to be made to the Liturgy, was by his Brethren committed to him alone, he drew up an absolute Form of his own, and stild it The Reformed Liturgy, as if he had the Modesty to think, that the Old Liturgy compiled by a number of very Learned Confessors and Martyrs; must now give place to a new Form compos'd by a single Man, and he by Education much inferiour to many of his other Brethren.

After several ineffectual Papers of Proposals, Exceptions, Answers, Replies and Rejoinders; when the Commission was within ten Days of expiring, the Presbyterian Divines earnestly desired the Bishops to admit them to a Personal Conference upon the Subject Matter of the Papers which had propos'd between them. And to cut off all occasion of Complaint, the Bishops who had all along disliked this way of Altercation, did now yield to it: And so a Disputation was held for several Days, wherein the chief and chosen Managers were Dr. Pierſon, Dr.

 Gunning and Dr. Sparrow on the one side, and Dr.
 Bates, Dr. Jacomb and Mr. Baxter on the other. There was much frivolous Debate in settling the Order of Disputation, which side should oppose and which should answer; the Episcopal Party arguing, that they were in Possession of the Liturgy and Ceremonies, and therefore were to be only on the defensive Side, and to answer the Objections which the other Party should urge to them. But, however, for greater Condescension, they agreed to oppose and answer by turns, the Presbyterians beginning to be the first Opponents. After much time spent to little purpose, Bishop Cosins produced a Paper as containing a Method to end the Controversie, by a Motion to put the Complainers upon distinguishing between the Things they charg'd as Sinful, and those which they accepted against as Inexpedient only. The Presbyterian Ministers were desired to draw up an Answer to it, which they did the next Morning, and deliver'd it, but in their own Names only. They charg'd eight things in the Liturgy as flatly sinful and contrary to the Word of God. 1. That no Minister be admitted to baptize without the prescribed use of the transient Image of the Cross. 2. That no Minister be permitted to read or pray, or Exercise the other parts of his Office, that dare not wear a Surplice. 3.
 That none be admitted to Communion in the Lord's-Supper, that dare not receive it kneeling.
 4. That Ministers be forced to pronounce all bap-tiz'd Infants Regenerate by the Holy Ghost. 5. That Ministers be forc'd to deliver the Sacrament of the Body and B'ood of Christ unto the Unfit both in Health and Sickneſs, and that with personal Application putting it into their Hands. 6. That Ministers be forced to absolve the Unfit, and that in absolute Expressions. 7. That Ministers are forced to give Thanks for all whom they Bury, as Brethren whom God hath delivered and taken to himself. 8. That none may be a Preacher that dare not subscribe, that there is nothing in the Common-Prayer-Book, the Book of Ordination, and the thirty nine Articles, that is contrary to the Word of God.

It seems very strange, that these Men should undertake to mention eight unlawful things in the Liturgy, when they could not affirm any one of those things to be in it self unlawful; but argu'd altogether upon the unlawful Imposition of them, which they might as well have done by the same Argument in eight hundred of other indifferent and most innocent Matters. And it must be confess'd to be stranger still, that of the eight sinful things which they here enumerate, two of them, the 5th and the 6th, are positively false in the supposition of them: For by the Liturgy the Minister was not forced either to administer the Sacrament or the Absolution to unfit Persons.

This Disingenuity, chiefly owing to Mr. Baxter, had taken away all hopes of Accommodation; but yet they proceeded to dispute upon the Question, Whether it was Sinful to enjoin Ministers to deny the Communion to those who would not receive it Kneeling?
 Where a great many Arguments were warmly urg'd about the making things in their Nature Indifferent to be in their Use Necessary, by the Command of a lawful Authority. In this Dispute Mr. Baxter is represented as very perverse in denying every Proposition when made never so plain and evident. For this major Proposition being laid down by the Episcopal Divines, That Command which commanded only an Act in it self Lawful, is not Sinful. Mr. Baxter denied it, because it might include another Act or Circumstance

II. cumstance unlawful: Whereupon they chang'd it into this Proposition, That Command which commandeth an Act in itself lawful, and no other Act or Circumstance unlawful, is not sinful. This Mr. Baxter deny'd, because that may be accidentally a Sin which is not so in itself, and a lawful Command may be commanded under an unjust Penalty: Upon which they thus clear'd up the Proposition, That Command which commandeth an Act in itself lawful, and no other Act whereby any unjust Penalty is enjoy'd, nor any Circumstance whence Directly or per Accidens any Sin is consequent, which the Commander ought to provide against, is not sinful. Mr. Baxter persisted in his Denial, giving this Reason, "That the first Act commanded may be accidentally unlawful, and the Penalty unjust, tho' no other Act or Circumstance be such." The Opponents therefore once more advanc'd this Proposition of Compliance with him, That Command which commandeth an Act in itself lawful, and no other Act whereby any unjust Penalty is enjoy'd, nor any Circumstance whence directly or per Accidens any Sin is consequent, which the Commander ought to provide against, hath in it all things requisite to the Lawfulness of a Command, and particularly cannot be guilty of commanding an Act per Accidens unlawful, nor of commanding an Act under an unjust Penalty. Which Proposition he also deny'd, and refer'd only to his foregoing Reasons. This Behaviour of Mr. Baxter was afterward complain'd of in Print by Bishop Merley, in a Letter to a Friend for Vindication of himself from Mr. Baxter's Calumny, in which the Bishop observ'd, that such a way of Denial was not only frivolous and false, but it was destructive of all Authority Human and Divine, as not only denying all Power to the Church of making Canons and Constitutions for the Peace and Order of it, but also taking away all Legislative Power from the King and Parliament, and even from God himself. And so ended this Conference without Union or Accommodation: the Presbyterian Divines depending too much on the Encouragement they had received from the King and his chief Ministers; on the Assurances given them by some of the leading Members of the Parliament, and on the Anxieties of the People: In all which they were mistaken as much as in the Merit of their Cause.

1662.
Marriage.

The King's Match formerly intimated to his Parliament, was now coming on to a Consummation. The Princess Donna Catherine Infanta of Portugal was born Nov. 14. 1628. Daughter of Juan Duke of Braganza, restored to the Crown of Portugal after that Monarchy had been interrupted for near one hundred Years, and only Sister of Don Alph. VI. and Don Pedro successively Kings of Portugal. After the return of the Conde de Mello with the Articles of Treaty and Marriage to Lisbon, she was married by solemn Proxy in the Person of his Excellency the Earl of Sandwich, and under his Conduct she embark'd for England April 22. attended by a large Squadron of the Royal Navy, and was met at the Isle of Wight by the Duke of Berk Lord High Admiral. At Portsmouth she was received by the King, and privately there married by Dr. Gilbert Sheldon Bishop of London, as was commonly reported, to satisfy the People of England. But others knew better, that the Queen refused to be married by any but a Priest of her own Religion. And therefore the Earl of Bristol in the very next Year charged the Lord Chancellor Hyde, that he had brought the King and Queen together without any settled agreement in what manner the Rites of Marriage should be performed, whereby the Queen refusing to be married by a Protestant Priest, in case of her being with Child, either the Succession should be made uncertain for want of the due Rites of Matrimony, or else his Majesty to be exposed to a suspicion of having been married in his own Dominions by a Roman Priest. The same Earl farther charg'd the Lord Chancellor That being intrusted with the Treaty betwixt his Majesty and his Royal Consort the Queen, he had concluded it upon Articles Scandalous and Dangerous to the Protestant Religion. But to return to Portsmouth, from thence the Royal Pair remov'd to Hampton-Court, and on Aug. 22. to Whitehall in great Pomp and Magnificence, being received at Chelsey by the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of London. The Portion which the Queen brought with her, was two Millions of Croisadoes, about 40000*l.* Sterling, with the Inheritance of Tangier and the Isle of Bombay in the East-Indies; in consideration whereof a Jointure of thirty thousand Pounds a Year was settl'd on her. This Match was unhappy in nothing but the want of Royal Issue; and some People did afterward pretend, that it was a prospect of this want that induc'd the Lord Chancellor Hyde to provide this Match, so to content the Honour and Interest of his own Blood, in his only Daughter the Duchess of York. The suspicion of his Policy in this Affair, and of his Corruption in the Sale of Dunkirk, tho' groundless or at least uncertain and improbable, lost him many Friends, and gave his Enemies a great advantage. A late Author who seldom spared the Character of Courtiers, gives us this Opinion of these matters. "Here I take leave so well as I can, to vindicate the Memory of my Lord Chancellor Hyde from two Aspersions (as I conceive) cast upon him; one, that he was the Adviser of giving up Dunkirk to the French; the other, that he was the Procurer of the King's Marriage with the Infanta of Portugal. For the first, I was assured by a credible Person (tho' a Confident of my Lord Chancellor's) that he was so far from advising the King to give up Dunkirk to the French, that only he and my Lord Treasurer Southampton (upon whose Honour my Lord Chancellor relied more than on any other) of all the Council, enter'd their Protestations against it: The truth of this may be resolv'd by inspecting the Privy Council Books. It's true, I cannot prove Negatively, that my Lord Chancellor did not first propound the King's Marriage with the Infanta of Portugal, yet it seems to me reasonable he did not for these Reasons. I never heard of any Discourse of this Match, before the arrival of the Queen-Mother in England; or if any were, it's probable that Monsieur Courtin had this in his Instructions, as well as that of moving the King not to abandon Portugal; for both these tend to the same End, and the French King all his Reign after, sought to attain his Ends by Women as well as other ways. Nor can it be believ'd that the Prince of Portugal, now engaged in War against Spain, should pay the Queen's Portion, 40000*l.* I believe he did what he could, give up Tangier and Bombay to the King, which last place he leas'd to the East-India Company for 10*l.* per Ann. but the Money was paid by the French King.

tion of Chancellor Hyde.

On Monday May 19. the King prorogued the Parliament to Feb. 18. having pass'd several Bills, of which the most considerable was that for Uniformity, which was found necessary for the Peace and Safety of the State, as well as for the Good and Glory of the Church. It was undoubtedly the Faction and Sedition of the several Sects and Parties that work'd up the Wisdom of the Nation into this expedient Awe and Restraint upon them. The true Reason had been given by the Lord Chancellor in his Speech at the opening of this Parliament, when telling the Lords and Commons, they were the great Physicians of the Kingdom, he proceeded thus; "There are a sort of your Patients that I must recommend to your utmost Vigilance, utmost Severity, and to no part of your Lenity or Indulgence; such who are so far from valuing your Prescriptions, that they look not upon you as their Physicians but their Patients; such, who instead of repenting any thing that they have done amiss, repeat every Day the same Crimes, for the Indemnity whereof the Act of Oblivion was provided. These are the seditious Preachers, who cannot be contented to be dispens'd with for their full Obedience to some Laws establish'd, without reproaching and inveigh-

What good Christian can think, without horror, of these Ministers of the Gospel, who by their Function should be Messengers of Peace, and are in their Practice the only Trumpets of War, and Incendiaries towards Rebellion? How much more Christian was that Athenian Nun in Plutarch! and how shall the rise up in Judgment against these Men! who, when Alcibiades was condemned by the publick Justice of the State, and a Decree made that the Religious, the Priests and the Nuns, should revile and curse him, stoutly refused to perform that Office, saying, that she was professed Religious, to pray and to bless, not to curse and ban. And if the Person and the Place can improve and aggravate the Offence, as no doubt it doth both before God and Men; methinks the preaching Rebellion and Treason out of the Pulpit, should be as much worse than the advancing it in the Market, as poysoning a Man at the Communion would be worse than killing him at a Tavern. And it may be in the Catalogue of those Sins which the Zeal of some Men declares to be against the Holy Ghost, there may not be any one more reasonably thought to be such, than a Minister of Christ's turning Rebel against his Prince, which is a most notorious Apostacy from his Order; and his preaching Rebellion to the People as the Doctrine of Christ, adding Blasphemy and Pertinacy to his Apostacy, hath all the Marks by which good Men are taught to know and avoid that Sin against the Holy Ghost. If you do not provide for the thoro' quenching these Firebrands, King, Lords, and Commons, shall be their meanest Subjects, and the whole Kingdom kindled into one general Flame.

Chimney-Money. The other considerable Act that now pass'd was, for settling an annual Revenue of two Shillings upon every Fire-hearth in the Nation, upon the Crown for ever. This Duty, commonly called Chimney-money, was a Burden more uneasie to the People of England than any other seems to have been to their Forefathers; and the arbitrary way of Collecting it, made it the more insufferable. The King himself met with a blunt Rebuke for it, when thinking himself to be unknown in a Barge, and allowing himself and his Company to droll upon the Watermen that pass'd by, one of them knowing the King's Face, instead of other common Ribaldry, cried out only, Chimney-sweep, Chimney-sweep. A Burden that lay upon the Minds much heavier than upon the Fortunes of the People: and therefore the Remission of it by King William, was as wise a part of Popularity as could well be acted. The Name of Things is often more odious than the Nature of them: the same Weight may be tolerable when it is wrapt up in a softer Word.

Money given. This Parliament was indeed very ready to supply the King with a very large Revenue, and yet hardly equal to his Occasions: The Debts he had contracted in his Exile, the Returns he was to make to foreign Obligations, the Recompences that many Loyal Sufferers expected, the Gratuities to bold Men, the Rewards to faithful Servants, and, above all, the excessive Civilities to Women, made the King continually want even more than this bountiful Parliament could raise. We may here take in the Observation of a late Writer: Says he, "It looks as if Heaven took a more than ordinary Care of England, that we did not throw up our Liberties all at once, upon the Restoration of the King; for, tho' some were for bringing him back upon Terms, yet after he was once come, he possess'd so entirely the Hearts of his People, that they thought nothing was too much for them to grant, or for him to receive. Among other Designs to please him, there was one proposed at Court, to settle such a Revenue upon him by Parliament during Life, as should place him beyond the Necessity of asking more, except in the case of a War, or some such extraordinary Occasion. The Earl of Southampton, Lord High Treasurer, came heartily into it, out of a mere Principle of Honour and Affection to the King; but Chancellor Clarendon secretly oppos'd it. It happen'd, that they two had a private Conference about the Matter; and the Chancellor being earnest to bring the Treasurer to his Opinion, took the Freedom to tell him, that he was better acquainted with the King's Temper and Inclinations than Southampton could reasonably expect to be, having had long and intimate Acquaintance with his Majesty abroad; and, that he knew him so well, that if such a Revenue were once settled upon him for Life, neither of them two would be of any further use; and that they were not, in probability, to see many more Sessions of Parliament during that Reign. Southampton was brought over; but this Passage could not be kept so secret, but it came to King Charles's Ears: which, together with other things wherein Clarendon was misapprehended to him, prov'd the true Reason why he abandon'd him to his Enemies.

This Parliament farther shew'd their Loyalty and Affection to the King in all imaginable ways of advancing his Pretogative as well as his Revenue; as by this Declaration or Acknowledgment to be subscribed by every Dignitary, Parson, Vicar, Curate, and Schoolmaster, according to the Act of Uniformity: I A. B. do declare, That it is not lawfull, upon any Pretence whatsoever, to take Arms against the King; and, that I do abhor that traitorous Position of taking Arms by his Authority against his Person, or against those that are Commissioned by him. And farther, by asserting the sole Right of the Militia to be in the King, with such Reasons for it, as would not have been given in the brightest part of his Father's Reign.

And to shew their greater Zeal for the Safety of his Person, they fell again upon enquiring after Regicides and Traitors excepted from the Act of Oblivion. Several of them had fled beyond the Seas, among whom were Miles Corbet, Colonel Okey, and Colonel Barkstead; who, having rambled through many Parts of Germany, return'd in the beginning of this Spring to Delft in Holland, having appointed their Wives to meet them there, to understand the Condition of Affairs in England: These Letters being intercepted by the Vigilance of Sir George Downing, his Majesty's Resident at the Hague, they were all three taken, and by the States Order put on board the Blackmore Frigate, then lying at Hilber-Sluis, and so brought over and committed to the Tower; from whence, on Apr. 16. they were brought to the Kings-bench Bar, and there demanded what they could say for themselves, why they should not die according to Law, the Act of Attainder being read to them. They put the Court to a Proof that they were the same Persons express'd in that Act; which Proof being soon made by Witnesses and a Jury, they received their Sentence, and were executed on Saturday Apr. 19. at Tyburn, making a better End than most of their other Accomplices; for they acknowledg'd a quiet Submission to the King's Government, as of God, and exhorted others so to do; protesting they had no Malice to his late Majesty, and that they had mistaken the Parliament's Authority for good and sufficient in that unhappy Act. After this, the House of Commons address'd the King to bring Sir Henry Vane and John Lambert Esq; to their Trials; who, accordingly, were Arraign'd at the Kings-Bench Bar before Sir Robert Fojer Lord Chief Justice: the first, for imagining and compassing the Death of the late 1662. late King; the latter, for levying War against his pre- 14 Cur. II. sent Majesty. Sir Henry disown'd his being any way concern'd in the King's Death, but pleaded the Authority of the Long Parliament, and justified that Authority as superiour to any other: And as for his Behaviour in the other Governments in Being after the King's Death, he urged this Pretence of Law, that his present Majesty being at that time but King de jure, and not de facto, he could not be Indicted for Treason committed before his Restoration. He made a great deal of noise, and gave the Court a great deal of Trouble. After a due Sentence, at the Intercession of some of his Friends, who better deserved the King's Favour, he was Beheaded on Tower-Hill June 14. and on the very Scaffold run out into such Lectures of Treason and Enthusiasm, that they were forced to drown him with the Noise of Drums and Trumpets, and were going to take his Papers from him; but with great Indignation he tore them in pieces, and submitted to the Block in a very discomposed manner. Lambert, at his Trial, behav'd himself with very great respect and deference to the Court; as if he had depended on the Royal Mercy he received at the Bar, which was a Reprieve from Death, and a Confinement during Life in the Ile of Guernsey; where he continued above thirty Years a patient and discreet Prisoner.

 And the better to secure the King and Government against all Attempts and Designs of the old Instruments of Rebellion, a Proclamation was publish'd to command all Officers, under any of the late usurped Powers, that had been disbanded, to depart 20 Miles from the City and Suburbs of London, and not to return within eight Months, unless by express Licence obtained from the Privy Council.

King and Parl. differ only in the Case of Tolerat.

King's Declaration of Tenderness.

The only Matter wherein the King and his Parliament could seem to differ, was in that of Indulgence and Toleration to the Nonconformists; of whom, the Presbyterians had the best Title to be favourably considered: for, they had generally wish'd for the King's Return, and were eminently instrumental in it; and most of their Divines had appeared in a good Temper for Moderation and Union, declaring for a Regulated Episcopacy, and for a Reformed Liturgy. For which Reasons, the King had been very kind and gracious to them, and had given them great hopes, that he would either not pass the Bill for Uniformity, or get them a Clause of Exception in it: but finding themselves disappointed in both these Hopes, and agreeing generally to be ejected at the Feast of St. Bartholomew; they soon after applied themselves to the King and Council for a Dispensation from the Penalties of that Act.
 The Council shew'd their Averseness to a dispensing Power in general, and especially to this particular Exercise of it: But the King betray'd a great Inclination for it, and seem'd to labour under a Promise that he would do it. And therefore to make it the less Offence and Surprize, he publish'd a smooth Declaration on the 26th of December, to signifye to all his loving Subjects, "That he would be constant in the Observation of the Act of Indempnity;
 "that he would by no Means introduce the way of "Governing by a Military Power; that he should "desire the House of Commons to prepare some "Laws against the Growth and Progress of Pope"ry; that he would likewise recommend to the "Commons, the preparing of Laws against Licen-"tiousness and Impiety; and also to provide sum-
 "ptuary Laws, and Laws for the Advance of Trade;
 "and, that he himself would endeavour to retrench
 "the Charge and Expences in his own Family; and "even that he resolv'd to maintain the Act of Uni"formity; only he should dispense with some Mat"ters in it. And in his Speech at the next Session, he concluded with the gentle Intimation of some Indulgence which he had granted to Dissenters; yet renouncing, in a manner, his Dispensing Power, and saying sottly, That if the Dissenters would demean themselves peaceably and modestly, he could heartily wish

1662. 14 Cur. II.
 he had such a Power of Indulgence to use upon occasion.
 The House of Commons, who were justly apprehensive of the Dangers of a Toleration, because the Papists as well as all other Sectaries, would find their Account in it; appointed Wednesday the 25th of Fe- bruary, to take into Consideration his Majesty's gracious Declaration of the 26th of December last, and his Speech made at the opening this Session: At which time they unanimously resolv'd, That the Thanks of the House should be returned to the King's Majesty for all the other Parts of his Declaration; but as to the point of Indulgence, they resolv'd, That it be presented to the King's Majesty, as the humble Advice of this House, that no Indulgence be granted to the Dissenters from the Act of Uniformity. And they ordered, that a Committee be appointed to collect and bring in the Reasons of this House for this Vote upon the present Debate. On the next Day, Feb. 26.
 a Report was made to the House from the Committee by Sir Heneage Finch, his Majesty's Solicitor General; and after some Amendments and Additions, the Reasons and Address were agreed to, and presented to his Majesty in the Banqueting-House at Whitehall on Saturday Feb. 17. where Mr. Speaker deliver'd himself in manner following.

The Parl. against Indulgence.

Most Gracious Sovereign,

THE Knights, Citizens, and Burgeses of the Commons House of Parliament, did with great Joy receive your Majesty's most gracious Speech at the opening this Session of Parliament: And being thereby invited to consider of your Declaration of the 26th of December last, they have with all Sobriety, Duty, and Affection, examined the Grounds thereof; and do by me present unto your Majesty their most hearty Thanks for the same, and humble Advice thereupon. Both which, I do beseech your Majesty, that you will vouchsafe me to deliver in their own Words.

Speaker's
Speech.

May it please your most Excellent Majesty,

WE your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal Subjects, the Knights, Citizens, and Burgesses of the House of Commons in Parliament assembled, having with all Fidelity and Obedience considered of the several Matters comprised in your Majesty's late gracious Declaration of the 26th of December last, and your most gracious Speech at the Beginning of this present Session:
 Do, in the first place for Ourselves, and in the Names of all the Commons of England, render to your sacred Majesty the Tribute of our most hearty Thanks for that infinite Grace and Goodness wherewith your Majesty hath been pleased to publish your Royal Intentions of adhering to your Act of Indempnity and Oblivion, by a constant and religious Observance of it. And our Hearts are further enlarged in these Returns of Thanksgivings, when we consider your Majesty's most Princely and Heroick Professions of relying upon the Affections of your People, and abhorring all sort of Military and Arbitrary Rule. But above all, we can never enough remember, to the Honour of your Majesty's Piety, and our own unspeakable Comfort, those solemn and most endearing Invitations of us your Majesty's Subjects, to prepare Laws to be presented to your Majesty, against the Growth and Increase of Popery; and withall, to provide more Laws against Licenti-ousness and Impiety; at the same time declaring your own Resolutions for maintaining the Act of Uniformity. And it becomes us alway to acknowledge and admire your Majesty's Wisdom in this your Declaration, whereby your Majesty is pleased to resolve, not only by Sumptuary Laws, but by your own Royal Example of Frugality, to restrain that Excess in Men's Expences which is grown so general and so exorbitant; and to direct our Endeavours to find out fit and proper Laws for Advancement of Trade and Commerce.

After

1662.
14 Car. II.

“ After all this, we most humbly beseech your Majesty to believe, that it is with extrem unwillingness and reluctance of Heart, that we are brought to differ from any thing which your Majesty hath thought fit to propose; and tho’ we do no way doubt, but that the unreasonable Distempers of Men’s Spirits, and the many Mutinies and Conspiracies which were carried on, during the late Intervals of Parliament, did reasonably incline your Majesty to endeavour by your Declaration to give some allay to those ill Humours, till the Parliament assembled; and the hopes of Indulgence, if the Parliament should consent to it; especially seeing the Pretenders to this Indulgence did seem to make some Titles to it, by virtue of your Majesty’s Declaration from Breda. Nevertheless, we your Majesty’s most Dutiful and Loyal Subjects, who are now returned to serve in Parliament, from those several Parts and Places of your Kingdom, for which we were chosen, do humbly offer to your Majesty’s great Wisdom, that it is in no sort Advisable that there be any Indulgence to such Persons, who presume to dissent from the Act of Uniformity, and the Religion established:

“ For these Reasons,

“ We have consider’d the Nature of your Majesty’s Declaration from Breda, and are humbly of Opinion, that your Majesty ought not to be press’d with it any farther.

“ Because it is not a Promise in it self, but only a Gracious Declaration of your Majesty’s Intentions, to do what in you lay, and what a Parliament should advise your Majesty to do; and no such Advice was ever given, or thought fit to be offer’d; nor could it be otherwise understood, because there were Laws of Uniformity then in being, which could not be dispens’d with but by Act of Parliament.

“ That they who do pretend a Right to that suppos’d Promise, put the Right into the Hands of the Representatives, whom they chose to serve for them in this Parliament, who have pass’d, and your Majesty consented to, the Act of Uniformity. If any shall presume to say, that a Right to the Benefit of this Declaration doth still remain after this Act pass’d, “ It tends to dissolve the very Bonds of Government, and to suppose a Disability in your Majesty and the Houses of Parliament, to make a Law contrary to any part of your Majesty’s Declaration, though both Houses should advise your Majesty to it.

“ We have also consider’d the Nature of the Indulgence propos’d, with reference to those Consequences which must necessarily attend it.

“ It will establish Schism by a Law, and make the whole Government of the Church precarious, and the Censures of it of no Moment or Consideration at all.

“ It will no way become the Gravity or Wisdom of a Parliament, to pass a Law at one Session for Uniformity, and at the next Session (the Reasons of Uniformity continuing still the same) to pass another Law to frustrate or weaken the Execution of it.

“ It will expose your Majesty to the restless Importunity of every Sect or Opinion, and of every single Person also, who shall presume to dissent from the Church of England.

“ It will be a cause of encreasing Sects and Sectaries, whose Numbers will weaken the true Protestant Profession so far, that it will least be difficult for it to defend itself against them: And which is yet further considerable, those Numbers, which by being troublesome to the Government, find they can arrive to an Indulgence, will, as their Numbers encrease be yet more troublesome, that so at length they may arrive to a general Toleration, which your Majesty hath declared “ against; and in time some prevalent Sect will at last contend for an Establishment, which, for ought can be foreseen, may end in Popery. 1662. 14 Car. II.

“ It is a thing altogether without Precedent, and will take away all means of convicting Recusants, and be inconsistent with the Method and Proceedings of the Laws of England.

“ Lastly, it is humbly conceiv’d, that the Indulgence propos’d will be so far from tending to the Peace of the Kingdom, that it is rather likely to occasion great Disturbance. And on the contrary, that the asserting of the Laws and the Religion established, according to the Act of Uniformity, is the most probable means to produce a settled Peace and Obedience throughout your Kingdom: Because the variety of Professions in Religion, when openly indulg’d, doth directly distinguish Men into Parties, and withal gives them opportunity to count their Numbers; which, considering the Animosities, that out of a Religious Pride will be kept on foot by the several Factions, doth tend directly and inevitably to open Disturbance.

“ Nor can your Majesty have any security, that the Doctrin or Worship of the several Factions, which are all govern’d by a several Rule, shall be consistent with the Peace of your Kingdom.

“ And if any Persons shall presume to disturb the Peace of the Kingdom, we do in all Humility declare, that we will for ever, and in all occasions, be ready with our utmost Endeavour and Assistance, to adhere to and serve your Majesty, according to our bounden Duty and Allegiance.

The Speaker’s Report of the Substance of his Majesty’s Gracious Answer.

That his Majesty gave them hearty Thanks for their many Thanks; that never any King was so happy in a House of Commons as he in this; that the Paper and Reasons were long, and therefore he would take time to consider of them, and send them a Message; that they could never differ but in Judgment, and that must be when he did not rightly express himself, or they did not rightly understand him; but their Interest was so far link’d together, that they could never disagree.

The King had by this Proposal of Indulgence satisfied the more sober Dissenters, that he had a tender Regard for their Ease and Indempnity: And they were now made sensible, that they had less Interest in a Parliament than they had in the Court. It was indeed a great Unhappiness that they found so much Countenance from the King and some of his prime Ministers; for this did but help to harden them in their Prejudices against the Church, and made them less and less inclinable to Conformity and Union; because they flatter’d themselves with the continual Hopes of Liberty and Toleration. Whereas if they had lost all dependence on a Court Interest, and had found the King and his Ministry as intent upon the strict observance of the Act of Uniformity, as the Commons of England now were, most of the Dissenters no doubt would at this Juncture have conform’d, and brought in a great Strength and Glory to this Church and Nation.

What Motives dispos’d his Majesty to be so favourable to them, and to encourage their contending with the Laws of the Land, is not so easie to determine. Whether the innate Goodness and Clemency of his Majesty’s own Royal Disposition, that naturally hated all the appearance of Severity and Rigour? Or whether a tender Regard of making good the Hopes and Promises, which before, and at the time of his Restauration, he had been forc’d to oblige them with? Or whether a generous Sense of Honour and Gratitude to the Presbyterian Party, who had most of them contributed very much to his easie and happy Return? Or whether a real Judgment

Dissenters greatest Interest in the King and Court.

Why the King so indulgent to Dissenters.

1662. ment and Perswasion, that a greater Liberty of Con-14 Car. II. science than the established Laws allow'd, was the fundamental Right of Christian People? Or whether a Political Opinion, that pressing a Conformity by the execution of Penal Laws, would alienate the Hearts of his People, and endanger the beloved Peace and Quiet of his Reign? Or whether above or beyond any of these Motives, the secret and referved Reason was, under the cover of an Indulgence to Protestant Dissenters, to give the better Protection and Advantages to Popery? To resolve which of these Causes had the greatest Influence upon the Mind of the King, is, I say, no easie and perhaps no decent matter.

Interest and Polt-ev of the Papists.

But by the Sequel of Affairs, it seems very probable that the last Reason had not the least weight with it. For the Papists in this Reign had alway a considerable Interest at Court, and used all possible Intrigues in the management of it: And it was plausible enough for them to promote an Indulgence toward Protestant Dissenters, to bring on by degrees a general Toleration, that could not fail to give Breath and Life to them and their Religion. There is some Evidence of this Artfulness, in what was intended to be a part of the King's Declaration, as the Account is thus given by the Dissenters; "As the " Lord Chancellor read over the Declaration, each " Party was to speak to what they disliked, and the " King to determine how it should be as he lik'd " himself. There were various Altercations about " Prelacy and Re-ordination, and the Particulars of " the Declaration; and when the whole was perus'd,
 " the Lord Chancellor drew out another Paper inti" mating that the King had also been petition'd by " the Independents and Anabaptists for Liberty, " and therefore he read an additional part of the " Declaration to this purpose, that *others also be per" mitted to meet for Religious Worship, so be it they do
 " it not to the disturbance of the Peace; and that no " Justice of Peace or Officer disturb them.* This being " design'd to secure Liberty to the Papists, there " was a general Silence upon the reading it. The " Bishops thought it a nice Point, and therefore " said nothing: The Presbyterians were afraid to " speak against it, least all the Sects and Parties " should lock upon them as the Causes of their " Sufferings; and they should be represented as " grossly Partial in desiring Liberty themselves,
 " while they would have no others have it with " them. At length Mr. Baxter fearing their Silence " might be misinterpreted, spake to this purpose, " *That Dr. Gunning a little before speaking against " Sects, had nam'd the Papists and Socinians, that for " their parts, they did not desire Favour to themselves " alone, and rigorous Severity against none; but as they " humbly thank'd his Majesty for his declared Indulgence
 " to themselves, so they distinguish'd the Tolerable Par" ty from the Intolerable: For the former they humbly
 " crav'd just Lenity and Favour; but for the latter,
 " such as the two sorts mention'd, for their parts they " could not make their Toleration their Request. To " which his Majesty said, that there were Laws suffi" cient against the Papists: And Mr. Baxter reply'd, " that they understood the Question to be, Whether those " Laws should be executed or not?* Upon which the " Matter was dropp'd.

Success of our Fleet.

Among the other Occurrences of this Year it may be remember'd, that the Vice-Admiral Sir John Lamson leaving the Earl of Sandwich to Convoy the Queen from Lisbon, sail'd with a Squadron into the Streights, and there struck such a terror into all the Nests of Pirates, Tunis, Tripoli and Algiers, that he made them all stoop to the Offer of a Treaty, and to the Acceptance of former Articles.
 Upon the Conclusion of this Peace, the Archbi-shops, Bishops, Deans and Chapters, to their eternal Praise, contributed a great Sum of Money, and sent their Collection by two of their own Number, the Archdeacon of Bath, and a Prebendary, to Ar-giers, with which they redeem'd above one hundred and fifty Christian Slaves, English, Scotch and Irish, 1662.

 from the Miseries of a Turkish Captivity. We had 14 Car. II.
 the better Advantage of keeping the African Parts in awe by our possession of Tangier; to which the Lord Rutheford late Governour of Dunkirk, newly made Possession Earl of Tiviot, was sent to be Governour in the room of the Earl of Peterborough; and the King made it of Tangier. now a free Port, and granted it all the Privileges of a Merchant-City, being seated very commodiously for Strength and Safety to guard our Ships, and to command those Seas: But the vast Expence in Fortifying and Defending, and the Necessity at last of Demolishing that Place, made it more a Burden than a Portion to the Crown of England.

The Town and Port of Dunkirk might have been Dunkirk another great Advantage to our Trade and to our sold to the Power in the Channel; and under this prospect there French. had been a Resolution in the House of Commons to prepare an Act to annex it for ever to the Imperial Crown of these Realms; but this not being done, the King with Advice of his Privy-Council, for the Sum of five hundred thousand Pounds deliver'd it up to the French King, and it was ingloriously put into his Possession under the Government of the Count d'Es- brades, and his Deputy the Marquis of Montpear; the English Governour with two Companies guarding the Gates at their Entrance, and delivering the Keys of them. This Action was very ill resent'd by the Body of the People of England, who were apt to think that the Sale of such an Important Place (after the Parliaments giving and applying Money for the maintenance of it) was the deplorable Sign of a weak and mercenary Court.

The Lord Clarendon, because the prime Minister, The O- was to bear the Odium of it; and therefore his new odium cast stately House, built opposite to the Front of the Pa- on the Ld lace of St. James, was commonly in Repoach call'd Chancel- Dunkirk-House: Nay, and in the very next Year, the lor.
 E. of Brissol put it into the Articles of High-Treason and other Misdemeanours exhibited against him in the House of Lords, That the said Earl of Clarendon had told his Majesty, that it was better to sell Dunkirk than to be at the Mercy of the Parliament for want of Money, or Words to that effect. And that he had wickedly and maliciously, contrary to his Duty of Counsellor, and to a known Law made last Sessions, by which Money was given and particularly applied for the maintaining of Dunkirk, advis'd and effected the Sale of the same to the French King. And in the Articles of Impeachment prefer'd by the Commons in 1667. this was one, That he advis'd and effected the Sale of Dunkirk to the French King, being part of his Majesty's Dominions, together with the Ammunitions, Artillery and all sorts of Stores there, and for no greater Value than the said Ammunitions, Artillery and Stores were worth.

William Lenthall, Esq; Speaker of the Long-Parlia- Death and ment, having by the Mercy of the King and Parli- Repen- ament obtained an Indemnity for his Life, died this tance of Year on Sept. 3. and left this Memorial of his Peni- Mr. Spea- tence, or as his Enemies would represent it, of his ker Len- low and timorous Spirit, as extracted out of a Let- thal.
 ter written from Oxford, by the Person who visited him in his last Sickness, Dr. Ralph Brideoak.

"When I came to his Presence, he told me, he " was very glad to see me; for he had two great Works
 " to do, and I must assist him in both: to fit his Body for " the Earth, and his Soul for Heaven; to which pur" pose he desired me to pray with him. I told him
 " the Church had appointed an Office at the Visita" tion of the Sick, and I must use that: He said,
 " Yes, he chiefly desired the Prayers of the Church;
 " wherein he join'd with great Fervency and De" votion. After Prayers he desired Absolution: I " told him I was very ready and willing to pro" nounce it; but he must first come to a Christi" an Confession and Contrition for the Sins and " Failings of his Life: Hell, Sir, said he, then in- " struct me to my Duty. I desired him to examine " his Life by the Ten Commandments, and wherein " he found his Failings, to fly to the Gospel for " Mercy.

1662. " Mercy. Then I read the Ten Commandments in 14 Car. II. " order to him, mentioning the principal Sins a" gainst each Commandment. To pass by other " things (under the Seal of this Office) when I " came to the fifth Commandment, and remember" ed him that Disobedience, Rebellion and Schism " were the great Sins against this Commandment.
 " Yes, Sir, said he, there's my trouble, my Disobe- " dience, not against my natural Parents but against " the Pater Patriæ, our deceased Sovereign. I con- " fess with Saul, I held their Cloaths whilst they mur- " dered him; but herein I was not so criminal as Saul " was; for, God, thou knowest! I never consented to " his Death; I ever pray'd and endeavour'd what I " could against it; but I did too much, Almighty God
 " forgive me! I then desired him to deal freely and " openly in that Business, and if he knew any of " those Villains that plotted or contriv'd that hor" rid Murder, who were not yet detected, now to " discover them. He answer'd, He was a stranger
 " to that Business; his Soul never enter'd into that Se- " cret: but what concerns myself, said he, I will con- " fess freely. Three things are especially laid to my " Charge, wherein indeed I am too guilty: That I went " from the Parliament to the Army; that I propos'd
 " the bloody Question for trying the King; and that I " sat after the King's Death. To the first I may give " this Answer, That Cromwel and his Agents deceiv'd
 " a wiser Man than myself, that EXCELLENT
 " KING, and then might well deceive me also, and so
 " they did. I knew the Presbyterians would never re- " store the King to his just Rights, those Men swore
 " they would. For the second no excuse can be made,
 " but I have the King's Pardon, and I hope Almighty
 " God will shew me his Mercy also: Yet, Sir, said he,
 " even then, when I put the Question, I hop'd the very
 " putting the Question would have cleared him; because " I believ'd four for one were against it, but they de-
 " ceiv'd me also. To the Third I make this candid con- " fession, that it was my own Baseness and Cowardice
 " and unworthy Fear, to submit my Life and Estate to
 " the Mercy of those Men that murder'd the King,
 " that hurried me on against my own Conscience to act
 " with them; yet then I thought also I might do some " Good, and hinder some Ill. Something I did for the " Church and Universities, something for the King, when " I broke the Oath of Abjuration, as Sir O. B. and your " self know; something also too for his Return, as my Ld G.
 " Mr. J. F. and yourself know. But the Ill I did over weigh'd
 " the little Good I would have done; God forgive me for
 " this also. After this I remember'd him, that the Fa- " thers of the Church also had been barbarously mur- " dered and ruin'd, and ask'd whether he had any " Hand, or gave any Consent therein? He an- " swer'd, None, for he always did believe that was the " Primitive and best Government of the Church, and " said, he died a dutiful Son of the Church of Eng- " land, as it was established before these Times; for he " had not yet seen the Alteration of the Liturgy. Af- " ter this Office, wherein indeed he shewed himself
 " a very hearty Penitent, he again desired the Ab-
 " solution of the Church, which I then pronounced,
 " and which he received with much Content and " Satisfaction: For, says he, now, now indeed do I " find the Joy and Benefit of that Office which Christ
 " hath left in his Church. Then praying for the King,
 " that he might long and happily Reign over us,
 " and for the Peace of the Church, he again desi- " red Prayers. The next Day he received the Sacra- " ment; and after that work I desired him to ex- " press himself to Dr. Dickenson (a learned Physi- " cian, Fellow of Merton College, who received the " Sacrament with him) concerning the King's " Death, because he had only done it to me in " Confession, which he did to the same Effect as he " had to me. The rest of his Time was spent in De- " votion and Penitential Meditations to his very last.
 " The Church of England was now fully restor'd " and happily established by the Act of Uniformi" ty, concerning which there were these Proceedings in the two Houses. The Commons, who had brought in the Bill and agreed to it with all imaginable Zeal and Affection, had sent it up to the Lords, and seem'd impatient of any delay in the dispatch of it; and therefore on Tuesday Jan. 12. they or-der'd that a Message be sent to the Lords, to desire them to give dispatch to the Bill of Uniformity. This occasioned a Conference between the two Houses, and on Thursday April 10. a Report was made in the House of Commons from the Conference had with the Lords upon the Bill for Uniformity, that the reason of the Delay of the said Bill was, " That the Book of Common-Prayer " had, by Reference from his Majesty, been under " the Consideration of the Convocation, who had " made some Alterations and Additions thereunto;

 " and that the Lords had perus'd the same, as al" so the Bill sent from the House, and had re" turned the same, together with the Book of Com" mon-Prayer, as the same is amended, and by " them agreed to, and some Amendments and Pro-" visoes to the Bill. On Saturday April 12. the Commons read the Amendments and Additions sent from the Lords to the Bill of Uniformity; and on Monday April 14. they read the Amendments to the Book of Common-Prayer. On Wednesday April 16.
 the House of Commons resumed the Debate upon the Amendments sent down from the Lords to the Bill of Uniformity. And the Question being propounded, " Whether Debate shall be admitted to the A" mendments made by the Convocation in the Book
 " of Common-Prayer, and sent down by the Lords " to this House, it pass'd in the Negative. And the Question being put, " Whether the Amend" ments made by the Convocation, and sent down
 " by the Lords to this House, might, by the Order " of this House, have been debated? It pass'd in the Affirmative. Then the Commons for several Days resumed the Debate upon the Amendments sent from the Lords to the Bill of Uniformity, and on Monday April 28. a Proviso for being Uncover'd, and for using Reverend Gestures at the time of Divine Service was twice read; but the matter being held proper for Convocation, it was order'd, that such Persons as shall be employ'd to manage the Conference with the Lords, do intimate the Desire of this House, that it be recommended to the Convocation to take Order for reverend and uniform Gestures and Demeanours to be enjoined at the time of Divine Service and Preaching.
 The Proceedings in Convocation upon this great business of Uniformity, were to this effect: On Sat- urday Apr. 12. the Bishop of London as President, and the Bishops, considered of a Subscription to be made to the three Articles compris'd in the 36th Canon, and referred to a Committee of Bishops the drawing up a Form and Manner of Subscription.
 And they treated farther of fit Persons to be employed for Correcting the Impression of the Book of Common Prayer, and of a fit Method for procuring printed Copies of the said Book to be dispers'd to all Country Churches. On Monday April 21. the President and Bishops conferred about Printing the Book of Common Prayer before the 24th of Aug- ust next; and of receiving Directions from the Lord Chanceller of England, how the Word Children instead of Persons (not baptized) might be insert'd in the said Book by the House of Commons. Then the Bishop of London, with Consent of his Brethren, decreed and ordain'd, that the Bishop of Durham should be joined to the Commissioners for Review and Alteration of the Liturgy appointed by Letters Patents dated March 25. last past, in the room of the Bishop of Chester deceased; and further decreed, that no Ordination of Clerks should be made by any Bishop, but only within the four Ember Weeks solemnly appointed for that holy Office; and, that no Bishop should ordain beyond the Bounds of his own Diocese, but by Letters demissory first obtained from his Grace the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury.

1662. On Saturday Apr. 26. the three Forms of Prayer, for 14 Car. II. the 5th of November, the 30th of January, and the 29th of May, were brought into the Upper House, and publicly read, and unanimously approv'd. And the Care of Translating the Book of Common Prayer into the Latin Tongue, was committed to Dr. John Earle Dean of Westminster, and Dr. John Pearson. On Saturday May 10. the President and Bishops held a Debate upon the Direction receiv'd from the House of Commons about Reverend and Uniform Gestures and Demeanours at the time of Divine Service; and the Majority agreed, that the Constitution in the Book of Canons, made in 1603. intitl'd, Of solemn Reverence to be used in time of Divine Service, should be presented to the House of Commons, after Consideration first had in the Lower House of Convocation. On Monday May 12. the said Canon or Constitution was brought up to the Bishops from the Lower Clergy with some Alterations and Amendments, which were agreed to by their Lordships. And, without farther Proceeding, on Tuesday May 20. the Convocation, by vertue of the King's Writ, was Prorogued to Thursday Febr. 19. by the Bp. of Bath and Wells, as Commissary of the Bp. of London.

Substance of the Act of Unformity.

In the mean time the Act of Uniformity ordain'd, "That whereas in the first Year of the late Queen Elizabeth, there was one uniform Order of Common Service and Prayer, and of the Administration of Sacraments, and other Rites and Ceremonies in the Church of England, agreeable to the Word of God and Usage of the Primitive Church — very comfortable to all good People, desirous to live in Christian Conversation, and most profitable to the Estate of this Realm, upon which the Mercy, Favour, and Blessing of Almighty God, in no wise so readily and plentifully praised as by Common Prayers — Yet notwithstanding, a great number of People in divers Parts of this Realm, following their own Sensuality, and living without Knowledge and due Fear of God, do wilfully and schismatically abstain, and refuse to come to their Parish Churches — And whereas by the great and scandalous Neglect of Ministers in the said Order or Liturgy, great Mischiefs and Inconveniences, during the Times of the late unhappy Troubles, have arisen and grown; and many People have been led into Factions and Schisms, to the great Decay and Scandal of the Reformed Religion of the Church of England, and to the hazard of many Souls: For prevention whereof in time to come, for settling the Peace of the Church, and for allaying the present Distempers — the King's Majesty had granted his Commission to several Bishops and other Divines to review the Book of Common Prayer, and to prepare such Alterations and Additions, as they thought fit to offer. And afterwards the Convocations of both Provinces, by his Majesty called and assembled, and by him authorized and required to review the said Book of Common Prayer, and the Book of the Form and Manner of the making and consecrating of Bishops, Priests, and Deacons — upon full and mature Deliberation they had accordingly reviewed the said Books, and had made some Alterations which they thought fit to be inserted to the same, and some Additional Prayers, and had presented the same unto his Majesty in Writing, in one Book, intitl'd The Book of Common Prayer, and Administration of the Sacraments, &c. All which his Majesty having duly considered, had fully approved and allowed the same, and recommended to this present Parliament, to be appointed to be used under such Sanctions and Penalties as the Houses of Parliament shall think fit. Now in regard that nothing conduceth more to the settling the Peace of this Nation (which is desired of all good Men) nor to the Honour of our Religion and the Propagation thereof, than an universal Agreement in the publick Worship of God — It

1662. "was enacted, That all and singular Ministers shall 14 Car. II. "be bound to say and use the Morning Prayer, Evening Prayer, and all other Common Prayer, in such Order and Form as is mention'd in the said Book. And that every Parson, Vicar, or other Minister, shall before the Feast of St. Bartholomew 1662, after reading the said Book, declare his unfeign'd Assent and Consent to the Use of all Things in the said Book, contained or prescribed in these Words.

"I A. B. do here declare my unfeign'd Assent and Consent to all and every thing contained and prescribed in and by the Book intitl'd The Book of Common Prayer and Administration of the Sacraments and other Rites and Ceremonies of the Church of England, together with the Psalter or Psalms of David, pointed as they are to be sung or said in Churches, and the Form or Manner of Making, Ordaining, and Consecrating of Bishops, Priests, and Deacons.

"And all Persons neglecting or refusing, shall ipso facto be deprived of all Spiritual Promotions. And every Person hereafter to be presented or collated to any Benefice or Promotion, shall within two Months after Possession, upon some Lord's Day, read Morning and Evening Prayers, and declare the like Assent and Consent under like pain of Deprivation. And where the proper Incumbent of any Benefice doth reside on his Living, and keep a Curate, the Incumbent himself in Person shall once at least in every Month, openly and publickly read the Common Prayers and Service, upon pain to forfeit the Sum of five Pounds to the Use of the Poor of the Parish. And every Minister and Schoolmaster shall before the said Feast of St. Bartholomew 1662, or at or before their respective Admission, Subscribe the Declaration or Acknowledgment following.

"I A. B. do declare, That it is not lawful, upon any Pretence whatsoever, to take Arms against the King; and that I do abhor that traitorous Position of taking Arms by his Authority against his Person, or against those that are commission'd by him; and, that I will conform to the Liturgy of the Church of England, as it is now by Law established. And I do declare, that I do hold, there lies no Obligation upon me or on any other Person, from the Oath commonly called The Solemn League and Covenant, to endeavour any Change or Alteration of Government either in Church or State, and that the same was in itself an unlawful Oath, and impos'd upon the Subjects of this Realm against the known Laws and Liberties of this Kingdom.

"The said Declaration and Acknowledgment to be Subscribed by every Dignitary and Minister before the Archbishop, Bishop, or Ordinary of the Diocese, upon pain of Deprivation; and by every Schoolmaster and Tutor, under pain of three Months Imprisonment for the first Offence, and for every other Offence three Months Imprisonment and the Forfeiture of five Pounds to his Majesty. Provided, that from the 25th of March 1682. there shall be omitted in the Declaration these Words: And I do declare, that I do hold there lies no Obligation on me or any other Person from the Oath commonly called The Solemn League and Covenant, to endeavour any Change or Alteration of Government either in Church or State, and that the same was in itself an unlawful Oath, and impos'd upon the Subjects of this Realm against the known Laws and Liberties of this Kingdom.

"No Person shall be capable of any Benefice, or presume to consecrate and administer the Holy Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, before he be ordained Priest by Episcopal Ordination; upon pain to forfeit for every Offence the Sum of one hundred Pounds.

14 Car. II.

“ No Form or Order of Common Prayer to be used in any Church, Chapel, or other publick Place of College or Hall, other than what is here prescribed and appointed. Provided, that it may be lawful to use the said Form in Latin within all Colleges and Halls, in the Colleges of Westminster, Winchester, and Eaton, and in the Convocations of the Clergies of either Province.

“ That none be received as a Lecturer, or permitted to Preach, or read any Sermon or Lecture in any Church or Chapel, unless approved and licensed by the Archbishop or Bishop, and shall read the XXXIX Articles of Religion with a Declaration of unfeigned Assent to the same; and the first time he preacheth any Lecture or Sermon, shall openly read the Common Prayer and declare his Assent to it, and shall upon the first Lecture-day of every Month afterwards, before Lecture or Sermon, read the Common Prayers and Service, under pain of being disabled to preach; and if he preach while so disabled, for every Offence to suffer three Months Imprisonment. And at all other times of any Sermon or Lecture, the Common Prayer shall be read, and the Lecturer then to preach shall be present at the Reading of it.

“ The severall Laws and Statutes formerly made for Uniformity of Prayer, shall be in Force and Strength for establishing and confirming the present Book of Common Prayer, and be applied for punishing all Offences contrary to the said Laws, with relation to the said Book and no other.

“ Provided the Names of King, Queen, or Royal Progeny, may be alter'd from time to time according to the Direction of lawful Authority.

“ A true printed Copy of the said Book to be gotten in every Parish Church, Chapel, College, and Hall, at the Cost and Charge of the Parishioners or Society, before the Feast of St. Bartholomew, 1662. upon pain of forfeiting three Pounds by the Month.

“ The said Book to be translated into the British or Welsh Tongue by the Care of the Bishops of Hereford, St. Davids, Aisaph, Bangor, and Landaff, and so to be imprinted and used in every Church where the Welsh is commonly spoken or used.

“ That all Deans and Chapters shall at their proper Costs and Charges, before the 25th of Decemb. 1662. obtain a true and perfect Copy of this Act, and of the said Book annexed hereunto, to keep and preserve in Safety for ever. And true and perfect Copies to be delivered into the respective Courts at Westminster, and into the Tower of London, to be there kept and preserved for ever.

“ Provided, this Act shall not extend to the King's Professor of the Law within the University of Oxford for the Prebend of Sbipton within the Church of Strun, united and annexed to the Place of Professor by the late King James.

The World has reason to admire not only the Wisdom of this Act, but even the Moderation of it, as being effectually made for Ministerial Conformity alone; and leaving the People unable to complain of any Imposition. It would certainly have had the desired and most happy Effect of Unity and Peace, if the Government had been in Earnest with the Execution of it; if the Ministers inclined to Separation had not been encouraged in it by the Connivence of the Court, and the promis'd Indulgence of the King. The first open Violation of the Act was committed by Mr. Calamy late Minister of Aldermansbury, who being present at Church on Dec. 28. this Year, upon the Default of a Preacher there expected, to prevent a Disappointment, and answer the Importunity of the People, he went up into the Pulpit and preached; and had he taken a practical Subject, and kept to it, no notice would have been taken of that one occasional Necessity as it were of preaching: But it look'd like a Plot or formed Design, that he chose a Subject of old Eli's Concern for the Ark of God, and so applied the Danger of the Church and Religion to the present Times; that he could not be thought less than a seditious, as well as a disabled, Preacher. And therefore, by warrant of the Lord Mayor, he was committed to Newgate, where he lay but few Days, before he was discharged by his Majesty's express Order, without the due manner of a legal Discharge: Which brought a Contempt upon the Law and Church establish'd, and gave such a just Offence to the House of Commons, that they made some Enquiry into the Reasons of it; and some Excuse was made, that the Release of Mr. Calamy from his Imprisonment was not owing to the sole Command of the King, but to a Deficiency in the Act of Parliament, that had not fully provided for his longer Restraint. Upon which we find this Entry in the Journal of the House of Commons: Die Jovis, Febr. 19. 1662. Upon Complaint made to this House, that Mr. Calamy being committed to Prison upon Breach of the Act of Uniformity, was discharged upon pretence of some Defect in the Act: Resolved, That it be referred to a Committee, to look into the Act of Uniformity as to the Matter in question, and to see whether the same be defective, and wherein. But what Proceedings there were in this Case, it does not appear. No doubt, it made the Commons sensible, that the King was too much inclined to dispense with the Act of Uniformity, or at least to protect and indemnify the Breakers of it: And this reasonable Suspicion made them the more unanimous to appoint a Committee immediately after, to bring in the Reasons of the House for their Advice to the King against a Toleration, with an Address to his Majesty.

The next Ecclesiastical Affair of greatest importance, was the providing a better Maintenance for the conformable Clergy. The Usurpation of the Monks and Regulars upon the Parochial Priests, in robbing God and them of the better part of Tithes and Offerings; the Heat and Hastie and Self-interest of the Governours at the Reformation, in alienating those Tithes to meer Lay-men; and the continued Iniquity of Times and Men, in divesting and despoiling the Patrimony of the Church and Clergy more and more; these things had brought a great number of Parishes into a very miserable Desolation. In many of them, the whole Profits entirely appropriated to some other Uses, and a sorry Scurf allow'd to some officiating Curate: In many others, a Vicarage ordain'd, but so very slenderly endow'd, that a Vicar (tho' a single Person) could not tolerably subsist upon it. This Defect had been the Burden and the Scandal of the Nation, always complain'd of, but never sufficiently redrest. At the King's first coming in, all Men of Sense and Conscience saw that the Church of England could not be established with any Honour or Safety, without providing a more competent Maintenance for the Parochial Clergy. And because many of the Improper Rectories did belong to Sees, or Cathedral and Collegiate Bodies, or to other Ecclesiastical Dignities; therefore it was very proper, that the good Example should begin among the Clergy themselves, who were then more especially enabled to augment the Cures, because of the very considerable Fines received by them. Hence a Bill was depending in Parliament, for Rules and Orders to be observed in such Augmentation of poor Vicarages and other insufficient Cures: But, to prevent the passing such a Bill, it was thought more advisable, to refer the Matter to the King's Instructions; who, accordingly, directed his Royal Letters to the Archbishops, Bishops, Deans, and Chapters, requiring them, “ That forthwith Provision be made for the Augmentation of all such Vicarages and Cures where the Tithes and Profits are appropriated to them and their Successors in such manner, that they who immediately attend upon the Performance of Ministerial Offices, in every Parish, may have a competent Portion out of every Rectory Improprate, &c.

Better Maintenance of the Clergy.

The Wisdom and Moderation of this Act.

Mr. Calamy guilty of the first Breach of it.

K's Letter to Bishops, Deans and Chapters.

1662. But tho' a cheerful Compliance was generally paid to these Letters, and very considerable Augmentations were made in most of the Rural Churches appropriated to Ecclesiastical Bodies; yet this Advice did not reach to the Lay Impropiators, who held many Rectories wherein the Vicar or Curate had not wherewithall to live. There was a pious Disposition in the Commons of England to remedy this Evil, and to make every Benefice or Cure a sufficient Portion for a Minister to subsist upon it with some Comfort and Credit. In order to this excellent End, there were many Votes and Resolutions, tho', alas! all of them ineffectual.

On Tuesday Jan. 7. 13 Car. II. "It was order'd by the House of Commons, that a Committee appointed for this purpose, should call before them Philip Aye the younger, who was Clerk to the late pretended Triers, and to require and receive from him all Presentations to any Ecclesiastical Benefices or Promotions made in the time of the late usurp'd Powers, and Entries of any Admissions, Institutions, or Inductions thereupon, now in his Custody. On Monday Jan. 20. it was order'd, "That the same Committee have Power to call before them all other Persons, and to require and receive from them all Presentations, &c. This was chiefly in order to restore the Episcopal separated Clergy, and to eject those who, under the Violence of the late Times, had intruded upon them: but it likewise served the good Design of coming to the Knowledge of the state of Parochial Cures, and so of being the better able to judge of their Necessities, and a Relief of them. To this immediate purpose, a wholesome Bill was brought in, For increasing the Maintenance of Ministers. And on Thursday Apr. 3. 1662. a Report was made from the Committee, to which the House agreed; that The best way to effect what is desired in the Bill for increasing the Maintenance of Ministers, is, That the Knights, Citizens, and Burgesses do inquire the Value of all Livings in their several precincts contained in the Bill, and that they consider of the best Expedients for the better Maintenance of the Ministers therein, and to inform the Committee thereof at their next Meeting after their Receipts. But the King's craving Wants of Aid and Supply, and the Jealousie and Avarice of some Lay Patrons and Impropiators, and the Profaneness and Irreligion of many of the leading Courtiers, let this Design drop into a Forgetfulness of God and the Cure of Souls.

on for Preachers.

To make as much as possible an Uniformity in Preaching as well as in Prayers, his Majesty set forth Directions concerning Preachers, with a Royal Letter prefixed and directed to the most Reverend Father in God William Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, &c. Given at Whitehall Octob. 14. in the 14th Year of our Reign, 1662. Which the said Archbishop transmitted to the Lords the Bishops within his own Province, with his Letter of Advice and Direction, to communicate the Copies of his Majesty's said Directions throughout their respective Dioceses; dated from Lambeth Octob. 23. 1662.

Death of
der in.

That pious and judicious Prelate Dr. Robert Sanderson, Lord Bishop of Lincoln, died in his Palace at Backden on Nov. 29. 1662. and within three Weeks before his Death he made his last Will and Testament; wherein he gave such a solemn Account of his Faith and Persuasion in Matters of Religion and Church Government, that it well deserves to be here inserted.

"And here I do profess, that as I have lived, so I desire, and (by the Grace of God) resolve to die, in the Communion of the Catholick Church of Christ, and a true Son of the Church of England; which, as it stands by Law established, to be both in Doctrine and Worship agreeable to the Word of God, and in the most, and most material Points of both, conformable to the Faith and Practice of the godly Churches of Christ in the primitive and purer Times, I do firmly believe: led so to do, not so 1662. much from the Force of Custom and Education (to which the greatest part of Mankind owe their particular different Persuasions in point of Religion) as upon the clear Evidence of Truth and Reason, after a serious and impartial Examination of the Grounds, as well of Popery as Puritanism, according to that measure of Understanding, and those Opportunities which God hath afforded me: and herein I am abundantly satisfied, that the Schism which the Papists on the one hand, and the Superstition which the Puritan on the other hand, lay to our Charge, are very justly chargeable upon themselves respectively. Wherefore I humbly beseech Almighty God, the Father of Mercies, to preserve the Church by his Power and Providence, in Peace, Truth, and Godliness, evermore to the World's end: which doubtless he will do, if the Wickedness and Security of a sinful People (and particularly those Sins that are so rife, and seem daily to increase among us, of Unthankfulness, Riot, and Sacrilege) do not tempt his Patience to the contrary. And I also farther humbly beseech him, that it would please him to give unto our gracious Sovereign, the Reverend Bishops, and the Parliament, timely to consider the great Danger that visibly threatens this Church in point of Religion, by the late great Increase of Popery, and in point of Revenue by sacrilegious Inclosures; and to provide such wholesome and effectual Remedies as may prevent the same before it be too late.

Both Houses of Parliament were highly sensible, that the King's Profession of Indulgence toward the Protestant Dissenters did very much encourage the Confidence of Romish Priests and Jesuits, and seem'd to be made in favour of them. And therefore they agreed on, A humble Representation and Petition of the Lords and Commons assembled in Parliament concerning Romish Priests and Jesuits, to the King's most Excellent Majesty;

of Popery.

Shewing,

THAT notwithstanding your Majesty's unquestionable Affection and Zeal for the true Protestant Religion, manifested in your constant Profession and Practice, against all Temptations whatsoever; yet, by the great Resort of Jesuits and Romish Priests into this Kingdom, your good Subjects are generally much affected with Jealousie and Apprehension, that the Popish Religion may much increase in this Kingdom (which your Majesty hath most piously desired may be prevented) and so the Peace both in Church and State may be insensibly disturbed, to the great Danger of both.

Your two Houses of Parliament are therefore humble Suitors to your Majesty to issue out your Proclamation, to command all Jesuits, and all English, Irish, and Scottish Popish Priests, and all such other Priests as have taken Orders from the See of Rome, or by Authority thereof (except such foreign Jesuits or Priests as by Contract of Marriage are to attend the Persons of either of the Queens, or by the Law of Nations to attend foreign Ambassadors) to depart this Kingdom by a Day, under pain of having the Penalties of the Law inflicted upon them.

His Majesty's Speech at the Reception of the Petition.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

YOU do not expect that I should give you an Answer presently to your Petition, yet I will tell you, that I will speedily send you an Answer, which I am confident will be to your Satisfaction. It may be the general Jealousie of the Nation hath made this Address necessary, and indeed I believe nothing hath contributed more to that Jealousie than my own Confidence, that it was impossible there should be any such Jealousie

Accordingly his Majesty did publifh fuch a Proclamation, commanding all Jefuits and Popifh Priests to depart this Kingdom dated April 9. in the 15th Year of his Reign. But it did not feem to be much more in the Intentions of the Court than another Popular Proclamation for the better Obſervati-

 Proclamation againft vitious, debauched and profane Perfons, dated Aug. 22. 1663. For notwith-not altogether out of Favour.

Some Advances toward the Intereſt of Rome were thought to appear in the King's change of ſome Miniſters of State. His faithful and wife Servant Sir Edward Nicholas was remov'd from his Office of Secretary of State, and Sir Henry Bennet, lately the King's Reſident in Spain, was put into that Station; one who ſecretly eſpoued the Cauſe of Popery, and died at laſt in the open Proteftion of it.

The Court

The Lord Chancellor Clarendon was ſenſible of this change in his Majesty's Councils and Affections; and afterward took occaſion thus to expreſs himſelf in a Petition and Addreſs to the Lords at the time of his departing the Kingdom. For more than two Years I never knew any difference in the Councils. — But from the time Mr. Secretary Nicholas was removed from his Place there were great Alterations; and whoſo-ever knew any thing of the Court and Councils, know well how much my Credit hath ſince that time been dimi-niſhed. — Nor hath there been from that time to this above one or two Perfons brought to the Council, or preferred to any conſiderable Office in the Court, who have been of my intimate Acquaintance, or ſuſpected to have any kindneſs for me, and moſt of them moſt notoriously known to have been very long my Enemies, and of different Judgment and Principles from me both in Church and State.

And it was indeed from this Juncture of a Po-piſh prevailing Intereſt, that the Lord Chaucellor Clarendon began now to decline in his Royal Maſters Favour, and to ſtand ready to be given up to his Enemies, and to bear the Odium of every publick Miſcarriage or Miſfortune. And therefore in this Seſſion of Parliament, on July 10. 1663. the Earl of Briſtol exhibited theſe Articles of High-Treaſon should be performed, whereby the Queen refusing 15 Car. II. to be married by a Protestant Priest, in case of her being with Child, either the Succession should be made uncertain for want of the due Rites of Matrimony, or else his Majesty to be exposed to a suspicion of having been married in his own Dominions by a Romish Priest, whereby all the former Scandals endeavour'd to be raised upon his Majesty, by the said Earl, as to Point of Popery, might be confirmed and heightned.

 That having thus traitorously endeavour'd to alienate the Affections of his Majesty's Subjects from him upon the score of Religion; he hath en-deavour'd to make use of all the malicious Scandals and Jealousies, which he and his Emiffaries had raised in his Majesty's Subjects, to raise from them unto himself the popular Applause of being the zealous Upholder of the Protestant Religion, and a Promoter of new Severities against Papists.
 That he hath traitorously endeavour'd to alienate the Affections of his Majesty's Subjects from him, by venting in his own Discourse, and by the Speeches of his nearest Relations and Emiffaries, opprobrious Scandals against his Majesty's Person and course of Life, such as are not fit to be mention'd, unless Necessity in the way of Proof shall require it.
 That he hath traitorously endeavour'd to alienate the Affections of his Highness the Duke of York from his Majesty, by suggesting unto him Jealousies, as far as in him lay, and publishing abroad by his Emiffaries, that his Majesty intended to legitimate the Duke of Monmouth.
 That he hath wickedly and maliciously, contrary to the Duty of a Privy-Counsellor of England, and contrary to the perpetual and most important Interest of this Nation, perswaded his Majesty against the Advice of the Lord General, to withdraw the English Garrisons out of Scotland, and to demolish all the Forts built there, at so vast a Charge to this Kingdom.
 That his Majesty having been graciously pleas'd to communicate the Desires of the Parliament of Scotland, for the remove of the said Garrisons to the Parliament of England, and to ask their Advice therein, the said Earl of Clarendon not only perswaded his Majesty actually to remove those Garrisons, without expecting the Advice of his Parliament of England concerning it, but did by Menaces of his Majesty's displeasure, deter several Members of Parliament from moving the House, as they intended to enter upon consideration of that matter.
 That he had traitorously and maliciously en-deavour'd to alienate his Majesty's Affections and Esteem from this his Parliament, by telling his Majesty, That there was never so weak and inconsiderable a House of Lords, nor never so weak and beady a House of Commons, or Words to that effect, and particularly, that it was better to sell Dunkirk than to be at their Mercy for want of Money, or Words to that effect.
 That he hath wickedly and maliciously, contrary to his Duty of Counsellor, and to a known Law made last Sessions, by which Money was given, and particularly apply'd for the maintaining of Dunkirk, advised and effected the Sale of the same to the French King.
 That he hath contrary to Law enriched himself and his Treasures by the Sale of Offices.
 That contrary to his Duty he hath wickedly and corruptly converted to his own use, great and vast Sums of publick Money raised in Ireland by way of Subsidy, private and publick Benevolency, and otherwise, given and intended to defray the charge of Government in that Kingdom: by which

" That having arrogated to himself a supreme Direction of all his Majesty's Affairs, he hath with a malicious and corrupt Intention, prevail'd to have his Majesty's Customs farmed at a far lower Rate than others do offer, and that by Persons with some of whom he goes a Share, in that and other parts of Money resulting from his Majesty's Revenue.

BRISTOL.

A personal Quarrel and Popish Design. This Accusation seems rather to have been a Personal Quarrel than any serious Concern for publick Truth and Justice. The Words that are charged as spoken by him, were generally thought to have been the real Expressions or Suggestions of that great Man, and was there not a Cause? They may be taxed for an indecent Freedom, but they can be never imagined to have proceeded from any want of Integrity or Honour. But indeed there seems a perverse Turn in the Articles, first to represent the Lord Chancellor as jealous of Popery, and complaining of the King's Inclination to it, by taking new Ministers Popishly Affected; and yet after all, to make the Chancellor himself the Instrument of those very Designs that were laid for Popery and the protest Promoter of them; which the World did not then believe, and Posterity does less believe.

Proceedings of the Lords. On the Day these Articles were exhibited, this Order was made by the House of Peers. Die Veneris 10. Julij 1663. Order'd, by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, that a Copy of the Articles or Charge of High-Treason, exhibited this Day by the Earl of Bristol against the Lord Chancellor, be delivered to the Lord Chief Justice; who with all the rest of the Judges are to consider, whether the said Charge hath been brought in regularly and legally; and whether it may be proceeded in, and how; and whether there be any Treason in it or no; and make Report thereof to this House on Monday next if they can, or else as soon after as possibly they may.

Whereupon all the Judges met at Serjeants-Inn in Fleetstreet, and did upon Consideration unanimously agree upon this ensuing Answer, which on Monday July 13. the Lord Chief Justice Foster did deliver in, viz.

Answer of the Judges. WE conceive that a Charge of High-Treason cannot, by the Laws and Statutes of this Realm, be originally exhibited by one Peer against another unto the House of Peers; and that therefore a Charge of High-Treason by the Earl of Bristol against the Lord Chancellor, mentioned in the Order of Reference to us of the tenth of this instant July, hath not been regularly and legally brought in; and if the Matters alledg'd in the said Charge were admitted to be true, altho' alledg'd to be traiterously done, yet there is no Treason in it.

Ld Chan. honourably acquitted. This Answer being read in the House of Peers, the Earl of Bristol took Exceptions at it, and some of their Lordships, who were Friends to the Chancellor, inferr'd, that if it were not a regular and legal Charge it was a Libel, and ought to be condemned and the Author of it censur'd. To satisfy the House, one of the Judges upon Conference with his Brethren, did on Tuesday July 14. deliver the Reasons of the Opinion of the Judges in their said Answer. And the Earl of Bristol a little to excuse himself, said the Articles were not intended by him as a Charge but as an Information. And then their Lordships, after a Debate upon the Question, did unanimously Resolve to declare their Concurrence with the Opinion of the Judges: And so the Plot of running down this great Man fell at present; and yet this early step in it had gained very much of the design'd Effect, which was to make him less Gracious with his Royal Master, and less respected in the Parliament, and less beloved by the People; and so by degrees a more easie Prey, when his Enemies should again meet to hunt him down.

1663. 15 Car. II. On June 3. his Majesty by Commission under the Great Seal of England, to the Lord Chancellor, Lord Treasurer, Lord Privy Seal, Duke of Albemarle, Marquis of Dorchester and Lord High Chamberlain, had passed three Publick and seven Private Bills: And now on July 27. his Majesty came to the House of Peers, and sending for the House of Commons to attend him, made a short Speech, wherein " He expressed a great Satisfaction for what the Parliament had done for him, and how cheerfully he concurred with them in all the Bills they had prepared for the good of the Nation; and had given Directions and Commands to all his Judges, in relation to those Affairs, which the Season and other Necessities would not permit to pass into Acts. Then he gave his Royal Assent to An Act for four entire Subsidies granted to his Majesty by the Temperaty. An Act to confirm four Subsidies granted to his Majesty by the Clergy. An Act for the Relief of Indigent Officers. An Act for settling the Profits of the Post-Office and Wine Licenses upon the Duke of York and his Heirs. An Act for better collecting the Duty of Excise, &c. And so Prorogued the Parliament to the 16th of March following.

There was a secret Correspondence carried on between the Bigots for Schism and a Commonwealth, to conspire for the good old Cause, and to take Arms for restoring of it. The place of Plotting was chiefly in the North, because more remote from the Court, and more near to Scotland, where they had their Agitators employ'd among the hotter Kirk Party. They had several meetings in Yorkshire, and a good number of them were actually in Arms at Funnley-Wood. They had an Oath of Secrecy enjoind, and had their Agents to sollicite for Assistance in London, and in most of the Counties of England. They had agreed to rise on October 12. and gave assurance to their Friends, that the Insurrection would be general; that Whitehall should be secured; that Nottingham, Gloucester and Newcastle should be seiz'd for the most convenient Passes over the Severn, Trent and Tine; and Boston in Lincolnshire for a Sea-port to receive Succours out of Holland and other Foreign Parts. Their Pretences were to redeem themselves from the Excise and all Subsidies; to re-establish a Gospel Magistracy and Ministry; to restore the Long Parliament; and to reform all Orders and Degrees of Men, especially the Lawyers and the Clergy. This Conspiracy being in good time discover'd, a Commission of Oyer and Terminer was sent to York for Trial of the principal Leaders of them. Some at their Arraignment confest, that the Design began in a private Committee at London; that Lambert or Ludlow was propos'd and promised to be at the Head of them; that the rising was to have began in Ireland, to have followed in England, and then in Scotland. Others of the Prisoners behaved themselves with most insufferable Insolence, especially Cotton, Denham and Atkins, of whom Cotton protested in the Face of the Court, that in such a Cause he valued his Life no more than the Judge did his Handkerchief. After the Conviction of many of them, they were Executed, some at York, some at Leeds, and others in other Places. They had retained a Printer in London to print for them a sort of Declaration or Call to Rebellion, wherein were these Words; If there be any City, Town or County in the three Nations that will begin this righteous and glorious Work, they may be assured, &c. The Printer being found Guilty was drawn, hang'd and quarter'd: And another Printer, Bookseller and Bookbinder were on the same occasion condemn'd to the Pillory, with their Offence expressed in these Words: For selling and uttering Malicious, Scandalous and Seditious Books, against the King, the State and Peace of the Kingdom.

Plots for Schism and Rebellion. In the Long Vacation, his Majesty, to divert himself, and to please his People, resolv'd upon a Progress, and a Visit to the Bath, setting out with

Abp. Juxon.

Dr. William Juxon, Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, died in his Palace of Lambeth on June 4. and was interred in the Chapel of St. John's College in Oxford, to which he was a great Benefactor. His best Character was that which his Royal Master King Charles I. gave him, that Good Man.

Succession of Dr.
Sheldon.

Dr. Gilbert Sheldon, Lord Bishop of London, who (by reason of the good Archbishop's Age and Infirmities) had managed the Affairs of the whole Province ever since the King's Return, was now translated to the See of Canterbury with great Solemnity and general Satisfaction. The See of London was filled with Dr. Humphry Henchman, translated from Sarum, a Man of popular Gravity and Temper, and of a Judgment and Wisdom so agreeable to his Aspect, that he was sworn one of his Majesty's most Honourable Privy Council on Dec. 9.

Death of Archbish.
Bramhall.

Near the same time with Archbishop Juxon, died another Primate Dr. John Bramhall, Archbishop of Armagh, who had gone over into Ireland as Chaplain to the Lord Deputy, the Earl of Strafford; and being there highly serviceable to the King and the Church, had been justly promoted to the See of Londonderry, and after a long Exile with the King, was, at the Restoration, deservedly advanc'd to the chief See and Primacy of Ireland.

Disposition of the chief Diffenters.

The Church of England was now so firmly by Law establish'd, that there could have been nothing wanting toward Peace and Conformity, but a steady Execution of the Laws, and some tender Regard to the ejected Ministers, who were many of them Men of Piety and Moderation, and did not pretend that the Church Communion was unlawful as to Lay Communion, tho' they thought the Terms of Ministerial Conformity too hard for them; and therefore after the Exercise of their Ministry in some private Meetings, they usually came to the publick Offices in their Parish-Church, and join'd with the Priest and Congregation, not only in Prayers, but in the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper: so beginning the Example of Occasional Conformity, not for Interest, or with any secular Intention, but to all appearance for Charity and Brotherly-love. So that at this Juncture, had the State been true to the Laws, and the Church been indulgent to the ejetied Ministers; there must have been a general Unity and Peace. It was certainly the Strength of Popery that now chiefly made the Separation of Protestants from the Church of England: The Papists laboured for a Liberty, which they knew not how to enjoy without a common Relaxation of the Laws against all other Dissenters. It was purely this Design, that put the King upon his Declaration on Decemb. 26.
1662. expressing his purpose to grant some Indulgence or Liberty in Religion, not excluding the Papists; Many of whom (he said) had deserved so well of him. The Intent of this Declaration was so apparently in favour of Popery, that the Protestant Dissenters did but suffer by it in their Interest and Credit: for, they were ready to catch at any Offer of Liberty and Ease, without staying to consider the Regularity and Validity of the Grant, or the indirect End and Design of that Favour to them. This made the Parliament more jealous of them, as now made instrumental to Popery and Arbitrary Power; and therefore the House of Commons made their Votes and their Address against all such Royal Indulgence, and forc'd the King to retract all Thoughts of it. This made the Bishops and Clergy more averse to them, when they saw them now capable of 1663. becoming the Tools and Engines of the Church of Rome. Nay and this, in the consequence, made the King and his Court more despise them, when they were found too weak to defend their own Project of Liberty against the Body of the Parliament, and the Weight of the Nation. It may be most impartial to represent the present Case of the Dissenters from one of their own Advocates, who tells us, that after the King's Declaration of Indulgence on De-cemb. 26. "Some of the Nonconformists were hereupon much encourag'd, and waiting privately on the King, were fill'd with Hopes. They would have perswaded their Brethren to have thank'd the King for his Declaration; but they refus'd, lest they should make way for the Toleration of the Papists. The Declaration took not at all either with Parliament or People: and so the poor Nonconformists were expos'd to great Severities.

They who at the King's coming in were so much caref'd, were now treated with the utmost Contempt. — About the middle of this Summer, there was a fresh Discourse rais'd of Liberty design'd for the silenc'd Ministers. They were bla-m'd by many for not Petitioning the Parliament, tho' they had reason enough against it. Many Members of Parliament encouraged the Expectation of either an Indulgence, or a Comprehension.
And it was thereupon warmly debated, which of the two would be the more desirable. Some were for Petitioning for a General Indulgence, thus arguing with their Brethren: You are blind, if you see not that the Act of Uniformity was made so rigorous, and the Weight of Conformity so much increas'd, that so the Number of the ejected Ministers might be so great, as to force them to be glad of a general Toleration, which might take in the Papists. And if you think to stand it out, they will yet bring you to it in despite of you: They will increase your Burdens, and lay you in Prisons till you are glad to Petition for such a Toleration. And stand it out as long as you can, you shall be forc'd to procure the Papists Liberty; and the Odium of it shall not lie on the Bishops, but on you that are so much against it. The Bishops shall speak against it, and they will force you to beg for it who are against it. And if you will not do it now, you do but stay till the Market rise, and your Sufferings be made greater, and you shall be glad to do it at dearer Rates. To whom others reply'd, that they would suffer any thing rather than promote Popery.

"Mr. Baxter was about this time consulted by a Person of Honour concerning the matter so much talk'd of; he press'd him to give him his Judgment whether the way of Indulgence or Comprehension was more desirable. He freely gave him his Thoughts to this purpose: That he was not for Comprehension without Indulgence, nor for Indulgence without the Enlargement of the Act of Uniformity to a greater Comprehension; but for the conjunction of both. He was not for Comprehension alone, because when they had gone the farthest many worthy Persons, whose Gifts in the Church might be very useful, would be still left out; and there would be much want when all were employ'd; and the Loss by their being utterly silenc'd would redound to the Souls of many. He was not for Indulgence alone, unless the Law were made more Comprehensive; because the Impositions and Restrictions of the Law were really unaccountable; because nothing can be more desirable than the Strength and Unity of the establish'd Body of the Clergy; and because a bare Indulgence would be apt to occasion such Jealousies and Animosities as that it would not be long enjoy'd in Peace: And therefore he declared, that he was for a Comprehension of as many fit Persons as might be taken in by Law, and then a Power reserv'd to his Majesty to indulge the Remnant as far as might be conducible to the Peace and Benefit of Church and State.

“ But instead of Indulgence or Comprehension on the last Day of June the Act against Private Meetings for Religious Exercises passed the House of Commons, and shortly after was made a Law, the Sum of it was, That every Person above sixteen Years, who is present at any Meeting under Colour or pretence of any Exercise of Religion, in other manner than is allowed by the Liturgy or Practice of the Church of England, where there are five Persons more than that Household, shall for the first Offence by a Justice of Peace be Recorded and sent to Goal three Months, till he pay five Pounds; and for the second Offence six Months till he pay ten Pounds; and for the third time being convicted by a Jury, shall be banish'd to some of the American Plantations, excepting New England or Virginia. The Author who is giving this Account takes a wrong occasion to complain, It was a great Hardship that attended this Act, that so much Power was given by it to Justices of the Peace, to record a Man an Offender without a Jury: And if they did it causelessly, there was no Remedy, seeing every Justice was made a Judge. A wrong Complaint, and a Reflection upon many other of our wholesome Laws, which could never be executed, if Evidence upon Oath before a Justice of Peace could not make him so far a Judge as to pronounce the Penalty express'd in the Letter of the Law, without the Formality of a Court and a Jury. It is sufficient, that the greater Offences and the greater Penalties, affecting Life or Liberty or Estate, shall not be determin'd by any private Justices, but in the more solemn manner of Court and Judge and Prisoner and Jury. And so it was by this very Act accordingly Provided, that no one should be convicted of the third Offence which incur'd Banishment, without a regular Trial by a Jury. The Author goes on to tell us much more pertinently, that “ before this Act the Danger and Sufferings lay on the Ministers only, but now the People also were sorely try'd. And that after this, the Nonconformists were not a little divided among themselves, as to the Lawfulness and Expediency of worshipping God in the publick Churches, over and above their private Meetings still kept up with great Secrecy. Mr. Baxter and Dr. Bates, and several others with them, were for frequenting the publick Churches, when better helps were not to be had: And for resorting to them now and then, tho' they had their Choice to shew their Charity. They were for having their most usual Communion with those Assemblies, which they thought were managed most agreeably to the Rule and End of Worship; and yet for having Occasional Communion with others, as Members of the Catholick Church, to shew their Catholick Communion with all the Body of Christ: But others were vehement for an entire Separation.

To this Account it may be fairly added, that it was the Judgment of the two Houses of Parliament, and of the Body of the People of England, that nothing could so effectually secure the Peace of the State, as the continuing and confirming a general Conformity to the establish'd Church: And again, that nothing would more encourage and promote Popery, than the Advantage to be gain'd by a Toleration of Protestant Dissenters. And had the Administration of Affairs turn'd even and constant upon this Basis, Peace and Happiness must have needs ensued. But the Error in Politicks was still the same: The Legislative Power drew one way, and the Executive another: The Parliament for a strict Uniformity, the King for Toleration: And therefore the strictest Laws had their full Influence no longer than during the Session that made them; or at least the Returns of a Sitting Parliament. In every Interval, the King relented, and the Judges must connive: which extraordinary way of giving and assuming Liberty of Conscience brought in more Mischief than a legal Toleration could have done. For by this Means the King was gaining a Party to support him in the Pretensions of a Dispensing Power. The Dissenters were taught to slight the Laws of the Land, as much as those of the Church; and to fly to the Royal Prerogative for a Protection against the common courts of Justice. The Bishops and Clergy were discourag'd from trusting to their legal Constitution, and if they prosecuted any upon the Penal Laws, they found the way of Justice so obstructed, that they gain'd the Odium of being Persecutors without Power, and that was all. While the Papists triumph'd in their desired Opposition of Church and Conventicle, teaching the Dissenters to be enraged at the grievous Penal Laws, and the Church-men to be offended at the trifling Suspension of them: and labouring to possess the King with the Pleasure of Governing without a Parliament, that his own Indulgence might be a standing Law; the Fear of which rais'd so many Jealousies in the Minds of the best and wisest People, that his Majesty was forced to wipe them off in his next Speech to the Parliament.

The Convocation finding the Church to be sufficiently by Law establish'd, thought it not proper to meddle with any other Business relating to Religion. on April 20. the Bishops were considering of the Expediency of a new Form of Grammar, fit to be enjoind for the Use of all publick Schools: And a Committee of both Houses was appointed May 4. to examine and review the said Form, but nothing was determin'd in it. And at their next meeting with the Parliament Nov. 25. nothing was done but a Prolocutor Dr. John Dolben Dean of Westminster Elected and Approv'd in the room of Dr. John Baywick Dean of Pauls, lately deceased. Only on Feb. 18. the Archbishop required the Bishops then present, when they came into their respective Dioceses, to certify to him the Names and Surnames of all Clerks within their Jurisdiction who had been ejected from their Cures, with the places of their present Abode. And on March 4. the Archbishop desired all his Suffragan Brethren to take all possible Care and Diligence, that all Ministers, Rectors, Vicars and Curates, should in their Surplices read Divine Service fully and distinctly, without omitting any part.

The Parliament meeting at the Time to which they had been prorogued March 16. the King came to the House of Lords on Monday March 21. and made this Gracious Speech to both Houses.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

YOU see, God be thank'd, you have met together again at the time appointed, and I do assure you, I have been so far from ever intending it should be otherwise, that I do not know one Person who ever wish'd it should be otherwise. Think therefore, I pray, what good Meaning those Men could have, who from the time of the Prorogation to the Day of your meeting, have continually whisper'd and industriously infused into the Minds of the People, that the Parliament should meet no more; that it should either be presently dissolv'd, or so continued by Prorogation, that they should be kept without a Parliament. I pray watch these Whisperers all you can, as Men who use their utmost Endeavours to sow Jealousies between you and me: And I do promise you they shall not prevail with me; and I do promise myself they shall not prevail with you: And the Truth is, we are both concern'd they should not, and we shall then with God's Blessing prevent all the Mischief they intend.

“ You may judge by the late Treason in the North, for which so many Men have been executed, how active the Spirits of many of our old Enemies still are, notwithstanding all our Mercy. I do assure you, we are not yet at the bottom of that Business: Thus much appears manifestly, that this Conspiracy was but a Branch of that which I discover'd as well as I could to you about two Years since, and had been then executed nearer hand, if

" My Lords and Gentlemen, I must renew my " Thanks to you, for the free Supply you gave me
" this last Session of four Subsidies; yet I cannot " but tell you, that the Supply is fallen much short " of what I expected or you intended: It will hard" ly be believ'd, yet you know it to be true, that " very many Persons who have Estates of three and " four thousand Pounds a Year, do not pay for these " four Subsidies sixteen Pounds: So that whereas " you intended and declared, that they should be " collected according to former Precedents, they " do not now arise to half the proportion they " did in the time of Queen Elizabeth; and yet
" sure the Crown wants more now than it did 16 Car. II. " then, and the Subject is at least as well able to " give.

" The truth is, by the License of the late ill " Times, and ill Humour of this, too many of the " People, and even of those who make fair Profes" sions, believe it to be no Sin to defraud the Crown " of any thing that is due to it. You no sooner " give me Tonnage and Poundage than Men are de" vising all the ways they can to steal Custom; nor " can the Farmers be so vigilant for the Collection " as others are to steal the Duties. You give me the " Excise, which all People abroad believe to be the " most insensible Imposition that can be laid upon a " People: What Conspiracies and Combinations are " enter'd into against it by the Brewers, who I am " sure bear not that burthen themselves, even to " bring that Revenue to nothing, you will hear in " Westminster-Hall. You have given me the Chim" ney Money, which you have reason to believe is " a growing Revenue, for Men build at least fast e" nough; and you will therefore wonder, that it is " already declin'd, and that this half Year brings " in less than the former did: I pray therefore re" view that Bill, and since I am sure you would " have me receive whatsoever you give, let me have " the Collecting and Husbanding of it by my own " Officers, and then I doubt not but to improve that " Receipt, and will be cozen'd of as little as I can.

" I will conclude with desiring and conjuring
" you, my Lords and Gentlemen, to keep a very " good Correspondence together, that it may not be " in the Power of any seditious or factious Spirits " to make you jealous of each other, or either of " you jealous of me, till you see me pretend one " thing and do another, which I am sure you have " never yet done; trust me, it shall be in no bodies
" Power to make me jealous of you. I pray con" trive any good short Bills, which may improve " the Industry of the Nation; and since the Season " of the Year will invite us all shortly to take the " Country Air, I desire you would be ready for a " Session within two Months or thereabouts, and we " will meet next earlier in the Year. And so God
" blefs your Counsels.

At the first opening of this Session, there was a Murmurs general Discontent and Murmur against the Dutch, against the for breaking in upon our Trade, and affronting our Dutch.
Nation with several publick Injuries and Insolencies that were indeed very Provoking, wherein they were encourag'd by the French Court, and had a promise of Support and Assistance from it. The House of Commons took this matter into their first Consideration, and appointed a Committee to examine the Complaints of the Encroachments made by the Hollanders upon the Trade of England, and after a Report made by Mr. Clifford, the House agreed upon Resolutions to this effect.

That the Wrongs, Dishonours and Indignities, the Resolutions of the Damages, Affronts and Injuries done by the Sub- Common jects of the United Provinces to our Merchants, were the greatest Obstructions to all Foreign Trade.
And therefore, that his Majesty should be moved to take speedy and effectual Course for the Redress thereof; and that they would assist him with their Lives and Fortunes against all Opposition whatsoever.

The Lords concurred in this sense of publick Ho- Address nour and Interest; and so both Houses attended his of both Majesty with an Address to represent the common Houses.
Danger. His Majesty declar'd his high Esteem of their Care and Tenderneis for the Honour and Good of the Nation, and express his own Royal Sense of preserving the Freedom of Trade and the Dominion of the Seas; letting them farther know, that he would examine and prove the particular Complaints; that he would demand Satisfaction by a publick Minister, and do his utmost Endeavours to secure his Subjects from the like Violences for the future, depending upon the Promise of both Houses to stand by him.

 Att for Triennial Parliaments.
 The next Care of the Commons was to debate on that part of his Majesty's Speech which related to the Act for Triennial Parliaments; upon which, they brought in a Bill to repeal that Act, and to establish a better Expedient for holding Parliaments once in three Years. At the passing of this Act on April 6. his Majesty gave them his Thanks for their ready concurring in a Matter so advantageous to the Nation, and for annulling a former Law so prejudicial to the Love and Union between King and People, and founded on a fatal Supposition, that the Crown was jealous of Parliaments, or the Parliaments jealous of the Crown.

On April 5. the House of Lords adjourned to the 18th instant, and on the Day following the House of Commons made the like Adjournment: Both Houses unanimously resolving to assist his Majesty with their Lives and Fortunes against all his Enemies and Opposers whatsoever. On May 17. the King came to the House of Lords, and sending for the Commons to attend him, in a short Speech he let them understand, "his Royal Approbation of their "Cares and Labours for the Good of the Publick;
 "and his Acknowledgments to them for their ready
 "Compliance with his Advice in the Dispatch "of all Business depending in the last Session; and "concluding with his Resolution to Prorogue them "to the 20th of August next ensuing; but declaring "farther, that unless something extraordinary should "fall out, it was his purpose not to call them to"gether till November following, whereof they "should have timely Notice by his Royal Procla"mation. Then Sir Edward Turner, Speaker, re"presented to his Majesty, "the humble Thanks of "the House for his gracious Acceptance of their "Endeavours in the Service of his Majesty and the "Publick. After which, he insinuated upon the un"settled Condition of the Country by reason of the "disaffected Parties of Fanatics, Sectaries, and "Nonconformists, who threatened the Disturbance of "Church and State. Then he touch'd upon the "Injuries complain'd of by our Merchants, and the "Frauds and ill Practices of our Neighbours the "Dutch in the East and West Indies, in Turkey, Afri"ca, and other Parts, which besides the Indignity "offered to his Royal Majesty and the Crown of Eng"land, amounted to no less than the Value of seven "or eight hundred thousand Pounds: and then he "presented several Bills for the Royal Assent, among "which was the memorable Act to prevent and sup"press seditious Conventicles.

Thanks of the Commons.
 Under this Disposition of the Parliament and People to quarrel with the Dutch, the King had given his particular Instructions to his Ambassador Sir George Downing, who about the middle of May gave in a Memorial to the States-General, of the great Damages which the English complained to have suffer'd in their Trade and Commerce by the Subjects of those Provinces. The States wisely declined a present Answer, and came off with a Promise of sending their own Ambassadors to the King of Great Britain, which had the Appearance of a more solemn Respect, and what was more intended, gave them the opportunity of Deliberation and Delay.

 But the King, to lose no time, gave Orders for setting out a considerable Fleet, to secure his Subjects in their freedom of Trade, and to vindicate the Honour and Interest of the English Nation. But he had one continual Misfortune upon him, the want of ready Money: To supply this Defect, he sent some Lords of his Privy Council to move the City of London for the Loan of an hundred thousand Pounds upon this extraordinary Occasion. The Common Council of the City, who were sensible of their Sufferings in Trade, readily complied with the King's Request, and voted an immediate Supply of that Sum, to be repaid upon moderate Terms concerned with the Lord Treasurer.

 King's
 Speech.
 The Parliament, according to Prorogation, had met again on Novemb. 24. when the King in a hearty Speech express'd to them, "How unkindly he had "been treated by his Neighbours the Dutch; how "much he thought it his Duty to vindicate the "Rights of his Subjects, and the Honour of Him"self and his Kingdoms; how, to this end, he had,
 "upon the Stock of his own Credit, set forth a Na"vy, that would guard his Seas, and would out

Sir George Downing, upon the dilatory Measures taken by the States, came over into England for more private and positive Instructions; and returning back, held several Conferences with the Deputies of the States, and deliver'd in several Particulars of Damages and Injuries sustained by the English: for which he demanded Reparation. The States again declined all express Answer, and put off all Proposals of making Satisfaction. The King understood their Craft to be, the keeping him in suspense till they had got home their several Fleets of Merchant Men, resolv'd to intercept them in the Chanel, by way of Reprisal, without waiting the Ceremony of a declared War. The Heer Van Goch was sent as Ambassadour from the States, to expostulate with the King upon his visible Preparations for a War against them; and had a solemn Audience on June 25. but seem'd to have no sufficient Instructions to
